Not that we deny, but that preaching (vnderstood in his proper kynde and being well vled) worketh these effects also; but we affirme this (and the experience is apparant) that these effects may be, and oftentimes are brought to passe among vs, even by the reuerent ministrye, and deuoute hearing and communicating with the Minister, in the public confessions, in the public prayers, in the public admonitions, and exhortations, in the public setting forth of the appointed parts of Scripture, & in the public administration and participation of the Sacraments: all which are conteyned in our ordinary seruice of the Lord.

I graunt, wee cannot auoide all this to be done, in all them that heare the ordinarie seruice: no moze can our Brethren auoide, all this to be done, in all those that heare the preaching. But, say our Brethren:

So that if there be any sparke of the feare of God in them, hearing preaching: so often as they vse to heare seruice, they will fall downe on their faces & worship God, acknowledging the great power of God in his Ministers. 1. Cor. 14. 15.

This exception so that, was well added. and with the like exception, we dare say as much of our ordinary seruice, for Prayers haue as effect- uall promises in their kindes, to those that feare God and honour him, and

call vpon him: as preaching hath. So that if there bee anye sparke of the feare of God in them, meaning true sparkes, (as Christ speaketh for faith As much as is a graine of of mustard seed Mat. 17. 20) hearing our ordinary seruice of the Lord, especially, hearing the seruice so often as we do: although they heare not preaching so often, because they cannot conueniently so often haue it, as they conueniently may the ordinary seruice: yet will they as much, if not more, than any euen of our brethren themselves, vse to do at any preaching, fall downe on their faces, that is, prostrat and bow down both their soules, and also their bodies, by inward deuotion of their mindes before the Lord, and by lowly bowing of their knees vnto the Lorde, before his congregation, as a reuerent token of their vnsained humility, and so, worship God: as do the other faithfull Christians assembled in his name, to call vpon him, and to glorifie him, acknowledging the great power of God in his Ministers. 1. Cor. 14. 25. and no small power of God in his Minist. is declared to the penitent euen in the very fronte of all our ordinary diuine seruice of the Lorde: where the Minister after the confession, pronounceth in the name of God, the forgiveness of the sins of man.

But our brethren apply this alonely to preaching, and in very deepe, in the selfesame place, which is not the 15. but the 24. and 25. verses, S. Paule mencioneth prophesying, and he maketh the comparatiue opposition, not betwene publike prayer and prophesying: but betwene the speaking with tongues, and prophesying. And as he maketh this an exemplification of all that went before, concerning this matter: so not onely he stretcheth his whole treatise of edification, as well to prayer as to prophesying: and therefore, not only in this chapter, 1. Cor. 14. ver. 14. 15. 16. & 17. he mencioneth also publike prayers, which he would likewise haue as prophesying, to be made to edification, in a tongue knowne, that the vnlearned may say Amen. but also before, in the 11. chapter ver. 4 & 5. he ioyneth praying and prophesying together: Euery man praying or prophesying, hauing any thing on his head, dishonoureth his head. And euery woman that prayeth or prophesjeth bare headed, dishonoureth her head.

The wordes of S. Paule 1 Cor. 14. applied not only to prophesying, but also to prayer and to the seruice of God

Neither doth the prophesying that he so often mentioneth, both in the 14. and before that in the 13. and before that in the 12. and before that in the 11. Chapters of this Epistle, signifie onely the function of preaching: For speaking of euery mans prophesying, cap. 11. verse 4. and of womens prophesying, verse 5. and of making Prophets distinct from Teachers, Cap. 12. verse 28. and 29. and of making the gift of Prophecye, to bee the knowing of secretes and knowledge, cap. 13. ver. 2. and euen here in this place, Ca. 14. ver. 24. speaking of the people, whiche are not ordinary Ministers of the word and Sacramentes, he saith: But if all doo prophesie, and there come in one, &c. So that properly, he speaketh of preaching keth not here, of the only function that is ordinarily peculier to the Minister, and whereof our brethren now dispute: but besides the speciall giste of foretelling things to come, or of reuealing (though things present) yet secret, as he saith here, of him that commeth in among these Prophetes, that the secretes of his heart are made manifest, as Peter made manifest the secretes of Ananias and Zaphira: Or else of such exercises also, in expounding the hidden mysteries and secretes of the holy Scripture, as the giste was then more peculier to that age of the Primitive Church, and in their courses and places, more common, than now it is to all the faithfull.

Propheſſing taken inpro-
perly

But, howsoever prophecyng be here understood, it debarreth not the like, at least, some parts of these effectes, from the reuerent and attentive hearing of Gods word it selfe, openlie redde in the Church by the Minister, though at that thme not expounded. And perhaps the place that is read, be plaine enough to vnderstande, and to moue the attentive hearer of the same, without a Preacher. Neither debarreth it these effectes, from the publike and ordinary prayers of the Church, & from other parts of the diuine seruice, if they be so disposed, as S. Paule there would haue all thinges done to edification, although no prophecyng bee vsed, nor sermon be preached at every time when those publike prayers are made as already we haue at large proued.

But (say our brethren) that they cannot away withall, being lyke vnto Felix the Linetenant of the Romaines in Iewry: Who, when he heard Paule a poore prisoner, that stood before him bownde in chaynes, preaching of righteousness, of temperance, and of the iudgement to come, he was wearie of him, because hee was a great oppressour, and an intemperate person, and therefore feared the iudgement of GOD for his sinne, whiche hee purposed not to forsake. Such is the maiesty of Gods worde, when it is preached, that either it boweth or breaketh the wicked in peeces.

Bridges.

The effect of S. Paules preaching wrought in Felix.

Saint Paules preaching of righteousness, of temperance, and of iudgement to come, made Felix tremble, Act. 24. ver. 26. and yet that trembling came to no perfect effect in him, to his conuersion. And manie more heard S. Paules preaching at the same time, that trebled lesse thereat than Felix did. And yet this impayreth not the Maiesty of Gods word when it is preached, Not, that it wanteth power to doe that, which our brethren here saye, that when it is preached, it either boweth or breaketh the wicked in peeces: but that it alwaies doeth it not. For, here it neyther bowed nor brake in peeces, a great many wicked hearers of it. To which purpose, our Learned brethren might haue brought out far better proues.

But, may not this be said also of publike prayer? no doubt, wee may safely safely affirme thus much, euen of our ordinary forme of the diuine seruice, where the worde of God is also set forth, with sundrie admoniti-ons, confessions, exhortations, and instructions, besides the supplications, and thanksgiuings: that although not alwaies, and euery man that is present at the same: yet hath it often bowed, moued, pearced: yea, and conuerted many a great oppressor, and intemperate person: manye a blinde Papiste, and superstitious Idolater, and woime them to God, or rather God hath woime them by it, if not so much, as by preaching, yet, very much by it. And manie, partly by the one, partly by the other.

*The effect
of diuine ser uice in many herens of it.*

Yea, by this, bee hath so broken in peeces, the rebellious hartes of the moste obstinate aduersaries: that they had a great deale rather, heare many Sermons, (yea, they will come dogging after the preachers, whosouer the Preachers be, to entrappe their words, as the Pharisies diide with Christe) than to come to anie one assembly of our publike prayers, and ordinarye seruice of the Lorde. Wherewith in no wise they will ioyne with vs, or giue the least hearing in the world, whiche they will not spare to giue, with all obseruation and noting of our preachings.
And haue they so great feare of our diuine seruice, and publike prayers, and doe our owne brethren make so light account, and so little regarde thereof? What an hardening of the common aduersaries hartes, and occasion of vtterly contemning all our profession of the Gospell, is this vnito them?

*The Papists had rather heare sermons many times, then any times
our diuine
seruice.*

Our Brethren now, to close vp all this part, against our Diuine seruice and publike prayer, conclude it also with a prayer of their making and say:

God graunt therefore, that in steede of ordinary formes of prayers, we may haue preaching in all places.

And in place of Amen, God forbid say I, with an other prayer to the contrarie: (if it be his good will) not so much (good Lorde,) to punishe vs, that this our brethrens prayer should be graunted. For then, not onely this that now we haue, but simply all other formes of prayers, should be quite and cleane abolished and taken from vs.

If they had prayed, that they might haue continued with preaching, as befoze they said pag 67. there would be no ordinary prayer, without preaching, that had yet, bene moze tollerable. But to praie, that we might haue the one in steed of the other, and that in all places: what is this, but to praye that all ordinarye formes of prayer shoulde bee altogether crypelled, that preaching may occupy all the time and place thereof.

Wee will not, neither dare wee praye, that ours, or any other ordinary formes of praier, shoulde in all places be in steede of preaching:
but

of preaching but that preaching shoulde rather be more often than it is, and that in all places, if it would please God, that all places mighte be so furnished. It not, yet in as many places, as may be. But to wish all ordinarye formes of prayer, to be in all places, or in any place wholly displaced, to place preaching: God forbid it should so be, or we should so wish it. Surely (in my opinion and vnder correction) this is eyther a very greate ouershot in our brethren, or else it fauoureth of some woofse purpose, than I would gladly surmise, our brethren went about.

Our Blast prayer wold abolish the
all.

Although they not onely herein go about to ouerthrowe all the ordinary formes of prayer, that are already with vs established by all the estats and highest authority of the Church of Englande, or any other that we can make, if there be any defect herein: but also their own ordinary forms both that in Scotlande, and that of Geneva, and that of Middleborough, and that which now last of all they haue renewed in London: and to the which, their selues haue prefixed this title: A booke of the forme of common prayers, administration of the sacraments, &c. agreeable to Gods word, and to the vse of the reformed Churches. All this booke, and these their owne ordinary formes of prayers, are here prayed for by these our brethren the Learned Discoursers, to be as wel as ours extinguished. Pea they make no exception of the Lords owne Prayer, which also is a prescribed & ordinary forme of prayer. But against this prayer of theirs, which we pray and hope God will neither graunt, nor heare: we haue already at large sufficiently sene, good euident and warrant, for ordinary formes of prayer in Gods Church.

1. Cor. 14. 15.

The second thing that we haue to obserue is this, that althoughe wee make it the dutie of the Pastor, to pray in the name of the whole congregation, yet do we not so meane, but that the whole congregation with one heart, and with one voice may praise God, with singing of Psalmes all at once. For, this custome hath continued in the Church from the beginning, that the congregation haue prayesd God with Psalmes, singing altogether.

Bridges.

If the whole cōgregation with one hart & with one voice, may praise God with singing of Psalmes at at once or altogether: then may the whole congregation with one heart & with one voice, al at once, or altogether, make their prayers to God. For, wheron do the Psalmes consist, but euen of those parts that S. Paule 1. Tim. 2. v. 1. speaketh of, to witt: Deprecatiōs petitions, intercessions, & thanke(s)gimings. All which if they may of all the whole congregation al at once, or altogether, be sung: why maye they not as well of them be saide, as sung, if they be said distinctly, and without confusion? Singing (I grant) doth wel. where it may be had, & where they haue tunable voices, and sufficient skill to keepe their notes in tune and order.

But,

But is singing more fit for prayer than is saying? I am glad to heare our Brethren to fauour singing of prayers. But, can they not do, but they must ouer-do: all the whole Congregation can not sing so wel all at once, or altogether, or perhaps manye of them not at all, except they shoulde sing a blacke sanctus. But, they may all at once, a great deale more easily say those prayers, or some psalmes that they cannot sing, not onely if they can reade, but if they can folloin the Minister, that saith the same before them. And yet, they be not put either to the singing or saying of all, or of halfe a quarter, but of some fewe, and short, and easy, and those that they are acquainted well withall, which if they can sing, it is well, and a good hearing. But looke what they can sing, that (I thinke) they can as easily say, and as orderly too, if they be so disposed.

But how do our brethren proue, they should thus sing altogether.

For (say they) this custome hath continued in the Church from the beginning.

Our Brethr.
reason of cu
stome from the beginning.

Pea? and is this then, a good plea with our brethren, of such a custome as hath continued from the beginning? When (I thinke) they will be- thinke them-selues a little better, for the continuing superiority of one priest or Elder, aboue his fellowe priests or Elders, which also hath continued in the Church from the beginning, as we haue at large before de- clared. And haue we not seene this custome also, that the whole Congre- gatio as wel saying as singing (and that oftner saying than singing) made altogether at once, as with one heart, so with one voice, their prayers and thankesgiuings vnto God? Of which continuance we haue seene the cu- stome, both in the olde testament and in the newe, euen from the begin- ing.

As for that our Bre. make it the duty of the pastor to pray in the name of the whole congregation: we deny it not, that this is his duety, but, this debarreth not, but that the whole Congregation also, may now and then ioyne with the pastor, with one heart and with one voyce and so wel as sing, so likewise may they pray altogether at once, if not in their owne names, but in the name of Iesus Christ, yet in their owne voices, and for their own selues, as wel, as the minister also to pray for them, and in their names. Which debarre of the whole congregation so to do, more than de- barring them of singing, is too nice and precise a scruple in our brethren without warrant either of commandement, or of custome continued, in the Church from the beginning for the same.

And these three partes of a pastors duety, to preache, to Minister the sacraments and to pray, are so necessarily required of him in the worde of God, as no man may rightly execute the office of a pastor, but he that performeth all these, eche one in their due time. And to this part of prai- er may be referred, the blessing of Mariages, not of necessity, but of an-

To all these three partes of a Pastors duty, we assent in this manner. For the first, that it is his duty to preach, either distinguishing of the manner of the preaching, or the necessity of the duty, as we haue before declared. And like wise for the other two, wee graunt them as necessary, as our brethren doe require them, and as partes of his duty. Nowbeit, as our Brethren here at length do confesse, not alwayes either these two, and much lesse all these three, to bee necessarily executed and performed all at once, but each one in their due time. So that, although preaching (in the sense as our Brethren vnderstand, distinct from teaching) want vpon any necessary or conuenient occasion at the same time: yet may the pastor rightly procede in executing the part of a pastors duty, for his publike prayers, and perfourming the administration of the sacramentes. And though the Sacramentes also, vpon any occasion or necessity, bee not administered: as, for Baptisme, if there be none to be baptized, or the people do not receiue the communion at euery assembly, as our Brethren. (I think) will not say it is necessary, especially in the assemblies at the euening prayers, except they will haue no publike euening prayers, or the communion to be receiued in the euening: yet, without the sacramentes, may the publike prayers rightly procede. Yea, though there bee neither sacramentes, nor sermon at that time, yea, and though there were a Preacher neuer so learned, except they will in euery Congregation, prouide at least for two preachers, one to preach at the Morning Prayer, the other at the euening prayer, or prouide sufficient health and strength for one to serue alwayes both the turnes, or else, cease the publike euening prayers, and now and then Morning Prayers too, for want of the sacramentes and the preaching.

And although it be more requisite that publike praier should be made, both at the preaching of a sermon, and especially at the ministration of the Sacramentes: yet, as publike prayers may procede without eyther of these, so may either of these both preaching, & also baptisme (though not the communion of the L. body & blood) be administered without the publike prayers, if such necessity or occasion serued as we haue seene sufficient examples thereof, euen in the Word of God. Notwithstanding, with publike prayer, (we stil grant) it is alwayes better. And when all these three parts of a pastors duty, preaching, ministring the sacraments, and praying, are ioyned one with another: we deny not, but it is best of all.

As for referring the blessing of Mariages vnto prayer, I like it also very wel: But then, I would haue our Brethren make this withal, that here they say of this blessing, or praying for them, that it is not of necessity but of an auncient vse of the Church. Now, if the praier for the married be not of necessitie, but of conueniencie, because it is an ancient custom some of the Church: what then shall we thinke of the administration of the sacramentes vnto them at the time of their Mariage, or of a sermon to be preached vnto them, when the publike praier, that God would bounch safe to blesse those, that are to bee ioined in the sanctified and honourable estate of Matrim.) is not of necessitie? yet are our W^{ts}. herein to be again much commended, that would haue these prayers of blessings bled at mariages, because though they be not of necessity, yet are they of an auncient custome of the Church. Which rule if they would consider in many other things, being neither wicked nor superstitious, being neither against good manners nor true Doctrine, though they bee not prescribed, nor yet expressed in the word of God, nor are of any necessitie, but of an auncient custome in the Church: they would not reiect so many things, cheere-ly, not so contemptuously, as they doe.

THE 9. Booke treateth of the Churches authority in disposing matters of order, comlineffe and edification, and of the church of Engl. lawfull proceeding herein. Of these Discourfers disobedience and reproches of the churches dooings, and vrging their owne orders without authority: of the daunger in contentions for small matters: and of vrging and impugning ceremonies: how comlineffe, order and edification are ioyned and seperated. Of S. Paules reproouing the vncomlineffe of Womens prophecying and preaching, and why these Learned discourfers so especially note this vncomlineffe: how their owne positions inferre Womens preaching on necessity extraordinarily, and so, of consequence, Baptizing. How Women did then prophefy in the congregation of the Corinthians, and of our late abuse in that exercise: the confuting of Beza and others interpretations for Womens prophecying, to haue beene but onely in hearing, with the manifold examples to the contrary. How farre Caluine and other Protestantes allow it or debarre it: how Caluine digresseth hereupon from Womens publique speaking to their publike gouernment, and with what hard tearmes he concludes against it. How Danaus resumeth the same question, & followeth further vpon it. Of the cause that carieth away Caluine, Danaus & all the French writers from the æconimicall to the politicall gouernment of Women: & howe requisite it is to pursue this digression, both to stande on our necessary defence in this point, and to confute all suche, as heretofore, both in other countries and among vs, haue set foorth Bookes against Womens Regiment. To which pointes are first examined, the arguments that Canalis the French chronicle hath gathered together against all womens Gouernmēt, vnder pretence of the Salike Lawe in France: with examining & conferring the law of God, the law of Nations, & the ciuill law.

Besides

besides the examination of the often practise in France by the gouernment of Women of the ancient state of France: the pede-grees in and before the time of Pharamund, and since. The lynes of the Merouingians, the Carolines, and the Capetians, or Hugonians, all from the right and title of Women. The arguments for the gift of healing, and of the same also in the kings & Queenes of England. The hurt and troubles that the deuise of the Salike lawe hath bred to all Chrestia kingdomes. The examples, obiections, & reasons pro & contra in Daneus, & the answers vnto him, with the examples of wom. gouernment in all ages and in all the most famous peoples of the World, besides England: & cheefly in the Empire of Rome, which Daneus excepteth: & of Daneus conclusio against patrimonial magistracy & iurisdiction. Lastly, the answers to the argumentes of Bodinvs and of Hottomanus, against womens regiment, & for the Salike Lawe, with Hottomans Judgement thereupon.

Furthermore, in those things that are necessary partes of the Pastors office, the Church hath authority to dispose them, as touching the circumstaunces, for order and comelinesse sake: but cheefely for edification. As the dayes and times of preaching and administering the sacraments, the places meete for the same, and for publike prayers: also the forme and manner of vsing those things, so that all things be done comly and agreeable to order, but especially that in all things, principall re-garde bee had to edification, which Saint Paule so often & so precisely vrgeth in the 14. Chapter of the 1. Cor. For therefore ought our assemblies & commings together to serue, that therefore we may be better, that we may be taught, that we may be edified. 1. Cor. 11. 17. 1. Cor. 14.

things: with what authority then do our brethren take upon them, to trans-pose in the Church of England, that which the Church of England hath disposed? with what authority can they abrogate or alter the dayes and times of preaching & administering the sacraments, that the Church of Engl. in like manner by her authority hath disposed? with what authority can they dispose assemblies, & commings together of the people, to bee made in other places, than to that purpose are disposed: with what authority can they controul or disobey the form & manner of the publike praiers, & vsing those things in the ordinary seruice, that the church of Eng.
hath disposed to be used? yet they will not only refuse to vse those things & the form & manner of publike prayers, noz only deface & reuile them as naught, but set forth & oppose against that, which by the churches autority is disposed, another forme & maner of publike prayers of their own disposing. Yea, if wee were disposed to examine better their owne positions: how standeth this with their prayer, on the other side of the leafe, pag. 69. saying, God graunt therefore that in steed of ordinary formes of prayer, we may haue preaching in all places? If the church haue authority to dispose for publike prayer, the form & manner, so that al things be done comely, & agreeable to order, but especially that in all thinges, principal regard be had to edification: then, not only a forme of publike prayers hindreth no whit, but furthereth comelines, order & edificatiō: but also the church vsing her authority, in disposing of an ordinary form of publike praiers, so well as in disposing the daies & times & places for preaching: it cannot be that preaching in all places shoulde bee had in steed of publike praiers, but that both of them should stil continue, in their dayes and times, places, forme and manner, by the Churches authority disposed.

And what followeth hereupon? but that either our brethren must denie the Church of England to be the Church, and so, not to haue authority of their disposing of these things: or els, granting it to be the Church, this is to say, a particular Church, for, I think they will not say, that they mean this only of the vniuersal church, noz yet of euery seuerall congregation, for so our 132e. assertion were not true: but speaking heere indefinitely, that the church hath authority to dispose these thinges: they mean, every whole state of any true particular Church in Christendome. As the Church of England in Engl. the Scottish Church in Scotl. the Heluetian, the Gene-uian, the French and the Dutch Church, in their owne states. Which being confessed: our Brethren being neither the Church vniuersall, noz the whole state of the particular Church of England, but priuate members in the Church of England: and though some numbers of them heere and there collected, may make some seuerall congregations: yet are they not of sufficient authority, no not so to collect themselves, or haue any authority of making any assemblings or commings together at all in any place, ence.

being but private persons: without the disposing of them that have auto-ritie in the Church, or of the whole estate of the church of England ther-unto: then must they needs confesse withall, that they doe greatly offende, in going about to gaine say and overthrowe this authority of the whole Church of England, which hath by her authority, so much as in her lies, disposed ordeined, and established these things, as touching the circumstaunces for order and comelnesse sake, but cheefely for edification, as the dayes and times of preaching, and administring the sacramentes, the places meete for the same, and for publike prayers: also for the form and manner of vsing those things, that all thinges be done comely and agreeable to order, but especially, that in all things, principal regard bee had to edification.

Nowe, when the Church of Englande hath by her authority, and by the authority of the supreme gouernor of her vnder Christe, and of all the gouernors ecclesiasticall or politicall of her whole estate, thus disposed these thinges: Is it lawfull for any private persons, bee they learned Their of- or vnlearned, be they few or many, in the same Church, to resist this au- sence a- thority? whether this be to resist euen God, or no: and whether, that which gainst God.
Saint Paule wrote to the Romaines, Chapter, 13. charging them beeing Christians to obey their Ciuill Magistrates, (though euill and Heathen, in ciuill and indifferent matters, do not much more binde euery particular private Christian, & all Christian subiects, to obey their Christian Magistrates, and all good Christian both Ecclesiasticall and politike gouernors, & the whol particular estate & authority of their owne church, wherof they are but private members: I refer it, to euery indifferent readers iudge-ment, & to our Bre. owne answer, on better aduiseement of these thinges.
If our Bre. deny, that they haue euer done, or yet doe resist the Church of Englands authority in disposing these thinges: what was all this that was last spoken of, against the ordinary form of publike praier & diuine service, besides the authority it selfe of the ecclesiasticall gouernors, and many other thinges of circumstances for dayes, times, places, and administrations of Sacraments, that they so vehemently impugne? If they say, The church that herein yet, they doe not resist nor speake against the Church of Eng. of Eng. hath and agreeable to order, but especially, that in all thinges, principall re-garde bee had to edification, which S. Paule so often and so precisely vrgeth in the 14. Chapter of the Cor. Neither do we desire to haue the Churches authoritie in these circumstances, to bee enlarged one inche further. And such so (God bee prayesed) hath the Church of Englande had, an especiall consideration of al these 3. points, of comelinesse, of order, and of edification.

If they thinke not so, acknowledging her to bee a true Church: except they can proue it better, than hitherto they haue done, and yet should they proue the same also, (if they coulde) with moze modesty and humility than they attempt to doe: they both offer too great an iniury to their true and louing Mother the Church of England, whose Children (if any children of the Church) they be, and bewray too great a partiality to their owne opinion. And, moze seemely of the twain, it might be thought to all good men, that as they confesse their Mother hath authoritie, giuen vnto her by their Father, of disposing these circumstances to these ends and purposes: that withall, they should rather render her this hono^r, being known other wise, to be a true, reuerent, and chaste mystricall wife vnto her spouse & husband, and to bee a naturall and tender mother to her children, hauing nourished the with the pure milk of Gods word, and brought them vp to that knowledge of God which they now haue, to thinke, that she hath vsed her authoritie well, in disposing these circumstances to these ends accordingly, and submit themselves to her disposing of them: than to accuse her to their father, or make an outcry of her to the world, that she hath abused her authority in these things, and that these circumstances are not disposed to these 3. ends, neither by her, nor by any for her, that either their father, or she, hath committed her authority of disposing them vnto, except they be a new disposed, & transposed, in such order, as they the pinate children shal conceive, to bee moze agreeable to these ends. What an vnaturall part were this? yea, how is it not as great fault, on the contrarie as the aduersaries, that extolled and honozed their mother too much, giuing her equal authority with God, (whom they pretended to be their father) not onely in circumstances, but in pointes of religion, and making her to alter Gods commandements: thus aduanced they their mother, which was and is notoriously conuicted, of most manifest spiritual fornication. And wee now, that professe our selues to be children of her, whom we al acknowledge to be the true wife, and chaste matron of the L. What we thus on the other side dishonour her, that when we cannot deny her authority in these circumstances, we shal say, she vseth the not to the end, for which they are giue her? As for that, which Paul so often and so precisely vrgeth, 1. Cor. 14. In all these verses so precisely quoted, 23. 24. 25. 26. & 31: What is there anie thing in anie one of all these verses to the purpose, that heere our Brethren speake of: saue that onelie in the end of the 26. vers, Paul saith: Let al things be done to edifying? which precept I know not, nor it is yet promised, that this our mother the Church of Englande, in disposing any of these so named, circumstances, doth transgresse and abuse this her authorie. As for the other place here also cited, 1. Cor. 11. 17. is nothing likewise to the present purpose. Now, in this (saith S. Paule) that I declare, I prayse you not, that ye come together, not with profite but with hurte. Except, that it maketh more against our Brethren them selues, than it doth anie whitte against the Church of Englande, for any circumstance of these things that by her authority she hath misdisposed. True it is, the church of Corinth beganne to abuse and dispose amisse diuerse thinges, which S. Paule dissuading them from, teacheth them in what comely sort, the men and women among them should pray or prophetic. Which when he had declared, (preuenting such contentious persons, as would vnneccessarilie disturbe quiet, comely, and indifferent orders) he sayth ver. 16. immediately before that which our Brethren alleage: but if any man be contentious, we haue no such custome, neither the Churches of God.

Contentious

orders

Upon which generall admonition, Caluine sayth: He is contentious, that is, stirred vp with a lust of mouing strifes, neither regardeth hee, that place should be giuen to the truthe. Such are all they that vpon no necessitie, would ouerthrowe pull vp (or destroy) all good and profitable rites (or customes,) which moue cōtrouerfies of matters not doubtfull, which holde not themselves contented with reasons, which suffer not themselves to be restrayned into order, such are also disorderly, those that are vnciuile, or not able to be kept companie withall, who with a foolish affection are carried into a forme that men are not accustomed vnto. Paule vouchsafeth to giue those men an aunswere: because contention is a pernicious thing and therefore it ought to bee driuen awaie from the Churches. Wherein he teacheth, that such frowarde persons and desirous of brawling, should rather bee kept vnder with authoritie, than with long disputations to be refelled. For, there will neuer be an end of contentions, if by struing thou wouldest overcome a quarrellous man. For he will neuer be tyred, although he be overcome an hundred times. Let vs diligently therefore, note this place, least wee should suffer our selues to be caried away with superfluous disputations: notwithstanding so that, we shall knowe howe, to discerne contentious persons. For we must not alwayes holde him contentious, that yeeldeth not to our decrees, or that dare gain-say vs: but where a lust and an obstinacie appeareth; then let vs say with Paule, contentions ought to be farre off, from the custome Ecclesiasticall. Thus sayth Caluine: whether it touch our Brethren or vs nearer, let other iudge.

ous men

Paule nowe vpon the occasion of these contentious men, sayth in the next verse, which by our Brethren here is quoted: Nowe in this that I declare, I prayse ye not, that ye come together not with profite but with hurt. For first

remories. first when ye come together into the Church, I heare that there are dissensions among you, and I beleene it in some parte. These dissensions rayled among them by dissentious persons, (that unnecessarily disturbed the peace of God, and quiet of the Church,) hindred indeede their edification in their Ecclesiasticall assemblies. And it hath not a little hindred the edification of the Church among vs. For what is edifying, but the building up of the mysticall bodie of Christe, that is, his Church? And if all assemblies and comminges together ought therefore to serue that wee may be better, that we may be taught, that wee may be edified: doe not our assemblies and comminges together, (meaning of our Ecclesiasticall assemblies) serue to the same purposes? If they take not alwayes, nor in all the parties that come together in those assemblies, the effect for the which they serue, shall wee blame the Churches disposing of the assemblies? Or not rather the defaultes of the assembled persons, and especially these makers of vnecessarie dissensions in the assemblies. Which if they were repressed with authoritie, and the assembled parties do their duties, as the Church hath well disposed these assemblies to serue to these good purposes: so they would be farre more effectnall then they be. And therefore I like better of Caluines note hereon, from whō our Brethren seeme to take this saying. For (sayth he) if we respecte what should bee doone in the Church, no comming together ought to want frute. There is the doctrine of God heard, prayers are made, the mysteries are celebrated. The frute of the worde is, that the trust and feare of God should be encreased in vs; that proceedinges forward may be made in holines of life, that more and more we may put off the olde man, and profite in newnesse of life: and the other mysteries tend hereunto, that they may exercise vs in godlines and charitie. And also vnto all these things praiers doe auaile. And to this it cometh, that the Lorde worketh effectually by his spirite, because hee would not that his institutions should be vaine. Therefore if the holy comings together do profite vs nothing, nor that we be any whit better thereupon, our vnthankfulnes is in the fault: and therefore are we rightly to be accused. For we are the doers, that those things which of their owne nature, and of the ordinance of God ought to be healthful, passe away without any profite. Thus both Calvin rightly lay the fault where it is, on our owne selues, and not on the Churches authoritie or disposing of these assemblies.

And therefore we haue great maruell that some are so precise in prizing ceremonies, as manye thinke muche hyndering edification, but as mooste men confesse, nothing profiting to edification, hauing alwayes in their mouthe that saying of Saint Paule, 1. Cor. 14. 40. Let all thinges be done decently and according to an order, and doe so little remember that the Apostle in that long Chapter, labourerth altogether to drue all thinges to edification, or else to drue them out of the Church. As he sayth of him that hath the gift of tongues, beeing of it selfe an excellent and comely gift of the holy Ghost, and being vied orderly of one or two by course, with an interpreter, might do much good in the Church. But if there be none interpreter (sayth he) let him holde his peace in the congregation.

To vrge ceremonies either much hindring edificatiō, or nothing profiting to edification; and to be so precise, or to be precise at all in vrging of them: although it be not to be marueiled, that some do so, and that some are so: yet, is it not to be liked that any should so doe, or be. But I marueile more, that our Bishops marueiling at some that doe and be so: doe not finde also that their selues doe it and so be: so precisely vrging the ceremonies, which they would bring into the Church; that vpon this so great precisenes, they haue gotten themselves the name of Precisians for it. And also so that they are so precise in druing out those ceremonies, which their selues as it should seeme, dare not plainly saye, or (I am sure) cannot sufficiently proue, to be naughtie and superstitious ceremonies. No, nor here they say, that they are much hindring edification: but, as many thinke, much hindring edification. And yet, they their selues controll this manies thinking also, & say, (as it were by correction of their former speech) but, as most men confesse, nothing profiting to edification. But who are these many, and these most men, that thus thinke, or confesse? Is it not only their owne selues? For, if they thinke that other thinke as they thinke herein; they thinke greatly amisse, and decaue themselves. For, the most men, neither confesse nor thinke any such thing. I speake not of the most men among the aduersaries of the Gospel: but of the most men among the Protestantes, and Professors of the Gospel. Neither is there any such cause or truth of matter, why they should either so confesse or thinke of any ceremonies, that in the Church of England are now vrged. But who likewise are these that so vrge them? And withal, what are these ceremonies, which they vrge, that many should thinke, are much hindring edification: or, most men should confesse, are nothing profiting to edification? And howe farre south also stretcheth this so precise vrging of them? For all these points, if they had of our Bishops ben plainly sette downe: they might haue bene of vs the easlier and more plainly answered.

But as our Bishops name not these, some: so would I gladly, and for brotherhood-sake, impute it to their modestie, in forbearing the naming of such estates & persons. Whatbeit, because in these speeches, they seeme not to meane any blinde and superstitious aduersaries, but such as are open professors of the Gospel: nor any priuate persons, but such as haue authoritie to vrge these things: and that they vrge the so precisely: although our our Brethren do the better to mollifie the terme, that they vrge them but precisely: and not that they vrge the with any simple & absolute necessitie, as themselves before did vrge preaching, at every time of administering the sacramentes, and of pyblike prayers: yet are our Brethren not a little to blame herein. thus to glieke at the Magistrates, or at any other their Protestant Brethren, with such apparant scanders, that they vrge such hindring or nothing profiting ceremonies, and that they vrge the same so precisely. Whereas, first no ceremonies are at all vrged, (that is, as I take it by authoritie commaunded:) but such as we can, and shall at all times, (when any such shall be named,) clearly proue, not to hinder, but to further edification. And then, that (being whatsoever betwixen our Brethren and vs they shalbe proued to be,) they are not vrged so precisely, but onely in such manner, as may well stand with our Christian libertie, and as toucheth not the freedom of our conscience at all, as any matter of religion: but onely in respect of a ciuill or Ecclesiasticall obedience, for comlineesse and order sake, which is nothing prejudiciall or hindring to edification, but furthering and profiting of it. And withall, these some that vrge the same, are of such citate, calling and authorie, yea, and of such a number, so many, and the most men, & besides the most, the best among vs: that the some, or the many, or the most men or women among our Brethren and sisters, that thinke of these ceremonies otherwise, and vrge the abolishing of them, as precisely, and farre more precisely, than any among vs doe vrge the retayning of them: ought rather, (if they did well be thinke themselves, either of their duties and callings, or of the nature and vrging of these things,) both to thinke and to confesse better of the vrgers of them, and of thinges vrged, and to yeld vnto them, namely in such sort, as they are vrged; at least wise, if they will not yelde; yet, not to disturbe the peace of conscience, the vnitie of the Church, the quiet of the state and the mutuall bonde of charitie, with their intemperate and vn-necessarte struiuing against them. For whether, these ceremonies doe or no, certaine it is, that not only many thinke, and most men confesse, but that all of vs (saue the common aduersaries that like it, and laugh thereat, and blowe the coales, and warme their hands at the fire thereof) must haue graunt, that these contentions for these thinges, doe not onely nothing profite, but much hinder edification. Yea, and it were not more of the surmounting mercies of our god God, and the helpe and comfort he hath raysed vnto vs, by his holy Wandmaiden: not only the edification, but the whole edifice, had long ere this for the visible state thereof among vs bene quite shattered in shivers, and cleane ouerturned. And now, whether we for the ceremonies of circumstances should rather in thankfull obedience, yeld vnto her Maiestie, and to all our Gouernours vnder God and her, and to the state already established: or her Maiestie, and all our

Gouvernours, and the whole estate established, should herein yeelde to these our Brethren: there lies the question. And I referre it (being a question, for some certaine order to be had in indifferent things) vnto the determination and order of all indifferent iudgements.

But this is that also, which our Brethren find fault withall; that these some, which they say are so precise in vrging ceremonies, are alwaies hauing in their mouthes, that sentence of S. Paule, 1. Cor. 14. 40. let all things be done decently and according to an order.

And is not this a good sentence of S. Paule, for them, for our Brethren too, and every one of vs, when we haue occasion to treate of such matters, to haue alwaies in our mouthes, to haue alwaies in our heartes, to haue alwaies in our actions and performances? What means therfore our Brethren here to finde fault with this, that any should alwaies haue so excellent a sentence in their mouthes, for the keeping of order, especially they that with authoritie vrg it? Doth not this sentence mightily confirme it, when it sayth that all things, making no exception of ceremonies, as of any indifferent things, to be vsed in the Church assemblies, but, as they must be done in a comely manner: so they must be done in order? and can an order be kept more orderly, than when a standing and set order is appointed, by those that haue authoritie thereunto, and they precisely vrg it, without violating the obseruation of the same? Would our Brethren haue men to lay aside this sentence of S. Paule out of their mouthes, out of their heartes, and out of their actions, and continue to breake this rule: Either that all things, or that any indifferent thing, ceremonie, or circumstance, should in the Church assemblies be done, without vrging of an appointed comelinesse, and without vrging any authorized & prescribed order? But our Brethren not onely finde fault with them, that haue this sentence alwaies in their mouthes: but say they, and doe so little remember that the Apostle in that long chapter laboureth altogether, to driue all things to edification, or else to driue them out of the Church.

If they haue alwaies that sentence of S. Paule in their mouthes, in such sorte, that they doe so little remember, in their heades, this drift of the Apostle, and this his other sentence in the same chapter, ver. 26. let all things be done to edification: then doe they greatly forgette the principall thing, that in these matters they ought to haue remembred. But if our Brethren remember this, as a challenge to burde the Magistrate, & those in authoritie that vrg these things in maner a foresayde, that they haue alwaies in their mouthes the one sentence of S. Paule for comelines and order, and remember so little the other, for edification, which the Apostle likewise laboured to driue all things vnto: then their selues doe so little remember their dutie to their betters, and so much forget the truth: that that if other had sayde it then our B:eth:en, I would haue remembered them of this olde sentence, oportet esse memorem they knowe who. Forther can these two, that is, comlines & order, be destitute of this other, that is, edification. For, the name edifying, being a generall name, to bulde and set vp, or to yne together the mysticall bodie of Christe: doeth not the comely p:oposition of the edifice, not onely beautifull and commende the forme, but the orderly disposing of all the partes thereof, containe and maintayne euen the verie edifying of the whole frame. And therefore when S. Paule had sayde before, ver. 26. Let all thinges be done to edificati-on: he knitteth by all his conclusion of that matter, with this sentence, that our B:eth:en would not haue men to take so often in their mouthes, Let all thinges be done decently and according to order: Both making eyther of these, comelineffe and order, to stretch their iurisdictions (as farre as edification) euen to all thinges, vnderstanding them of all such thinges as are to be done in the Church assemblies: and also to be as requisite and necessarie in their kindes, as edification is, if not to bee some principall partes their selues of edification. And if (as our B:eth:en say) we must remember, that Saint Paule laboureth in all that long Chapter, to driue all thinges to edification: why may we not as well, or rather saye, when he concludeth all with the other twaine, that our B:eth:en must also remember this, that S. Paule laboureth in all that long Chapter, to driue all thinges to decencie and to an order? May not all those things that went before, be more properly sayde to be driuen to that, that is the last conclusion, then to be driuen to that, that is in the beginning, or in the middle of the treatise?

But if this be true, that he laboureth to driue all to edification, & yet this is apparant, that he concludes all with decencie & order: then, either is comelineffe, & order contayned in edification, or edification contayned in comelineffe and order. Or else, these thinges beeing not contayned the one in the other, but thinges seuerall: this is not true, that he laboureth altogether in the long chapter to driue all thinges to edification, labouring also to driue not onely some thinges, but all thinges, to decencie and to order as well, and as much, as to edification. But he that laboreth altogether to driue all thinges to one thing, doth not labour to driue the to any other: S. Paule therefore labouring to driue all thinges withal to these two: if they be seuerall matters frō edification, this can not be true, that he laboreth altogether to driue all thinges to edification, except we either comprehend the name of decencie & order in the name of edification; or the name of edification, in decencie & order, to salue our B:eth:en assertion, from conuulsion of an apparant vnt ruth, so much as we can. And so in deed it may in a very good sense bee vnderstande, for there is an edifying in all these respectes, not onely when the people do vnderstande those thinges that order are their selues

an edifying.

that are spoken, and receaue instruction & comfort by them, whereby they are sayde to be edified, that is, in knowledge and faith to be builded vpon Christ the rocke: but also when any publike action in the Church is done, in such sort as S. Paule in that long chapter laboureth to haue it doone, to wit, uexquidus: comely, honestly, or decently: and keepeth such degree of place and time, that it is done uexquidus, according to order: albeit the matter be but a ceremonie of apparell, as the vncouering or couering of mens and womens heades, while they prayed or prophesied, which being no matter of doctrine, Saint Paule precisely vrgeth, though not so precisely, that we shoulde make it a matter of the substance of religion: yet, he driueth it to such a naturall comelinesse, and with so greates and vrgent reasons for Ecclesiasticall order sake: that he maketh the comely order thereof, and of such other thinges as he there handleth, for speaking in their tournes and courses, to be no little edification to the assemblie.

And therefore well sayth Caluine on this sentence, Let all thinges be done Caluine decently and in order: the conclusion is more generall (he meaneth, than 1. Cor. 14. 40.
that which was before, in exhorting them to sake after prophesie) which not onely comprehendeth in brieft the whole state: but also the singular partes: yea, rather it is a rule, whereunto it behooueth vs to driue all thinges that appertayne to externall policie. Because hee disputed scatteringlye of rites or ceremonies, hee therefore heere woulde collecte all into a brieft summe, to witte, that a comelinesse shoulde be kept, and confusion should be auoyded. Which sentence sheweth, that hee woulde not binde the consciences to the former preceptes, as thinges of them-selues necessarie: but so farre forth as they shoulde serue to comelinesse and to peace. Heereupon (as I haue sayde) wee gather a perpetuall doctrine, to what ende the policie of the Church should be directed. The Lorde hath lefte in our libertie externall rites or ceremonies, therefore, least wee shoulde thinke his worshippe to be included in them. Notwithstanding hee hath not in the meane season permitted vnto vs, a varying and vnbrideled licence: but hee hath encompassed rounde about (that I may so terme them) lattisses (or crosse barres) eyther else, hath he indeed so moderated the libertie which he gaue, that at length we may by his worde esteeme what is right. This place therefore rightly waighed, will shewe the difference, betweene the tyrannicall edictes of the Pope, which presse the conscience with a cruell bondage, and the godly lawes of the Church, in which discipline and order is conteyned. Besides that hereupon, we may reddily gather, that these later, are not to be holdé for humane traditions, sith that they are founded in this generall comendement, and haue a cleare allowance from the mouth of Christe himselve.

Thus

Thus notable sayth Caluine on this sentence. And is not this sentence then worthy, that we should haue it alwayes in our mouthes, whensoever we haue occasion to vrge, of talks of ceremonies? And both not this comeliness and order stretch it selfe also to edification?

But if we nowe vnderstande it thus, to saue our Brethrens credits, that the one of these both comprehendeth the other: our Brethren must giue vs leaue with all, to remember those that vrge these thinges, which hauing alwayes in their mouthes that sentence of S. Paule, 1. Cor. 14. 40. let all thinges be done decently and according to an order: doe not so little remember as our Brethren charge them, but remember well, that the Apostle in that long Chapter labourereth (whether altogether or no, let that goe) to driue all thinges to edification: edification being conteyned in decencie and order, and order and decencie conteyned in edification. And yet we may not simply graunt to this disunctiue part of this our Brethrens sentence, that S. Paule laboured to driue all thinges to edification, or else to driue them out of the Church: for, S. Paule went not about to driue any of those good giftes of God, which in that long chapter he speaketh of, out of the Church of God, though they were by some among them then abused, and not driuen to edification, comeliness, and order: but labourereth to retaine them in their right vse, for the time that GOD would haue them vsed. And therefore, this example also is not so well alleaged of our Brethren, in saying: as he sayth of him that hath the gifte of tongues, being of it selfe an excellent and comely gifte of the holie Ghost, & being vsed orderly of one or two by course with an interpreter, might doe much good in the Church, but if there be none interpreter (sayth he) let him holde his peace in the congregation. Where is indeede mention made of holding his peace, till he had an interpreter: but not, of driuing this gifte out of the Church.

S. Paules purpose was not to driue

1. Cor. 14. 37.

And therefore Caluine with more moderation sayth hereon, ver. 37. he nowe describeth the order and setteth downe the manner. If they like to speake with tongues, let two onely speake, or if not so, yet let there not be more then three at the most. And withall, let there be present an interpreter. There is no vse of tongues, without an interpreter, let them therefore surcease for the time. But we must note, that hee commaundeth it not, but only permitteth it. For the Church may want the tongue without any incommoditie, saue in respect that they are helpes to prophetic as at this day are the Hebrue and the Greeke tongue: but Paule graunteth it, least he should seeme to driue away any grace of the spirit, from the assemblie of the faithfull. Although this also might seeme lesse agreeable vnto reason, when as before he sayde, that the tongues were conuenient for the vnfaithfull, in respect that they were a signe: I answer, howsoeuer a miracle may properly be set forth for the vnfaithfull sake sake; notwithstanding, it followeth not but that in some respectes, it ^{tongues a-} ^{busied.} perreyneth also to the faithfull. If ye vnderstande it, that an vnknown ^{busied.} tongue is a signe to the vnfaithfull, according as the wordes doe sound of Isay: the reason that Paule here prescribeth, is different. For hee so admitteth the tongues, that the interpretation adioyned leaue nothing obscure. He correcteth therefore the Corinthians vice, with an excellent temperature, while he reiecteth not anie gifte of God whatsoever, that all his benefites among the faithfull may appeare: but hee setteth downe a manner, least that ambition should creepe into the place of Gods glorie; least the gifte that is of lesse moment, should hinder those that are the chiefe giftes: and he addeth a sawce (or seasoning) of it, least it should become a meere ostentation voyde of fruite. ^{Where then} is no commandement of druing this gift out of the Church, no although the Corinthians did abuse it. But if now, this ceasing for the time of this gifte, and other like giftes, for the abusing of them, were the driuing them out of the Church, when they tended not to edification: what shall we say of those ceremonies that S. Paule there speaketh of, and of those functions and offices, not such as they imagine, but of ^{Our Brethr.} syther for the abuse succeeding, or the notable vice now long since of ^{attempted} continuing them: both the giftes, and the offices or manner of them ^{drue out} tongues while it was in vse, were (as they here confesse) a comely gifte ^{out, or ra-} of the holie Ghoste, and being vsed orderly of one or two by course, ^{ther meere} with an interpreter, might doe much good in the Church: howe then ^{supposed,} both not comelinessse and order, inferre edification? And therefore, if the ceremonies, offices and giftes of the Church of Englande that are nowe vrged, be comely, and vsed orderly: we may well conclude, that in their kindes, they be no hinderers but furtherers to edification.

But, say our ^{13. of 1. Cor.} the vncomelinessse that S. Paule reprobeth was, that womē should preach in the Church, as ver. 34. 35. the disorder, that those giftes which serued least for edifying, were preferred before them that serued most for edifying, as tongues before prophecie.

We graunt S. Paule reprooueth these abuses in the Corinthians Ec-clesiasticall assemblies, vncomelinessse and disorder. But did he reprove none other vncomelinessse in them, then that women should preach in the Church, as 1. Cor. 14. ver. 34. & 35? Did he not reprove an vncomlineſſe in them befoꝛe, both foꝛ men and womē too, in the 11. chapter ver. 13. and 14? Iudge in your ſelues (ſayth he) is it comely that a woman pray vnto God vncouered? Doth not nature it ſelfe teache you that if a man haue long beaꝛe, it is a ſhame vnto him? And doth not Saint Paule reprocue them alſo, ver. 21. 22. foꝛ their great vncomelineſſe and diſorder, in the participation of the Lobbes ſupper? For euery man (ſayeth hee) when they ſhould eate, eateth his owne ſupper befoꝛe, and one is hungry, and another is drunken. Haue ye not houſes to eate and drinke in? Diſpiſe ye the Church of God, and ſhame them that haue not? What ſhall I ſay to you? Shall I prayſe you in this? I prayſe you not. And appointing them a better order, hee concludeth that Chapter with this ſaying, Other thinges will I ſette in order when I come. Which done, he commeth to theſe giſtes whereof now we ſpeake, tongues, interpreting, prophecyng, &c. in the 12. 13. and 14. chapters. And doth he not here alſo note, that they abuſed this excellent and comely giſte of tongues, (as our Bꝛethꝛen call it) by their praying or prophecyng in a ſtraunge tongue, though the ſame were not interpreted? Was not this their abuſe theſe of this comely giſte, an vncomelineſſe in them.

But our Bꝛethꝛen haue a ſpeciall meaning herein, that ſetting aſide al other, they onely note this vncomelineſſe and ſay: The vncomlynes that S. Paule reprocueth, was, that women ſhould preach in the Church as ver. 34. 35. And theſe I thinke it not amiſſe to conſider this point better, ſpecially that which here they lead vs vnto. And at this they quarrell be- foꝛe, pag. 62. and often times threaten kindnes on vs, that we maintaine womens adminiſtration of Baptiſme. But do not they theſelues (though it be the moꝛe ſtrange to ſee their dealing theron) euē where they goe about to confute it, a great deale moꝛe confirme it, than we doe? Haue not they confeſſed, pag. 59. that whome ſocuer God hath inſtituted to be miniſter of his worde, him alſo hath hee made to bee miniſter of the ſacrament, and that, it pertayneth to him to deliuer the ſcale, which deliuereth the writings? Look then, whether this come not nearer to the permiſſion of women to baptize, yea, and to miniſter the commu- nion, than any thing that they can gather of vs. Except they will ſid to this article, that heere they ſtill ſpeake of him, not of her. But ſhall we thus elude the wordes of the textes alſo. euē there, foꝛ paꝛſe cited by our Bꝛethꝛen: Matth. 28. 19. Go ye foꝛth and teach all Nations bap- tizing them, and is not both the Latine and Greeke alſo, Conuerſum dicit, baptizantes illos, baptizing them, onely the Maſculine gender? As it is moꝛe plaine in the other text, Mar. 16. 15. Go ye foꝛth into the whole worlde, and preach the Goſpell to euery creature, he that ſhall beleue and is baptized ſhall be ſaued. What ſhall any ſaye that this article, he, conſey- neth onely men, oꝛ men children, and excludeth women? Therefore that that Christ can not serue, but that man or woman may preache, by their prophecy- saying, on some occasion. and then, looke how farre forth they may preach, ing. and deliuer the writings, or minister the worde, so farre forth, may the same persons men and women, by these assertions of our Wethen, deli-uer the seales, and administer the sacramentes also.

But now, what doth Caluine say hereon, who is in this point the behementest of them all, that I reade, against womens preaching and baptizing? Doth he not say, euen of these selfe same wordes that our Wethen. referrs vs vnto. 1. Cor. 14. ver. 34. Let your women keepe silence in the Churches for it is not permitted vnto them to speake? &c. It appeareth that the Church of Corinth was defiled also with this vice, that there was place, or rather licentiousnes, open in the holy assembly to the babling of women. He forbiddeth them therefore to speake in publike for the cause of teaching or prophecying. But vnderstand this of the ordinarie function, or else, where there is a set or appointed state of the Church. For, such a necessitie may happen, which may require the voice of a woman.
But Paul respecteth only what is comly in an assembly orderly composed.

So that S. Paule heere debarreth not absolutely all womens speaking in the Church: so; then, how should that be which our Wethen saide before, pag. 70, that the whole congregation with one heart & with one voice, may prayse God with singing of Psalmes all at once? Are not women part of the whole congregation, so well as men? And do not the women also in their congregations sing the Psalmes together with the men?
And is not this singing, publ. praying? At least wise, is it not publ. speaking? And therefore Caluine first limiteth these wordes of the Apostle, that women are not permitted to speake in the assembly, with this restraint: to speake for the cause of teaching or prophecying. As who say, other wise they may publickly speake well inough. Yea, for teaching & prophecying also, he doth not simply forbid the same: but vpon necessitie or occasion he alloweth it euen in the holy assembly of men. & maketh it requisite that a woman may teach or prophecy. Neither helpeth it, that he saith vps 1. Cor.
11. ver. 3. Euery woman that prayeth or prophecietieth bareheaded, dishonoreth her head: but it seemeth (sayeth he) that this is superfluous, that Paul forbiddeth a woman to prophecy bare hedded, when as in an other place, he doth wholly forbid woman to speake in the Church, & therefore it shall not be lawfull for them to prophecy, no not vnder a veile (or couer.) Wherupon it foloweth, that it is here in vaine disputed of the veile or couer. It may be answered, that the Apostle in improving the one, doth not approve the other. For whē he reprehendeth that they prophesied bare-hedded, notwithstanding he permitteth them not to prophecy by any other maner of meanes, but rather deferreth the reprehension also of this vice, vnto an other place, that is to wit, vnto the 14. Chapten

But, may any man, that shall consider the payse of S. Paules words, (which were the words of the holy Ghost in him,) thinke this a sufficient aunswere to this question? No, doth not the Apostle speake this, as well of men that haue their heades couered; as of women that haue their heades vncouered? And doeth not the Apostle speake it as well of prayers, as of prophecying? If therefore he approoue it in the men, and approoue it in the prayer: why approoueth he it not likewise in the one, so well as in the other? And why may wee not safely conclude? We improoueth that a woman shoulde prophecie bare-headed: therefore if she prophecie not bare-headed but couered on her heade, he doeth not improoue it: as well as wee may saye, hee improoueth that a man shoulde prophecie with his heade couered, therefore if a man prophecie with his head vncouered, hee improoueth it not: or as well as wee may saye of the other action, that in bothe of them hee loyneth with prophecying: We improoueth that a man should praye couered, or a woman bare-headed: therefore, if a man praye vncouered, or a woman with her heade couered, he improoueth it not. And so of consequence, what he improoueth not, that hee approoueth. If S. Paule simply did improoue, and by no manner of meanes permitte women to make publike prayers, and altogether forbidde them to preach in the congregation: there is no likelihood in the world, that he would haue brought instances of such thinges, as could haue no likelihood of approbation at all, were they couered or vncouered in these actions. And therefore, this answere of Caluine can by no meanes satisfie any, that shall neuer so little consider the Apostles sentence. But Caluine perhaps thought it would better serue against the womā, though not against the man: because the man is not in other places forbidden to speake in the Church, as is the woman. And therefore he sayth, that Paule did not reprehende this fault in women heere, but referred the reprehension thereof to an other place.

Now although this reason (indeed being generally spokē,) cannot be improoued, but that S. Paule might reserue the reprehension of this or that fault, to this or that place, as it best liked the spirite of God in him, (albeit this place also had not bene vnfitte :) yet speaking of these thinges in diuerse places, he speaketh not in the one contrarie to the other, nor in any place is the spirite of God in him, contrarie to it selfe. But in diuerse places (as wee shall see anon, and that by their owne confessions) he approoueth the publike praying and the publike prophecying (whether they take prophecying properly, or for preaching) made by women in the holic assemblies. Therefore, he may not only well approoue it here, (being done in such comely order as he appointeth, and to edification;) but also it cannot bee vterly, wholly, and by all meanes improoued, in any other place, as here Caluine saith it is, which to say, is to make the spirits of God speake contradictions. And are not men also in other places forbidden publikly to preach in the congregation? Ques, how do our Weth. allege that place, pag. 58. out of Web. 3. 4. For no man may take vpon him any office in the Church, but he that is called of God, as Aaron was. And is preaching no office? And yet we see here, that vnderstanding this prophesying for preaching, he speaketh it of men as well as women. As Caluine testifieth himselfe, vpon this saying, 1. Cor. 11. 4. Euery man praying or prophesying : to prophesie, I here take to be, to declare the mysteries of God to the edification of the audience. As afterward in the 14. chapter Euen as to pray, signifieth, to conceaue the forme of praying, and as it were to goe before the whole people. So, here are euen our Wethens owne wordes, pag. 64. for their Pastors conceauing of publike prayer, and the going before his flocke in publike prayer. And yet, both S. Paule both 1. Cor. 11. & 1. Cor. 14. approue this prophesying and this praying also, being otherwise decently, orderly and to edification vsed, & apply it not only to the Pastors, but to all those among them, to whom God gaue the gifte of these thinges, though they had no peculiar and ordinarie Eccl. offices that exercised the same.

This therefore debarreth not, but that, although the ordinarie publike vse, (as taking it vpon them by peculiar office, being not called orderly thereunto,) might be forbidden, and improued, not onely in women, but in men: yet notwithstanding it is not altogether, wholly, and simply forbidden and improued, but that vpon such times as those were, or vpon some extraordinary necessitie, or occasion, (we see) that euen publik praying and publike preaching, both in men, though laye men and in women that can doe the same to edification, is approued. Yea, no better witnes than Caluine himselfe against himselfe, and euen in the very place he appealeth vnto. That is to wite, (sayth he) vnto the 14. chapter, here by our Weth. noted. And haue we not heard his iudgement there already, speaking of prophesying, that such necessitie may happē, as may require the voice of a woman? So that, he speaketh not here of olde examples such as we cannot prescribe vnto to do the like: but he speaketh of that which may now or hereafter happen, and as wherein, a womans voice in the public assembly may be as requisite, as at any time it heretofore hath bene. But what neede had Caluine to sende vs thence, to this 14. Chapter, or, we to heare him contrarie himselfe there? When as, not hauing satisfied himselfe belike, with this former vninsufficient aunswere, for this praying and prophesying of women, chap. 11. he answereth himselfe otherwize, & farre better euen in that place, saying: there is no discommoditie in that (if he means in that aunswere, we haue shewed a great discommoditie, to the truth of the matter, & to the scriptures credite, and his owne) although, meaning

neither this doth fitte the same amisse, if we say, that the Apostle requireth of women this modestie, not onely in the place where the whole Church is gathered together: but also in any more graue assēbly either of womē or of men, such as sometimes come together into priuate houses. Of which wordes, I cannot see what sense els to gather, but that, so it be done with this modestie heere required, not to lay out their beares to the shewe, as many now adayes doe, especially then, when they were all bare headed: but vs a spātronlike modestie in couering their heades, as was, & yet in the Greeke & Asian manner: though not ordinarily, yet, on some extraordinary occasion, they might both publicly pray & prophecy yea, vnderstanding it so; extraordinary preaching also, bothe in the open assemblies, & especially in their priuate houses, though diuers other spātrones, or men also, besides their owne householdes be assembled. If this be not here Caluines meaning: I conceaue him not, But, I rather thinke it, because in the place that he referreth himselfe vnto, (as we haue seene) there is no ambiguitie in his wordes.

Nowe although, that both these wordes of S. Paule, and Caluines thus farre yielding thereunto, be apparant inough to any that liste to see it: yet when it cometh to our Bzethens exposition, in their notes, on the Ge-neua translation: all this seemes so suddenly and so easily wiped awaye, that we would meruell, that Caluine, which was a man (in most points) of such excellent iudgement, and is so vehement against this point in women, and of purpose mouing and beating this question, and shaking it off with this foresayde aunswere, and yet in the ende relenting to it, though afterward he go away from it as farre againe, (as we shall see anon) did not espie so easie and so readie an aunswere as this. But, plur vident oculi, quā oculu, one man sees not all, and therefore it is lesse maruelle, if so singular a man also, as (God be prayd) Beza is, and other that so saye with him, comming after Caluine, and seeing more perhaps than he, haue founde out a fitter & fuller aunswere. Let vs therefore see also, what Beza and these men saue & say hereon. Vpon these wordes, 1. Cor. 11. ver. 4.
Every man praying and prophcing, &c. sayth the Geneua note: this is referred to common praying and preaching, for although one speake, yet the action is common, so that the whole Church may be sayde to praye or preach. Which exposition, our Bzethen chiefly take out of Beza: e-uery man (sayth he) the vniuersall particle taketh away the difference of orders and of age, so farre foorth as appertayneth to that which is treated vpon, praying or prophcing. Because the Apostle treateth of com-linesse to be kept in the common assembly: therefore I take these things as of the publike praier and prophecy, that is, of the treatise of the scripture. Howbeit I referre it not only vnto him which cōceaueth the praier or interpreteth the place of scripture: but also to the assembly of the

hearers sitting together. For although that one speake, notwithstanding the action is common, so that the whole company may be sayde by this meanes to pray and prophecie. For first of all, the reasons which the Apostle bringeth, are common to all the men that are conuersant in the Church, yea (I graunt also) to them that are without the Churches assembly. But for all that, the question propounded and the conclusion of not couering the head, doe shewe, those reasons to be referred vnto the circumstance of that time and place, wherein the Church commeth together. Moreouer if ye referre this to one person of the partie praying or prophecying; the member opposite concerning a woman, will not agree thereto. When as the Apostle afterwarde permitteth not vnto a woman, that she should speake in the Church, that is, in the common assembly 14.g. 34. & the reasons which he bringeth why they ought to be couered, it is manifest inough that they appertaine to euery one of the women that are conuersant in the publike assemblie of the Church. This is Bezaes interpretation and iudgement on this place, and his reasons also for the same. To whom accordeth Hyperius, and in part Hemingius.

Notwe although, in not subscribing (as our B^{re}thren do) to the iudgement of so learned and profound a man with other, I shall more than paye my selfe to the hard iudgement & censure of our B^{re}thren: yet with dutifull submission craving none other acquittance at Beza his handes, than euen that here be beginning first withall, that this vniuersall particle, nam dicitur, euery man, taketh awaye the difference of orders and of ages in praying or prophecying, that is, interpreting or treating of anie place in the scripture: may be my warrant against the order of Bezaes dignitie, or the grauitie of his age in this matter. And altho that he dissenteth many times, and also here in, from other, and from Caluine his owne Master, being free (as Horace sayde) nullum additum iurare in verba Magistri, but in this respect, professing him to be our only Master, that saith vnto vs for one is your Master or Doctor (to wit) Christe. Matth. 23. 8. and 10. and in this point he standeth not on man, but fortifieth his interpretation with his reasons: why may it not be lawefull for any other, and so for me, to alleage also my plaine and simple reasons? As S. Augustine sayth well herein, Res cum re, causa cum causa, ratio cum ratione. Laye matter with matter, cause with cause, reason with reason: and then iudge who list, whether Bezaes interpretation be a sufficient aunswere; or his reasons sufficiently maintain his interpretation. First he granteth, (which also I yelde vnto) that this prayer, and this prophecie, are here vnder-stode of publike actions.

the place of scripture: but of the whole auditorie sitting together. This also in some part & sense, may be granted vnto him namely for publ. praler. Because though in the conceaued publike prayers, they can not all conceaue the same altogether, and so in conceauing pronounce it, as he both, except they say the same publike forme of praler with him, (as the Lords prayer, or some other appointed) which they know before hand: & yet if he make pauses, for them al to say after him, the whole assemblie euen altogether at once, (as we haue proued) may without confusion, with one hart & with one voice, ioyne theselues together in the publ. prayers. And this also haue our Brethren graunted vnto, so it be done by singing, & we inferre, it may as well be done by saying. Or else, vnderstanding Beza his wordes disunctiuel; every man, that is, (saith he) the whole cōgregation, that is (say I) euery man or any man of the whole congregation, vnderstanding the same, of such especiall exercises in those times, or of extraordinarie occasiō eue in our times. Vnto which, applying these wordes (as Beza sayth) this vniuersall particle, ^{was alway} every man expelleth all difference of orders & ages: so in such cases all the assembly, that is, euery one, or any of the assembly, to whō God did giue a speciall gift of conceauing a good praler, might the, & may yet in like case, publikly make the same, yea, & in like maner haue prophesied also. But these things were not done, in the conceauing of these publike prayers, or in the treatises of the scripture, by euery man of the whole congregation altogether at once.

One did not all these things in all their names.

And in these senses, I denie not Bezacs interpretation. But, whē here vpon he goeth further, and drawes it to this, that this doing of euery one among the was the doing it of them altogether; because that his owne action was in all their names, and so they speak by the mouth of that one mā, that was their Pastor, or some number of Pastors among the cleane to exclude all women from speaking, and al other men present being no ministers: that is both cleane contrarie from S. Pauls meaning, and frō his apparant wordes, & frō all the circumstances of the matter, & cōference of the other sentences dependant on the same, & plain cōtradiction to Bezacs owne tale, & hath no likelihood but grosse absurdity, if not mēre impossibilitie in it. For, although (sayth Beza) one speak, yet is the action common, that all the companie by this reason may be said to pray or prophesie: True it is, the action is common, because it is done publikly, and in cōmon, for the peoples edification. But no necessitie sheweth this that euery party that is present at the doing, or assentes vnto it, may be sayde to be the doer of euery common action. The ministring of the sacraments is a cō-mon to all.

mon action: therfore by this rule of our Breth. euery mā & womā that is present at the ministring of the sacraments, & assenteth to the, & partaketh with the Ministers, may be sayd also to be the ministers of the. And yet (as I haue shewed) this may be better sayde of the publike prayer, than than of the publike prophesying. For, although S. Paule bringeth his instance of both these actions, praying and prophesying, and either of these wordes contain a relation in them: yet are they farre unlike in the things that they haue relation vnto. This word Prayer, not onely hath relation to the party that makes the Prayer: but hath relation also to some party to whom the prayer is made. Which party being God, to whom onely all the assembly make their prayers: and not to the Minister, nor the Minister to them: it followeth, that whether he or they pray altogether, or he onely pray in their name, it may (I graunt) be sayde to be their prayer: As our Brethren saide before, Page, 64. As it pertaineth to the pastor to conceiue publike prayers: so it is the duetie of the whole Church, in the name of the whole Church, to ioyne in heart with the Pastor, in the same prayers. &c. So that, in these publike Prayers, the Minister, and they whether they speake or not, doe both of them make but one party of the relation, and God the other. And not the Minister a thirde person, as an intercessor or Mediator betwixt God and them: and so, may his publike prayers be sayde to be sayde to bee theirs. Although Paule here (expressing their diuerse actions good and ill, not onely for the diuersity of couering or vncouering of their heads, but for the pronuntiatio of the language shewing also, how they shold praie, & for the courses of them, how many, & what manner, one after another, and with an interpreter, doth plainly expresse his owne meaning for this point cleare ynough, that were they men or were they Women, it was not done by the mouth of any one of their Ministers or Pastors in their names, but by their owne mouthes. This might likewise haue bene done (we deny not) for prayers, by the mouthes of other in the name of them, euens as though they all spake it. Though this also be but an improper praying on their parts (as we haue shewed) being rather but their consent vnto it.

But it is nothing alike in prophesying or preaching. For though all the people neuer so much consent vnto the preaching or prophesying, yet can it not be said to be their action, as prayer might. For in prophesying or Preaching, in the relation of these two parties, the Prophecier or Preacher respecteth God, and all the people are the hearers of God, speaking vnto them by him, Qui loquitur loquatur eloquia Dei. So that here they can be by no means be sayd to be all propheciers or preachers, onely because they are there present at the hearing of the Prophesying or preaching, and assent thereto: for then wee cleane confounde this relation betwixt God and his people, betwixt the Preacher and the hearer, when both the Preacher is the hearer, and the hearer is the preacher. Not that wee deny, but that a Preacher may be a hearer, and a hearer may be a preacher in sundry respectes, and at diuers times. And euens so it was heere, when many, and sometimes all among the people prophesied or preached, but in their courses, not all at once, nor one for all, nor one in the name of all. But as S. Paule saith: Let the prophetes speake two or three (meaning one after another) and let the other iudge. So that, they that are the hearers represent another person, and not the person of the preacher.

Caluine.

Whereupon sayth Caluine. He adhibiteth a measure also in prophesying, because the multitude (as vulgarly they say) breedeth confusion. Which is true, for dayly experience teacheth it, &c. The tongues were giuen either to treat vpon, or to pray. In the former kind, the interpreter was in place of the prophet: so was that the cheefe & more frequent exercise. Onely he setteth downe a measure, leaste by glutting them, it might waxe vile: and leaste those that were lesse skilfull, shoulde snatch vp before their betters, the place and oportunitie of the speaking. For those vnto whome hee assigneth the office of speaking, hee would haue to be indeede of the more choyse persons, and ordeyned by the comon suffrages. But none are more ready to shoue in them-selues, then those that are slightly sprinckled ouer with a mean learning. That the prouerb may be made true, Vnskillfulnesse is bold. With this euill would S. paul meete, when hee attributed the office of speaking to two or three. Of which euill if S. Paule founde the experience, while this exercise of prophesying or discussing the places in the scripture, was thus vsed in the primitive Church: when after it had beens antiquated, and cleane left in the Church so many hundred yeares, and we began agayne to renue it, though we vsed it not for any of the layty, men or women neuer so learned, but onely for the exercise of the Ministers, yet were wee so pestered with this euill, that we were sayne (it being but an exercise moze proper to that primitive age, than that we are bounde therennto) to gine it ouer againe, when no Lawe nor order could restraine this blinde boldnesse, besides other moze perillous daungers that grew, by the great disorder of the same.

But both our practise in renewing it, and their first practise in vsing it, apparantly confuteth this, that one spake not in the name of the residue, For, saith S. Paule, Let the residue iudge. And no reason that he shoulde be iudged of them, if he spake so in their name that they spake by him. And now and then they dissented, as in the next verse: If any thing bee reuealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. For (sayth Caluine) place and liberty while the matter requires it, is left vnto all, so that no man rush in out of season, rather fauouring him-selue than seruing the necessity. But this modesty he requireth of all, that enery one gine place to another, bringing forth any better matter: and in the next vers, For yee may all prophecy one by one, that all may learne and receiue consolation. First when he sayth all (saith Caluine) hee comprehendeth not the vniuersall number of the saythfull, but only those that were instructed with a faculty. Then, he signifieth that the turns of them al were ^{tongues &} equall, but as it shoulde bee for the profite of the people, euery one of ^{busied.} them either oftener or seldomer, to come forth to speake, as though hee shoulde say, there is none shall lye idly perpetually, but the oportunitie of speaking shall offer it selfe nowe to these, and nowe to those. He addeth, that all may learne. VVhich though it appertaine to the vulgar people, notwithstanding it agreeth to the prophets, and properly these Paule pointeth out, for no man shall at any time be a good teacher, that shall not yeelde himselfe, to be taught, and is alwayes ready to learn. &c. By all which, it is mosse apparant, that these prophecynges whosoever were the speakers then, were not spoken by them in the person and name of all the Congregation, nor yet of all those that had the gift thereof: but in the person of God, whose spirits spake in them. This interpretation therefore of Beza, cleane ouerthroweth all S. Pauls whole treatise of these gifts. So that, the reuerence reserued of so worthy a man, and of other with him, this (in my opinion) is but a mere euasion, so farre it is off from any thewe of a right interpretation of that sentence: euerye man praying or prophecyng with his heade couered, dishonoureth his head. And euery woman, &c.

Neither are his reasons (as me thinkes) of greater weight, than the disuise of this interpretation. His first reason is this: The reasons that the Apostle bringeth, are common to all the men that are conuersant in the assembly of the Church, and also (I graunt) of those that are out of the assembly of the Church: but for all that the question propounded and the conclusion the head not couered, do declare those reasons to be referred to the circumstance of the time and place, wherein the church assembleth: What can bee gathered hereupon, but that the Question and conclusion of vncovering the heade, doe restrayne his reasons to those that bee in the Churches assembly, which other wise, would stretch further? and what conclusion is this, that this worde praying or prophecyng, eyther in man or woman, praying or prophecyng, must needs bee vnderstoode for the action of one in the name and person of the whole assembly? May rather, howe doth not this reason, if it bee any reason, ouerthrowe Bezaes interpretation? For, sithe the Question propounded and the conclusion, is of the being bare-headed: If the Ministers prophecyng, bee the prophecyng of all the men there assembled: then must all the men that be there assembled be bareheaded too. But this was not the Apostles meaning, nor it was not then, nor euer in custome, that all the men that heare the preacher or propheticier should also be bareheaded. Wherefore this is not the true interpretation of Pauls meaning, that his preaching or prophecyng is al their preaching or prophecyng, and that they vsed no other but by his mouth.

Bezaes reasons of this interpretation,

Bezaes own reason overthrowes his interpretation.

His

Beza reasoneth a petition one principii.

Wherin the opposition of S. Paules sentence lieth.

Bezacs reason returned on him self.

This second reason is this, Propter (saith Beza) If ye restore it to the one person of him that prayeth or prophecieth, the member (of the sentence) opposite, concerning the woman, wil not agree therto. And why will not that next sentence concerning the Woman agree to this sense, that some one Woman also might prophesy in the assembly? for sothe (saith hee,) Sith that the Apostle permitteth not a Woman to speake in the Church, that is, in the common assembly. What is this else, but petitio principij: to take that as a clear case to be beforehand granted, that all the Question depends upon, howe these words of the Apostle should be vnderstande, to whether as a simple debarre in all cases, or as, but from an ordinary function of speaking in the Church. Neither is the Womans couering of her head (for that it is common to other women in the church so well as to her, that preacheth or prophecieth) any reason that she may no more speake than they doe: for that is not the reason that she speaketh at all. But she speaking vpon some other occasion, she is bound much more to keepe that comeliness that other Women in the Church are bound vnto, and so much more bounde than men are, in as much as it is free for the men in the Church assembled, and not speaking, to be either couered or not couered with comeliness ynough, which is not so in women, though not speaking. But by what warrant doth Beza make these, to be membra opposita, the Man and the woman? indeede here is an opposition made of Paule, in the couering or vncouering of their heades: But he neither makes any opposition in the persons, and much lesse, (but al resemblance, nay rather, one and the same action in them both) for the praying and for the prophesying. For if the vniuersal particle taketh away the difference of orders and of age in the respect of prayer and prophesying: It lesse considereth the person or the sexe, but the matter prayed or prophesied, and the new creature in Christe Iesus, or the Spirite of God that speaketh in them. But let be the opposition in the Passors, or in the praying or prophesying. Go to then (saith hee) but if the woman pray not publicly, nor prophecy in her own person: then, contrarium eadem est ratio, The prayer and prophesying of the man, is not in his owne person.

But see now, how this reason (returned home againe) doth beate his owne Paister. The opposition (saith he) is in the persons of the man & of the woman, and in the praying or prophesying, of them. Is it so? Go to then (say I) but if the man pray or prophecy publicly, not by the mouth of another, but by his owne mouth, as I haue (I trust) so fullye and at large proued, and if that will not satisfie; I shall God willing (being called thereto, proue it better: But, contrarium eadem est ratio: of contraries there is one and the same order, or reason: therefore the prayer and prophesying of a woman here mencioned, and opposed to mans, is after the same manner and order uttered, not by the mouth of another, but by her owne owne mouth. Yea, if it were not uttered (her prayer and her prophesying) as well by her mouth, as the man by his mouth, but a thirde person should utter it for them both, then howe must that person, representing both the person of the man and of the woman praying or prophesying, vse his heade? which was S. Pauls principall conclusion? If he be couered, that is not answerable to the comelinesse of the man. If he be vncouered, that is lesse answerable, if not more vnfit, for the comelinesse of the woman. What shall we here doe: yea, though we imagined this thirde were an Hermaphrodites, that is, of both genders, Man and woman, except the same party also had two heades, the one to bee vncouered, and the other to be couered. What a straunge deuise therefore is this: and what a number of impossible, vnnaturall, and monstrous absurdities, do arise, if a man would stande in examining this interpretation?

The incon-ueniency of this interpretation.

I speake not this for the dishonour of them, to whom I honour with good heart, as singuler ornaments of Gods Church in our age. And yet Luther, so excellent an instrument of Gods trueth and glozy, when hee wrythed some textes of Scripture by affection, more then by considerate and indifferent weighing of them, into what vnnecessary misconstructions, and oppositions to the plaine and easy trueth, and to his owne self, did he fall, and caused many (by his too great estimation) to fall with him? And therefore we must take hede, howe we depend too much on Men. And if wee will holde vs alwayes to Gods worde, so take it, that we cary not that also away after our owne construing. If it be playne and easie, not to lap it in ambiguities. If it be harde and doubtfull, to way it with other places, and consider all the circumstances, groundes and occasions. And if nothing be against the faith, to go with the best, & with the mo, the better, in the sense that seemeth most probable. Which Beza here doth not, who though in many places he deserue singuler prayse: yet in some places he is too singuler, which deserueth so little praise, that now and then he himselfe forsakes his former translation, and either on better aduice, comes to other mens, or chaungeth his former translation, with another of his owne, even where no necessitie nor sufficient cause doth enforce him: as, even vpon this place, 1. Cor. 14. 34. cited by our Bishops, ut mulieres in ecclesijs taceant. And the common translation, is there true and playne ynough, Mulieres vestra in ecclesijs taceant. Let your Women keepe silence in the Churches. Where not onely Erasmus, but Caluine also reteineth the vsuall deriued word, even from the very Græke, in Ecclesijs: to whom all the commentaries of the newe wryters, (that I haue looked vpon) do folloiw. And all our translations: yea, even the Geneva translation also. And yet both Beza forsake it, and translate it in Catibns in companies or assemblies, and he altereth this againe, in consuetibus in meetinges together, & sayth that the vulgar translation, in the Churches, is not apt ynough in this place, and & also in the vers following. Because that a woman also is in the church, that is, of the number of the faithfull, when she is at home. Neither yet is she biddē to bee silent, but in the publike assembly of the church. And is this a sufficient reason to alter this word in the churches? Who knoweth not (that knoweth ought) y^e this word church as it is commonly taken, signifieth here not only the place where the sacred assemblies of the faithfull are made: but also the faithfull persons so assembled? Was Beza in doubt, least if this interpretation shold haue stood, that women shold not speak in the Churches, they shold haue bin thought to haue bin forbiddē to speak any where, but to be continually in euery place silent, because wheresoener they be, yea, though at home, they be stil in the church, that is, of the number of the faithfull? What a needlesse fear was this? yet, if he would haue mended the translation, to stop this needlesse fear. shold he haue mended it, to call it a cōpany or assembly, or meeting together? which though it seem to giue women some licence to speak, wher no assembly or cōpany, or meeting together is: yet, both this indeed restrain them no further, than the occasion that Paul did speak on, diuines vnto. True it is, he after ward expoūds himself, saying: they are not biddē to hold their peace, but in the publike cōpany of the church: but these wordes the publike cōpany of the church are in neither of his translations. For there is only said, in companies or meetings together. And yet what he meaneth by the publike companies of the church, taking the church as heere he calleth it: may not a woman speak in many companies or meetings together of the faithfull? & if the households of the faithfull be called churches also: may she not speake in her house neither, no: to the assemblie of her household, so: sere she shold transgres this pcept: if they say, that is but a private church, & Paul meaneth of the publike assemblies of the church: although women then shall gain a great deal moze liberty, by this glosse, then by this hard translation of the text: yet, how much better had it bin, both so: Bezacs estimation, & our edification, especially so: the matter & trueth it self, so: Beza to haue left these nice poynts, & to haue yeldd to his ap. Caluine, that, as necessity might require, this pcept of the ordinary course maketh no absolute debar to al manner of women, but that nowe and then, some may speake lawfully, yea, and their voyce is requisite, enen in the most sacred, publike, and greatest assemblies or meetings together of the Churches.

I confesse (as I sayd) that other excellent men also vse this interpretation: but they are moze naked thereon then Beza is, no: I accountt them comparable to him. But neither he, no: they do so satisfy the simplicitie offert herein, as Musc. and Peter Martyr do, Musc. vpon these wordes euery woman praying and prophecyng, sayth: they aske here howe a Woman shameth her heade, if she prophecy bare headed: when, about the end of the 14. Chapter, hee commaundeth them to holde their peace in the Church,

Church, because it is a shame for a Woman to speake in the Church, Prophecy- and 1. Tim. 2. he sayth, but I permit not a woman to teache. What ing.
 neede is there (say they) to bid a Woman not to prophecy bare-headed; when shee may not doe it, no, not couered? I aunswere; he restraineth a Womans rashnesse, that they shoulde not (as often-times they are bablatiue) leape foorth to teache and prophecy, beeing forgetfull of their sexe. Neuerthelesse in the meane season, hee doth not extinguish the spirite, with the which some beeing inspired, did prophecy, by foretelling thinges to come. Such as were Philip the Deacons daughters, and many others, which did prophecy, according to the foretelling of Ioel, Chapter, 2. where wee reade this: And after these thinges I will poure my spirite vpon all flesh, and your sonnes and your daughters shal prop-hiecy. For such he pronounceth that they shal shame their head, if they pray or prophecy bareheaded. Of other he wold giue another sentence, if they had broken forth into the office of teaching, yea, with their heads couered. Thus clearly and simply doth Musculus interpret the place, although he say, that other answere this question otherwise: and so recko-neth vp that, which was Caluines first answere.

After the like obiection Peter Martyr maketh the like conclusion, saying: we aunswere; in this place that vice is onely reprehended, whereby Women dealt publikely being bare headed. But after ward, and to Tim. that shalbe commanded, that they shal also holde their peace: because all things are not deliuered in one place. As though, the womē of Corinth had offended in a double fault. Both that they went bare-headed, & that they spake publikely. The one of these is now condemned, the other shal after ward be cut off. But Pet. Mar. seeing þ this answereth not the matter: for, if they sinned in these 2. faults, & their publik spæch were the greater of the 2. as vnlawful, which the other is not: wold he cōdemn the lesse, & seem to allow that, that is utterly il: or refer them to amēd their fault at leisure by that he wold after ward speake to another, & not then, but far from thē, & lōg after: ther is no likelihōd of this reason, which is that þ we hard before in Calu. And therfore saith Pet. Mar. further: Other say that these things are to be taken of women, when they pray or prophesie priuately, which is not forbidden them, But sith this also satisfieth not the place: he maketh this conclusion: We may also expound another way this commandemēt of thapostle, that it was ordeined that women shold holde their peace in the order accustomed, Wherupon, no publik function was committed vnto thē in the church, which shold be ordinary & perpetuall. Notwithstāding, if the spirit of the L. inspired them, it was not altogether forbidden, but that they might speak something. We know that the prophetesse Anna spake of our sauour in the temple, when the blessed virgin was purified. Debora also sang publikely praises to God, & Mary Moles sister, & that women now & then prophesied in the olde time, many places witness. Holda a prophetesse was asked counsel of king Iosias. Hanna, the Mother of Samuel set foorth a moste godly Hymne. Mary also the Virgin and Mother of Christ sang an hymne. Philip also in the Actes of the Apostles had many daughters that did prophecy. And the Lorde commaunded Magdalene, that she shoulde declare his resurrection to the Apostles. And it is read in the prophet Ioel; Of my spirite wil I powre forth on you, your sonnes and your daughters shall prophecy. Thus sayth Peter Martyr, which done: he cometh in also with Bezaces, Bullingers, Hyperius, Hemingius, and our Brethrens interpretation also said, saying: they also slip out of this place more reddily (or nimble,) that thinke these thinges pertained not to them onely, that did prophecy or pray publicly: but also to their hearers: that the men shoulde be bare headed, and the womens heades couered. But holwe doth Peter Martyr like of this last interpretation? Doth he allowe it? no, hee counteth it no better then a ready or nimble slip, and no sounde aunswere. And so hee concludes against it, saying: But the wordes of Paule seeme not to make with their sentence, when as hee auoucheth it expressely, of a woman praying or prophcing.

Deut. 27.

Thus substantially both peter Martyr aunswere the matter. All which ppoofes and examples both Marlorate also after his collections of Caluin and others, woold set downe and approue as the true and simple interpretation. And notable are euery one of these examples, if wee shall examine and discusse them seuerally. Besides other examples both in the olde and in the New Testament, whose speeches though partlie they were of other matters, and not all concerning eyther prayer or prophecy: yet, were they spoken in the publike assembly of the faithfull, without note of any reproche vnto them. Yea, the Lawe provided in what cases, the woman may claime, befoze the Elders in the Gates of the City, (which was the place of the moste publike assemblies of the faithful) her kinsman to be her Husbande. Deut. 25. verse 7. & 9. Abigails speech and wise Oracion made to Dauid, befoze all his troupes, is of Dauid highly commended. 1. Sam. 25. verse 24. &c. The wise woman in Abel saued the City from destruction by her wise speeches and eloquent persuasion. 2. Sa. 20. 18. The Quene of Saba though an heathen Woman, yet not onely is approued of Solomon, whose wisdom she tried with diuers Questions, and so highly extolled: 2. Reg. 10. 6. &c. but Christe also giueth an honorable testimony of her so doing. The wife of Esay was a prophetesse, so well as he a prophet. Esay 8. 3. Neyther are the testimonies of the Apocryphall Scriptures in this matter of comeliness, or for such pointes as concerne good manners, to be relected: and they are godly testimonies also. As the publike prayer of Susanna: the godly mother publicly preaching to the seuen Children, to be constant Partyes for the Lawe of God.

2, Macha. 7. The notable sermon that Iudith made, euen to the high priest, speech. and to all the elders of Bethulia.

But if our Brethren regard not this, as (some of them haue reiected the factes and speeches of Iudith, euen with contumelies:) Let vs come also vnto other examples not improued in the new Testament. What shal we saie for that womans fact, that euen while Christ was preaching, as Luke *The womā that praised Christ,
Luke. 11. 17*
saith, Chap. 11. ver. 27. And it came to passe as he said these things, a certaine woman of the companie lift vp her voice, and said vnto him: Blessed is the wombe that did beare thee, and the paps that gaue thee sucke?
Did Christ rebuke her, for that she spake thus boldlie in the open assemblie of the people? No, Luke saith not so. But he said (saith Luke) yea rather, blessed are they that heare the word of God and keepe it. Whereupon sayth the Geneua note: Christ gaue her a priuie taunt, for that shee omitted the chiefe praise which was due vnto him, that was, that they are blessed in-deede, to whom he communicateth himselfe by his word. So that if she had giuen the chiefe praise to Christ, she had done well, and so farre forth her speech is not reprehended, but the more commendable, in the greater congregation that it was spoken. And in a sort, Caluine confesseth her wordes to rebound, not a little to the commendation of Christ also. By which praise (saith he) the woman would extoll the excellencie of Christ. For she respected not Marie whom perhaps she neuer sawe. But this amplifieth the glorie of Christ not a little, that shee ennobleth & maketh blessed the wombe in which he was borne. Neither is this blessing of God absurdlie, but according to the maner of the Scripture celebrated. For neither can it be denied, but that God chooseth and destinating Marie to be the mother vnto his sonne, vouchsafed highlie to honour her. So that thus farre forth, besides her commendable constancie, and open profession of Christ, she was neither improued of Christ, nor discommended of anie protestant writer, namely, for lifting vp her voice beeing a woman, in the audience of the publike congregation.

Likewise the woman that had the bloudie fluxe, Matth. 9. ver. 20. When The womā with the bloudie fluxe
as being a weake and bashfull woman, & by reason of her disease, she durst not come openlie before Christ, and in so great assemblee open her voice & pray to him for succour: but came behinde him and touched the hem of his garment. For she said in her selfe, If I may but touch his garment onely, I shall be whole: Did Christ like this that she shuld receiue this benefit of him thus in silence, because a woman might not speake in the congregation? No, saith Luke, chap. 8. verse. 44. When shee came behinde him and touched the hemme of his garment, immediatlie her issue of bloud stauched.
Then Iesus said, who is it that hath touched mee? When euerie man denied, Peter sayd, and they that were with him, Maister, the multitude thrust thee, and tread on thee, and sayest thou, who hath touched me? And Iesus sayd, some one hath

hath touched me, for I perceiue that vertue is gone out of me. When the woman sawe that she was not hid, she came trembling and fell downe before him, and told him before all the people, for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediarlie. Was not this then the purpose of Christ, that this woman should speake and declare this woꝝke of God, befoze all the publike assemblie of the people?

of Canaan.

What shall we saie of that woman, Matth. 15. 22. the Cananite that came crying to Christ, and said? Haue mercie on me, O Lord thou sonne of Dauid, my daughter is miserably vexed with a diuell. Here this woman cried out in an open praier, and spared not to speake speake aloude befoze all the assemblie. But he answered her (saith Matthew) not a word. What? Was he angrie, that she being a woman, durst make her praier so openly, befoze the multitude of the people? Indeede the Disciples were offended at her importunitie, and came to him and besought him, saying: Send her a waie, for she crieth after vs. But he answered and saide, I am not sent but vnto the lost sheepe of the house of Israel. So that hee findeth no fault, for that she being a woman would presume to make this open praier: but pretendeth that she was not such a woman as he was sent to help, & that if she had bene such a woman, he woulde haue liked of her crie well inough, and haue helped her. Yet came she (saith Saint Mathew) and worshipped him saying: Lord helpe me. And he answered and sayd, It is not good to take the childrens bread, and to cast it to whelpes. And she said, Truth Lord, howbeit the whelpes eate of the crums which fall from their Maisters table. Did Christ here like her replying vpon him, hauing such an answer? Pea verillie, and that most singularlie well: Then Iesus answered & said vnto her, O woman, great is thy faith, be it vnto thee as thou desirest, & her daughter was made whole at that houre.

of Samaria.
Caluine.

Neither is it vnwoꝝthie to consider the stoꝝie, so diligentlie described by Saint Iohn, chap. 4 concerning the Samaritane Woman. Not her bolde talke with Christ alone at the well: but that, verse. 29. He said of Christ vnto the people, Come and see a man, that hath tolde me all things that I haue done, is not this Christ. Pea Caluine, who compareth her so dooing to this saying in the Psalme, I beleued, and therefore I spake. Psal. 116. v. 10. And (saith he) this vehemencie and cheerefulnesse of the woman, are so much the more to be noted of vs, because an onelie small sparke of faith kindled them. For shee had scarce tasted Christ, when shee setteth him forth throughout all the Citie, &c. But this (sayth he) seemeth in the woman rather worthie reprehension, that beeing as yet rude and not thoroughlie taught, she passed the boundes of her faith. The answer is, she shoulde haue done inconsideratlie, if shee had taken vpon her the parte of teaching: but now when shee desireth nothing but to stirre vp her Citizens, that they should heare Christ speake, we will not saie, that bee-

ing forgetfull of her selfe, shee proceeded further than became her. One-^{publike} lie she doth the office of a Trumpet, or of a Bell, to call them vnto Christ, ^{speech.}
And yet was this a kind of preaching to the, as Musculus calleth it, saying: ^{Musculus.}
 The woman did so much by her preaching, that the people of this Citie went out to Christ, of whome as yet they knew nothing. Pea, Aretius saith: But as concerning that she preacheth the name and the person of Christ, she testifieth by example, how much she had profited. At the beginning she acknowledged him onelie to be a Iew; after that, a Prophet, placing him in a higher degree: at the length she perfectlie acknowledgeth him to be the Messias, and such a one vnto her Citizens she preacheth him to be. Which also is for an example of regeneration, wherof the order is this. First to come to the knowledge of ones owne selfe, & then diligentlie to search concerning the true worship of God. Last of all, to become carefull of the profite of our neighbour. Thus she (wherein she profited) woulde haue her fellow Citizens to profite also, least she should inioy so great a benefite all alone. Thou hast therefore a woman an Euangelist. She exerciseth the office of a Doctor or Teacher, she that came for an harlot, returneth an Euangelical mistresse. This is the meruailous goodnesse of God, choosing base & contemptuous things in the world, that he might confound the wise men of this world.

Whereupon Marlorate concludeth out of Bucer: Therefore, there is not ^{Marlorat} so much consideration to be had of the partie that speaketh, as we must ^{out of Bucer} ponder what is spoken to vs. And Alesius the Scot hereon, making this his 16. place, both saith: The ministerie of the Gospell is not tied to the ordinarie power. And the doctrine of a private man, and of a woman, which bringeth forth the worde of God, is to bee preferred before the iudgement of the multitude, and of them that take vpon them the name & authoritie of the Church, as the Samaritanes beleue at the testimonie of a woman concerning Christ.

To conclude these examples in the new Testament, Luke mentioning Philip the Euangelist, Act. 21 verse. 9. sayth: Now had hee foure daughters ^{Phillips four} virgins that did prophesie. ^{daughters.} But this example Caluine woulde sette on the other side to cut off, saying: But how these maidens exercised the office of prophesieng it is vncertaine, except the spirite of GOD did so moderate them, that they troubled not the order of him set downe. But when hee permitteth not women to sustaine a publike person in the Church: it is credible, that they prophesied either at home, or in a private place out of the common assemblie. Pea, not onelie Caluine that would thus cut off this example of Philips daughters, but of all the other that haue bene, or may bee alleaged for anie women: sayth further vpon Saint Paules precept, 1. Timoth. 2. verse. 11. and 12.

Let the woman learne in quiet with all subiection, for I permit not a woman to teach, or to take authoritie on her ouer the man. After that hee hath spoken, (saith he) of their apparell: he now addeth with what modestie women ought to behaue themselves in the holie assemblie. And first he biddeth them to learne mildlie, for quiet signifieth silence, not that hee woulde take from them the office of instructing their familie, but onelie drine them from the office of teaching, which GOD hath committed to men onelie. Of which matter we treated in the Epistle to the Corinthians. If anie object Debora and the like, whom we reade to haue somtimes ben placed ouer the people, to gouerne them by the commaundement of God: The answer is easie, that the common policie wherevnto GOD wold haue vs tied, is not ouerturned by the extraordinarie facts of god. Therefore if at anie time women haue holden the place of prophesieng & teaching, and that being stirred vp by the spirit of God: This could he doo, which is free from all lawe. But because this is singular, it fighteth not with the perpetuall and accustomed policie. Hee addeth that which is next to the office of teaching: Neither let them take authoritie to themselves ouer their husbands. For this is the reason why they are prohibited to teach: because their condition dooth not suffer them, for they are subiect: but to teach is a matter of power or of a higher degree. Albeit the reason seemeth not firme enough, sith that the Prophets also and the Doctors or teachers, are subiect to kings and to other Magistrates. I answer, there is no absurditie, but that one may gouerne, and also with all, obey, according to diuerse respects: but in a woman, that auaieth not, which by nature, that is, by the ordinarie lawe of God, is borne to obey. For all prudent men haue alwaies refused the gouernment of women, as it were a monster. The heauen and earth therefore shoulde in a manner be mingled together, if women should snatch vnto the right of teaching. Therefore he bids them be quiet, that is, to containe themselves in their owne order.

How Caluine cutteth off these examples.

From womens publike preaching, how our breth. proceed against womes publike gouernment.

Thus saith Caluine not onely of womens teaching, but also of womens gouernment. But now, because this may seme not onelie to shake off all these former examples, but to call the matter from publike teaching, into a further and moze dangerous question, both of our estate, and simple of the publike gouernment of a woman, which heere Caluine in very bold and boistrous speeches, not onlie aimeth at, but manifestlie oppugneeth, and that some of our owne Brethren haue not spared to write directly against womens gouernment, and their chiefest ground ariseth from hence: therefore I thinke it not amisse to weigh this answer of Caluine a little better. Yea, adding vnto him for his further helpe, besides Peter Martyr and others, Danæus also vpon this the Apostles precept, as the most earnest in the same.

But first, for that Caluine saith to the example of the 4. virgines that daughters.
 did prophecy. How they exercised the office of prophesying, (saith hee) it is vncertaine. If it be vncertaine, how can hee or any other determine the certainty, that they did not prophecy openly, as the other Weomen Prophetes had wont to do? But he saith, if they should haue propheci-ed in a publike place, they should haue troubled the order that god had set downe. What order was that, and where, and when? hee seemeth to referre vs to this place, 1 Tim. 2. or to the other 1. Cor. 14. saying: when as he permitteth not weomen to susteine a publik in person the church: and therefore it is not likelie, that they prophecied in open place. I demand, whether this order were an auncient order set down and made of God before, or after? If it were made after, then it touched not these prophetesses doings that were before. If it were an auncient order of God, made before: how toucheth it not the other prophetesses and other weomen speaking in publike place, at leastwise, some of them so well as these: and doth not the same reason hold for all, that doth for some? If therefore, to save these 4. from transgressing the order of God, this be the onely helpe, to say they did it in a priuate place: what an acquittance is this to them, that should accuse a farre greater number of as god, if not some farre better than these were? Yea, how saith Caluine then, it is vncertaine? may we not rather conclude thus? It is certaine, that these 4. virgines obserued the order of God, without any disturbance of the same: But whether they did prophecy in priuate or publike place, that is not certaine: therefore there was no order of God absolutly & simplie set down, concerning the place priuate or publ. of womens prophesying.

 Act. 21. 9.

But how doth not Caluine reasoning that it was credible to be done in a priuate place? make it moze credible to be done in publike? he saith This is added for Philips praise, that we should not onely knowe that his house was well ordered; but also was famous and noble, by the blessing of God. For it was no common gift, to haue 4. daughters, all of them endued with the spirit of prophecy. But by these meanes would God ennoble the beginnings of the gospell, when as he stirred vp men & weo-men, which should fore-tell things to come. Prophecies had almost ceased now many yeres among the Iewes, to the intent that their mindes, should be the more erected, or awakened to heare the new voice of the gospell. Sith therefore after so long a time prophecy was returned on a sudden, it was a signe of a more perfect state. Notwithstanding, the same seemeth to be the reason, why within a little after, it decayed. For God did sustain the auncient people, with diuerse predictions, vntill Christe by his comming brought an end to all the prophecies. Therefore it behoued the new kingdome of Christ, to be beautified with this ornamēt, that all men might know, that that promised visitatio of God was come.

If now by this clere confession of Caluine, not onely to the making noble and famous Philips house, but to the ennobling the beginniges of the Gospell, and that these propheties of women, so wel as of me, should aunswere to the order of the auncient propheties, to the a wakening of men, to the confirming and beautifying of the gospell, and the kingdom of Christ: but the auncient manner of prophecyng, both in the women Prophets, so well as in the men Prophetes, was done for the mooste parte publiklie, the moze to ennoble the woorks of God, and the moze to edifie the moze people, and the lesse to breede any suspition of hucker mucker, or false prophecyng which seeketh corners: how then was not these 4. virgines prophecyng, publike also? it might be that these virgines prophesied vnto Paule, of his troubles the at had. they being in their fathers house where Paul hosted. As likewise other Prophets in other places had done. Whereof Paule saith in the chapter before, ver. 22. and 23. And lo nowe, I goe vp bownde in the spirit vnto Ierusalem, knowing not what thinges there shall happen vnto mee, saue that in euerie Citie the holie Ghost resisteth, saying: That bonds and afflictions do abide me. And the like propheties were made vnto him at Tyrus, as appeareth in this chapter ver. 4. And as Agabus at that present did, ver. 11. But it rather seemeth by S. Lukes woordes, and by this reference of Caluine, to the auncient manner of prophecyng that 4. prophecyng of these 4. virgins, is not to be restrained to time onely, but that they used to prophecy, & were notoziously knowne to be Prophetesses And although they might haue then prophesied vnto Paul, in their fathers house, which was a priuate place, yet the persons being present, not only of their father an Euangelist, who (other wise had authority ouer them) & of Paule being a publik person, & an Apostle, and no doubt many notable persons in his retinue, besides the faithful of the church of Cesarea: ther is no likelihood, but that it was done in no smal assembly, though the place were priuate. And yet, to thew the maner of their prophecyng furder, & to resoluvs in this doubt of Caluine: Eusebius lib. 3. Eccl. hist. cap. 31. (as we haue heard before) citeth the testimony of Polycrates B. of Ephesus, of whome we haue heard before, page 317. This Polycrates (saith Eusebius) writing to Victor B. of Rome, maketh mention also of him, (he meaneth of Iohn the Euangeliste,) and of Philip the Apostle, & also of his daughters, saying, As we haue already aboue inserted, that the great lights in the parts of Asia are laid a sleepe, whome the L. shall raise in the last day of his coming, when he shall come with glory, and require all his saints. But of Philip I say (saith he) which was one of the Apostles, which slept at Hierapolis, and also 2. of his daughters being virgines, waxed olde in that place. and another daughter of his replenished with the holy ghost, continued at Ephesus. Whereby it appeareth, that they were Prophetesses of great and publike renowne in Gods church: and not suche as durste not proph-prophecy but only in priuate places. Which thing although Peter Martyr do not particularly auouch it of these 4. virgines, yet writing on the Iudges cap. 4. ver. 4. he saith thus: When GOD chose Debora vnto the ministry of iudging, being in her kinde weake, forthwith he made her renowned and noble in the gift of prophesying. With which gracious gifte, and perhaps with many miracles moe, she was of God consecrate & with miracles confirmed, as one that was chosen vnto so great an office. Neither was this onely woman endued with the spirit of prophecie, for wee reade also in the holy Scriptures, that other women were so instructed with the holy ghost, Marie the sister of Moses, Anna the mother of Samuel, Holda in the time of King Iosias, were Prophetesses. And in the new Testament (to passe in silence the virgine Mary, Elizabeth Iohn his mother, and Anna Phanuels daughter: the daughters also of Philip) the Deacon, (as is recorded in the Acts of the Apostles) were prophetes-ses. Neither do I think that it ought to be denied, that some of these women being instructed, with the gift of prophecy, taught the people pub-likly, declaring to them those things that were of God shewed vnto the:

sith that the gifts of God were not giuen to that purpose, that they shuld closely hide themselves, but that they should promote the common ex-dification of the Church.

*Womens

In which examples of the new testament, he seemeth chiefly to referre this publike prophesying, to this example of these 4. virgines. Now, concerning that which Caluine saith on S. Pauls precept, 1. Tim. 2. ver. 11. & 12. expounding it thus: that women should not vsurpe vnto themselves, the the courses of speaking in publike: (and as he concludeth,) snatch vp the right of teaching in the sacred assembles, the ordinary Ecclesiasticall office, wherof was giue of God vnto men only: all this we gladly grant vnto, as the very meaning of S. Paule, and herein Caluine doth wel, to referre vs to the exposition of this place, to that, which before he said. 1. Cor. 14. 34. For there he made a plaine exception of extraordinary examples. And therefore, to that which here he aunswereth to the obiection of Debora & the like women, that the common policy wherunto God would haue vs bound is not ouerthrowne by his extraordinary facts: if some women therefore being stirred vp by the spirit of God, haue held the place of prophesying or teaching. This could God do, which is free from all law. But bicause this is singuler, it fighteth not with the perpetuall and accustomed po-licie. This is a good aunswere, so that we restraine it not onely to those facts which were then done, that he may not do the like now, or at any other extraordinary times: For that were to debarre and limite God.
But vnderstanding it as Caluine did before, that suche a necessitye maye come, as may require a Womans voice. So that the generall rule ses of teaching, although extraordinarily, and in cases of necessitie, a woman hauing the gifte of God to do it with edification, may make a publik exhortation to the people.

As for this reason of Caluine, why they should be forbidden to teache, bicause their condition, doth not suffer it: what condition is that? For (saith he) they are subiect: but to teach is a matter of power or of higher degree. The argument is this: None may publikly teach that are subiects, or of lower power and degree, than are those whom they teach: but womē are subiect to mē, & of lower degree: & therefore Womē may not publikly teach mē, first, for the Major of this argument, Caluine himself seemeth to distrust it, & the whole reason that dependeth thereon, saying: howbeit this reason seemeth not firme, sith that the Proph. also and the Doctors or Teachers, were subiect to Kings, and other Magist. If this reason seemeth not firme, then it seemeth as it is. For in dede it is a weake reason, & standeth vpon infirm postes. May none teach publikly, y is a subiect, or of lower degree in power, than those are whom he teacheth? But Caluine saith not so. What saith he then? weomen cannot publikly teach why so: they be subiects. what hindereth that? yes so: saith doeth it, for teaching is a thing of power and of higher degree, & therfore none maye teach, but they must be of power and of higher degree: & ouer whom must this power and higher degree stretch, but ouer them whom they teach: Is not this then Cal. plaine meaning, that none may publikly teach other: but he that is of power & higher degree, thā are those whom he teacheth? If this be true, how is his own obiection true, that Prop. & Doct. are subiects to Kings, & other Magist. May they not teach Princes, & their other Magistrates? Or will they exalt themselves, aboue their Kings & Magistres, and exempt themselves from being subiectes, bicause they are their teachers? As the Pope vnder that pretence likewise did? For, what helpeth this aunswere of Caluine, but to ouerthrowe his owne principle? I aunswere (saith he) there is no absuditie, but that one may gouerne, and withall obey, according to diuerse respectes. If this his aunswere be good (as indeede it is) doth it not cleane ouerturne Caluines owne Major, that none may teach, but that is of power, & higher degree, than those ar whom he teacheth? If he say, & are they not of power & higher degree, in that respect they teach? No verily, not always: euen in that respect of teaching neither. No: teaching is a matter of power & higher degree.

I denie that, (since we must diuine the matter so narrowly to respectes) that in that respect it is teaching, it is a matter of power or of hygher degree. For teaching properly of it self, is but a matter of instruction and informing. What power did Ietro take vpon him, or superiour degree when he taught Moses, how he should choole and appoint out Iustices, to ease him in the gouernment of the people? Exod. 18. 14. What power or superiour degree tooke Ioathan on him ouer the Sichemites, when hee stooode on the topp of mount Garrizim, and cried vnto them, and saide, Harken vnto mee, yee men of Sichem, &c? Iud. 9.7. What power and superior degree tooke Sampsons mother ouer her husbände, when she shewed him reasons, that the appearing of the Angell of the Lorde, vnto them, was no argument that he woulde kill them? Iud. 13. 23. When Dauid taught Saule, how ill he didde in persecuting him being an innocent did he take any power vpon him ouer Saule, or any higher degree aboue him? 1. Sam. 24. ver. 10. & 26. ver. 18. When the poore handmaide taught her Maistresse, Naamans wife, by what meanes her Lorde might be cleansed from his leppie. 2. Reg. 5. ver. 2. and Naamans seruants perswaded their Maister to follow the Prophetes commaundement? Did they take any power or superior degree vpon them? And when Counsellors teache their Princes what they should doe, so, what is counselling but informing or teaching? When the King said to Elifus seruant, tell mee I pray thee, of all the great actes that Elifus hath done? When the seruant shewed the same vnto him: did he take vpon him a power and higher degree aboue the King, whome hee enformed? Doth Iob when he biddeth Eliphaz the Themanite, teach him. giue him power and higher degree aboue him? Iob 6. ver. 24. Or, when he sayth to Sophar? Aske the beastes and they shall teach thee, and the fowles of the heauen, and they shall tell thee? Iob. 12.7.

Neither letteth it, that some of these are priuate teachings: so, be they priuat, or be they publike in respect they are teachings, they consider not the authority of the Teacher, but the matter taught, or the manner of the teaching. As so, the power and superiority of degree, that hee hath who is the teacher, respecteth the partie whose doctrine he teacheth, and the commission he hath from him. Which in this heauenly doctrine, cometh from heauen, hauing his authority and warrant from the Almighty God as it is saide of Christe: hee taught as one hauing power, and not as the Scribes. In which consideration (I graunt) all power yeeldeth, or oughte to yeelde, when the hearers, whoeuer, vnderstand that the Teachers doctrine is of God, and that they haue authority of God to teach them. And so those Teachers do in the name of God, charge their Princes: and yet in all other respects, remain as other do, their subiects. And can these respects be thus together in a Prophet, & can they not be in a Prophetesse?

And how doth not this withall, ouerturne Caluines Minor? But the woman (saith he) is a subiect: as though the man were not a subiect, whē he saith, Prophetes and Doctors are subiect to Kinges and other Magistrates, But in a woman (saith Caluine) this holdeth not. So doth? and why not in a woman as well as in a man? being both of them, in respecte of Kinges and other Magistrates alike subiect? for a woman (saith he) by nature is borne to obey. ~~What~~ the Kings and other Magistrates, more than those men are, which also are subiects? what meaneth Caluine here, that a woman is borne to obey by nature? Doth he meane it in such sort that the woman is a seruant or bondslaue by nature, or of a seruite nature? But that is both false and obvious. For a woman may be and is as much ingenua & libera, of as franke and free nature and condition, or (as we tearme it,) borne of as gentle blood, as the man is. And although, that the seruitude of sinne, and the adome to mortality, and other calamities, comming to the man, by meanes of the woman: she hath losse by the law and malediction of God. that equality of honour that she was in before: being ioyned to the man in matrimony, with equall degree of power and dominion: and be now made subiect to her husbands gouernement in respect of that Deconomicall or household government, of which estate properly that law was geuen: and of whome S. Paule both in his epistle to the Corinthians speaketh: willing them to aske their husbands at home: and that which he speaketh to Timothy, that she should not vsurp authority ouer the man, it hath a manifest relation onely to her husband; as also haue the wordes of Gods law, giuen in penance vnto her, thy desire shall be subiect to thine husband, & he shall rule ouer thee: so that, though this law be the ordinary lawe of God (as Caluine saith) in respecte of the state of mariage: yet in other respects it is not so absolute. True it is, that a virgine in respect also of her parents, is subiect in her non-age vnto them, no lesse than the wife vnto her husband: and yet, we see here these virgines for all their subiection to their father Philip, that was also an Euangelist, yea some call him an Apostle, did neuertheless prophesy, and that which is most likeli, euen in his presence, and in S. Pauls presence, and in the presence also of many other, notwithstanding any inferiority or subiection in other respects. Yet diuerse of the named Prophetesses, & other women that spake in publike assemblies, were not all widowes, and so of their owne iurisdiction or power, but euen wines too.

But Caluine brgeth this, that by nature they are borne to obey. And what of that also? commeth this authority of teaching, (whatsoeuer authority they haue therto) or any gift of prophecying, by the law of nature or not rather by grace & by especiall calling, whether it be in Women or men? but Caluine himselfe expounds this saying, that women are borne to obey by nature, that is the by the ordinary law of God. Neither yet auaileth this exposition. For we stand not of the ordinary law of God, but, of extraordinary privileges, and (as Caluine saith) upon such necessities, as wherein a womans voice may be required.

But what now is Caluines conclusion of all this? For al wise men haue alwaies refused the gouernment of women euen as of a monster: and therfore heauen and earth shoulde be after a sorte mingled together, if women women should snatch vnto them the right of teaching. speech of

As for snatching vnto them the right of teaching, might perhappes womens bee called in some sense the mingling together of heauen and earthe. gouernmēt

And so were it also, if any man should snatch the right hereof vnto him, except hee had some calling ordinary or extraordinarye, or some necessity or occasion rather to take him, than he should snatche it vnto him. And the like and much more we say of women. But if women by any respect, be called extraordinarily thereunto, or, (as Caluine said before) there be such necessitie as wherein a womans voice may be required: shall we call this, snatching vnto them the right vse of teaching, & the mingling of heauen & earth together? and that is worst of all, shall we herupon condemne all go-uernmēt of womē, if by no means they might haue any allowance or per-missiō of this gouernmēt, to teach or prophecy in the Church? May ther no right grow to a woman of gouernment, besides teaching & yea, that wherunto she may be born? And can Caluine then iustifie this conclusion, that all wise men haue alwaies refused the gouernment of women, as it were a monster? What a monstrous saying is this to haue escaped so wise

& so godly a man? Did not Caluine himselfe confesse before, that some womē were godly gouernors, saying: If anie obiect Debora and the like, which we reade to haue ben sometimes by the commandement of God, placed ouer the people, for to gouerne them? Where there no wise men in all Israell in those daies, when such women were gouernours? or, did those wise men account their gouernment monstrous, or refuse it, being appointed by Gods commandement? or did euer any wise man that had the true wisdome of God, or shall anie such wise man among vs now, account this doing of God to be monstrous? what a monstrous rebellio were this not onely against the state of them, but against God?

Was it this that Caluine meant before, when he said in his aunswere to the obiection of their gouernment, this could god do, which is free from all law? What? to set vp such gouernours, as all wise men should refuse as monsters? Verily, no godly wise man can allow this saying: no; anie excuse it or can salue it from a foule ouerthot and manifest vntruthe. And if Caluine had better considered it, hee woulde neuer haue vttered suche a sentence, or haue blotted it out, or haue retracted it. But thus both affection carry wise men, and otherwise very godly men sometimes awaie, & then from that which their selues cannot denie to be of God, and not to be monstrous, but to be a godlie and very gracious worke of God, both for the aduancement of his glory, and the great helpe and comfort of his people.

And is this now the drift of our breth. in this matter, to refuse as monstrous, & confounding heauen & as earth together, al womens gouernment in gods Church? I hope yet a great deale better of Caluines iudge-ment in this matter, bicause (howsoeuer here he sowly ouerthot himselfe

And contrarieth himselfe in his owne tale. as we haue plainly seene) yet in other places, he better acquiteth himselfe : namely in his Epistle prefixed to his last edition of his learned Commentaries vpon Esay, dedicated to our most gracious soveraign Lady, Quene Elizabeth. where so highly he extolleth her Maiesty, not onelic with honorable words, & stile of titles:
To the most excellent Queene, and renowned no lesse by her vertues, than by her royall giftes ELIZABETH, &c. but also in his matter: declaring, that where he had dedicated the said commentaries to King Edward her Maiesties most godly Brother : Me thought (saith he) I should commit no absurditie, if vnto the name of the moste excellent King, I should also adioine your name, no lesse beloued and ioyful vnto al good men. Yea rather: not only the occasion offered, but the necessitye seemeth to require, that I shoulde craue the faithe of your patronage vnto this commentary: at the banishment whereof I know, that a great number of godly men in your dominion, haue sighed. Although my purpose is not so much to respect priuately myne owne labour, as humblye to beseech, and by the holy name of Christe to entreate you, that not onely with your fauour, all the bookes that are sounde in faithe, maye holdeth you (O most noble Queene) bowden to performe this duetye.

For whereas you being the Kings owne daughter, were not free from that fearefull storme, that euen waightily hanged ouer the heades of all the godly; he merueilously deliuering you safe therefrom, albeit not vn-touched (or free) from the feare of the daunger, hath addicted you and all your studies to himselfe. Of which deliuerance you ought so little to be ashamed, that God hath giuen to you an ample and plentifull matter of reioycing, conforming you vnto the image of his sonne. Amongest whose praises, our Prophete reciteth this, that hee was exalted vnto the highest heighth of the cœlestiall Empire, out of the prison, and state of an arraigned person. But as it is no meane commendation to rehearse such an example: so, as often as you shall call to memory (which by no obliuion ought at any time to slip away) out of howe pitifull and doubtfull trembling you haue escaped, God openly euen (after a sort) reaching out his hand vnto you; you may withall remember, that this end is set before you, that with a constancy not afrighted, and with an inuicible magnanimity, you againe vpholde to him his right, that is your champion and deliuerer. And setting aside all businesses, (wherof I doubt not, that a great heape of them, will make a stur thereat in these beginnings of the kingdome) haue you this care to restore his worship vnt

And if so bee Sathan with many and harde difficulties throwne in the waie, attempt to cast in fearefulnesse or slownesse : you are not ignorant from whence you shoulde aske the confidence of proceeding couragiously, which may ouercome all impediments. Neither God, which with his blessing vouchsafeth the actions of priuate men, will leaue his owne worke destitute of happie and wished successe. Let the dutie also of religion prouoke thee (O Queene which art to be worshipped) sith that our Esay requireth not onelie of Kings; that they should be nourishers of the Church : but also of Queenes, that they shoulde bee their nurses, and so forth, as he proceedeth in the Epistle.

In which wordes, he doth (on better aduiselement) most plainlie approue, and not refuse as monstrous the government of women : but account it both in her Maiestie, as the singular gift & blessing of God vnto his church, and also citeth Esai in generall, for Queenes to be the Churches nurses. What shall wee saie therefore to this foresayde conclusion that Caluine made : All wise men haue alwaies refused as a monster a womans gouernment ? I woulde gladlie salue it with expounding his wordes to be meant onelie, of the wife that taketh vpon her to gouerne & rule her husband. But because, if it should be vnderstood of this oeconomicall government onely, then it woulde not inake to Caluines purpose, that women should not haue authoritie and right publikelie to teach : affirming teaching to be a thing of power and higher degree : & he bringeth in the objection of Debora and answereth the same, by distinguishing the diuerse respects, wherein the teachers obey their kings and other magistrates, and yet gouerne in respect of teaching : and saith, that women cannot haue the consideration of these respects, because by nature, which hee calleth the ordinarie lawe of God, they are borne to obey : so we therefore can this conclusion : For in domesticall womens government, all prudent men did alwaies refuse, as it were a monster, be vnderstood other wise, than of the publike and ciuill government. And therefore, accepting Caluine where he wrote trulie and reuerentlie of the matter, without anie disgracing other wise of his authoritie : In this place so groselie overshooting himselfe, and the truth of the matter, he can by no meanes be fullie reconciled to himselfe, or ought of vs, or of anie other to be allowed. And so much more dangerous heerein are these his speeches, as other our zealous among our Brethren, haue gone as farre and further heereupon, than hee did.

And although Danzus fetch the matter about with a greater windlasse, and with fairer speeches for our state and most gracious Soueraigne : yet (as in the end Caluine doth) so he also baliues the matter to the same pitch, against not onlie the priuate government of women, ouer their husbands, in domesticall matters, but also against the publik government of womē,

in the ciuill and politicall state: & therefore least by any scruples in reading these men might stick in a curious mind vpon this dangerous point, whereby anie man might thinke himself not fullie satisfied: let vs see also & weigh all Danæus reasons on this matter. And first we take Danæus his grant, & this pcept of St. Paul (Let the woman with silence learne with all subiection) taketh place while women be in the publik assëbly: but not when they are at their owne house, because they may priuately instruct their familie, especially ifther want a Father of the household, and that they be widows, for then they both may and ought to praie vnto God, & to teach their children the feare of God. And therefore in such sort as St. Paule calleth particular householdes, particular Churches: it inferreth, that they may teach particular Churches also. To the which I adde that which Hemingius obserueth heerevpon. The second proposition of this Chapter containing an Ecclesiastical Canon, concerning the discipline and manners of women. In this Canon two things are commanded vnto womē, and two things are forbidden vnto them. First is commanded that they should learne quietlie without tumult, as becommeth them which are thrall to the lawe of subiection. And then, that they should in quiet deale with their owne affaires, and meddle with those things that pertaine to women, not shewing theselues into the busineses of men. The first thing that is forbidden is, that women should not teach publikelie: and then, that they should not vsurpe authoritie ouer men. These things pertaine hereunto, that an order and discipline might be in the Church. Not that we should therevpon take an argument of contemning womankind: neither are they so bidden to hold their peace, but it is lawfull for them to giue wholesome counsels to their husbandes, if at anie time the matter seeme to require it. Which thing the storie of Iudith, Debora, Anna, and of other women doth shew. (which examples inferre not onelie priuate, but publike counsels and authoritie also) yea, Abraham is commanded of the Lord, that he should obey his wiues counsel of casting out the handmaide Agar. And also by domestical discipline to teach godlinesse, yea, & that they may admonish their husbandes of their duetie, when they cease to doe it, or be sluggish. For Paule heere treateth of the common discipline, the which excludeth not necessarie counsels and deliberation of honest (or worshipful) women, so that, thus far forth they graunt them to teach or gouerne, not onelie in priuate, but in publike.

Danæus arguments against womens go-
uernment.

But to come to Danæus reasons: the first reason (saith he) which is expounded in this place, is drawn a differentia, from the difference which is set of God himselfe, between both sexes, to wit, the mans and the womans. The second is, a genere, frō the kind, or general words. God wold haue women neither to rule, neither to teach, neither to vsurp authoritie in viros, ouer the mē or husbandes: but he that speaketh in the Church, or ruleth and teacheth, taketh on her ouer men a certaine gouernment & autho-authoritie: therefore women neither can, either ought to speake in the church. This twofold diuision of Pauls reasons which Danrus maketh of reasoning first from the difference of the sexe, & then from the kinde: except it had ben plainer spoken, is somewhat intricate, & may rather seme to be all one. For what is here the sexe, but the kinde, & the kinde, but the sexe: except he take Genus for the general word, and comprehend teaching in the word gouerning, as though he must needs be a gouernour, that is, a teacher, which we haue seene alredy, by many examples is not so. But to argumēt. God would neither haue women (Præsse) y is, to be aboue, (or to be before, or to rule) neither to teach, neither to vsurpe authoritie vpon men: At qui loquitur in Ecclesia sine præst ca, et docet, in viros sumit quoddam imperium et auctoritatē: Ergo, &c. But he that speaketh in the church (I think it should rather be) At qui loquitur, but he that speaketh in the Church, or ruleth (or is aboue or before) and teacheth, taketh a certaine gouernment, or rule & authoritie vpon man: Ergo, women neither can nor ought to speake in the Church. This Ergo, neither concludeth y matter that Paul here auoucheth, nor anie part of this argument is so plain and oþerlie set down, but, is so intricate and confused, that we can scarce make a good Syllogism, or almost any sensible reason of the same. And first for his concludē, where he taketh, that for the cause or key of his argumēt, which in Latine we call Medium, the meane, which is repeated in either proposition, to infer & proue Pauls conclusion, that is, Women shuld not teach in the Church, (which if he wold proue ought) he ought to haue proued: this he proueth not, but by this he wold proue, that they ought not to speake in the church. Whereas contrariwise he should haue made his key or weast of this argument, to haue ben on speaking, and therevpon to haue concluded teaching. As thus: God suffereth not women to speake in the church: but to teach inferreth to speake: ergo, he suffereth the not to teach. But, as he now turns it another way: so he so doubles it to teaching & with ruling, &c. y both he marreth the argumēt, & the sense of either proposition. For where he saith in the Major, God neither will haue women to rule nor to teach, nor to vsurp authoritie ouer men: he seemeth here to speake of three distinct things that God would not haue to be in women, ruling, teaching, & vsurping authoritie ouer men. But what meaneth he here by vsurping authoritie ouer men? Is not that all one with Præsse to rule them, or to be ouer or aboue them? If it be, then is not here 3, but 2 distinct things, y God wold not haue to be in womē: if he make the difference to be herein, that by ruling or being ouer them, he meaneth good & lawfull Government: & by vsurping, naughty government: then maketh bee a good difference, but withall hee acknowledgeth some government of women to be good & lawfull, and sayne, that is vsurpation, to be naughty. and so I hold well with him in this partition of Government. But then, how is this Proposition true, that God woulde haue neither the one nor the other? For God forbids not simply any lawfull thing. If he say, that lawfull government is not simply forbidden, but onely to the Women: it still comes all to one passe. For, the Proposition is not of Government simply in it selfe, but of Womens Government, whether it be simply euill, and of womens vsurpation. For either both these are but all one. (For, if her Government be simply euill: What is it else, but meere vsurpation, or if it be distinct from vsurpation (which in women and men also is meere and simple euill,) what is it else but good and lawfull? Besides, that this Proposition, (take ruling, or vsurping authority howe he will) not simply true, is not onely concerning governing, nor yet for teaching. For, were it simply true: it could admit no debarre of any occasion or necessity, nor any exemption of such especiall persons, as were lawfullie called thereunto, which we haue seen at large, both by examples and testimonies of the scripture, and by argumentes and playne confessions euen of our Wethzen them-selues both for governing, and for teaching: besides that, we shall yet more playnely see by Danus owne confession after ward.

proposition

Now, as we see this confusion of these tearmes, in the Maior or more generall proposition: so, the Minor is farre worse and cleane marreth all the argument. For, whereas to inferre his conclusion, it should haue followed thus: But to speake in the Church, is to rule, to teach, and to vsurp authority ouer men: Ergo, God woulde not haue it, that women may or ought to speake in the Church: This had bene a plaine argument. But then this minor had had a plaine deniall. For Danus, nor all the world can euer proue it, that to speake in the Church is to rule, to teach, and to vsurpe authority ouer men. And so were all this argument moste easily ouerturned. But Danus (whether rethorically, as not bound to the straight limits of Logick, or to make the argument more diffuse) inuerteth the minor on this wise. First, he repeateth women here againe, whom he bringeth also into the conclusion, and so clean ouerthrowes all forme and nature of any argument. Besides this, (and that which is moste vitious in any forme of argument) he placeth, with speaking in the Church, Governing, and (though somewhat more ambiguously) teaching also. Spaking the first part of the sentence, in Latine called Subiectum, as the subiect matter, whereon any thing is spoken, to consist here of these thre. Whereas these tearmes to rule, and to teach, should haue bin placed with the third term, to vsurpe authority ouer men, & all thre in the Predicatum, that is, in the thing that is spoken on the matter subiect. Which thre should bee made the key of his argument, or cause whereupon he should infer his conclusion, and so be reserved to be repeated in the later parts of his assumption, or minor Proposition of his argument, which it seemeth he would haue brought to the first mode of the second figure of syllogismes.

The forme
of the argument mis-
formed,

which later part of his assumption or minor proposition, he maketh here to be onely the taking a kinde of gouernment and authority ouer men, which before he ioyned together with ruling and teaching, and now he seuereth it from rule and teaching. Neither yet maketh he it to be all one with that he saide before: but in these of that he called before vsurping, beere he commeth in with taking. And where before he saide simply & onely of authority: here he commeth in with a quoddam imperium, a certaine kinde of commaundement, (empire or gouernment) and authority.

Neither is it enough, with transposing and chaunging thus these termes cleane to ouerthrowe his owne argument: but also he maketh this minor proposition as confused and intricate, if not much more, than was the other. For, if we shoulde english this proposition word by word: At qui loquitur in ecclesia siue praeest, ea & docet, in viros sumit quoddam imperium & auctoritatem. See (as I rather thinke, it shoulde be shee) that speaketh in the Church or else ruleth she also teacheth, taketh a certain Empire & authority vpon men. Doe how intricately and confusedly these words are placed. Wought they not more clearly haue bin distinguished: Shee that speaketh, teacheth: and shee that ruleth taketh on her a kinde of gouernment and authority? But then had both these partes bene some confused. For although it be moſt true, that shee which ruleth taketh on her a kinde of gouernment and authority: yet if this taking on her, be referred to the vsurpation mentioned in the former Proposition (for also also the argument hath more tearmes then it ought to haue) which word vsurping is usually taken in the word part, for the that take gouernment & authority, vpon them hauing no right thereto, for that is properly tearmed vsurping: and so in these it is a certaine kinde of Gouernment and authority, but not a right and lawfull gouernment and authority: then this part of the sentence is most apparant false. For every woman that ruleth, both not so take (that is, by vsurpation) a certaine kinde of gouernment and authority, that is, a wrong title, as an vsurped tyranney, as did Athalia. For, she may be specially called thereunto of God, she may be lawfully chosen thereunto of man, and she may be lineally bozne thereunto by nature, and so vsurpes it not. Debora was no vsurper. But we shall come to more examples all in time.

And also the other part of the Proposition thus distinguished, is apparant defectiue: Shee that speaketh teacheth. Doe all teache that speaker if he meane, all that speaks. In that manner of speaking: what is that else, then in effect to say: Shee that teacheth teacheth: and indeede so. Paul speaketh not here simply of speaking, but of teaching. As we heard before, 1. Corin. 14. 34. Where he saide, it is not permitted to them to speak, which was thus expounded by Calu. He forbids them therefore to speake in

The very words of the argument lesse.

How many wayes a woman may haue lawfull gouernment publike for because of teaching or of prophecying. So that this cause being set asidespeaking in the Church is not forbidden. So not teaching neither simply, as we haue shewed both by the Scripture, and by Caluine also.

The conclusion of Da-neus argument against womens speaking.

And yet, if Danæ had set his rest against wom. teaching in the church, it had bene more tollerable. But nowe all his conclusion is against Wo- mens speaking in the church. And he reasoneth thus, they may not teach in the Church: ergo, they may not speake in the Church. And in this pro- position, shee that speaketh teacheth. What a kinde of teaching or spea- king is this, a genere affirmatiue ad speciem? shee speaketh: ergo, she tea- cheth. And if this consequence bee good: then of consequence she may teach in the Church. With it is apparant, she may speake: For, if all the congre- gation may say but Amen: if she be one of the congregation, she may pub- likely speake, say she but onely bare Amen. And may not shee say some of the responses, as may the other people that are not Ministers? and may she not say the publike Confession with them? may she not be openly Ca- techised, and aunswere to the articles of her sayth? may shee not sing with the congregation the psalmes and Hymnes? And is not that also a publike speaking? and must shee not speake when she is to bee married, and before all the Congregation confesse, being straightly charged so to doe, if shee knowe any lawfull impediment, why she ought not to bee loyned in ma- trimony to that man? and doe not our brethren also enioine her euen in the knot of marriage, to say these wordes? Euen so I take him before God, and in the presence of this his congregation. Now therfore both Danæus con- clude: y women neither can nor ought to speake in the Church: If hee say this speaking is not teaching, & that hee speaketh only heere of such spea- king, as is teaching: why then both he not draw his argument from spea- king to teaching? and to haue reasoned thus, she may not speake, ergo, she may not teach. Rather than from teaching unto speaking, saying thus: she may not teach: ergo, she may not speake: which is againe a specie ad genus negatiue.

But, which way soeuer he drawe it, it is both apparant, that shee may both speake in the Church, without the breach of Saint Pauls precept: yea: and her speaking may be teaching also, if shee take not on her the or- dinary Ecclesiasticall function of teaching in the Church, which is the thing in debate, that Saint Paule forbiddeth. For other wise, if eyther ne- cessity happen, (as Caluine graunteth) she may extraordinarily teach al- so: or, if she be any way lawfully called to the authority of publike regi- ment, not onely she may both speake and teache in the publike congre- gation: but her place (of consequence) both often times require it. Which Danæus perceiuing, though hee concludeth not his argument against Wo- mens gouerning: yet to proue that shee ought not to speake, hee taketh all all his force from these two which bee thus intermingled one with another, ruling and teaching. And why doth he say it is that teaching inferreth ruling: or that, ruling inferreth teaching? and which soever inferreth the other, or they be both conioined, whereas hee saith: it thus: Women may not publikely rule: ergo, they may not publikely teach: Q Women may not publikely teach: ergo, they may not publikely rule. Why may not we sende these argumentes backe againe to their Master, which this reciprocally aunswere? V Women may publikely rule: ergo, Women may publikely teach. Q Women may publikely teach: ergo, Women may publikely rule. What women may teach, we haue seene the examples and testimonies of Scripture and our brethrens owne Confessions. And as for the lawfulness of womens publike ruling: as we haue seene the Scripture and Caluine, &c: Let vs now see what Danus saith thereto, after this his argument against their speaking. So, that which followeth concerning women deacons: stands not vpon.

Nowe vpon this occasion cometh Danus directly to the Question of the regiment of V Women, with the which (as we haue before) Caluine, so rigorously did conclude.

1. Tim. 2. 12

But (sayth Danus) out of this place it is also among some thereupon disputed, whether it bee honest for women to reigne, that is, to commaunde men, and to obtaine a cheefe empire and right ouer men, and ouer the male kinde, which thing hath place in Spayne, in Englande, in Scotland, and in diuerse other regions.

Bridges

Where Danus setteth downe this Question playne, for the government of Women ouer men, both for the reigning in the cheefe and publike regiment of a kingdome, and the right thereof, and whether it bee honest, yea or no? which hee maketh but a Question disputed vpon by some that take occasion on this place. So that hee seemeth to inferre, that there is no direct and playne place in the Scripture which both impugne it, but that by occasion of this place, some do dispute thereon.

So that first, this place and much lesse the other 1. Corint. 14. which accordeth with this, are not directly spoken against the reigne or cheefe and publique government of Women ouer men, in the souerainty of a kingdome or royall Empyre. But, that rule which Saint Paule both heere and there forbiddeth women to haue and exercise ouer men, is properly of another kinde of rule. And therefore, whosoever alleageth those places, as by them to drawe a direct argument against the publike regiment of women, in the right of a kingdome, manifestly wresteth those places. And so consequently, wresteth all Saint Pauls reasons there vsed, and also the Lawe, Genesis, 3. Whereon hee groundes these reasons.

No place in Scripture directly a-

some disputed vpon, and that the question is, Virum honestum sit, whether it be honest: that is, whether it be of the best kinde of those things that are called good, to wit, not onely saye in thewe, no; onely profitable in the advantage, but whether it be a vertuous, a iust, a true, lawfull, and righteous thing, yea, or no. The contrary whereof, to wit, vnhonest, is not onely vnpleasant or incommodious, but vicious, vniust, false, vnlawfull and vnrighteous. Of which sort of euill if it were: being a matter pertaining not to a few persons, but to whole estates, and of such importance as concerneth gouernment, in their greatest and most necessary affayres: it is likely that it shoulde be but disputed vpon of some? or rather cried out vpon of all, no; to be suffered in any place as contrary to the expresse law of God, and to the vniuersall lawe of nature, if those places, Gen. 3. 1. Cor. 14. and this 1. Tim. 3. be against it. And so by no maner of meanes to be suffered, and then indeed had Caluin said the truth, that al wise men did alwaies refuse it as a monstrous thing, beeing against the Lawe of God and nature.

But sith those places (as we haue proued, & Danæus granteth) do not medle therewith, and much lesse, any other place in all the scripture, hath any apparance to condemne it, as a dishonest matter: can we think, that a matter of such moment, not onely for the publike state in matters of policy, in mo; all conuersation (yea conseruation) of mans life, and preservation of Gods Church, and withall so often mentioned in the scripture, both for the persons, and for the office, and for the authority of princes & publike gouernors, that it shoulde haue neuer directly and peremptorily bin forbidden, no; haue bene pronounced to be a thing vnhonest? yea rather, doth not this silence of the scripture, cleare acquite it of all suspicion of dishonesty?

offence in calling the honestie of womens
regiment
into questio

And in very deede, albeit some moze curious and newfangled than sober or circumspect, haue called the honesty thereof in question: yet for the most and best, and wisest part of men, the honesty therof hath not bin called into question, but thought to be (where there is occasion thereof, and if the lawes and customes beare it) a good, a iust, a lawfull, a true, a right, a vertuous & honest matter. And for proof hereof (as Danæus here beginneth well, if he would in this point hold out, and not yelde to much to these disputers, or not rather giue occasion & matter for them to dispute vpon) he doth mightely (in my opinion) confirme the honesty of it, in saying, that this thing hath place in Spayne, England, Scotland, and diuers other regions. For, were there no moe regions, where the regiment of women (as lawfull, iust, right, true, vertuous and honest hath place) but these 3. here specified: it is ynough sufficiently to enforce the honesty of it, except wee shall utterly dishonest all these states, which (when such regiment hapneth,) chisele vnder Q D D depends thereon. As our estate dothe now in England

And shoulde we now admit these certaine or some disputers, or any other, to haue it called in question, whether the state and Lawes of our realme, euen in the greatest matter of the gouernment thereof, be mainteining a thing that is vn honest, or against the Lawe of God and nature? For, if it be against these places, Gen. 3. 1. Corin. 14. 1. Tim. 2. or these places against it: how is not against the Lawe of God and nature? what a perillous matter were this, and not onely moste dangerous, inurious, dishonest, and dissoluall against our lawfull soueraigne, by whose happy gouernment. God hath so blessed vs, and both so graciously guide vs and defende vs, and so many yeares hath bene, and shoulde we now call her state and right into so high question, by sounes disputing (if it might not better be called disputing) as whether it were honest or no? to her Maiesties moze then dishonour, besides her ouerthrowe, and withall our owne destruction: but that also vnder pretence of the Gospell, we shoulde mainteine an inconuenience worse than a mischeefe, and go about to shatter all the groundes, and principles of the Lawe it selfe, both of the realme, yea, and of nature, so the right and inheritance and call in Question, euen in the greatest matter of estate, (the Englande mainteineth the inheritance and right of Womens regiment) whether it mainteines honesty or dishonesty, yea or no? and whether her Maiesty and other Women princes, in our and these specified regions, haue or doe rather rule De facto, as vsurpers, than de iure, as Godly and lawfull princes? shoulde we not herein go far beyond the very traytors, that oppose theselues only against the princes persons?

The dangerous inconueniences of these Questionistes.

And what shoulde adue any Questionistes to this disputation, by reason of this place, the first of Timothy, the second Chap. Which is but baled and westered to this regiment?

Howe much better therefore is it, especiall for vs whom so niderly it toucheth, that (as Danæus confesseth) the honesty and right of Womens regiment hath place heere with vs in Englande: so with all obedience, ioyfulnesse, thankesfulnesse, and conscience to God, to acknowledge the same. And not vpon such bloudy occasions to vndermine it, pretending a quarrell against Womens publique teaching, which neuertheless must needs followe. For, Looke wherein their regiment consistes, therein bothe an authozity of teachings euen of consequence also followe.

Four Wethzen replye: that admitting a Woman to haue supreme gouernment ouer all ecclesiasticall matters so well as ciuill: then may shee preach also and minister the Sacramentes. I answere, this objection which is moze fitte for papistes than protestantes) is but a meere cauill. For we say not, the prince hath all the gouernment either of all ecclesiasticall matters, or ciuill, in his oꝛ her person to do them, oꝛ to put the in action: but the Prince hath a supreme gouernment in his oꝛ her dominions, next and immediate vnder God, onely to ouersee, to appoint, to giue charge, and to commaund, that all those matters be duly executed, and oꝛderly put in action, by all these persons, to whom of duty by their functions they appertaine. And so the Prince, he oꝛ she, without the breach of St. Pauls precept, oꝛ of the lawe of God, may lawfully, and with authority, both speake and teach, euen in the greatest assembly of the congregation. For, his oꝛ her gouernment consisteth as much, in the authority of their lawfull commandementes: as in any thing else belonging to their supreme regiment. And take alwayes the right of their so speaking (which quickneth and giueth life vnto the lawes politike that they make) to wit, their roial assent and commanding: and ouerthrowe al their gouernment.

And if this regiment be right and honest in England: then was it neuer against the lawe of God and nature in any land. And if it be so now then of his owne nature, and de iure, it was so euer, though it were not euer so, de facto. And we haue no cause but to prayse God, that Im & saluum in this gouernment, are now loyned together in her Maiesty. And the right and honesty hereof hauing place heere: it is not so onely in Spayne and Scotland, but it may be so (not as Danus sayth, in diuers other regions) but, quoad ius, euery region, if they haue not other as good municipall and peculier lawes (and those not feigned) to bebarre the naturall right, of any Woman princes regiment. Neither hindreth it this right and honesty, that Spayne oꝛ any of these diuers other regions not specified by Danus, haue not yet receyued (as we haue God make vs thankfull for it) the light and liberty of the Gospel: for nayther in some of these regions, where this right and honesty of womens regiment holdeth, they haue as yet receyued, so much as the title and profession of Christs name. Notwithstanding as their marriages and other ciuill lawes: oꝛ moꝛall behauior, may otherwise bee good and honest in their kindes: so their authority of Magistracy, and the person that their Lawes allowe the same authority vnto, may likewise be good and honest, neither against the generall lawe of nature, noꝛ against any speciall Lawe of God. For then, it were inuoluntarily naught in all regions, and with vs in Englande too: of all, that knowe the written Lawe of God. And therefore I conclude vpon this saying of Danus, that if it bee righte and honest with vs: then it is not an vnnatural, wrong, monstrous, or vnhonest thing in it selfe, oꝛ against any of these places. Genes. 3. 1. Corinth. 11. and 14. 1. Tim. 3. oꝛ any other places in all the scripture.

What meaneth therefore Danus heere, by specifying onely of these three regions England, Spayne and Scotland, restraining his generality, not to all regions, but to diuers other? For if it be honest and right, in any one: except some other region haue other priuate and speciall Lawes against the same, such (as before I sayde) are goodly, and not made to the injury of any princes or persons former right: then is it by the Law & right of God and nature, honest and right in all regions.

But I am affrayde (hinc illa lachima) that not only Danus, but euen Caluine also, did a little too much patrifare, and were caried away in this matter with the deuise, that of later times hath bin set forth, to defeat the naturall right and title of the soueraigne Princes of England, by the colour of a lawe Salike as they call it. But because vnder pretence of this supposed Lawe, the defenders of it, take vpon them, not onely to maintaine it and the state of their Country: but insult thereby vpon all other Nations, and impugne generally the right of Womens regiment, as an vntowardfull and vnnaturall state of government: therefore craving pardon not to offend any (nor so much impugning, as defending) it shall be requisite, either to remooue out of the way this oblation, of the sayde surmised Salike lawe: or else it woulde still remayne as a stumbling blocks vnto the reader, and a speciall argument vnto all them, that not onely among our abusers, but among our selues, by all meanes impugne and vndermine Womens regiment. And because Fraunce onely, and that lawe Salike is so much urged: Let vs onely in this our so necessary defence, consider better the state thereof, and the cheefest arguments for the same.

And first, whosoever shal peruse the ancient histories of the french nation, as he shal soon perceiue at this deuise of the law Salike to be vntoward by the pedigree of diuers of their Princes: so shall hee find, & diuers women haue also had the gouerning of the realme of Fraunce, euen with the Kinges their husbands, and after their deceasse. As Batillidis the widow of Clo-doueus which reigned together in the administration of the Kingdome with her sonne Clotharius, as witnesseth Aimonius de gestis Francorum. lib. 1. cap. 43. The french men doe ordeine Clothayr to bee their king, the eldest of the three children, cum ipsa regina marre regnaturum that hee should reigne together with his mother. Blanche the Mother of him whome the French call Saint Loyes which bothe by the Testament of her Husbände (as Aemilius testifieth) while her sonne was young, and after in his captiuitie in Syria, had the gouernment of the Realme of Fraunce, and notably gouerned the same, maugre all the nobles in France that conspired against her.

As for the reasons of Cenalus, in the defence of this pretended Salike lawe.

the Salike lawe: how obiouslie (he being a popish Bishop) enueigheth beyond al mode, the Salike Lawe. Ly. against womē: is to apparant. And how fondly he craketh of the french for this matter, aboute all the nations in the woꝛlde. Till home he acknowledgeth for the most part (further than Danzus doth) to admit succession and so the regiment of women. And therefore he calleth them all Gallina- ceos, dunghill cocks oꝛ hennish cocks in respect of the french. lib. 1. Peri- oche. 10.

But most of all, howe shamelesly he wresteth the scripture thereunto. For having alleaged Munster to pꝛoue the Salike lawe from Pharamund, that the succession shoulde not come vnto the distaffe, (as he contume- liously tearmes it) that is saith (he) women shoulde not be permitted to be made heyres of the kingdome, to the which alludeth that Enangeli- call sentence, Consider ye the Lylies of the field how they grow, they la- bor not in bringing foorth, neither spinne they in drawing their taskes of wooll, as is peculier vnto that weake sexe: whereby it comes to passe, that neither Solomon in all his glory is clothed as one of these. For, than Iewish nation, were it right or were it wrong, did sometimes (will they nill they, sustaine the government of women kinde. Which thing is by ex- periment found in Athalia, and in the issue of the Machabees.

What an impudent wresting of the scripture is this, to pꝛoue the glory of the French Lylies, not to admit the regiment of women. And yet this bald argument, oꝛ rather impious, in wresting the scripture, doth so please the blinde B. that he flourisheth againe vpon it, fol. 113. be say- ing: Gallia in times past was Fennish, as appeareth by the armes of the toads but nowe it is turned into a Cuntre adorned with Lylies, by an heavenly benefite, vnder Clodoueus the first Christian King there- of. Heereunto alluded Esdras, lib 4. Cap. 9. saying, Such as the Feele is, such are the seedes: such as the Flowers are, such are the colours: Such as is the husband-man, such is the tilth. And the same Esdras Cap. 3. Of all the Flowers of the worlde, thou haste chosen to thee one Lyly. The Lyon is fierce, the Eagle is rauenous, the Lyly is capable of the heavenly dewe. Is not this a straunge applying of the scripture, although this booke of Esdras be not canonicall?

But nowe, where he addeth these two examples, If hee had looked fur- ther, he should haue found moze, and farre better examples in the scrip- ture. Especially Debora. But it seemeth he makes al one reckoning, when hee sayth: were it right, or were it wrong, that women gouerned Gods people. Whereby hee seemeth to claime this, to bee the pꝛerogative of Fraunce: that whether it be right, oꝛ whether it bee wrong, they will not suffer womens gouernment. Neyther is Cenalis thus content, to haue thus once oꝛ twice heerein abused the scripture, but he goeth on moſte blasphemously to God, and iniuriously against all Chꝛistendome:

and sayth: in which thing that most noble Realme of the Nation of the French Gaulles, hath whereupon to congratulate vnto it selfe, that by the singular benefite of God, it may woorthily be called before other kingdomes, a sacerdotall or Priestly kingdome. For it hath this thing common with Priest-hood, that euen as the Priest-hood can not passe ouer vnto a woman: so no more can the Monarchiall Empire of the Salike Monarchie. What therefore remaineth, but that being mindefull of the grace receaued of God, they breake forth into these wordes, Apocal. 5. Thou art worthy O Lorde to take the booke and to open the leales thereof because thou wast slaine, & hast redeemed vs in thy blood out of euery tribe, language, people, and Nation, to wit, whome thou hast vouchsafed to illustrat with the title of the most Christa kingdome. And moreouer, hast made vs kinges and Priestes, and we shall raigne vpon the earth, to wit, being enriched with this sacerdotall dowrie. Nothing therefore letteth, whereby that Nation should not be called, a holy Nation, a royall Priest-hood, or (if ye had rather) a priestly or sacerdotall kingdom, a people of purchase. For the religion which after ward once it got, neuer intermitted, but happely & prosperously euer encreased Gallia (or the coutrie of the Gaules) (sayth Ierom) along hath wanted monsters, with the which almost the residue of Nations haue abounded more than inough.

Cenalis shamefull wresting of the scripture

Thus monstrously twisteth Cenalis against womens regiment. Doubtless, I hope Calvin take not this terme of monster for womens regiment, from this monstrous Bishop. As for that which Ierome wrote, was not against the regiment of women in Gallia, neither was Gallia in his time called Francia, nor Pharamundus borne, and so no such Salike lawe as yet inuented. And therefore this must needs be wrested hereunto. Besides this intollerable arrogancie in the French to claime that spirituall priuilege of Royall Priest-hood, that is both common to all true Christian nations, and to all true Christian people, not onely men, but to women also and to children. And therefore this is both inuiolent vnto the, to take this title from them, and a grosse error in a Bishop, not understanding what these termes doe meane. For although he debarrs his Popish sacrificing Priest-hood from a woman (let him leaue that hardely to Pope Iohanes charge) yet in this spirituall and mysticall kingdome and Priest-hood, that either S. Peter or S. Iohn speaketh of, euery good Christian woman, neuer so private or poore person, and all the elect children of God, haue as good title, right and interest, as not onely the French king, but as any, or all, the Emperours, Kinges, Queenes, and Princes in the world.

Cenalis wresting of Ierome.

The iniurie that Cenalis offereth to all Christians.

Now after Cenalis hath thus cracked of the French prerogative, in this Salike lawe, so much pretended and so greatly vjged: when he cometh to the logy of the Salike law. the reason of the same, and of this worde Salica, be sheweth what diuersities of opinions are thereon. Munster thinks it is deriued of the worde Sala a riuer at a village of the same name. Other, that the lawes Salike are deriued of the woorde sala, or vnfalla in Frenche, signifying in Latine Sulam a Courte or Hall, as who say, the Courtly or Palatine law. Some thought the deriuation of the lawe Salike, came of certaine lawes of the French Emperours, beginning : Si aliquis, or si aliqua, and so by contraction, striking of a letter or two in the ende, per syncope, it was vulgarly termed the lawe Salike. Some (sayth he) arise higher & more commodiously, who fetch the Etimologie of the lawe Salike not so much out of the marrowe (or pythe) of the worde, as out of the barke (or rynde) of the worde : Sal from salte, as by a certayne allusion that they would haue the Salike law to be spoken hereupon : as though it were perpetually constant, inuiolable and incorruptible for all times to endure. For salte in the holy scriptures, is a token of incorruption and perpetuall enduring, and moreouer both of Wildome and discretion. As is expressed in plaine wordes, Numb. 18. and Leuit. 2. In the booke of Numbers : All the first frutes of the sanctuary, which the children of Israel offer to God, I haue given to thee and to thy sons, by a perpetuall right, it is an euerlasting covenant of salt vnto thee and to thy sonnes before the Lorde. And in Leuiticus, Whatsoeuer sacrifice thou shalt offer, thou shalt season with salt, nor shalt take awaye the salt of the covenant of thy God from thy sacrifice. In euery oblation thou shalt offer salt. And againe 2. Paral. 13. You are not ignorant that the Lorde GOD of Israel hath given the kingdom vnto Dauid ouer Israel for euer, to him and to his sonnes, for a covenant of salt. By this it manifestly appeareth, that salt hath the token of incorruption. And as for the token of discretion : Let your speech (sayth Paule) be seasoned with salt. And in Marke : Euery offering shall bee salted with salt, Salt is good, but if so be it be vsuorie, in what will yee season it? That so yee may vnderstande, the lawe Salike being sprinkled with the salt of discretion, and with the saues of muche reason, perpetually to remaine in his vigor.

Thus doth Cenalis seeke all the shifts he can to enforce this lawe, not sparing thus more and more, to hale and vztawe these places of scripture to the same. But sence he alleageth so manie originalles thereof, and dare not resolute himselfe vppon any one of them, but sayth, Let euery mans iudgement remayne to himselfe, for I will not vppon this thing contende with any man : what certaintye therefore can this lawe haue? The very title whereof, when it is tossed and combled withall these diuersities of opinions, and wrestlinges of the scripture, is so vncertaine. But if this were suche a wise and incorruptible lawe, that it had his name of seasoning with salt to resemble those auncient offerings covenantes, and speeches in the olde and newe Testament: then it ma-keth more for women than against them. For although that saying 2. Pa-ral. 13. mention onely David and his sonnes: yet did Cenalís himselte confesse before, that the Nation of the Jewes did admittē the gouerne-ment of a woman. And the place mentioned Numbers 18. conteyneth not only sonnes (as Cenalís citeth it) but the verbe wordes are: to thee, and to thy sonnes, and to thy daughters. So that the offering, that is the salte of covenant, or incorruptible covenant (if the Frenche can brawle it to holde still incorruptible with them; or the resemblance of their Princes estate thereunto) giueth the samie not onely to the man, but to the wo-

And as for Christes and the Apostles wordes, are so generall: that they are apparantly to be applyed, to all that professe the name of Christ, wherther they be man or woman. Both of them must haue their speeches seasoned with salt, that is, with such wisdomē as will permitte no corruption. For ill wordes (sayth the Apostle) corrupt good manners. And all must be salted with fire, and every sacrifice (sayth Christ) shall be salted with salt.
Salte is good, but if the salt be vnsauorie, wherewith shall it be seasoned? Haue salt in your selues, and peace one with an other. By which salt, meane hee wisdomē, or faith, or discipline, or the worde, &c. as he alludeth to the olde sacrifices, and would haue our selues to be come such sacrifices: so the wordes are generall, and therefore (sayth Caluine) Christ extendeth this generally vnto all, whom once God hath vouchsafed to season with his worde. And exhorteth them to retayne alwayes their reliſhe. And where the text is onely ye, all, or euery one: the interpreter (sayth Brentius) hath added of his owne, homō, man. Which worde also comprehendeth woman. So that by these originalles or resemblances of the Salike lawe, if there be but mica salu then one grayne of salte to season the same with wisdomē and reason from putrefaction: it can not debarre women from that right of gouernement, that by the inheritance of the lawe of God and nature, they are bozne vnto, except their owne demerites, or some stronger barre than the pretence of the lawe salike, debarre or depriue them of it.

lica mulieri veniat, sed ad virilem sexum tota hereditas perueniat.* No portion of enheritance of the salike lande, may come to a woman, but the whole enheritance should come to the male sexe.

lawe.

If this lawe be that wherupon all the sturre is made, first, it is manifestly against the Iudiciall lawe of inheritance, in the worde of G. D.
For, whereas it appeareth, Numb. 26. ver. 33. that Salphahad the sonne of Helpher had no sons, but daughters, &c. It followeth chap. 27. v. 1. &c.

Then

like against Gods lawe. The law Sa-like against the law of God.

Numb. 27. Then came the daughters of Salphahad, the sonne of Hopher, the sonne of Gubad, the sonne of Machir, the sonne of Manasses, the sonne of Ioseph; and the names of his daughters were these, Malchab, Noab, Hogab, Milchab, and Thirsab; and stood before Moses, and before Eleazar the Priest, and before the Princes and all the assembly, at the doore of the Tabernacle of the congregation, saying: Our Father died in the wilderness, and he was not among the assembly of them, that were assembled against the Lorde in the companie of Corah, but died in his sinne, and had no sonnes. Wherefore should the name of our father be taken away from his family, because he hath no sonne? Give vs a possession among the brethren of our Father. (Here againe women speake and pleade their right of inheritance, both before the Ecclesiasticall & the Ciuill assembly) Then Moses brought their cause before the Lorde; and the Lorde spake vnto Moses saying: The daughters Zelophthead speake right, thou shalt giue them a possession to inherit among their fathers brethren, and shalt turne the inheritance of their Father, vnto them. Also thou shalt speake vnto the children of Israel, saying: If a man die and haue no sonne, then ye shall turne his inheritance vnto his daughter. And if he haue no daughter, ye shall giue his inheritance vnto his brethren. And if he haue no brethren, ye shall giue his inheritance vnto his fathers brethren. And if his father haue no brethren, ye shall giue his inheritance to the next in kynne of his family, and he shall possess it. And this shall bee vnto the children of Israel a lawe of iudgement, as the Lorde hath commaunded Moses.

Women in the publ. assembly pleade for their inheritance.

This lawe not only iudiciall but naturall.

Here againe we see, how God not only accepteth their speaking in the congregation, but approueth their cause to be right. And not only alloweth the inheritance of their father vnto them: but on this occasion, maketh a generall law. Which law, is not simply one of those Iudiciall lawes, that were proper onely to the Iewes state and policie: but is drawn from the right of lineall descent, direct or collaterall in the order of nature, to the nearest of the blood, without respect (especially in the direct line) to the prerogative of the male sexe in the line transferred. Neither is there here any respect had of the greatnesse or smallnesse, superioritie or inferioritie of the inheritance: but that, if the King had had none issue but daughters, the daughter had bene heire to the kingdome, before any Vncles, or Cousins, neuer so excellent and worthy men. And if we shoulde denie this in the inheritance of a kingdome, more than in other inheritances:

This lawe stretcheth to the inheritance of the kingdome.

how can we make it good, that our sauour Christ according to the flesh, (albeit he toke it not vpon him) was in right of inheritance, the true and naturall king of the Iewes: as he was called both at his birth, and the title named him at his death, except in the right of the virgine Marie his mother, and not of Ioseph that was but his reputed father: Wherefore, it is most cleare, that this lawe of womens right in inheritance, stretcheth to the inheritance of a kingdome. And since this was Gods lawe, and it standes on naturall reason, and Christ on to whom all Christendome haue their their name, had that right hereby: though for other considerations he abassed himselfe, both from claiming that right, and from the open declaring of the power and glorie of his Godhead, for the time of that dispensation here on earth: and since all of the most part, not onely of heathenesse, but namely of Christendome, acknowledge the title & right of this lawe: what privilege haue the French to exempt themselves therfrom, & to debarre any Prince of this right that by inheritance accreth to them, under pretence of an heathen lawe, pretended from infidels, onely for a shew of an-tiquitie, against the most ancient, most reasonable, most naturall and most right lawe made of God the father himselfe, and confirmed by our sauour Iesus Christ?

king of the

his mother.

If this law had no greater force than one of their mere Iudicials: had it not bene better than any lawe, that is merely of man? And much more of blinde Papistes, that saw not the vertue and equitie of Gods lawe: & much farre better than any lawe of the Infidels: as was Pharamund from who the French pretende to fetch this Salike lawe, so direct contrarie to Gods lawe. But let them goe. Shall our Brethren Protestantes, in the Churches reformed, holde with these Popish deuises too? And yet pretend, that so nere as possible we can, we should drawe to the Iudicialles of Gods lawe giuen by Moses? Let vs therefore see also what Caluine sayth here-on.

A storie of the daughters of Salphaad of the progenie of Machir is inserted, which desired to be admitted into parte of the inheritance, because their father had no successor male. But the definition of this cause might seeme doubtfull, except the doubt had been taken away by Gods answere. For when as in the lawe no name is giuen to women, no consideration in the portion of the lande, ought to haue been had of them.
And verely, God prescribed this common lawe. But nowe is set downe a speciall exception, that so often as one shall want heyres male, women should succede, least the memorie of him should decay. I knowe it may be called in question, because that reasons occurre on either parte. But this shoulde suffice vs, that God hath interposed a decree. Thus sayth Caluine. And vpon these wordes, verse, 8. Then shalt speake vnto the children of Israel, saying: when any man shall die, and if he shall not haue a sonne, ye shall transerre his inheritance to his daughter; Caluine addeth: The conditionall proposition was the occasion of making the law, which should be a perpetuall and generall rule, so farre as pertayneth to the right of inheritances. But although God preferre the daughters before all the other Cousines, whereas the issue male wanteth: notwithstanding, the first degree excepted, he admitteth only the males to the succession. And so he keepeth the order that is vsed. And verely, to exclude his heyres for the respect of the sexe, should be a verie wicked thing. But when hee is of ignorance come from those that are his, vnto other being legitimate: their prerogative beginneth to consist in the males. I speake of the lande of Chanaan, in the which not onely the name of Abraham, but (to the end that there might be a more certaine and distinct memorie) the names of the twelue tribes ought to haue beene kept.

Caluines restraint dout full.

The debarre of a general and perpetuall rule a wicked thing.

Sisters comprehended in the name of brothers.

The lawe of marriage in their tribes restrayned to the lewes ludicials.

Thus sayth Caluine, but how far he stretcheth this limitation, that he sayth, he speaketh of the lande of Chanaan: I doe not certainly vnderstande. Except it be only to the prerogative of the male legitimate, that immediately he spake of before. And not to restrayne all this lawe of God, which before he sayde should be a perpetuall and generall rule, to the onely lande of Chanaan, or to the name of Abraham, and to the twelue tribes, for that were, neither to make it generall nor perpetuall. And verily, if this be a verie wicked thing, (as Caluine sayeth) to exclude the heyre for respect of the sexe: then both this generalitie and perpetuall of this rule, stretch further than to the lande of Chanaan, or to the Iewes. And it is yet to this day, and in all Christendome, as wicked a thing to debarre this generall and perpetuall rule, for respect of the sexe, as euer then with them it was. Neither doe I thinke, the wordes to goe so cleare as Caluine takes them: that if the man haue no children of his owne, neither sonnes nor daughters, that by the mans brethren, and by the mans fathers brethren, the males haue such prerogative giuen them, that they might ouerpasse and debarre al the females equal in the line collaterall, and so procede to another new line, still respecting the sexe, more than the nearnesse of the line: but that the same respect which is to be had of the principall partie, the same respect is to be had of all those male or female, that in bloud are nearest to him. Only the male hath the prerogative if there be anie. And that, in the name of Bretheren, (as in the more worthy sexe) the name of all the sisters is comprised, as oftentimes woman is comprehended in the name of man.

But howsoever these wordes here, Brethren, & fathers brethren, strictly or largely may be vnderstande: the wordes in the 11. verse, that for the want of the fathers brethren they should giue the inheritance to the flesh that is the next of the kindred (or family) mentioning neither male nor female, apparantly stretcheth in the default of the male, vnto the female. And therefore Caluine (my dutifull reuerence to him reserved) both not so well (me thinke) anouch this saying, that where the issue male fayleth, notwithstanding except the first degree he admitteth the only males vnto the succession. As for that which followeth after cap. 36. of the marriage of such heyres females with those that were of their owne tribes: that lawe indeede hath the reason which Caluine speaketh of, for the memorie of the certaine and distinct tribes.

And

And now for further proofe of the womans inheritance Boos when he married Ruth the Moabitch woman though she were but the widowe of Mahlon, Alimelechs and Naomies sonne, yet, the inheritance went with her, and came to Boos by her, the great grandsire to Kings David.

Boos had Alimelechs inheritance by Ruth.

Now, if the Salike law were made by an heathen Prince (as the french pretende) if not rather by those that pretend to be most Christian Princes, fathered in a heathen Princes name: shall any that is a Christian Prince indeede, oppose the same vnto Gods most equall & naturall law and thereby exclude other Christian Princes titles, and vaunt of this their heathen law; and that worse is, not only cleane disinherite the natural heire, but deface all women kinde thereby, as this popish Bishop Cenalís doth?

But see howe he confutes himselfe. For, when hee hath sette downe the Salike lawe, that no portion of inheritance of the Salike lande, may come to a woman, but that the whole inheritance should come to the male kinde: Moreouer (sayth hee) they call the Salike lande, that which cleaueth indiuisible to the Monarchicall scepter of the French, which condition they of Bourges, and of Orleance, and the Dukedome also of the Burgundians do followe.

Cenalís confutes himselfe.

The inheritance of Burgundie,

If the dukedome of Burgundie (for the other as meaner states I will not prée into) followe the same condition that the lande Salike and the land adherent to the French crowne doth: I would againe desire no better argument, that, the inheritance of the crowne of France deuolueth vnto the right of the heyre female.

For first, what is clearer than that which Otto Fresingenſis Lib. 2. cap. 29. sayth: Mos est in Burgundia, &c. It is the custome in Burgundie, (which is kept almost in all the Prouinces of France) that alwayes the authoritie of the inheritance of the Farther, passeth to the elder brother, and to his children whether they be males or be they females, the residue hauing respect to him as to their Lord.

The custom of Burgundie.

But to goe to no other witnesses then Cenalís him-selfe: doth hee not confesse, Lib. 1. peruche. 13. fol. 101. b? Vnto Gondebaldus succeeded Sigismunde, who himselfe also perished of a cruell death, beeing together with his sonne hurled downe into a pitte, in so much that the kingdome of Burgundie, came in the name of inheritance vnto Clotildis And the same he repeateth in the next lease. b. who being slaine (he speaketh of Gondomarus) the kingdome of the Burgundians passed vnto Clotildis and to her children. And againe, 105. a. the kingdome of the Burgundians is the first section, from Gondengus, alias Gondoehus, or Gondebundus, vntill Clotildis placed in matrimonie to Clodoueus, vnto whom succeeded heyres suruining Gondebaldus and Gondeſigil-lus.

Burgundie descendeth to a woman.

But

uingians and Carolins lines. But to Gondebaldus succeeded Sigismundus, who beeing slayne, the scepter of the kingdom came to Clotildis and to her posteritie. But whe as vnto Clotildis and vnto her posteritie succeeded a great many children: the kingdome of Burgundie stewe among them with doubtfull fethers, which must needs fall out that at the length the kingdome of Burgundie should come to the last furnier, which should be only called the Monarch of the Gaules. And all this fell out after Pharamundus, about the time of Clodoneus, who was the first Frenche king that was Christened, by the meanes of this his wife Clotildis, fro whose issue succeeded the line of the Merouingians, of Meroneus grand-father to Clodoneus, and by affinitie as Aimonius witnesseth, (that is, through title of kindred by his wife) the successor of Clodio. Pharamundus son, so that againe, all the line of the Merouingians came by the woman. Which line of the Merouingians continued till Charles Martell the father of Pipine, and Grandfather to Charles the great. In whose stocke both Burgundie, and the regiment of all Fraunce continued, untill the time of Hughe Capete, who gaue the same vnto his brother, it being not long before abated by Lotharius, from the state of a kingdome to a dukedome, for his contumelious striking of an Arch-bishop.

The line of the Mero- uingians by the woman.
The line of the Carolins by the woman.

But now (sayth Canalis) after that the inheritaunce of the Burgundian dukedome came to the French kinges: ye shall scarce finde, concerning the race of the Princes of the Burgundians, where ye may safely fixe your foote, euen vntill the time of S. Loyes, and that chiefly by reason of women: S. Loyes had Agnes or Agnet his daughter, Duchesse of Burgundie, whom not long time after, Lewes (surnamed Hutin) succeeding married. Philip surnamed the fayre married Margaret ennobled by the stocke of Burgundie. Then followed Ioane giuen in mariage to Philip the long. Whom straight-way followed Blanch Duches of Burgundie, ioyned in mariage to Charles the fayrer that succeeded Philip the long. After whome Philip of Valoys following, married Ioane Duchesse of Burgundie.

This Philip gotte the crowne of France from Edwarde the 3. King of Englande. By whose meanes this Salike law, against the inheritance of the female was first vnder the name of Pharamunde deuised. Vpon pretence as the same went that a certaine Queene of France cast her fancie on a Butcher, (as Iohannes Methensis witnesseth) and married him. For detestation of which fact they made the Salike lawe, that no woman should after that inherite the kingdome of Fraunce. And although Gaguinus to defeate king Edwardes title, alleage that euerie one of the three sonnes of Philip the faire, both Lewes Hutin, and Philip the long, & Charles the fayre had all issue, besides the other daughters that he mentio- oneth of Philip le Beau; yet sithe it is apparant that of none of all those issued issued any heyres male or female: how could Philip of Valoys pretende, from his Uncle Philip S. Lewes sonne, which Philip was father to Isabel, Edward the thirde his mother, to bereave Isabell and her sonne Edward of this right, but under pretence only of this devised lawe? Which lawe as we have seene by Cenalys owne confession, taking no place in Burgundie, the Burgundians and the Frankes following one condition of inheritance: it followeth, that this lawe Salike, is but a mere devise, and that in searching the practise we finde all cleane contrary.

And as the inheritance of Burgundie went thus, untill that time that this devise was hatched: so hath it gone since. For although Cenalys when he cometh to Charles Carolese, or rather Careles, which last was slaine by the Switzers, sayth: who when hee wanted an heyre male, by the vertue of the Salike lawe, the Dukedome of Burgundie came to the kinges of Fraunce euen vntill this day: I much marvel what face Cenalys durst so constantly avouch this thing: like all Christendome knoweth, that although the French king scrambled for his share, and gotte a parte thereof, in that time of hanoche: yet Maximilian the Emperour, marrying afterwarde the daughter and heyre, obteyned by her the right and title of that inheritance. By which it is most cleare, that these two estates of France and Burgundie, the one following in inheritance the condition of the other: that as Burgundie notwithstanding any Salike lawe, admitteth the inheritance of the woman: so should France also.

Yea, and by reason of this house of Burgundie, hath title come by the woman also euen to the crowne of Fraunce. The which Cenalys himselfe can not denie. For (sayth he, fol. 106. a) speaking of Philip the long, whom he calleth the Brother (he should say, the sonne of Philip the faire) he succeeded his elder brother Lewes, surnamed Hutin, that is (as some interpret it) troublesome or brawling, vnto whom Margaret the sister of Robert Duke of Burgundie was married. Of whom Hutine begat Ioane, which Ioane was married vnto the Earle of Eureux, and to the king of Navarre. Whereupon controuersie arose betweene the Duke of Burgundie and Philip (he meaneth Philip of Valoys) which of a regent was created king, about the yeare, 1316. by reason of which Ioane the Scepter was staide to be diuolued to the Duke of Burgundie, brother of Ioane. But the lawe Salike directlie withstood this sentence. Howbeit the mariage of Ioane daughter of Philip, whome the Duke of Burgundie tooke to his wife, brake off that strife. But because this Ioane Hutines daughter had no issue, Edward therefore came still before the Duke of Burgundie. And yet had this Duke carried it away, euen by affinitie, for all the lawe Salike, had not the matter bene otherwise composed.

And Cœnalis reckoning by the Genealogie of the Charles of Burgundie comming from Otto he sayth: Otto begat Ioane the French Queene, and Queene of Navarre, the Ladie of the countrey Palatine of Burgundie, whom Philip the French king chose to his wife, of which mariage issued Lewes the french King, and his 2. sonne Philip Earle Palatine of Burgundie, &c. Ioane had daughter Elisa or Elisabeth, married to Robert Duke of Burgundie, about the yeare 1306. Lewes the French king and of Navarre begat the Earle of Poyters, & Palatin of Burgundie and Lorde of Salinople, not long after French king. This Philip, of whom we haue spoken, begat Margaret enriched with a triple Earledome, of Flaunders, of Artoys and of Burgundie, &c.

Inheritances

of women.

Thus both Cœnalis (in prosecuting these pedegrees of these Princes) declare withall what inheritances also came to them with women, & that vnto the French king besides Britanie & diuerse other Provinces, by mariages of the heires female. Pea, what title to the French crowne, himself had Pipine, but on the mothers side. As Cœnalis is faine to confesse (though he would turne the matter from title to election) that he came by the mothers blood of the Frankes, fol. 68. of whose progenie sayth Volateranus, Lib. 3. fol. 17. b. Pipine therefore the King, in the yeare 753. beganne the seconde progenie among the French, of whom wee must speake a fewe thinges: taking his beginning from his aunccestors, for they boast of his kindred from the french kinges. For Ambertus being a great man begat of Hitildis the daughter of Clotarius the 8. Herkenoalde the Father of Pipine, who had Grimoalde the father of an other Herkenolde, of whom was begotten the other Pipine surnamed the short, of his short stature. &c. This Pipine begat Charles Martell, who had issue Pipine that was made king, the Father of the Emperour Charles the great. So that all this boasting that Volaterane speaketh of, came of the mother.

Hugh Capetes
by the woman.

And likewise for Hughe Capete sayth Cœnalis fol. 110. This one fiction I haue chosen to my self, that out of the most certaine Chronicles of Bochet, I might set before mine eyes the most renowned progenie of Hugh Capete, running downe from Pharamunde by Pipine, to wit, vnto whome the race of the royall stocke is deuolued, the feminine sex comming betweene. And this is the order of this generation. Of Pipine the short was begotten Charles the great, of who came Lewes surnamed the godly, from whence out of this generation came Lewes of Bauier king of the Germanes. From the Bauarian proceded Carlo-manne, who of his bodie begat Arnulphus the Emperour. From Arnulphus sprange his daughter Luigarde. Who being ioyned in matrimonie to the Duke Odo, brought forth Henrie, which married Mawde the daughter of the Emperour Lewes. Neuerthelesse Henrie married an other wife the widdowe of Conradus called Placida or Placentia. From whence whence came Otto the first Emperour of that name, and Bruno Bishop of Colayne, and Gerberga the noble wife of the french king Lewes the fourth. From whom issued Aigunda ioyned in marriage to Hugh surnamed the great, which by the title of Earle, obteyned the royall Citie of Paris. Of which matrimonic issued our Hughe Capete. And from hence it clearely appeareth that Hughe, of whome at this present wee speake, was by lynage a Caroline, a Merouingian, and also a Troian Sicambrian. Of whom the Sicambrians also had their name of Cambria a most wise woman the king of Britaines daughter, as Lazius de Migrationibus gentium, discoursing vpon the Cymmerians from whence the Frankes came, doth witnesse, fol. 83.

This doth Cēalis himselfe fetch the pedegrē of the royall blood of all these houses euen so; Hugh Capete, still from the mother. And the like beeing shewed also in Meroueus, that came to the Crowne by the right of affinitie vnto Clodio the sonne of Pharamunde, (all affinitie consistiing by right of mariage) it followeth, that all the translations from the right line that euer haue bene in Fraunce, saue onely the intrusion of Philip de Valoys, to exclude Edward the thirde, were made only by such, as claimed the title of the royall blood by right of their mothers, notwithstanding the French Chronicles frivolous pzetenses of election, or of the Salikelawe.

Nowe, where Cēalis would shew the reason of this pzetended Salike lawe, from a contrarietie to the lawe of nature, and to the lawe of GOD in the state of a Monarchie: let vs likewise see the pzeise of those his reasons. fol. 66. By which reason (sayeth he) the Monarchie of the Frenche is established. Which when it reacknowledgeth not a superiour, it mought of his owne right make a lawe to endure for euer, and publish the same beeing made. If the reason hereof shall bee exacted, yee shall finde that euen by the verie force of the woorde, a Monarchie can not consiste and a supreme gouernment of thinges, except it bein the male kinde. That the Monarchicall scepter be Guerman, that is to saye, altogether manly, hauing nothing womanish mixed with it.

For by the lawe of God it is apparaunt, not in one place (euen nature it selfe teaching vs) that a woman is subiect to a man. Thou shalt be vnder the power of the man, sayeth the Lorde vnto the woman, not so much noting her person, as her sexe. And out of Paule, the man is the heade of the woman. Howe nowe can it come to passe, that the woman if shee gouerne Monarchically should not haue the supreme gouernement ouer the man? If the man gouerne, she shall not bee a Monarke. Contrariwise if the woman retayne the chiefe Dominion to her selfe, then shall not the man be the commander, as he that is vnder the womans lawes. For two can not be either of them in the whole, equally the Lordes of one thing.

Concerning that which Cœnalis sayde befoze, that Burgundie followed the condition of Fraunce in this Salike lawe: we haue shewed in dede howe they both followe one condition, that is to say, neither of them in their practise (saue against vs) haue followed this lawe. And therefore by this meanes, this lawe Salike is not established to endure perpetually, but is broken or kept at their pleasure. If they list to put backe the nextest heyre, be he also neuer so muche a man, or manly a man, if his title come by the mother, or if they like him not to raigne ouer them: then out with this Salike lawe against him. And if they like him, though his descent be from the woman neuer so much: then for sooth, the lawe Salike can not holde: for why; then (sayth Cœnalis) election is aboue all lawe of succession. And thus euery way they shift the matter, to establish (as they say) their Monarchie, and to set vp whom it pleaseth them.

But if the establishment of this lawe consist of this, that it was made by a Monarchie that reacknowledged no Superiour, and therefore of his owne right, might make a lawe to endure for euer, and publish the same being made: then was this lawe farre from such an establishment; Pharamundus and his Frankes beeing so farre off from a Monarchie, and from reacknowledging no superiour: that they were ouercome by the Romanes, and tributaries to them, and when Valentian forgane them their tribute for teene yeares space, where they dwelt then in Hungarie by the Romanes licences: when they denied their tribute they were expelled from thence (Laz. fol. 66.) and after planted themselves in Holland, and Phrisia and from thence by little and little into Germany and to Gallia.

But what enfranchising hath the French Monarchie now, (which he sayth, reacknowledgeth no superiour) that both it and all other neuer so high or so large a Monarchie, should not alwayes reacknowledge the superiority of the lawe of God, to be aboue and ouerrule all their Salike or humane lawes?

Neither doth the nature of a Monarchie or supreme dominio, (as here he boldly auoucheth) require to consist alwayes in a man, and that man to be altogether a manly, or a warrelike man, and admitte no feminine admixture. For then, not only euery man childe, but also many milder spirited men might be excluded from their right and Monarchies. True it is, that by the lawe of God, and by the lawe of nature, a woman is subiect and inferiour to a man, in respect of her sexe of womankind: but as Cœnalis confesseth, that the Lorde spake these wordes, vnto the woman, thou shalt bee vnder the power of the man, not so muche noting her person as her sexe: and how then doeth not Cæsalis fully answer himselfe herein? For the worde Monarke, onely chiefe or gouernour, noteth not the sexe, but the person. And therefore, this sentence, not noting so much the person as the sexe: is not well applyed to that estate of a Monarke, which noteth not so much the sexe as the person. Whereas this subiectiõ of the woman to the man, is of the sex, in respect she is a woman: and not of the person, whereby shee is a Prince or Monarke, except it be vnderstood of such a person, as is a mans wife, & in respect of her wife-hoode subiect to her husbände. Otherwise, if she can not by any meanes be superiour as a person: then can she not onely be no Monarke ouer men in a kingdome: neither yet, haue any Ladiship ouer any countrie, no, nor be any Mistresse in her own household, if any man (though a mere seruant or stranger) soioyne in her house. And if shee may haue a higher authoritie, in respect of the higher person, wherunto she is called ouer men seruants in a family, to towne, or Countrie: then may she notwithstanding her sexe, retayne the highest authoritie also euen in a Monarchie.

Monarch respects not the sexe.

A woman superior in some respects.

Which distinction of sexe & person, vsed by Cæsalis himselfe, expoundeth likewise his sentence out of S. Paule, that the man is the womans head, in respect (I answer) of her sexe and woman-hood: except we shall adde (if she be married) in respect also of the state of her wife-hood. But this hindreth not, but that in other respects, the woman (though not as a woman) but as a Mistresse, a Ladie, or a Soueraigne, may be the mans head also, that is, his lawfull Gouvernor, & director, and so his Monarke. So that, although the man retaine still his naturall superior power, in regard of his manhood: or his oeconomicall superiour authoritie, in regard of his marriage: yet in other politicall considerations, as wherein a woman is an heyre, or lawfully attayneth to any title of dignitie or crowne, she may be Ladie, or Soueraigne of any lande, territorie or dominion, & so, the supreme gouernement thereof belongeth of right vnto her, or to her husbände (haue she any) in her name & title. And being sui iuris, her own woman, as we terme it, hauing no husband to be her head: her supreme gouernement is the lesse restrayned.

How the man is the womans head, and how the woman may be the mans head.

Debora had a husbände, to whome (no doubt) she was byrome & loyal, in respect of the dutie of a wife: but againe, in respect of the highe and publike estate, that God other wise aduanced her vnto, she gouerned and iudged all Israell, and so, her owne husbände, and vnder God, in her iudgements and commaundementes she was their head: And although Hester was not a Monarke, but her husbände Ahashuerus, whose very name betokeneth he was the chiefe head: yet notwithstanding she obeyed great power and authoritie ouer all the Jewes her countrimen; that dwelt throughtout all her husbändes prouinces. Yea, and her husbände (chap. 5. ver. 3.) had her aske what she would, and it should be giuen her, euen to halfe the kingdome. Which he would not haue offered her. if shee had not been capable of publike gouernment. If now we grant that Hester might haue such authoritie, though vnder her husbände, yet ouer her owne people, & ouer halfe these Prouinces, whereof one quarter is moze than all the kingdome of France, and adde all Italy to it: how then is not the force of Cenalis argument ouerthrowen? For we stand not vpon so absolute a Monarchie, as admitteth superiour power at all: so; such a Monarke is no man neither, but only almightie God. But if a woman may haue a despoticall regiment to gouerne but a Towne, or Lordship, as in the new Testament, Marie and Martha, were Ladies of Bethania, as many doe expounde those wordes, Ioh. 11. 1. A certaine man was sicke named Lazarus of Bethania, the Towne of Mary and her sister Martha: and also (as it may be conjectured) the Ladie to whom S. Iohn wrote his seconde Epistle: then may she also proceede further, euen to the gouernment of a kingdome or Monarchie, for any hindrance of her sexe heerein. For if she may gouerne men at all, she may be a chiefe gouernour of them well inough.

Neither is it of anye necessitie in publike gouernement, that a man should be the chiefe gouernour, moze than a woman, for any thing contained in the quoted sentences, Colloss. 3. Genes. 3. 1. Cor. 11. or anie other sentence in the olde, or in the newe Testament, as we haue already seene. So that, whether the chiefe gouernour be man or woman (come he or she to their estates by godly meanes) the sex is no such debarre at all, but that without any preiudice of their kinds, any one of them may, so far as stretcheth to this publike preheminence, gouerne and direct the other. Yea, in some cases (although Cenalis say the contrarie) I yet see not, why two cannot in some sorte be equally gouernours both in one and a like, either of them in the whole euen of one state: yea, one Monarchie or Empire. as it is sayde of Gerion in Spaine, of whome the Poetes feyned that he had 3. bodies and but one head: because three Brethren vnited themselves equally altogether in one gouernement. And the like euen in the Monarchie of Rome, diuerse Emperours were. And although some of them deuided the Countries and Prouinces of their possessions: yet the Empire remained one among them, which Empire they gouerned ioyntly and with equall dignitie, as though they were but one, & not the one ouer or vnder the other, and some of the women also, as we shall see after, when Danæus shall call vs to examples of that state. Only now it sufficeth to haue seen how this Popish Bishop Cenalis vseth all those reasons also, that Caluine and Danæus stande vpon. And howe weake all these their argumentes are.

The residue that followeth in Cenalis, is for the most parte either but vaine babling, without any profe at all: or moze sonde argumentes than the other. These thinges therefore (sayth he, fol. 66. a.) fight with themselves selues to be a chiefe Monarke, and to be a woman.

I denie this consequence. Neither followeth it on any of his premisses. Bridges

But (sayth he) whosoeuer therefore doubteth in that thing: heareth Canalis.
not himselfe speaking, not knowing the force of the word.

Whether Canalis heard himselfe or no, I can not say. I rather thinke Bridges he heard himselfe too much, and betwixteth his owne ignorance of the woorde. For what can Monarchie else signifie, but the principallitie or chiefe government of one? And what then is included in the worde Mo-narke, of what sexe that one chiefe gouernour should be? so it be but the chiefe government of one, and not of moe.

But (sayth he) they that in their kingdomes claime the chief government to themselves, admitting the chiefe right of the kingdom in a woman, seeme to doe nothing else, than that they diminish the Maiestie of the Monarchicall principallitie.

If they (that hauing right thereto, and be not other wise by their demerites barred) be women that claime the Monarchie to themselves: what diminishing is this, when the Maiestie of the Monarchicall principallitie still remaineth entier in them? If he speake of men: his wordes haue no sense. For how can they claime to them selues the chief government in their kingdomes: and withall admit the chiefe right of the kingdom in a woman? Except, whosoeuer should so do, would confesse himselfe to be a plaine vsurper; confessing the chiefe right to be in her, and yet claime the chiefe government to himselfe. If he meane, not of any title of right in present: but right in possibilitie, when it deuolueth to a woman: then neither he diminisheth any whitte the Maiestie of the Monarchicall princi-pallitie: nor she, when she lawfully attaigneth thereunto, any whit dimi-nisheth the same by reason of her sexe, except by any her demerites otherwise she diminish it, or perhaps may lose it. But that may happen, and hath hapned, to a man as well as vnto a woman.

Of which matter (sayth Canalis) let them looke to it, to witte, the Canalis.
English men, the Spaniardes, and the Sicilians, & well neere all other.

With not only Englande, Spaine, and Sicile, but almost all other doe Bridges.
admitte this right: it argueth it is not an vnlawefull, and vnaturall thing. Except the French would condemne the most part of Christendom for their owne peuis standing on this Salike lawe, which they confesse came from Inuvelles. But as we of England haue good companie herein: so, let the French rather looke vnto it, that separate themselves, for the maintenance of a Pagan lawe (if not rather a lawe mere forged) from the most part of Christendome. And is there now no Monarchie or kingdom in all Christendome but only in France? If there be, then to be a Monark, and to be a woman, are not repugnant. And he that doubts therof, heares not himselfe, nor knowes the force of the worde, Monarke.

Cenalis.

As for the residue of Ditions or Signiories (sayth Cenalis) howe excellent soeuer they are, the dignitie of their principalitie being safe, (so that it be not supreme and Monarchicall) they may admit the feminine sexe in the succession of lande.

If he make this exception of the residue of ditions or Signiories, from Englande, Spaine, Sicill & all other, which he granteth to admit womens supream gouernement: then, of what other signiories he speaketh, he should haue plainer expessed. But what signiories soeuer he meane, or what municipall lawes soeuer they haue: sth he graunteth this, that how excellent soeuer they be, they may admitte the woman kinde in the succession of the soyle, the dignitie of their principalitie being safe and vnblemished: and yet that dignitie is annexed to the possession of that soyle: how then both he not graunt, but that women may gouerne neuer so excellent a signiorie dition or territorie, without impayring the dignitie of the principalitie thereof? Which if they may doe: then this exception, so that it be not supreme and Monarchicall, comes too late, and is a vaine exception.

Neither is his reason hereof any more of value to debarre a womans right from the succession of a kingdom: than of a Princedome or of a dukedome.

Cenalis.

For (sayth he) there shall not want the top or soueraigntie of the Monarchie, that with the defence of armes shal supply the fraylty of the sex, in defending of or restoring her right.

Bridges

The imbecilitie of a mā childe or weakenes.

And cannot this be done as well and better by her own subiects, or confederates, whē she her selfe hath the Monarchical principalitie? And may not men pretende as well and much easier, to take away an Erledome, a Dukedome, or Princedome or other inferior Signiories from her, as vpon such pretence of defence, to take away her right of the kingdom? Yea, by this reason, no male heyre, being yet a childe, can enioy a Monarchie: because the fraylty of his age, as well as of her sexe, in defending or restoring his right must be supplied by the force of armes: which lies as little in him to doe, as in a woman.

Cenalis.

But (sayth Cenalis) in a Monarchie, if a woman gouerne, it should be necessarie that a man should be subiect to a woman, against al the disposing both of the holy and of the prophane lawe.

Bridges.

Well may it be against the disposing of this prophane pretended Salike lawe: but we haue shewen sufficiently, yea, and Cenalis hath sufficiently confessed, that it is not against the holy lawe of God, but that a man may be a subiect to a woman, in respect of the person of her vocation, without any subiection or derogation to the superioritie his sexe and nature, in respect that he is a man.

not say: but of this I am sure, and an infinite number moe can witnesse the same, that God hath miraculously healed by her Maiesties handes, a very great number, and still doth.

Yea, Ioh. Tagautius a Parisian, in his institution of surgery dedicated to Frances the first, li. 1. chap. 13. writing of the cure of this disease, dooth saie: Hec vnum tamen, &c. This one thing neuerthelesse I confidently affirme, that it is graunted of God by a speciall gift to the most Christian king of the French, that with the onelie touching of his hande hee shold restore to health those that haue the Squinacie, or the Scrophules as they tearme them. King Edward also (he meaneth the third) as the Histories reporte, was wont to heale those that had the Squinancie with touching onelie, giuen him of God, which gifte beeing immortall, hath passed as a right hereditarie to the kings following. For the kings of England, euen now also by their touching with certaine thanksgiuings before recited, not without ceremonies doe heale those of the Squinancie or swellings in the throate.

Which most manifestlie confuteth all the slanderous and opprobrious vntruths of this blinde & foule mouthed Popish Bishop Cenalís. And cleerlie euidenth, that as her Maiestic is no lesse of the legitimate line of the Hugonians, Carolines, and Merouingians, than Philip of Valois was: as is most apparant, Isabel being the legitimate daughter of Philip le Beaw, which also was the legitimate sonne and heire of Philip his Father, and Father also to Charles of Valois his second sonne, of whom came Philip of Valois, from whõ the French kings succeeding, & he is yet remainder, haue issued: sith therfore the legitimate daughter, begotten in lawfull matrimonte, is by the expresse law of God, preferred before the Fathers brother, & before fathers brothers son: how can her Maiesties line be called? thought other than the legitimate issue of the Hugonians? & therfore this argument is either of no force to infer the title of the Crowne, but onelie to proue the legitimatation of the issue, which they cannot denie in her Maiestic, nor we denie in their Wzinces: or else this argument dooth plainelis conuince them, and infer a her Maiesties right and title. But we stand not vpon the lawfulnessse of the blood, but vpon the neerenesse of the blood. And Cenalís himselte speaking of the line of Hugh Capet (whose royall blood from the Carolines was onelis of the mother, as we haue euen out of Cenalís shewes) saith, fol. 68. b. For the right of the kingdome of France, is not to bee of the right euerie man, or of heads (because Hugh Capet had his name of Caput, an head) Sed sanguinis esse, But to be of blood And therfore, the neerer blood legitimate, the nêerer right, euen by his owne confession.

Now, as this Popish Bishop, the more he strives, the more he wjestles with himselfe, beating himselfe, and confuteth still his owne reasons: so he concludes concludes hereon. Thou seest therefore, how these being ioyned in a certaine agreeable and indiuisible league, doe so defence and strengthen mutually the one the other, a Monarchie the Lawe Salike, and the Lawe Salike a Monarchie: that whether of these two thou wilt, being taken away: the other of necessitie must either bee chaunged, or perishe vtterly.

This conclusion is, as false and loose as all the premisses. What such Bridges Agreeable and indissoluble league hath he proued, or haue we sene, betwene the state of a Monarchie and the Salike Lawe, that they can not be seuered without the vtter destruction the one of the other? can not the Salike Lawe stande without a Monarchie? God wotte it was a sozzy vagrant and tributary Monarchie, when (as they pretende) Pharamunde made it, and a pretty while after. And can it not stande in other states popular or Aristocratical, as well as, yea and firmer in them than in a Monarchie? and must there needs bee a Monarchie where it takes place? is the state of Bourges, of Orleance, and of Burgundie, a monarchicall state? and yet, Canalis confessed before, that they all followe the Salike Lawe.

And on the other side, is there no Monarchy but where the Lawe Salike holdeth? Is not the state of Englande, Spaine, Sicile, Scotland, and many other states Monarchical, and yet admit not this Salike Lawe but the succession of the woman? Is Fraunce onely and those fewer and meaner states, Monarchies, and not these Countreies? What a false conclusion then is this that includeth all these falsehoodes? But if none of all these reasons will serue: yet sayth he:

Howsoeuer it bee, what is more ridiculous, or preposterous & fonde, Canalis. than if a henne should rule a cocke?

With a ridiculous and proposterous reason is this, from reasonable Bridges creatures to vnreasonable, that haue nothing to guide them but the instinct and force of nature: and by this reason, all states shoulde not onely receiue the Salike Lawe: but the Lawe of God, so; any preheminance of woman in any inheritance at all, or Gouernment of their householde, and all obedience of men children to their Mothers, especially after they bee stronger than their Mothers, and of seruantes to their Ladies and Mistresses, is cleane cut off, and shoulde become a Preposterous and vnnatural thing, by this Cockishe or rather Cock-comish reason, If I may be so bolde as to vse this tearme. In-deede the Gaules or French are called Galli, which betokeneth also Cockes, as in the next lease 67. Canalis ridiculously and fondly triumpheth on that name saying.

What intollerable boasting and bayne words are these? verily this Bishop (whether he were a Hennish Cocke or no, I cannot tell) is so cranke of his combe, and so loth to haue it cut, that he playes the part of a very cravine, and croweth like a Dunghill Cock, but with his arguments fighteth like a crammed Capon. And yet, were all this but a ridiculous and fonder meriment, rather than an argument, to conclude so high a matter, sane that he turnes againe to his olde bious, of wresting not onely the Apocryphal, but also the canonicall Scripture.

See, how grossly this is wrested. Whereas, Zorobabel maintaining his theame, women are strongest, but trueth ouercommeth all thinges. Among other sentences sayth on this wise, 1. Elsdra 4. ver. 22. Therefore, by this ye may knowe, that the women beare rule ouer you, do yee not labour and traueill and giue and bring all to the women? This now alleageth this ignorant Bishop, as though it were a mournfull and lamentable state, where women haue any ciuill and politique gouernment.

Indeede, no man hauing his right wittes. will be so fond as to cal a woman, a Lorde: and yet may Queenes with naturall comelinesse, and subiect like duty, be called most mighty Lady and dreadfull Prince, or dread Soueraigne. And in place of these, other reuerende and honorable tearmes, may serue, without any direct or indirect repugnancy to nature well ynough. But if this or that tearme will not beseme them, shall we for the vnfitnesse of that tearme, that is more proper perhaps to a man, denie a womans right of principality? And if a woman were vncapable also of the most mighty principality: might not for all that, a VVoman bee the Queene well ynough of all Fraunce? or is that, the moste mighty principality? I thinke Englande ere now hath matched well ynough with all the might thereof. And yet haue women gouerned more mighty principalties than Englande or Fraunce, or Spayne, and put them altogether.

But (saith he) the woman-kinde is so prone to fall, and to plunge headlong,

Pro. 31. Who shall finde a strong woman?

This is not onely this shamelesse Bishops accustomed wresting Gods Bridges. holy worde: but hereon hee breakes forth from all argumentes, into so blacke rhetorike and playne rayling: that I must needs here for very shame and werinesse begin to shake him off, and turne him loose, to some common scoldes, moze fit a great deale to deale with them, than to dispute on Princes titles, saue that where againe he alleageth the Scripture, saying. For it is written. Who shall finde a strong Woman? I knowe well y- Canali. nough some notable Matrones in the feminine sexe are prouident and beautified with many vertues. But this Woman is a rare birde, and most like to a blacke Swanne. But that lawe doth consider those thinges, that a man shall finde euerye where, not the thinges that happen rarely.

Howsoeuer this Bishop can wrest and turne his Salike Lawe, he ought Bridges not to wrest the lawe of God. For Solomon speake not this, as though there were no such strong women at all: For all that followeth of the womans commendation is cleane contrary. Yea, and this very worde of Solomon which here he useth, ver. 10. אִשָּׁה כֹּחַ, Mulier fortis, signifying not only substance or wealth, strength of body or courage of mind, called fortitude and vertue, such as may bee in a pivate man: but such as is requisite in the gouernment of the people, yea, of an armie, which word he so ascribeth vnto a woman, that he sayth, she putteth it on as a garment, verse 25. Whereby it appeareth, that this sexe, though the weaker vessel by nature, yet by grace as she is, according to the Apostles saying, 1. So that, though they be very rare which surmount all other: yet, he sayth Many Daughters may haue a competent degre euen of this Fortitude, that can gouerne the multitude of the people: the residue in Canalis, which folloiweth out of Poets inuectiues is vnworthy the answering. As for the Amazones I am of his opinion. His next argument is this.

Canalis.

The Lawes repell a woman from being tutor or Guardian to a pupill or Fatherlesse childe: with what reason then shoulde they be receiued to defend and protect the cheefe dignitie of a Monarchie? Reason first, is a weake argument from the defence and protection of another's weaknes, to the title of ones own right. For a man childe, though hee cannot also bee a tutor, but is vnder tutors: yet can hee bee a Monarche or a King, euen while he is defended and protected vnder his tutors gouernment. For, that gouernment of his tutors, is not in any respect of any right of their owne: but of his right. And is onely a supply by another of his infirmity. Which maketh the better to proue that natural imbecility, though it might take away the actual exercise of many things either from a Childe or from a woman: yea, from a Man also: yet, can it not take away their title & authority from their right and propriety in the kingdome.

For though a king be continually sicke, yet is he king still. As, when Dauid was so cold and impotent for age and broodings in the warres, that he coulde no longer come abroad, nor get warmth: yet remained hee king Azaria or Vziah, though he was a Leper, and liued in a house apart, and his sonne iudged and ruled the people in his stead, 2. Chro. 26. yet remained hee in right and title still the king. And haue not some French kings also bin long sick & weake, and so distracted, & yet continued kings, though their selues not able to execute any part of Gouernment of the kingdome?

Infirmity
to right.

Notwithstanding we see this argument is moze against him than with him: yet it stands not on so absolute and firme a principle. The Lawes doe not repell a Woman from a Tutelship, except in certaine conditions. Mater filij tutelam perdit, vel si incontinenter viuat, vel si ad secundas nuptias transeat. The Mother (saith the lawe) leaseth her tutelship if she liue vnchastely, or if she mary againe. Pan in C. vxoratus. De conuer. coning. So that this condition being auoyded: the Lawes which holde euen in Fraunce, do admitte the tutelship of a pupill as well to a woman as to a man.

And although in the auncient Ciuill Lawe there bee a rule of Vlpian qua tutela eo & hereditas peruenit, nisi cum femina heredes intercedunt: where upon that Lawe was made which sayth, Mulier non potest esse Tutrix. L. si ff. de tutelis &c. Yet notwithstanding sayth Montholonius in where the practise hath euer bin, & still is, to the contrary? & that euen in the yong or infirm French kings themselves, as we heard of Batildis &c. and haue seen in our own daies of the Q. Mother in France which is yet liuing.

But that (saith Canalis) some obiect of the daughters of Salphaad, Canalis.
 Num. 2. is out of the cause. For wee must not deny to a woman her fathers inheritance, howe wealthy or much soeuer it be, so that the cheefe type of the whole Monarchie fall not to a woman, being altogether vnable to defend to susteine that burden,

As so; those women that be altogether vnable: that is an other questio.
 So, the man might be debarred too, though neither of them, man nor woman, of their title, yet of their exercise and administration of the same. That all women are not vnable hereunto: we haue partly shewed saire prooofs and euidences, and shall (God willing) shew yet surder. Yea, that none are disabled, only for the respect of their sexe, euen this lawe sufficeth, which is of such force: that this B. granteth it holdeth in any enheritance, be it neuer so wealthy or rich. And then (say I) it holdeth in a kingdome. If it bee not (saith he) the tipe of the whol Monarchie. And where finde he this restraint in this law? Or in the practise of the Iewes? indeed he confesseth, they vsed it not. But the cause that bee thus restraines it, is this, that a woman, (saith hee) is altogether vnable to sustaine this burthen. And is not a woman now in the state of Christendom vnder the gospel as wel able, as then a woman was, in the state of the Iewes vnder the Lawe? but he euer dreams of such a great Monarchie in France, that a woman is not able to sustein it. As though it were onely so great a Monarchie, that in all Christendome or in all the world none were like it. And is not Spaine as big and bigger then France? and haue not the ancient Monarchies of Asia & of Rome bin bigger then both, and then all these parts of Christendome now are? & yet haue women gouerned those Monarchies. But a Monar-chie is a Monarchie, be it little or great. And England is a Monarchie too, (God bee prayd) & that France hath felt. Yea, when this lawe of Pharamund was made: God wot, it was then a poore state, vassalle and tributary to the Romaines (as I haue shewed) not so much as contending for such a Monarchie, but rather for a quiet state, which it got afterwarde.

Canalis. His fond argument of the Sunne and the Moone: is in deede not worth the answering. That as the Moone shines by the light of the Sunne: so doth the Matron raies by the light of her husband. But no man hath so much as thought in his dreame, that the Sunne being the greater light, should depende of the brightnesse of the Moone, especially in the cheefe Monarchicall principality.

Bridges. In deede the Pope doth pleade on this wise, for his superiority aboue the Emperour. And therefore, these Popelings may be the bolder to bozow his argument. But if hee compare it to a man and his wife (as heere hee seems to doe) and so in deede the Sunne & Moone did signify in the dream of Ioseph, Gen. 37. yet that matrimonial coparison is not to the purpose of a Monarchical state. But to admit also this resemblance. Though the Sun be the greater light then is the Moone: yet hath the Moon a goodly light also, and a proper monarchie of her owne, to rule the night, as wel as the Sunne to rule the Day, euen by the testimony of the Scripture. Which is not ascribed so much to any other starres, although they bee bigger farre than the moone is.

These vaine and friuolous arguments, hath this French Bishop (which yet both in this point, and in all the French antiquities is one of the moste industrious of them all) and straieth all his wits, to recommend and set out this Salike Lawe, wresting and wrything of the scriptures. How much better, in my opinion, and with farre more modesty, (though otherwise he be also a great fauourer of the French estate aboue England,) doth Iacobus Meyer the Chronicler of Flaunders write of this matter. Lib. 12. fol. 136. saying.

In the yeare of our Lorde, 1335. Easter day being the 16. of Aprill, the English warre began, which of all other continued longest, and was moste cruell. And which helde out (with truces betweene whiles) aboue 100. yeares. Which might rather be called a Domesticall sedition than a Warre. The Christian common-weale is one kingdome, and one house, Whatsoever warres are made therein, are made with great blemish. Neither (if we shoulde say the trueth) they are Warres, but most reprochfull seditions. King Edward opposed to the Salike Law of the French, the diuine Bibles: which call the woman to inheritance, in defect of the issue male. Certaine there were in Fraunce that misliked not those argumentes of Edward. Which men being put to death: Edward determined to pursue his right, although with long and hard warre, and with most mighty mightie force of armes, to extinguish that Heathenish custome of the French. The Salij are sayde, while they yet liued among the Scitnians, to haue ordined and kept that lawe. These Salikes in the time of the decay of the Romane Empire, got to themselves the surname of Frankes, and began to be called Salij Francij, Salike Frankons. As also the Frisian Frankes, the Saxon Frankes, that is to saie, the free Frisons, the free Saxons, to wit, those that could bee no longer compelled to paie tributes. These Salik Fräks, after that they pierced first vnto the riuer of the Rhen, and after that euen to the riuer of Sequana, or Seine: albeit that they also became Christian, yet renued they, and tooth and naile euen to this daie they haue held that lawe. (But that this is not so, wee haue already shewed euen by Canalis the chiefest vjger of it.) Howbeit not without great detrimēt of Christian piety, as me thinks, (And here he noteth in the margine, The Lawe Salike hurtfull to the Christian common weale.) For if these laying aside their hatred and the superstition of that Lawe had nowe ioyned to themselves the riches of Englande: the had the French, the English, the Scots, the Flemmish, and the Burgundians, growen together into one kingdome, and with so mightie a power had easilie destroyed that barbarousnesse of Mahomet, which continued in Spaine euen almost vntill our times. But after that (I knowe not by what euill spirit of the French) the French haue alwaies attempted to beare rule among other men, all things haue bene troubled, all things haue beene full of discomfort, all things lamentable, all thinges seditious. Wee haue since that time scene peace no where, no where quietnesse. England was scene to offer the occasion that was most to be wished for, but that Frēch blockishnesse and infelicitie could not take hold thereon, being sotted by that Salike lawe.

How vnhappy

And againe fol. 148. lamenting the greates slaughter at the battaile of Chertsey: where hee telleth how the French King called King Edward, a Marchant of wooll, and King Edward called him the Marchant and author of the Salike Lawe: hee sayth: The French men alleadge certaine fonde causes of so great a slaughter. But I thinke there ought none other to bee alleadged, than wee haue before mencioned, that is to witte, the frivolous right of the French men, which is full of controuersie, vncertaine, and (that I may not saie) false, verilie most farre vnworthie of so great bloudshed.

I suppress herein his vnreuerent tearmes of Queene Isabel by whom the right of this title came. Onelie I note his iudgement of this pretended Salike Lawe, which lieth that all the French writers so earnestlie vjge, to stopp there with the title of the Kings and Queenes of England, not one onelie then in the time of ignorance and superstition reigning: but that also in this clere light of the Gospell and manifestation of Gods Lawe, arguments, even these notable and excellent learned professors of the Gospel in the French reformed Churches, Calvine and Danzus saueur yet so much of this French faction, that vpon the occasion of womens publike speaking in the congregation, they cannot refraine themselves from this humour of their Countrie, but must also most vnnecessarilie cast forth these intemperate speeches and disputations, against the right and title of womens publike regiment: and that some also among our selues, snatching at their arguments, with more greedie newfanglednesse, than with aduised consideration, haue likewise, to disturbe and indaunger our state, attempted the like inuectiues: I therefore thought it not amisse, both for the playner manifestation of the right of that title, which I haue heard many desire to be discussed further than any yet hath done, (although I meddle not here with titles any farther than defensiuely for womens right of gouernment, & to iustifie against all slanders the right of our Princes title) & for euery mans fuller satisfaction in these questions vpon these foresaid occasions, to be somewhat the larger, though withal (craving pardon, I confesse) to be somewhat also the more tedious in this long processe hereby. But tedious or not, the more pains was mine, and they that haue lust and leasure to reade it, may, or may not, at their owne liking) I regarding chiefly the satisfying of the curious in these daies, at least the staying of the simple from this curiosnesse, am diuened my selfe to be rather ouer curious, than ouer negligent in stubbering ouer a slight & slender answer. Of which matter also (saith Danzus proceeding on the pones of his foresayd question in his treatie on 1. This argument seemeth to tende to the confirmation of that hee spake before, that in Spaine, England, Scotland, and diuerse other regions, it was a right and honest matter, for a woman to haue the chiefe gouernment ouer men. But Danzus dooth it so colddie, and brings out onelie here these foure examples of Heathen women, and those not of the choicest neither, which among the Heathen women hee might haue founde: that hee rather seemeth in so slender defending it, to oppugne it. But, let vs take the view of these his examples that hee alleadgeth. And first, for Semiramis person wee will not stand in plea, she being an Ethnike, might be easier (as in the end she is recorded to haue done) degenerate into great vices, yet for a greate while, both in the noneage of her sonne, and afterwarde also in respect of worldly pollicie, power, and magnificence, she

But I passe from her the lighter, because I had rather consider better Danaus his other example of Candace. Who though she were also an Heathen Princeesse, notwithstanding her name at least, is registered in the holie Scripture, that this Candace was the Queene of Ethiopia, who not onelie reigning in her owne right and title, and not of her husband, had the chiefe gouernment of a great monarchie in that Countrie: but that also diuerse other Queenes there had the like soueraigntie; and that it was an vsuall order. Caluine noteth thus thereon.

Caluine on
Act. 8. 27.

The name (sayth Caluine) of Candaces, was not the name of one Queene onelie, but as the name of Caesar was common to the Romane Emperours: so the Ethiopians, as Plinie testifieth, called their Queenes Candaces. This also maketh to the purpose, that the Hystoriographers affirme, that it was a noble and a wealthie kingdome. Because wee may the better gather by the largenesse and might thereof, howe honourable the condition and dignitie of the Eunuch was. Meroe was the head and chiefe seate. The prophane writers accorde heerein vnto the testimonie of Saint Luke, who dooth reporte that Women were wont there to raigne.

Thus sayth Caluine in his Commentarie vpon the Acts. 8. verse. 27.
and because he nameth Plinie, it shall not be amisse to set downe Plinies owne wordes, who speaking of Meroe, libro. 6. Naturalis Historie, cap. 29

Vadianus writeth thus. The most auncientest Citie in Meroe is Saba, which afterwarde the king Cambises in the memorie of his sister, named Meroe, as Iosephus testifieth in his seconde booke of Antiquities, as I suppose, imitating Strabo. But Plinie also mencioneth therein the Towne of Meroes, being seauentie miles distraunte from the entrie of the Iland, which was holden for the seate royall of Ethiopia. This is Saba that seate of the queene of the South (for Iosephus telleth, that shee gouerned both Ethiopia and Egypt, of whome wee reade in the tenth Chapter of the thirde Booke of the Kinges) . That shee beeing stirred vp with the fame of Salomon, came with a mightie troupe, and with more than princelike giftes into Palestine. Shee is also commended of Christ, Matthew 12. and Luke 11. for that shee came to Salomon for the loue of wisdome, euen from the farthest coastes: when as the Pharisees would not heare him, admonishing them to their faces, and by a diuine power witnessing himselfe to be the sonne of God. But wee must note, that the people of Meroe which were wont to be subiect vnto women, in the age that followed, called their Queenes Candaces, by a name as common to them, as wee haue foreshewed that the name of Pharaos and Ptolomeus was vnto the Kings of Egypt. Of which matter also wee vnderstand that the Eunuch mencioned of Luke, Acts. 8. (Whom Philip baptized, beeing taught out of the lesson read in Esaie) was one of the Court of the Queene Candace. Besides that, wee are admonished, by the deliuerie of Luke, that the reading of the Scripture became familiar and vsuall to that nation, euen from the verie age of Candace, neither that they vsed for anie other cause, yeerelie to visite Ierusalem, as a place renowned for religion, how distant so euer it were in iourney. Caius Plinius writeth, that Publius Petronius, one of the order of Knighthood, beeing liefetenant of Egypt in the time of Augustus, pierced into Ethiopia with an armie, that the Queene Candace won the victorie, which Strabo writeth, was a woman that had but one eie, but in prudence and equitie of minde comparable vnto great men. I knowe not whether that were Candace the Eunuches mistresse, which Luke mencioneth, or it were another. The verie account of the yeeres, & of the exploits atchieued doo almost admonish vs, that it was another. Neither is it anie doubt, but that the Queenes of Ethiopia were long after called by that name. And here Vadianus reciteth that which we haue already alledged out of Plinie.

As for their religion, I haue authours not vnworthie to bee beleueed, which affirme that Nation to confesse Christ. Neither that they they differ from our orders in anie other thing than in ceremonies, that is to wit, a verie small matter. This also Vadian a reuerend Protestant writeth of this Quene, and other her ancestors and successors, called al by the name of Candaces.

Now although I doe not yet so thoroughlie assent vnto Vadianus, that the Quene of Sabæa, and the Quene of Ethiopia, were all of one kingdom: but rather assent to Peter Martyr, that the Quene which came to Salomon was the Quene of Sabæa in Arabia, from whence such aromaticall bzugs are bzought, and not from Ethiopia: yet not withstanding that there was also such another notable gouernment of women in Ethiopia, and so approued by such both autentike witnesses, as Iosephus, Plinie, and Strabo were, and allowed by such notable Protestants, as were Caluine and Vadianus: it is no small confirmation of womens regiment.

But what stand we vpon men, when we see the approbation of Scriptures? For, had it bene an dishonest matter and vnnaturall, for man being in his seze the superiour, to haue obeyed as superiour to him, in the person of her dignitie, a womans supream government: can we conceiue by any reason, that Philip hauing informed the Eunuch in the faith of Christ, wold not also haue admonished him of so necessarie a point, for the direction of his conuersation? Philip therefore not speaking anie thing at all against it, and namely Luke the Euangelist, by the inditement of the holy Ghost, consecrating the same to a perpetual record, that such a Quene (had there bin no moze but she alone) was there the gouernour, and her such worthie nobles vnder her regiment, as this Eunuch was: how can we chuse but conclude herevpon, that the holie Ghost improueth not the state of a womans supream government, but that it maye (if there be no other impediment, than her seze) accord together well inough with the sincere profession of the Gospell?

Darius next ensample is, of Cleopatra of the Egyptians, vnder Augustus. Cleopatra was indeede in the time of Octavius, for he vanquished her louer Antonius, and she wold at the first haue allured him likewise, as she had done befoze his adoptiue father Iulius Cæsar. But seeing he minded that she should haue ben vnder his subiection, as a captiue: she wilfully made a waite her selfe, that she might not be vnder his authoritie, all which was done befoze he was surnamed Augustus. She was Quene of Egypt at the first, wyltillie raigning with her brother Ptolomie, whome when hee wold haue deposed from participation in the kingdom, she fled to Iulius Cæsar. Who reconciling her vnto her brother, whē after ward her brother was bzowned, she raigned alone, vntill she ioyned her selfe vnto Anthonius. Who being overcome by Octavius, Anthonie & shee destroying themselves, that kingdom became prouinciall (as many other did) vnto the Romanes. But how dissoluitelie so euer shee liued, her state while shee was Queene was lawfull. Neither was this Cleopatra the onlie Queene that governed Egypt: there was another Cleopatra, grandmother to this, which also was the Queene & chiefe gouernour of Aegypt, besides the widowe of Ptolomeus Philometor. Besides another Cleopatra Silene, the Queene of Syria, euē at that time when Alexander raigned in Iudea. Yea, the raigne of a woman in Aegypt was so auncient, that the Chronicles report, that Rhea the mother of Osiris the great, raigned in Aegypt. And Isis her daughter after her called Iuno of Aegypt, (Eusebius calleth her Iō) on whose monument, as Diodorus Siculus testifieth, was ingrauen this Epitaph: I am Isis the Queene of Aegypt, instructed by Mercurie. Those things that I in my lawes haue decreed, let none violate. And as it was in Aethiopia and Aegypt, which are two principall partes of Aphrica: so in Lybia, Berosus sheweth, how Minerua the daughter vnto Iupiter of Ly-bia, the sonne of Ammonius, taught the discipline and lawes of governing an armie, and after went to Greece, where she builded Athens, and there raigned. And with these Palladian women (saith Functius, Tab. 16.) Hiarbas in Lybia making warre, was of them vanquished, and submitted his kingdome to their power. Of Dido in Aphrica, we haue heard Vadian-PANANUS.

Zenobia.

Asert to Cleopatra Danzus citeth Zenobia vnder the Emperour Adrian, a most valiant woman, vnto the gouernment of which Zenobia, obcied also many Christian Churches.

I wonder that Danzus saith, Zenobia liued vnder Adrian, or in the time of his raigne, who raigned and died (if she were sortie yeres olde, when she was banquished by Aurelianus) at the least one hundred yeres ere shee was bozne, a greate many famous Emperours rainging betwene their times. This Zenobia was indeede (as Danzus calleth her) a most valiant woman, and is highly commended. Though her wearing armour, and the suspition of her husbandes death, were no small blemishes to her gouernment. But for this point, of the lawfulness of a womans gouernment: Danzus owne testimonie, is (in my fancie) a great both praise and profe, that not onelie the Heathen, but many Christian Churches did obey her. For had the gouernment of a woman, or the obedience thereunto of men, bene monstrous, vnnaturall, or anie whit against the faith and life of Christia-nitie: though some might for feare and infirmitie haue bene enforced, yet would not many, and those true Christian Churches, haue obciēd such a state. Which obedience in them, argueth their good affections in this point, and that neither quarelling at the vices in their persons, nor at the infirmitie of their sexes, but to obey them as the higher powers, & that their power is of God, is an obedience to be yeldd, euē for conscience: & as this was praise worthe in them, & a good example to all other Christian Churches: so not a little it recommendeth her, that being an Heathen woman & in

The Christian Churches

the government of Zenobia.

In those daies, when the most renowned Princes were persecutors, the quietly governed many Christian Churches, and they Christian like did obey her. These are the examples that Danæus citeth of womens chiefe government among the Heathen.

But least we should thinke there were so few examples, as onely foure, for all the world to gaze on such rare monsters, as Caluine & Cœnalis vnererently tearme them: before we descend to the people of Gods Church, to the Monarchie of Rome, and to the states in Christendome, let vs yet see a few mo, to beare these princely dames companie. And even at the time of Zenobia, with whom Danæus leaueth: Cœlius telleth of another famous woman gouernour at Coleine named Victorina, which with Tetricus noblie defended the Gaules and the Spaniards, from the inuasions and spoiles of the Barbarians. Thomiris the Queene of Massagethia, that vanquished the mightie Monarch Cyrus, in defence of her Country, was such a gouernour. Zarina Queene of the Sachans, to whom the Parthians (for the same of her valour and iustice) revolted from the Medians, was also such a notable gouernour. Cratesipolis likewise governed the Sicionians. Such an other was Artemisia, the Queene of Halicarnassus, that to her power helped Xerxes against the Grecians, & built that famous Mausoleū, her husbands tombe, one of the 7. wonders of the world. Pirhodoris the queene of the Tiberians, of the Chaldeans, of Cholchis, of Pharnacia, and of Trapezond, did noblie gouerne a mightie Empire. Tania the queene of Dardania. Helen the queene of Adiabene & of the Chosroenians, which released the Iewes with coine, in the dearth mencioned, A. C. 11. Neither needs we be curious to inquire after such sojain Quēnes, y here at home had not our own countrie barren of such worthy women gouernours, of whome Tacitus writeth in vita Agricola. Britannii sexum in imperij non discernunt. The Britains make no difference of the sexe in their Empires. Cordilla the daughter of Leire, succeeded her father in the kingdome. Mercia y wife of Guinthelinus did so prudently gouerne in the administratiō of the kingdome with her husband, that she made many wise & politike lawes, which long after were in high reputation among the Britons & of her name were denominated, The Mercian lawes. In like manner Bundwica ruled this Realme, and maintained warres against the Romanes, in defence of her countries libertie.

Now although that these Heroines, & a great number mo. whome I refer to their diligence that list to collect the, were in religion to Godward al Pagans, and therefore their government (in many actions) not so commendable, & in some viciōs, yea, beyond the bounds of the sexe feminine: yet hindereth not this, but y their governmēt & authority (if they vsurped it not, no; abused the same) might not withstanding be good & lawfull in the. But Danæus setting the aside, turns to the governmēt of Gods people, & saith.

Debora.

iudge.

In saying, we haue no such kind of thing in Gods people, whether we looke on the kingdome of the Iewes or of the Israelites. Danzus doth too straightlie abridge the examples of womens gouernment ouer Gods people, to limit the same onelie to the times and stories of the Kings. For they were Gods people as well befoze and after, as then, even vntil they were cut off, and the Gentiles ingrafted in their place. And gouernment was as necessarie for them, & they had gouernours also called Iudges, for the greatest part of that time: and for the most part of those their gouernors, till toward the end of that their policie, they were better gouernors farre than many of their Kings were. So that, if Danzus would haue thoroughly looked vpon their whole estate, so long as they remained Gods people: hee should forthwith haue beholden Debora such a gouernor, in maner as that state was ordained vnder God & ouer his people, though not such hereditarie Monarkes to raigne ouer them, as the Gentiles round about them had, (so) that was the state of the gouernment that the people desired. 1. Sam. 8) yet was she vnder God, the chiefe and supream Magistrate, & so is called their Iudge, as were the other Iudges that were men. which sufficientlie answereth to our purpose. For, if a woman may be a Iudge, & sit in iudgement, & administer iustice, & be vnder God the chiefe in those iudicial actions, which are the chiefe points of a Monarks office: What the letteth but that a womā also may be a Queene or Monark? And by so much moze reason, as a Monark, King or Queene, are not so necessarie bound to execute in their owne persons by themselves, all those iudiciall actions, that a Iudge is bound to do.

But now, set aside a while this example of Debora, although there had ben in that estate, while the kingdomes of the Iewes and the Israelites did continue, not one Queene that had the chiefe gouernment, or any publike administration of the cōmon weale ouer the people of God: Wiers this a good consequence, that for defect of such an exāple, either be or any may conclude a rule thereon, that therefore it was not lawfull for a woman, at any time al that while, to haue had any chiefe or publike gouernment of Gods people? Or rather, Why might we not better holde our selues contented with this reason? That there was no woman gouernor all that while, because, that either God so prouided (as in the kingdome of the Iewes) there wanted wanted neuer an heire male all that space, and therefore there was no occasion of the womans supream government, which is no bebarre to their right therunto, if that the issue male had failed. ¶ els. that god rooted cleane out diuerse of their kings whole posteritie, male and female, & raised by others, as he did in the kingdome of the Israelites, so destroying the house of Ieroboam by Baasa, that he left none aliu. 1. Reg. 15. ver. 29. And this punishment of rooting out his house, God also threatned to Baasa, 1. Reg. 16 ver. 3. & 4. and performed it, by Zimri, ver. 11. & 12. and the like hee did to the house of Omri, that slew Zimri by the hand of Iehu, destroying Ioram & his mother Iesabel, & all the issue of Ahab, saue onelie this wicked Athalia, whom Iehoram Iehosaphats sonne, the king of Iuda had married. ¶ Yea, not onelie the issue of diuerse kings of Israel were thus destroyed for their wickednesse: but also the kings of Iuda were slaine partlie by Iehu, 2. Reg. 10. ver. 13. who after ward also slue Ochozias: and partlie by the Philistines and Arabians, 2. Chron. 21. verse 16. and 17. and Chap. 23. verse. 1. but chieflie and most vnnaturallie, all that remained, by this bloudie tyger Athalia, saue that Ioas Ochosias sonne, an infant, one yeere olde, was hidden by his aunt Iosaba, the wife of Ioiada, the high Priest. So that, there was none of them which was then known to remaine aliu, excepte this Iosaba the high Priests wife, and sister to Ochozias, to whome in that line the inheritance of the crowne could immediatlie deuolue. Which Iosaba being not capable therof, because of hir mariage with the high priest, which though it were lawfull, yet, sith these offices of the Prince and of the priest were diuided: she lost therefore by her mariage, had shee bene by nature the neerest, yea, the onely heire, her title of inheritance to the kingdome. So that, if there had remained anie male or female, which female had been known, and had not ben married to another Tribe or familie: all Athalias crueltie had not serued her turne, but the partie male or female had bene straight waies inheritour to the kingdome. ¶ For, Athalia her selfe had thereto no right in the world at all, but was (as Danæus saith) a meere usurper, besides her vnnaturall tyrannie, in murdering her owne sonnes childzen, to establish vnto her self the kingdome. Vnto the which, although she had no title, she being not onelie of another Tribe, but extract from another kingdome, the daughter of Iesabel, which was daughter to the king of Sidon: yet notwithstanding hauing ben before both the Queene and the Queene mother, and in both estates, hauing also bothe the chiefest swaie, as well in the impotencie of her husbands Iehoram, who late sick a long while, and euen rotted about the ground by Gods iust punishment of him, 2. Chron. 21. verse. 15. 18. & 19. and in her sonnes daies also, hauing bothe all the stroke, as appeareth, 2. Chron. 23. verse. 3. & 4. (the king following her and her kindreds counsell:) shee hauing thus continued all the government at her own wicked & idolatrous dispositib, it was the easier both for her to make awaile all the right heires, and to establish her selfe in the kingdome.

Now although this especiallie proue that shee had no right: yet withall this proues the stronger, that a woman that had right, had not bene cleane cut off, sith she that had so little, and vsed it so ill, was permitted thereunto. For if it had bene so vtterlie against the law, that by no manner of meanes it had bene lawfull for anie woman, had o; god, not heire, o; heire, to haue gouerned at all: then had shee sought the onelis waile to haue her selfe presentlie cleane put downe, and to be reduced into a priuate state, by the introduction of another line. And then the line of Nathan had entered, as some also following Philo affirme it did, & that this Ioas was of Nathans line, & that she had cleane destroyed (saue Iosaba) all the line of Salomon. But, because the gouernment of a woman was a thing, that long befoze the people were well acquainted withall, as lawfull & vsuall, yea, in some respect though there were kings liuing, and of full age and strength, & good Kings too, as appeareth, 1. Reg. 15. 13. When Asa put downe his grandmother Maachah from her estate, because she had made an Idoll in a groue.

Womens gouernment euen vnder kings among the Iewes.

Wherevpon (saith Peter Martyr) for the committing of this wickednes he abrogated from his grandmother her principalitie. For the mothers of kings were wont to bee of great authoritie in the common weale. Which though it proue not, that women had the soueraigntie, when there were Kings able to sustaine the same, yet argueth it, that comunilie they were not without some authoritie euen of publike gouernment in the common weale ouer Gods people. Which authoritie, Asa (no doubt) would haue let his grandmother to haue still inioyed, but that (as Peter Martyr sayth) the good Asa was afraid, least if anie power should appertaine vnto his grandmother, detestable Idolatrie should bee fostered. Which late example of the grandmothers deposition for Idolatrie, Athalia peraduenture setting befoze her eyes, moze than either the feare of God or man, o; than anie naturall o; womanlie affection, being blinded with Idolatrie, and kindled with ambition, & extraught from the bloudie race of Iesabel, and perhaps desiring as great a slaughter of the roiall bloud of Iuda, as Iehu had made of the bloud of her father Achab: she brake forth into this cruell massacre, and vsurpation of the kingdome, thinking that now none remained, that coulde, o; durst make neuer title than she therevnto.

The lawe of God.
Deut. 17.

Athalia therefore (as Peter Martyr well concludeth) got the kindome the kingdome by tyrannicall violence, which was not lawfull, sith, that she was a stranger, and drew her mothers kindred from the Tyrians and Sidonians, except peraduenture she would pretend inheritance & succession from her sonne Ochozias which was slaine. But in the kingdome of Israel such right had no place. For in Deu. 17. it is commanded, that the king shuld not be chosen out of those that were strangers, but out of the number of their brethre. And in Iuda the familie of Dauid was appointed, which perpetually should haue such succession. The reason of which late was both for the preservation of Gods true religion, & also for the establishing of Gods promise, prophesied by Iacob. Gen. 49. ver. 10. & made vnto Dauid his seed. 1. Chron. 17. v. 14. prefiguring directly leading vnto Iesus Christ. So that the Jewes were bound vnto the stocke of Dauid, & that in Salomon. And therefore I thinke not, & loas which here was saued came of Nathan. For although Nathan were Dauids sonne, and so Salomons brother, as appeareth, 1. Chro. 3. v. 5. yet I take it not (as Tremelius sayes his table) that Nathan came of Bethsabee. For where Tremelius table puts Salomons first, & Nathan next, & so Shobab & Shimea: it is a manifest inuersion of the text, which is thus; And these former were borne vnto him in Ierusalem, Shimea and Shobab, & Nathan, & Salomon of Bathshebaha the daughter of Ammiel. And the like order also is set down, 1. Re. 5. v. 14. in which word is no necessitie, that the naming here of her after them, importeth, she was mother to them all foure: but, that the other were named without mention at all of their mothers, as well as all these his other sonnes, in the three lines following are also named without mentioning of their mothers. Onely when he came to the naming of Salomon, among the childre that Dauid had in Ierusalem, as he mentioned the names of the mothers to the sonnes, which he had in Hebron, so he maketh mention of Salomons mother, as Mathew also both emphatically, & to greater force of signification, because of Gods especiall promise vnto Salomon. And Salomon was the next sonne to that, which was begotten in adulterie, as appeareth 1. Reg. 12. v. 24. and as for the note of the Geneva Bible vpon 1. Chro. 3. v. 5. to salue the matter, it makes the matter far worse, in saying: Onely Salomon was Dauids natural sonne, the other were Vriahs, whom Dauid made his by adoption. For, the text is not onely cleane contrarie, plainly telling how they were his sonnes, borne vnto him in Ierusalem, not adopted vnto him, but borne vnto him. And the verie same wordes the holie Ghost vseth also. 1. Reg. 5. v. 14. And if it were not so that hee had bene one of Dauids naturall sonnes indeede, except we helpe the matter better, by some marriage of the mothers line from Salomon: or from Dauid: all the pedigree mentioned by St. Luke; chap. 3. moouing vnto Dauid by Nathan, & also the holie Ghosts promise to Dauid of Salomon & his seed, is cleane defeated. But as the text is manifest that Nathan was Dauids natural son, though his mothers name be not expressed: so might he come into this line well enough by marriage of the daughter & heire of some of those, that after the kingdome was lost, haue their name so changed in that pedigree, that we cannot certainly tel in whom that line of Nathan did begin. For, that it began in Ioas, and that he was not the natural sonne of Ochozias, as diuerse imagine, vpon this occasion of this slaughter.

I yeld not thereto, for diuerse reasons following, although Flacius Illiricus saith in his Glosse on Matthew : Iora begat not Ozias, but Ochozias who beeing slaine without children, although Athalia attempted to destroye the whole stocke royall : yet was Ioas saued of Ioiada, beeing a childe comming of Nathan. For, Dauid hee ordained that the posteritie of Salomon beeing extinguished, the issue of Nathan shoulde succede, and to that purpose (as witnesseth Philo) Nathan was called Achisar, that is, my brother the Prince: so that, plainelie hee was not a priuate person, sith Salomon called him so, for the ordinaunce of Dauid. Ioram therefore begate Ochozias, who beeing slaine, and the interraigne of Athalia beeing ouerpassed : Ioas of the stocke of Nathan did succede, who begate Amazias, and he Ozias. This Ioram therefore begate Ozias, to wit, because this was his heire, raigning in the fourth place at length after him. And so was both he and his ancestors, as it were the adoptiue sonnes of Salomon and of his posteritie. But Matthew dooth therefore proceede by Salomon and other kings, not so much by the naturall, as by the legall and adoptiue succession : that both hee might touch Salomon, which was the type of Christ, and that hee might shew him to bee their successour, and the kingdome of Israel to bee due vnto him. Thus saith Illiricus, and although diuerse others (by reason of this slaughter of Salomons issue) are also of the same opinion : yet had I rather holde with Chytraus, who in his Chronologic saith on this wise : That this Ioas was the sonne of Ochozias, nor that the stocke of Salomon ended in Ochozias, six, yea seuen clere testimonies of the Scripture do declare, the 4. Kings. 11. 2. 4. and 12, the 4. Kings. 13. 11. Chron. 3. 11. (2. Chron. 23. ver. 11. and the 23. verse. 3. 11, which worthily ought among vs to be of more value, than either the opinion of Philo, or of Annins, that resteth on no foundation of the Scripture. Yea indeed, it hath neither necessitie nor probabilitie. Besides that the text is plaine. 1. Chron. 3. verse, 11. Whose sonne was Ioram, and his sonne was Ahaziah, and Ioas was his sonne : and 2. Kings. 11. 1. 3. Then Athalia the mother of Ahaziah when shee sawe her sonne was dead, she arose and destroyed all the kings seede, that is, the children of her sonne, were they male or female, had he any Daughters besides her that is mencioned in the wordes following. But Iehosaba the daughter of king Ioram, and sister to Ahaziah, tooke Ioas the sonne of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the Kings sonnes that shoulde bee slaine, both him and his nurse, keeping them in a bedde chamber, and they hidde him from Athaliah, so that he was not slaine.

By which wordes it is euident, that hee was one of the verie naturall sonnes of Ahaziah. And not as Flacius & other saie, his legall sonne descended from Nathan. For else, if we should vnderstand the worde Sonne in so large a sense, as to fetch it up from the descent of Nathan, Salomons brother, at the posteritie of Roboam, Abia, Asa, Iosaphat, and Ioram, besides the seed of Ahazias coming betwixt: a farre greater number should be included in the name of Ahazias sonnes, than either it is likely that Ahazias maintained, or accounted as his sonnes, many of them older than himselfe: then Achalia murdered, or so much perhappes as dreamed on, that they after so many descents had any title, or would make claime vnto the kingdome.

Now although Achalia her selfe had no better title, and that there was yet suruiuing an heire male to Ahazias, that by this piousness of GOD, escaped both her furie and her knowledge, to whom the crowne was due, and whom Iehoiada shewed to all his confederates, not in the name of a new line from Nathan, but as Ahazias owne sonne, and in that title hee was brought forth in the 7. yere after hee had bene hidden in the Temple, and solemnly made King, and Achalia for her usurpation, and vniustfull murder, remoued and executed: yet notwithstanding, for all that time the sort is plaine. 2. Chron. 22. verse. 22. that Achalia reigned six yeeres. And therefore as we saie of King Richard the third with vs, though he for his parte was but an usurper, and came to his usurpation also, by vniustfull murder of the right heires, and his aduersitie kinne: neuertheless he is reckoned among the number of the Kings that haue reigned in this Realme: so is Achalia reckoned as an absolute Queene among the Kings, and the yeeres of her raigne, euen by the holie Ghost are numbered. And therefore, this is not so well sayd (as I thinke) of Danus, that it was no kingdome nor lawfull power, to which the people willingly assented, as it afterward appeared: For a kingdome still it was the which shee helde, and the power also was lawfull, though she vniustly usurped, & with furious crueltie did misuse the same.

Neither doth the willing or dissembled assent of the people, or their cloaking, or manifesting the same in the ant. either pious or impious the substance of a lawfull power or kingdome, but quelle betwixt either an euill Prince, or a wicked, mutable, & vniustfull people. But to make the State depend vpon their not willing assent, is a most perillous point. Neither is it so fitting to the subject, to call the Princes title into question, being inuested and possessed in the kingdome. For, Achalia came not in ill by the Jewes kingdome: but the Romans came afterwarde as ill both to the same, and to many other kingdomes in the worlde. And yet would not Saint Paule haue the people of God, either to resist them, or to call they right and interest into question. And therefore dooth Caluine here well collect vpon the wordes of Paule Let euerie soule bee subject to the higher, for there is no power but of God. And verilie (saith he on this worde Higher powers) the Apostle seemeth to mee in this worde, that he wold haue haue taken awaile the frivulous curiositie of men, which oftentimes are wont to inquire, by what right they that gouerne the state haue gotten their power. For to vs it ought to bee enough, that they doo gouerne.

If we now inquire farther, how then is Ioiadas disposing of Athalia, and causing her also to be slaine justifiably? Peter Martyr debaterh this at large in 2. Par. 10. fol. 179. b. But peradventure (saith he) some man will reprehend this indeauour of Ioiada, first that he did not well nor orderlie, in putting downe that person that was already in the magistracie, verilie it is lawfull to good men, to attempt and indeauour to their power, that in the common weale the state of things present should not bee altered; But when it is altered, and that anie already possesseth the state, and hath entered into the office of the magistracie, it is not lawfull to thrust him out of it. To this objection he answereth, saying: It is not indeede the dutie of a priuate man, to thrust out of place a Magistrate, or a Prince already ordained, that possesseth the state. But wee denie that Ioiada was a priuate person, sith that in the common weale hee had the next place to the king, and when as he iudged not onely the sacred, but also the ciuile affaires, and now and then also dispatched them, and was the keeper of the lawes. And in Deuteronomie is the lawe contained, concerning the institution of the king. Which Lawe was now violated by Athalia, & the promises made to David and his posterity, were by Athalia stopped. And moreouer besides this, she was not onelie a stranger, but an idolater, and that incurable: therefore she deserved by the gouernors and nobles of the kingdome to be deposed.

By which answer, withall it appeareth, that he findeth not anie faulte that she was a woman, but that shee was not of the posteritie of David, and therefore by the foresayde decrees of God, shee was not capable of that kingdome, so that, had shee bene the nextest in the posteritie, and had not stained her selfe with such horrible murder, and open Idolatrie, as shee did, shee ought not for anie reason of her sexe, by him, or all, or anie neuer to be able in that kingdome, to haue bene deposed.

But now the right and title lineallie descending to her nephew, to wit, her sonnes sonne, which by Ioiada had bene harboured in the Temple, unwitting to this vnnaturall Queene mother, and cruell grandame: it was Ioiada his dutie not onelie to giue notice of the true heire, but to ioyne with all the Cleargie the Priests, and the people that hee coule, to inthronise the King, for so he is also called for his right, before he was seased in his kingdome, verse 7. 8. and 11. and to dispossesse this usurper, so that euen by this example of Athalia, being better considered, we see that this supreme gouernment vnder God, and ouer Gods people, was not prohibited to a woman, if by right of inheritance it fel vnto her, & if she used it well, well, although there were no occasion of the like example among Jewes, at the time of the estate of their Kings. God furnishing the King with heirs male to succede their parents in that kingdom.

And as we now see this, in the tract of Davids line, from Salomon till after that estate of the Kings, it loyned with the race of Nathan. So even so Salomon himself in whom this issue of the Kings began, and was of them all the most magnificent, let us see likewise what was his opinion of this matter. For as we read, 1. Reg. 10. verse. 1. & 2. The Queen of Saba (or Saba) hearing of the fame of Salomon, in the name of the Lord came to trie him in hard questions. We have heard already the judgement of Vadianus out of Iosephus, concerning this Queene, that shee was the Queene of Saba in Ethiopia, and that the Queenes there had continually the supreme government, as we have seen both Plinie and Straboes testimonies of Candace.

The Queen of Saba.

But (as I said before) I take Peter Martyr to be the truer, that shee was rather the Queene of the Sabians, a people of the happie Araby. And when as (sayth he) the Countrey beeing so happie, and blessed with much riches, maketh the inhabitants daintie: this woman is to be commended, which casting daintinesse aside, tooke vpon her such a farre peregrination. Shee was of the stocke of Chanaan, the sonne of Cham. For Saboth (as is contained in the tenth Chapter of Genesis) was the sonne of Chus, and Chus the sonne of Canaan. We are also taught in this historie, that there is no accepting of persons with God; but that of euery people and nation he hath his elected. Christ calleth her the Queene of the South, because that coast is Southward, if it bee compared with the Citie of Ierusalem. And he saith, that shee came to Salomon from the endes of the North. Wherevpon I beleue the rather, that shee came out of Araby the happie, than out of the Iland Meroe. Neither happened this without God, for verily it was he that stirred vp this Queene, with the fame of Salomons wisdom. Yea, in a manner, hee drew her thither, to the end that it might bee fulfilled which was spoken of before: all nations shall know thy great name, &c.

Pet. Mart. in 1. Reg. 10. fol. 79.

This Queen one of the elected.

And againe, Let vs in the meane time ponder this speech, wherewith it is sayde, In the name of the Lord, and in the Hebrew יהוה. For thereby is first declared, that this Queene did acknowledge the true God: And also (as Kimhi saith) that the wisdom of Salomon was not spread forth but in this name, that the Lorde had inspired the same vnto him, &c.

This Queen did acknowledge the true God.

By this sentence also may bee declared, that although Salomon was adorned with an heauenlie spirit in all kinde of learning and wisdom: notwithstanding this thing most of all inflamed the Queene, that he

he was rightly instructed with diuine matters, such (I saie) as pertayned to the name of god. As thogh peculiarly she sought that wisdome, the which is ioyned together with religio. And this thing is very honorable, to trauaile for wisdome and godlynesse sake. Plato, Pythagoras, and Apollonius Tiansus, are commended, for that they wandered through the world to attaine wisdome. Verilie great studiousnesse of excellent learnings were in them, and therefore woulde they both see and heare also the men that excelled in erudition and vertue. Other besides these haue bene, and are at this daie not a few, that of curiositie, delightes, and pleasures are stirred vp to trauaile, and drawe themselves thether, where they liue more delicatlie and with more pleasure, and where they hope they shall see certaine new and strange things, but these are not worthie to bee praised, but rather to be discommended. As for the fact of this woman, may be numbred among the famous examples, wherewith wee may bee inkindled, to the studies of godlinesse and true doctrine. And although verie many came to Salomon, yet doth the sacred history make mencion, especially of this woman, and that verie exquisitelie, because shee among other obtayneth the principall place. For, shee was a Woman, whome the weaknesse of her sexe did easilie withdrawe. Shee was also a Queene, wealthie, and abounding in delightes. Whereunto besides, did come also the farre distaunce of the iourney: nenerthelesse shee staying not for these things, went forth to Salomon.

But if wee saie: was it lawfull for her to forsake the Region committed to her administration, that shee might enquire after the learning and wisdome of Salomon, yea, although it were for religion? To this maye be sayde, that it might be, shee lefte eyther her husbände, or her sonne, or some other, which in her place might haue gouerned the Kingdome.

Moreouer, shee tooke the iourney, that she might get not onelie to her selfe, but also to her people sounde religion and sincere godlynesse: shee therefore profited more her people in traunayling abroad, than in sitting quiet at home. To the which yee maye adde, that in this folded vp secrete, was signified the calling of the Gentiles, which were to gather themselves to Christ, the true Salomon. Wherevpon Christ himselfe (as is contained in the Gospell) commended this woman, and affirmed, that in time to come shee shall iudge the Hebrues, because shee farre excelled them in faith. And in this place, yea, and by this declaration, the contemners of Gods word are grieuously noted, which dailie more than needes doe bewraie themselves: While in so greate a light of the sacred doctrine, which by the goodnesse of GOD even at this present daie hath shined, they are nothing at all moued. For, often times doe they linger and forslow, euen to arise out of their bed, to heare the sacred sermons. So farre off are they, to suffer themselues to leaue their Country, or their house. They despise the holy Bookes in respect of their delights. The Doctours also and the Preachers they hate worse than a snake: and with their tongues vehemently detest good studies. And if they see any Princes somewhat giuen to learning and to godlinesse, they deride them. Verily this Woman behaued not herself after this manner. And therefore, as Christe hath forespoken it, in the last day he shall iudge them.

She came to tempt Solomon, but not with a pernicious temptation. Yea, rather with a holie and an honest temptation, wherewith shee desired to be instructed of those things whereof she was ignorant. Aenigmata, hard sentences properly are called very obscure allegories, which are rare in vse, the which in dayly speeche doe well-neere alwayes come in vse, which are easie. But in this place, by harde sentences, we vnderstande doubtfull and difficult questions, which mightily occupy the minde, not about light businesse, or euery kinde of matters: but about great and graue pointes, appertaining both to eternall life, and also to the ciuile gouernment. The Hebrue Worde as רמז, which signifieth to sharpen, from whence the Noun being deducted, betokeneth an oration or obscure question. To the exposition whereof, it behooueth to apply the sharpenesse of the witte. It is likely that the Queene had at home Philosophers, Magitians and wise men, which concerning humane and naturall matters, coulde haue easily answered her. But concerning Diuine and supernaturall matters, sihe that in them there is neede of the spirite, and of diuine reuelation: they were not able to satisfie her. VWhereupon shee trauailed her selfe vnto Hierusalem, in the which Citye, GOD had placed not onely the Castle of Wisdom, and pure religion: but also Solomon, of all Kings the moste wise,

Her questions to Solomon about eternall life and ciuil gouernment.

Thus at large writeth Peter Martyr, in the commendation of this noble Queene. Whereby it appeareth, that not onely shee was for worldly estate, a mighty Queene, not vnder her husband in that respect but aboue him, and hee (had shee any) but her deputie vnder her in her absence, albeit shee was inferior to him in the bandes of matrimony, and inferior in cere, to all the men in her Monarchie: but also that for religion, though her people were Idolaters, yet was shee a professour of the onely true and living God, and euen one of Gods elected (if we may aduenture to iudge so farre, on such excellent fruits) and not only a figure of bringing the Gentiles to the knowledge of God: but a verie mirrour and pattern for all Christians, specially Christian Princes, to set before them. And if she be such a spectacle to all Christian Princes, and shall bee also a iudge to a great many of them: mought not shee, or such another as shee, haue bene the Queene of cheefe gouernor also, ouer the people of God: and would she not haue gouerned them farre better, than many of most of their kings did?

And verily, Solomon both no lesse esteeme of this most excellent Lady that came thus vnto him, then the goodnesse of the cause that mooued her did deserue. Did he repell her out of his kingdome as a Monster? For so vnadvisedly Caluine said: all prudent men haue alwayes repudiated (or put back) the gouernment of Women, as it were of a Monster. Did he mislike any whit of her the more, for her supreme Gouernment ouer men? Wee find no such matter. But that hee receiued her with all honour, and heard her speake vnto him whatsoeuer she had in her hart, and Solomon declared vnto her all her questions, not one word was hidden from the king, that he declared not vnto her. And, had hee misliked her estate, that she being but a woman should rule me, should busy her head about such high questions, and meddle with the administration of a common-weale, and be the cheefe gonernor of a kingdome: if he had thought this to bee directly or indirectly against Gods Lawe, or against the Lawe of nature, since she came especially to heare Gods Law, and to confesse about such matters: no doubt he would neuer haue concealed that matter aboue all other, but haue reprobued her, or haue gently perswaded her, at least, (take it how she would) haue truly enformed her, of the vnlawfulness and vndercenry of her calling. Which thing, alth he did it not, & yet neither he nor shee dissembled or flattered the one with the other: I cannot tel what other men wil iuge. quot capita tot sententia, so many heads, so many wittes: surely my dull wit cannot conceiue, but that it is a mighty argument, to confirm the supreme gouernment of a woman.

Neither ground I mine argument so much, on Solomons doings or approbations, but that the holy ghost also hath so farre allowed thereof, that he hath consecrated the same, both to perpetuall memozy, and to profitable example, and therefore cannot this gouernment bee debarred euen from the people of God. Especially, being also approued and recommended to all Christians, by our Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ, Mat. 23. 24. & Luk. 11. 31. in plaine tearmes calling her the Queene of the South, not the monster or vsurper of the South Countries. And here, because our question of womens publike gouernment arose on womens publike speaking: let vs see also, how this most excellent Qu. behaued herself in her publike speaking. For after she had propounded al her questions, & was satisfied in his answers to them: & after she had beholden al his wisdom, & his house that he had builded, & the meat of his table, and the sitting of his seruants, & the order of his ministers, & their apparel, & his drinking vessels, & his burnt offerings, which hee offered in the house of the Lord: she was exceedingly astonished, and said vnto him: It was a true word that I heard in mine owne land, of thy sayings: and of thy wisdom.

How-

Howbeit I beleued not this report till I came, and had seene it with mine eyes. of Sabaa.
But loe, the one halfe was not tolde mee. For thou haste more w^{is}dom and prof-perity, than I haue heard by report. Happy are thy men, happy are these thy ser-uants which stande euery before thee, and heare thy w^{is}doms. Blessed bee the Lord thy God which loueth thee, to set thee on the Throne of Israel. Because the Lord loued Israel for euery, & made thee the king to doe equitie and righte-ousnesse.

These wordes though she spake especially to him, yet as shee spake them publicquely in the audience of his subiectes (so for her wordes import) happy are these thy seruantes that stande before thee and heare thy w^{is}- dome: Do therein shee conteineth notable matter. And being before so pub-like a person, both a king and a Prophet, and before the assembly of his Court, and of her troupe, shee breaketh forth into the function of a greate Prophetesse. The Queen (saith Peter Martyr on these foresayde wordes) being no lesse Godly than prudent, placeth the cheefest good, neyther in power, nor in riches, nor in pleasure, but in the knowledge of God, which shoulde be had in his Worde, and not onely by the contemplation of naturall thinges. The Sonne of God brought forth this selfe same sentence, but somewhat more augmented, and more clearly expounded. Blessed (sayde hee) are they that heare the Worde of God and keepe the same: that is, doe not suffer it easily to fall from them, but expresse it both in their factes and workes. After this, shee referreth all the good thinges of Solomon, vnto God. Which example of her, it becommeth vs also to imitate. For while wee beholde the good workes of Godly men, it behooueth that we glorify our heavenly Father. For it is a vicious thing to stay our selues in the causes inferiour, when wee ought alwayes to ascend to the highest, that is, vnto God the founteine, the heade, and beginning of all good thinges. But (sayth she) God which hath delighted him-selfe in thee, (or which hath loued thee)
 She teacheth, that so many and so great things hapned not to Solomon of his deseruinges and his vertues, it was the meere goodnesse and clemency of God, that had so greatly ennobled Solomon. Shee amplifieth the benefite giuen vnto him of God, that he had gotten a kingdome, and that not of any Nation whatsoever, but of the people of Israel, whome she testifieth that God had loued perpetually. But if ye shall demaund, from whence shee coulde knowe these thinges, that God esteemed the Israelites so much? I answer, that the deliuerance out of Aegypt which consisted of so many and so great wonders, was known almoste to all the southerne, and the Easterne prouinces. VVhich also were not ignorant, that Israel was brought into the possession of the Lande of Chanaan, by the helpe of God.

they knewe also the actes of Dauid prosperouslye atchieued, who (the Lorde beeing his guide) with greate might and many victories, obteyned Syria, euen vnto the riuier Euphrates. At length shee toucheth the ende, wherefore the King was placed of God ouer that people, that is to witte, that he shoulde do iustice and iudgement. That is, he should gouern them with right and equity.

Thus both this notable Quene, not onely set forth the publike praises of God, in the presence of so wise a King: but as it were presume to teach him, at leaste wise, to confirme him, in the most speciall pointes of a Princes supreme Gouernment. And therefore she her selfe, being also taught and confirmed mutually, by the wisdoms of him, was not ignorant of the lawfulnessse of her State, nor how to gouerne her people accordingly.

God had people ouer whome shee
was Queen.

Nowe, although this example doe not yet proue, that there was any Queene the cheefe gouernor ouer Gods people: yet sth (as Peter Martyr sayth) shee tooke this iourney, that shee might get not onely to her selfe, but also to her people sounde religion and sincere Godlinesse: If this her good purpose were not frustrated, but tooke such effect, that many of her subiectes, both of the very great traine that came with her, and saw and hearde the wisdoms of Solomon likewise and of her other subiects at home, to whom she related (no doubt) that she had seene and heard abroad, whereby many are thought to haue beleued as she did. In the onely true and lining God: then may we safely say, though shee were neither Queen of Iuda, nor of Israel, yet was she a Queene ouer Gods people, though not ouer that people of God. And this also being a secrete folded vp, signifying the calling of the Gentiles, which were to gather themselves to Christe the true Solomon: What both the vnfoldings of this secrete infer (to haue the thing signified, answered to the signe) but that those Gentiles that should be conuerted to the true Solomon Iesus Christ, which is the wisdom of God, and Prince of peace & all true glory: should come to him, & become his people as well by the trauell and vnder the gouernment of Queenes, being their supreme gouernors (as this Quene was) as vnder the supreme gouernment of any kings. And that (as Martyr well obserueth) in this respect also, as of Gods elections, ther is no difference of persons before God, so much lesse of sexe, Male or Female, as heere wee see, by the notable example of this Queene.

The lawfulnessse of Womens gouernment ouer Gods
people.

By this example it is plain, that although there were no good Queene like this queene of the Southe, that had the cheefe gouernment ouer Gods people, during that State of their Kingdoms in Iurie and Israel, before the captiuitie: yet sth Solomon one of the best Kingdoms among them, both thus allowe it in other nations, therefore De iure, it had not bene unlawfull among the people of God, if De facto, they had had occasion of Womens lawfull inheriting of that State. Though they had it also de facto in Athalia, where in Iuris de iure it appertained not unto her. And yet in that disturbed state of the Iewes that succeeded their returne out of captivity, we are not destitute of another example of Alexandra, whome Iosephus and other histories doe recorde. True it is, she was not of the right line of David and Solomon, nor of the tribe of Iuda, but of the tribe of Leui, and descended from the Machabees, which not long before had mightily defended the Iewes, and therefore they gave to their posterity this honour of the cheefe government of them. Albeit the Scepter was not yet cleane taken from the tribe of Iuda, in whome the iurisdiction of the Sanhedrin did continue. And although the Pharisees at that time bare the greatest sway, and Alexandra the title and the dignity, insomuch that Iosephus saith, lib. 13. antiq. Iud. cap. 22. The Queen only the royall name, but the Pharisees possessed all the power, &c. Yet, notwithstanding in those dangerous times, all that was done but for a policy, which her husband Alexander taught her on his death bed, for the more assurance of their state, and preservation of their children. Which counsel Alexandra following, she governed very politically. And therefore, of all the Chroniclers that mention her she is reckoned in the number of their lawfull Princes, and nine yeares so reigned ouer Gods people, that she deserved not by Danæus, to be wittingly buried in obliuion.

Danæus his next example is of the Amazones. Which, sth I accord al- Amazones. so, that it was an ill state of government, in murdering, and expelling of men from the whole affaires of the common weale, and from living among them: though I take it not to be altogether fabulous, but that there were in-deede such Women, and had such government: I therefore passe it over without further answer, as I did before, to the like obiection of Cænalis. Notwithstanding, this we may say, that if they had not so misused themselves, but given that honour unto the Man, which by the Lawe of God and nature, is due unto the dignity of his sexe: in the societie of Patrimony, had not violated the mans prerogative. When, if the right of governing those regions had falne to a Woman, I see not why it had not bene as lawfull there, as in Ethiopia, Sabæa, Iurie, or in any other kingdomes aboue specified.

But (saith Danæus) (as though this that hee alleged of the Ama- Danæus, zones, were not to the matter) Let vs returne to the question propounded. Albeit that we read Isai. 3. verse 11. that it is set for a great signe of the curse of God, that children and women shoulde obtaine the government in any Nation: Notwithstanding, that thing is not perpetual.

I graunt that God here threatneth a greater curse, and a miserable state, that hee would bring upon the wicked Iewes, in taking away all their notable men, and giuing them weak and wicked rulers. Bridges. The curse of God in ill gouernors.

As he saith, vers. 1. &c. For Lo, the Lord of hostes will take away from Ierusalem and from Iuda, the stay and the strength, euen all the stay of bread, and all the stay of Water, the strong man, and the man of Warre, the iudge and the prophet, the prudent and the aged, the Captaine of fifty, and the honorable, and the Counseller, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent Man. And I will appoint Children to be their Princes, and Babes shall rule ouer them. And againe, after he had threatned them, vers. 6. &c. That euery one shall take holde of his brother of the house of his Father, and say, thou hast clothing, thou shalt bee our Prince, and let this fall be vnder thy hande: in that day shall hee sweare, saying, I cannot be an helper, for there is no breade in my house nor clothing, therefore make mee no Prince of the people. Doubtlesse Hierusalem is false, and Iuda is false downe, because their tongues and workes are against the Lorde, to prouoke the eys of his glory: &c. Then commeth in this curse, Children are extortioners of my people, and women rule ouer them. O my people, they that leade thee cause thee to cry, and destroy the way of thy pathes. By which it appeareth, that he speaketh here of such a miserable state, that they shoulde be dyinen to seeke for their Princes, & offer the cheefe gouernment to any, (had he right, or had hee not right) that wold helpe them and they shoulde finde none, but onely such, as heere by these speeches he describeth.

And therefore this being a token (or rather the stroke it selfe) of Gods curse for their wickednesse, is very obviously and inongfully alleaged, (cleane besides Gods and the Prophets meaning) in this purposed question of womens supreme gouernment, or of childrens supreme gouernment ouer Gods people. Diuers writers therefore that expound this Prophecy, considering the states, wherein both women & children haue beene giuen of God to be supreme gouernors, not as any token at all of his curse, but of his great fauour and blessing, dare not so literally vnderstand these wordes, but according to the manner of the Scripture, metaphozically. For, where he saith in the wordes here by Danzus cited, vers. 11. the exactors of my people are a childe, or, as the Geneva translates it, Children are extortioners of my people, and sayth, they lead the people and cause them to cry, and that they destroy the way of Gods pathes: sith exaction and extortion importeth violence and oppression, and sith infants cannot lead, but are ledde, nor cause the people to cry, nor destroy Gods paths: How can we vnderstande this of a naturall child (or not rather of a man that useth force? & yet because he guide not by ancient counsel & true wisdom, is for his lack of discretion, called a child. Or, because he is a wanton & effeminate man, called a woman. Paruulos scientia vocat (saith Varablus) he calleth them children in knowledge. Not those that be childre in age (sayth Luther) but children in mind. And here he taketh Women (sayth Musc.) for those that are tender & effeminate, & so doth the Geneva note well interpret it: That, because the wicked people were more addit to their Princes, than to the comandements of God, he sheweth that he wold giue them such princes by whome they should haue no helpe, but that shoulde be manifest tokens of his wrath, because they should bee fooles and effeminate. Children (saith Cal.) vnderstand it not only in age, but in wit & manners, such as are tender and effeminate men, which excel in no vertue, nor can gouern the sword committed to them. He opposed not euery singuler member, the one against the other, for it sufficed to define the manner whereby the common weale easily runs to ruin, to wit, if fooles and vnskilfull men do rule, as thogh they were children, in who is no grauity nor prudence, &c. Furthermore, whomsoever the Lord gouerneth not, nothing remaineth vnto them, but that they be like to children, to wit, destitute of all both counsel and prudence. Moreouer God exerciseth his punishment two waies, because oftentimes while we seem to our selues to haue graue men and skilfull in things, when it comes to the matter they blunder like blind men, & they haue no more prudence then haue childre. For God depriueth them of that notable vertue, that before he had endued them with all, and doth so for them, euen as if had striken them with some thunder. Now and then God proceedeth more slowly, and by little & litle taketh away the men of heroical wits, which were apt for the administration, and transferreth the gouernmentes of matters to them, that can not indeede gouern one childe or one family. When these things happen it is most certain that destruction is not farre.

Esa. 3.

What perphet vnderstandeth by Children &

Women?

Moreouer (saith Musculus) He calleth exactors not them that exacted those things, that were due vnto the Magistrate: but such as wroong fro the people at their pleasure, whatsoeuer they liked, and so pilled them with wicked exactions. With therefore Children coulde not be such exactors: as we cannot so wel vnderstand these wordes of those that are in yeres, children: so neither, of those that are in sexe, women.

But note, be it spoken in the natural sense of very children, and of very women, & those lawful princes: doth not this proue so much the more, that albeit it were also a curse alwaies of God, to haue such Princes (as we shall see anone, euen by Dauides own reuocation, that it is not,) yet, that the principality, euen of them is a lawful state, and that, although in nature it were the better of twayne, (if men coulde alwaies haue their wishe) to haue their Prince rather to bee a Man than a Woman: and to bee a Man of ripe and perfect age, than to be an Infant or a childe: yet notwithstanding, sithe neither infirmittie of sexe, nor of age, debarreth the Lawfulness of the estate, when GOD sendeth (bee it also, but for a punishment) such a Prince: yea, although hee gaue not withall, to the weaker sex of the Woman, any other heroicall and supernaturall gifts, nor to the tender age of the childe, any other industrious and Godly tutors; yet for al that, the people of God ought not resist this ordinance of God in these, their Magistrates, but obey the same for Conscience sake.

Rom. 13.

Which saying of the Apostle to obey higher powers as the ordinance of God for conscience sake, if it take place, when such hypocrites, and tyrants, such wilfull and unskilful rulers, such childish and effeminate persons, & of all the infidels, heavy plagues, curses and scourges both to Gods people, and to all the romaine Monarchie, were the supreme governors; why should it not take place, when the supreme governors are not Women or children in such vicious senses, but onely in nature, without all these vices, and all other infirmities sufficiently provided for and supplied? but if these wordes of God, by the Prophet Esay, are to be understood literally: then did God performe the same vnto them literally. And then it followeth of necessity, that the people of God, had not onely men, but children, no; children onely, but Women also to be their lawfull princes, which is the thing that Danæus befoze denied. If notwe againe, this that was threatned here as a token of a curse, do not debarre the right and lawfulness of their estate: what shall we say then to those, where God of his surpassing might and goodness, so provideth for these infirmities of nature, that he turneth all this dreadfull token of a curse, into the comfortable feeling of a blessing: for, dare Danæus make a perpetual rule of this sentence, that it shall alwayes stande for a token of Gods curse vnto the people, where children or Women are their Princes? No, he dare not.

Danæus.

The curse turned into a blessing.

But streight way correctes his former saying, and sayth: Howbeit that same is not perpetuall, for oftentimes Kinges beeing children also, as for example Solomon and Josias, haue moste holily and moste happily reigned, and the empire of them was enriched of God with all kinde of good thinges. The same may be sayde of certain Women, and of their Empire, whome the Lord hath in marvellous manner blessed, as appeareth out of diuerse histories.

Bridges.

Ha, goe to then, this is another manner of matter. For recompence of our former tokens of cursing and misery, heere are better effectes of happinesse and blessing, in the government, both of Children, and of women neither as a rare, but as an often experience put in practise, and that among the Lords people. But what is this to the lawfulness of these parties government? No is? In dede (as Christe saith, Math. 5. 45) God maketh his Sunne to arise on the euill & on the good, & sendeth reigne on the iust & vniust: & the wicked many times prosper & reigne, in that which the world esteemeth happines. But when as Danæus so placeth it here, & holines goeth befoze, & happinesse commeth after, & when their Empire is enriched of God with all kind of good thinges, & with the spiritual riches of Gods kingdome: if al this may truly be said of childrens gouernment, and

and the same may be sayde also of womens gouvernement: both not this gouvernement. importe, that their government must needs be lawfull: And as for childrens gouvernement, these two here by Danæus alleaged, are notable examples. For God himselfe giuing him his name, appointed Salomon both before his brethren that were his elders, who other wise by nature should haue had the kingdome before him, but that God beyonde all their expectations and aspiring, aduanced him vnto it, when he was but about 17. yeares of age: and did God all this, and was it not lawfull? And as for Iosias, he was but 8. yeares old when he began to reign. And yet was his raigne in that age so acceptable to God: that he was prophesied vpon by name, almost 200. yeare before he was boyne. 1. Reg. 13. ver. 2. And Iosias was yet younger than was Iosias. who was worst in his old yeares, who he ought to haue bene best, and best when hee was young, and is therefore commended to do that, which was good in the sight of the Lorde all his time, while Ioiada the priest did teach him. 2. Reg. 12. ver. 2. Azaria began his raigne at 16. yeares of age. 1. Reg. 15. ver. 2. and is also commended to haue done rightly in the sight of the Lord. Which is understood only of his younger yeares. Manasses was 12. yeares old when he began to raigne. 2. Reg. 21. ver. 1. who though he did euill in the sight of the Lord; yet was his raigne as lawfull as the others.

Now (as Danæus confesseth) that the same may be sayde of some women and of their gouvernement, which is enough to conclude all the matter: (for we desire no more to be granted but euen thus much) and what more can be sayde of the gouvernement of men? For who can iustifie all mens gouvernement, either that they holde the same by right, or rightly administer that they came rightly by? Yea, least we should take this that he sayth, of some women, to be of some such, for whom he might pretend exception of example, as that they had some speciall calling, as Debora: although we haue heard of other also in the scripture, and that in commendation, of whom we can alleage no such speciall calling, but that might well be drawen to an example of our owne times and state, and so to his wordes also importe, that this some may bee sayde, as spoken of some women of this age: when not only he sayth, as appeareth by diuerse histories, as we shall afterwarde (God willing) see, how the state of Chri-stendome is not unfurnished of manie examples: neuertheless, for the more manifest prose hereof, he beginneth with our state in Englande, as an honorable and present testimonie of the same, saying:

The gouernment of women as lawful as the go-uernment of men.

Verily, of the most renowned Queene of England Elizabeth, which now most happily reygneeth, it may be sayde, that the whole compasse of the worlde hath seene nothing at any time, more happie or more to be wished for, than is her reigne.

our selues especially, and other forrain regions not a little, finde the profe and feele the cōfort: the more are we all bounde to glozifie almighty God, and to thinke & speak well of her Ma. gouernmēt, not only to be lawfull: but also most necessarie & expedient for Gods Church. And to pray to God to blesse her Maieſty more & more, and to defend her, and vs by her, to whom he hath giuen (in these troublesome and dangerous dayes) so happie a reigne ouer his people, & a gouernmēt so much to be wished after. And the more are we also bound both to loue & honour her, and to obey her gouernment in her lawes. And this beeing true which Danæus here confesseth: then how vnthankfully, yea, how vntruly doe our Brethren report to the world, that the state of the Church of England, is a disordred, deformed & corrupt estate? As we haue heard their hard speeches, besides other that write a great deale harder. How doe these here agræ with Danæus? If her Maieſtie reigneth most happily, and that in all these foresayd happie thinges: how reigneth she not lawfully? And how vnlawfully then, yea how vntruly doe our Brethren oppose themselves against her so hap-pie reigne? I graunt, they doe it not in such virulent and treacherous manner, as doe the aduersaries of the Gospell, which her Maieſtie defendeth and setteth forth, and wherein chiefly consisteth this her happines: but in an other way-ward and not contented sorte, as maintayning such a disordred, corrupt and deformed state of the gouernement and discipline of Christs Church. As though her reigne suppressed the reigne of Christ, and the sincere aduancing of his kingdome, which in the Lodes prayer we desire. If her Maieſtie did thus: what happinesse were there, or rather what vntruly were there not in her reigne?

But now, when such as worldly are accounted, to be the most learned professours of the Gospell in other Nations, and suche as so hardly can broke womens gouernment, smacking too much of the frenche humoz, as we haue shewed, shall notwithstanding giue this honorable testimony of her Maieſty, and of her reigne: And I hope they do it no more for flatterrie, than they neede for feare, but even for the truth sake it selfe. (for except they would suppress it, they can in conscience say no lesse): shall now her Maieſties owne subiectes and those Protestantes too, that feele the benefite, whereat other reioyce so much, for the hearing thereof, shall not they confesse as much as doth a stranger? What a great ingratitude should this be? Howbeit, Danæus confesseth not so much, but we finde much more, the experience and benefite of this her most happie reigne.
God make vs with like thankfulness to acknowledge it. For certainly, if we shall consider al circumstances, we shal not choise, (at leastwise in our consciēces, though we would not with our mouthes, but confesse as much as doth Danæus, that the whole compasse of the worlde hath seene nothing at any time, that is more happie or more to bee wished for, than is her reigne (or gouernement). Neither the gouernement vnder the ^{shies happie} Quene of Saba, or of Gods people vnder Deborah, neither yet vnder the ^{reigne.} most excellent men. Dauid, Salomon, Afa, Ichosaphat, Iosias, or Ezechias; no, not in Chyristendome vnder Constantine the greate, or the great Charles, though their reignes did in some thynges excell her Maiesties reigne: yet all thynges pondered, especially those kinde of good thynges wherein true happinesse most consisteth: (Dancus spake heere a great word, but we may well vpholde it for a truthe,) that the whole circle of the worlde, sawe nothing at anie time, more happie (or blessed,) and a thing more to bee wished for, (if men might haue their wishes) than is the reigne or gouernement of her Maiestie. The Lorde (I say againe and againe) make vs thankefull to him chiefly, and after him to her, for the same, and vouchsafe to continue and encrease, this her most happy and wished reigne, still among vs, to his further glozie, to our answerable thankfulnessse, and to the refuge, succour and comforte of other kingdomes, where his Church also is dispersed, and yet by the seducinges and oppzessions of Antichriste, haue not attayned to this happinesse and wished state for all their Kinges, that wee in Englande vnder our Queene Elizabeth, his most happy hand-mayde, and our most gracious Soueraigne, haue all the time of her reigne, and yet (God be magnified therefore) doe enioye. And still shall a straunger say these speeches, and our selues burie them in dumbe silence, or if we speake thereof, denie it or depzaue it?

This is much to our shame, & to the great commendation of Dancus: if happily he had staid euen here, & so concluded vpon this question. For what could he or anie haue sayde better, that coulde moze fully confirme the ^{Dancus his high praise if he had stayed here.} supreme gouernement of a woman to bee lawefull in the Church of Christe, than this so manifest example and pzent instance, of Gods so happily blessing her Maiesties supreme gouernment, ouer vs his people.

But, what shall wee soade our selues with all these goodly speeches, when the matter for all this is still impugned? For, to what purpose doth Dancus vaine all these great prayes of her Maiesties reigne? To confirme and establishe a womans gouernement? Or not rather in the end, euen as our Bzethren do (but with a moze cunning compasse) to vndermine it? And yet, our Bzethren (as we haue heard) call forth now & then very fayre speeches of her Maiestie, & of her happy reigne, & of her ^{Faire praises and foule practises.} lawfull gouernmēt also. But when it commeth to the very point, they not only refuse to obey her Maiesties lawes and gouernmēt, but they so cry out vpon the same, as a most deformed, & corrupt state of gods Church: that all their prayings are nothing comparable to their dispraynges. What a strange kinde of dealing is this in so high matters, and with such great and noble personages? It is an old saying, Non est bonum ludere cum sanctis.

And shall wee dally thus, in the chiefest matters of estate, with Princes? What could haue been more auouched for confirmation of a womans lawfull gouernement, then this so high recommending to all the worlde her Maiesties gouernement? Solemnely pronouncing: Verily, for Elizabeth the Queene of Englande that nowe most happily raigneth, the circuite of the worlde hath seene nothing at any time more happie (or blessed) and more to be wished for, then is here reigne. If here Danæus haue not flattered (as he had no cause) but spoken (as indeede we finde it) the verie trueth: what then can he afterwarde of all the circuite of the worlde alleage, against this so excellent a president of Gods approbation for womens supreme gouernement? In very deede nothing can be rightly opposed, that shall ener be able to ouerturne this instance. And verily, if Danæus shall nowe alleage any thing, against the lawefulnesse of a womans supreme government ouer Gods people: he shall but contrarie and werie himselfe in vaine, as we saue howe Canalis did. And in the ende, we shall see likewise, how Danæus sayre and softly driues the matter, not onely to the same, but to a farre worse pitche, though in better speeches, and with more learning. For Danæus hauing gone thus farre, dare not nowe say that the gouernement of women is a naughtie, vn honest, or monstrous thing: (which terme Caluine vsed) for then, all the worlde would haue straightway seene it, and cryed out vpon it, as a grosse and manifest contradiction. But, he so fetcheth it about by little and little vnder hande, that in the end it comes all to one passe, as if had flat and plaine denied it. And first here, as he hath so highly commended her Maiesties raigne: so will he not seeme to discommend, but to giue at least some sober commendation, to those that will admitte no such gouernment.

Danau.

Notwithstanding (sayth he) those people seeme to haue wisely looked vnto their profite, which haue taken heede vnto (or provided) by their lawes, and by a right (or lawe) publike, least that women should rule among them, and ouer them, and should haue the chiefe right and gouernement. If we confesse the sexe of the woman with the mans, because that vnto manie offices which the administration of a kingdome requirereth, they are lesse apt and are vnable, by reason of the nature and imbecillitie of their sexe. As for exāple to gouerne an armie, to pronounce the lawe sitting in publike. Which thinges certainly do not become at all a womans shamefastnesse.

Bridges

In commending the wisdom of those people which haue provided by their lawes, that women should not haue the supreme gouernement among or ouer them: Danæus seemeth (though with more modest couerture then did Canalis) to insinuate the French his countrie men. But with what wisdom they could deuise better lawes than Gods lawes, and oppose their cancats or prouisions of those their lawes, to cutte off his lawes, lawes: I referre to Danus and to the indifferent readers further deliberation. But, if we may coniecture by the event (as wee haue seene alreadie out of Meierus, the Chronicler of the Lowe countries) this wise pro-uision of their lawes contrarie to the prouision of Gods lawe, hath bene the very folly, which hath made that realme of France refuse, to unite it selfe with this Realme of Englande and with all those countries, whereby such a mightie Monarchie might haue growen, as might haue both repressed the usurpation of Antichrist, and the invasion of the Saracens and Turkes; the one hauing wonne and spoyle more than halfe, the other hauing seduced and tyrannized almost ouer all Christendome, without any Christian Monarke, sufficient to resist or stoppe them. For the kinges of Englande that euer to their power, did most withstande these two open & priuie enemies of Christs Gospell, were either still crossed by the french, or, for want of this union, (that in right ought then to haue ben made) had not might sufficient to atchieue it. While in the meane season, France hath felt, that the only maintaining of this their wise prouision, hath ben the greatest plague and scourge that euer France hath had, and the chiefest occasion of their greatest ouerthrowes. And at this day (God be praised for it) Englande hath the light and libertie of the Gospell, and is so blessed withall, vnder her Maiesties most happie raigne (as Danus sayth) that would to God France and euery Christian kingdome, yea, all the worlde had the like blessinges of God, if it were according to his god will. Not, that they should be all gouerned still by women; for so is not Englande.

 But, not to debarre the right of inheritance, no, not to a woman. And if all the world neuer saw so happie a raigne as is the Queenes of England: Why might we not charitably wish that all the world, Fraunce and all, might see the like happines in their dominions? What could it preiudice if a woman now and then reigned ouer them, so long as God blessed their raigne as he doth her Maiesties?

But now, where Danus shewes his sentence further, with this conditionall, if we conferre the sexe it selfe of the woman with the mans: If he adde this, as a reason that moued the French or any other, to make this prouiso against womens supreme gouernement: then I answer, that in dede in this conferring; the womans sexe is inferiour to the mans.
 Notobest, gouernment hauing rather relation to that principall person, that is represented in the gouernement, which is God; and with all, to the abilitie, by the gistes and spirite of gouernement, which God giueth to the partie whom he aduanceth; and also, to the right of inheritaunce, whereby the Gouernour claimeth title or comes thereto: the superioritie is rather to be conferred, in these or the like respects or comparisons, thā in the sexe of man & womā only. And yet, we grant, that the sex of the man equall) is euermore, as the more worthy, to be preferred before the sexe of the woman. But if now, this conferring of the sexes, be referred to the later part of the sentence, which rendereth a cause hereof, saying: because that vnto many functions which the administration of a kingdom doth require, they are lesse apt and are vnable, by reason of the nature and imbecilitie of their sexe: then I deny this also to be a sufficient cause or reason, to debarre any persons of their right to a kingdome, onely for that they are not able, personally to administer many functions, which the administration of a kingdome doth require. For if he mean, that all Princes must of necessity administer all such functions in their owne persons, or else they be not lawfully administered: then, not only (as we haue shewed) a man childe (while he is a childe) is cleane cut off from the possession of a kingdome, and must, for conferring his age with the age of a man that is of riper yeares, be excluded: because that vnto many functions which the administration of a kingdome requireth, the nature and imbecilitie of his age is lesse apt and is vnable: but also of what age soeuer he be, yet his sicknesse may so greatly, or so continually empaire the strength of nature: that he may be euen altogether vnable, at least, the lesse apt to administer many of those functions. Yea, what health so euer he haue also, and might, and wisdom: yet if hee haue many kingdomes or prouinces vnder him, as diuerſe Princes had, that are not therefore improued in the scripture, yea Dauid, Salomon, Iehosaphat, &c. had ſuche prouinces too, and deputies in them: and howe then can the king administer those functions in his prouinces, personally? Yea, haue he but one kingdome, and that but a small one too, yet will there still be many functions which the administration of a kingdome doth require, that he shall be driuen to doe by other persons in his name and right, and not all of them in his owne person. If now, this administration of those functions by a deputie or minister in his name, and hauing authoritie from him, be good and lawfull in a man: why it is not good and lawfull also in a woman? If any reply, that although the King may appoint ſuch deputies, yet he must appoint a man to doe the actions that appertaine to a man: I denie it not. But can not a woman Prince appoint men also to do them, as well as a man Prince can appoint them? But of that after, only this now, why should a woman be more bounde to the personall administration of ſuche functions, more than a man is bounde? Or should shee not rather, euen for the nature & imbecilitie of her sexe, be of the twaine, (seeing she is the weaker, and so the more to be honoured and boyne with- all) be permitted to administer all ſuch functions by other men, as she can not administer by her ſelfe, without any prejudice to her right or ſupreme authoritie in the kingdome?

The Apostle S. Peter went not thus ſtrictly to worke for Princes personall administration of all their functions, but ſaith 1. Pet. 2.v. 13. &c. submit your selves vnto all manner of humane ordinance for the Lords sake, whether it be vnto the king, as vnto the superiour, or vnto the Governours, as vnto the that God.

are sent of him, &c. here he first nameth this generall word, euery humane ordinance, or creature. For the words ad hominem actionem, comprehend both the or-dinace created, & also the creature or person either of mā or womā. And though he after ward specific the name of king, which rather seemeth to be limited to a man: yet his reason includeth both sexes, though according to the cōmon phrase, he mētion only the more woorthy sexe. As whē he sayth after ward, ver. 17. honor all men: he excludeth not the honor due to womē, but includeth it. And v. 18. & 19. Servants be ye subiect to your Masters withal feare, not only to the good & courteous: but also to the frowarde. For this is thāke worthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grieve, suffering it wrongfully, here these words Master & mā, are not limited to the sexe, but are rather spoken of the persons. So by a courteous or a froward M. is ment also a courteous or a froward Mistresse, & by mā either any seruāt, or any person he or she that suffreth wrongfully. Neither only both Peter in the terme of one sex, include both: but meeteth also with this reason, that it is no disobedience to the king, but only to his deputie: & therfore sayth he: or vnto gouernours, as vnto those that are sent of him. Which word him, if we refer to the king: If he may haue such gouernours, as sent of him: so also may a Queene as sent of her. Calvin rather referreth it, as vnto those that are set of God. But this again makes for vs. He signifieth (saith Calvin) all sorts of Magistrats, as though he should say, there is no kind of gouernmēt, to which they ought not to subiect themselues. He cōfirmeth this, because they are Gods ministers. For they that refer this Pronoun (him) to the king, are much deceaued. This therfore is a cōmō reason to cōmend the authority of all Magistrats, that they rule by the cōmandemēt of God, & are sent of him. So that, what sorts of Magistrats so euer they be, we neither respect the difference of their states, whether in a Monarchie, or in an Aristocratie, or in a popular cōmon wealth: nor yet respect we the sexes of the gouernours, but God that placed them in authoritie, & for his ordinance sake we must obey them, and their ordinances, if they be not contradictory, but subalternall, to God their principall, that did sende them. So that, the inability of the sexe, is no more lawfull pretence to repell the autoritie of the person, thē is the inability of age, or of health, or of strength, or of knowledg, to administer personally many functions that pertain to the administratiō of a kingdome. Pharaο could not do many things pertaining to the administratiō of his kingdome, y Ioseph could do: neither Nabuchodonozzer, that Daniel could do: nor Saul, that Dauid: nor Oziah, y his tutors in his nāe could do: & yet was this no impechinēt to their states.

But here Danęus pickes out two things, that he thinkes by all meanes to be utterly inconuenient, for women to haue anye doing at all in them, that is to witte, to be ouer an armie, and to pronounce lawe sitting in publike publike place of iudgement.

Two functions of a Prince to gouerne an armie, and to sitte in iudgement.

These two functions are such (I grant) as appertain vnto a supreme gouernour, and are necessarie both for warre and peace, the two chiefe estates of euery common weale: the one to defende the from their enemies, the other to maintaine them among themselves. Howbeit, neither of these two functions, eyther to be a gouernour in warre, or to bee a Iudge in peace, are such functions, that if a Prince can not personally exercise the same, he should therfore be debarred from his right; or hauing it, he should surcease it. For if the king be a childe, well may they liue in hope of his riper yeares; but in that infirmitie of his age, neither the actiuitie of his bodie, nor the skill of his mind, will reach to the administring of these two functions. Yea, when he comes to mans estate, he may both be so weake in bodie, so faint in heart, and so vniexpert in the feates of warre: he may againe be so simple in iudgement, so vnlearned in the lawes, and maye proue altogether so vnapt for discerning and deciding of controuerxies; that neither childe nor man, hee may be able or apt for the personall administration of these functions. And what then? Shall he be cleane excluded or deposed from his kingdome, for his only vnabilitie or vnaptnes in these functions? No, on the other side, if we shall moze safely conclude, that deputies may supply his imbecilitie herein, as we haue sene, how Azarias remayned king being a leper, separate and shut vp from the people, neither able to gouerne an armie, nor to sitte in iudgement: but to doe these functions, and al other belonging to the administration of a kingdome, by his sonne Iotham, who gouerned the house and iudged the people of the lande. 2. Reg. 15. ver. 5: can then not Christian Princes, where any imbecilitie of nature or of sexe, maketh them lesse able to doe these things themselves, supply them also by their deputies? Did David guide all his armies by his personall conduct, or not his greatest & most dangerous battels by his liefe-tenant Ioab? Yea 2. Sam. 18. ver. 3. the army would not suffer him to goe to battell with them, but sayde: Thou shalt not goe forth, for if wee slee, they will not regarde vs, neither will they passe for vs, though halfe of vs were slaine, But thou art now worth ten thousande of vs, &c. And yet David ceased not to be their king still. Yea, he was the safer fro danger in his person, & for the matter, he made no lesse noble conquestes by his Captaines. The Senate and people at Rome conquered the most famous partes of all the worlde, and all or most by their deputies, whom they sent forth with their armies, while they sate still & debated the matters in the Capitoll.

Azarias though for his sicknesse by himselfe he could not, yet by his deputies he administered these things.

Dauids deputies.

The Senate and people of Rome did all by deputies.

And although that the sitting in publik iudgement and pronouncing right, be easier for the bodie of the twaine: yet sith it requireth the knowledge of the lawes (except Princes should sitte for a she we, or according to lawe will I, or resolute the doubt as Alexander vndid Gordias his knotte:)

how many Salomons are there, that sit their selues in iudgement, & some of them good Princes too, hauing learned & vncoꝛrupt iudges to administer those functions for the? But can any of the therfoze be sayd, that he is not a lawfull Prince, or no Prince at all, yea, although he were also a dissolute and vniust Prince? If now these functions in men Princes, can be thus administred by the deputations of other men, experienced & approued in these functions: why should this supply be debarred fro a woman Prince? What alleageth Danꝛus against them? That though some men Princes do not these thinges, yet for women Princes, though they would, they can not? Nay, Danꝛus is not yet so peremptorie, that by any meanes they can not do it: but (saith he) these thinges become not at all womens shamefastnes. Indeede shamefastnesse is one of the chiefest ornamentes of women, and great reason it is, they should haue a speciall regard to the comelinesse and shamefastnesse of their nature. Neither is fighting and martiall affayres so fitte for their imbecillitie and the profounde discussing in pleas of right and lawe, doth commonly surmount the capacitie of women, which as by custome they are not so enured and acquainted withall, so are they by nature (for the most part) more wittie than wise, and more pregnant in inuention of delightfull matters, than deliberate in iudgemēt of grane and doubtfull controuerfies. Howbeit, wee speake not now of the ordinarie sorte of women, but onely of those that are supreme gouernours of a kingdome, which also falleth out verie seldom: no; yet ascribe we the habilitie of these functions to all those that are such women Princes. So more than it can be sayde also, of all those Princes that are men, though it be no sufficient debarre to the right of either of their estate, which is a farre higher point in lawe, than is the personall administration of their functions.

ons.

Though a Prince can not decide controuerfies yet he cealeth not to be a Prince.

How a woman Prince may do these actions.

And yet, well may we iustifie this, that as God hath so giuen the administration euen of both these functions to some singular women princes, without any staine at all vnto their shamefastnes: so vpon especiall occasion or necessitie thereunto, why may we not conclude, when God calleth a woman prince to the supreme gouernment of a kingdome, that she may in god order do these things, without any touch of blemish to the decencie & honoꝛ of her shamefastnes? I speak not of personal fighting in the wars, like the Amazones & the french pucell: and yet in some necessitie, women haue put to their handes sometimes extraordinarily, to the defence of themselves, & striking of their enemies, & that without reproch. As Iael that killed Sisera, & got thereby great honoꝛ. Iud. 4. and the woman that cast a piece of a millstone on Abimelech's head, & brake his braine pan. Iud. 9. And Iudith that cut off Holofernes head, & by her prudence and valour ouerthrew all his mightie armie, and directed her people how to set forth their armies. But these were yet no gouernors of armies. And inuade it an armie. is one thing to strike the enemy, or to defende themselves, and another thing to governe an armie. But haue not we recited a number of those women that haue gouerned armies, & some of the without any discommendation, but rather to their high praise, besides the great benefite of their subiects? But to conteyne vs in the bounds of the Canonickall scripture; did not Debora, as well as Barak, goe forth with the armie, yea & chiefly governe it, both what number they should be, & who should be their Captaine, and when they should giue the onsette; & of al this she toke no shame but glory? And when the Queene of Sabza, came to Salomon with so great a traine that Peter Martyr sayth thereon, habuit multitudinem secū instar exercitus, she had a multitude with her as it were an armie: did not she chiefly gouerne then? And why did not Salomon lay that in her dish, & tell her, that she could not be a Queene, because she could not with that shamefastnesse which becommeth womenkinde, governe an armie? No, no; Christ debarreth her of the title of a Queene, or of her due commendation, for all that matter. Neither Philip founde this fault in the Eunuches Ladie and Pistresse, Candace the Queene of Ethiopia, that gouerned such an armie, as we heard already out of Plinie & Strabo. Neither (besides the scripture) Iosephus findes this fault in Alexandra. And yet al these had, & must needs haue had, armies and defences against their enemies, yea though they had peace with them. Therefore, notwithstanding this exception of Danus for the governing or being ouer an armie, whether by their deputies (as Peter Martyr sayth, the Queene of Sabza might appoint her some, or some other in her absence,) or in case, by themselves, as her selfe conducted the troupe that came with her to Salomon: Queenes are not to be sequestred from all supreme gouernement of a kingdome. Yea, they may so orderly gouern ouer all their armies also, that they may still with honour and without shame, reteyne the decencie and shamefastnes of their calling.

The other function, though it pertaine moze to peace and quietnesse: yet because it hath the hearing and debating of quarels and bzailes: the contentious pleading of titles & doubtles: the finding out and determining of right and law: seemeth to be as farre from womens modest shamefastnesse and milder capacitie, as the other in the broyles of warres. And yet if wee shall thoroughly consider this function; hauing graunted the one, which is the harder, for the gouernement ouer an armie in the warre: women will hope the better and plead in peace the harder, not to be cleane debarred from the barre, nor yet from sitting in the iudgement seat, if the importance of necessitie or speciall occasion, and much moze title of right, do call them to it, and they haue able giftes to answer it.

The wife woman of Abele.

What authority in her Citie the wife woman of Abele had, 2. Sam. 20 (though she pleaded so wisely euen in the warres with Ioab, and in giuing councounsell to her people for their peace,) I will not examine because she was vnder God no supreme gouernour, nor sate in any publike iudgement, that we reade of. But for Debora it is expressely set downe in the scripture that she iudged Israel. Iudg. 4. ver. 4. and that the children of Israel came vp to her for iudgement. ver. 5. If it be replied, this was a specialtie, and therefore can not be drawen into anie ordinarie rule or example: although it may be well answered, that God did not drawe such specialties from such persons, as otherwise in them the function had bene monstrous and more against nature: so that anie person whome God calleth to authori-tie, and furnisheth with his spirite of iudgement, enhabling their inha-bilitie, may take it on them, and looke on Debora for a president: yea, were the Prince a child, and had the gift of iudgement beyonde his age, (as had Daniel, or Salomon :) for all their rare and singular gites, yet might he well set them before him for a patterne. But howsoever we exempt the example of Debora: what shall we say to these two foresayde Queenes of Sabza and Ethiopia, mentioned without touch of ignominie, if not rather of prayse, both in the olde and in the newe Testament, at leastwise, approued to be lawfull Queenes? For, either the Princes personall execution in the administration, of this function pertayning to the gouernement of a kingdome, is not so necessarie, but that they might do it, & did it by their deputies: or else these queenes did sit their selues in pub-like iudgement, & yet no reproch or vncomelines vnto their shamfastnes.

But whatsoener they did then, Danæus will proue that this should not now be done. And why not now?

From hence (to wit, that it is vtterly vnseemely for the shamefastnes of a woman, sayth he) by the ciuill lawe of the Romanes L. mulieres D. de regul. iuris, women are rightly repelled from administring the functions and offices belonging to mē, such as also are those that ought to be exercised in publike. And the same is the saying of Augustine, *L. de nuptiis.
cap. 9.* Neither can it be doubted, that men ought rather to be princi-pall vnto women, than women to men.

Here is both the autority of the ciuill law, & of this most famous Doctor of the Church S. Aug. alleaged, against womens sitting in publike iudgment & their supreme gouernment ouer mē. To S. Aug. after warde in his order. Let vs first consider the ciuill law hereon. Not that I wil take vpon me lawyerlike, to answer this rule of the law of mā, in such learned & full manner, as the professoꝝ thereof would do: it sufficeth me, that I find sufficient warrant for womens supreme gouernment, out of Gods lawe.
Notwithstanding I deny not this law ciuill, so far as it contrarieth not the law diuine, which we & all Christendom are more bound vnto, thā to any ciuill law of the Romanes. Io. Ramus in his Inchiridion (or manuel) de reg. iuris, li. 2. axiom. 50. de Fam. mentions this rule, & frō whō Danæus taketh it:

Vlpian.

Vlpian (sayth he) doth say, that women are removed fro al ciuill or publike offices, both because it is not commendable for the shamefastnes of the feminine sexe, to be prouoked to do those things which appertain to men: & also because the counsell of women is feeble, fraile, and without the experience of matters. Vlpian alleageth examples, & therfore womē can be no iudges, nor demaunde (right) nor appeare for other, nor bee procurators.

Of what women & matters Vlpian speaketh.

Of the motives that induced hereunto this famous lawyer Vlpian, (and yet but an heathen Idolater, not knowing Gods law, nor seeing such measure of his giftes among the heathen Romanes in those daies:) we shal after (God willing) see further, Danęus leading vs to the enquire, what women haue also gouerned the Romaine Empire. As for this law, both properly is understood of the personall actions of such offices or functions, as appertaine onely to pleas, for hereunto hee sheweth all his examples: and so, no more restrayneth the principalitie of a womans supreme gouernement ouer a kingdome, than if both of a childes: neither is it further to be stretched, than serueth to the reasons here alleaged, which only take place in the ordinarie sort of women. But when as we haue shewed so many laudable examples to the contrarie, and shall see further in the practise of the greatest states in Christendome: yea, Danęus also himselfe hath specified some such examples, as in all points are answerable to all the vertues here required, and to many farre more excellent, besides as firme, as constant, and as expert counsell of most twaighty matters, as in the most & best Counsellers: among men, not only such as Holda, to whom Iosias, the high Priest, and the grauest Counsellers resorted for counsell: nor as Iudith, that gaue most godly, stout, and prudent counsell to the Priestes, the Elders, and all the people: but (God be prayes) by Danęus otone confession, we are not unfurnished in this behalfe. And therfore such excellent women, are to be excluded from this rule of the ciuill lawe, but not from the rule of the ciuill gouernment.

But for our better pꝛofe hereof, to shew how this rule of the ciuill law, debarreth not simply all women, especially not Princes, no, not from publike sitting and pronouncing law in iudgement, the promptuarie of the three lawes, to wit, the diuine lawe of God, the Cannon lawe of the Bishops, and the Ciuill lawe of the Emperours, collected by Montholoni-

Iohn, whome wee called the Knightes of the Rhodes, or nowe, of Malta) of the other partie, a question was mooued in sute of lawe, about the vsage of a certaine woode, it was by both parties compromitted to the Frenche Queene: who vnderstanding the merites (or rightes) of the cause, thought good the definitiue sentence to bee promulgated or published by arbitrimēt. But, although according to the rule of the Ciuil lawe, women are remooued from publike offices: and in an other place it bee sayde, that albeit they be of most highe estimation, if they take vpon them an arbitrimēt, or else beeing Patroneesses, they interpose themselues in the hearing of matters among their Tenauntes manumised (or made free) they are to bee separated from all iudiciall examining, so that no penaltie nor any exception of couenaunt may bee taken against the contemners of them, by reason of their prolation: (or sentence that they haue giuen forth) neuerthelesse, because of the custome approoued, which in the partes of France is holden for lawe, women preexcelling are known to haue an ordinarie iurisdiction ouer their subiectes: we therefore commande, that by the penaltie decreed in the compromise, the hospitalers obserue the same arbitrimēt, euen as it is prouidently set foorth and receaued of either partie, especially sithe it hath beene ratified with the presence and counsell of the Bishops. These wordes hath the text. Which well proueth that those which are preexcellent women (or of great nobilitie) may giue iudgement. Hereupon sayth Angelus in his Counsell, Consil. 270. that he sawe Queene Ioane sitting in the throne made for the iudgement seate. And although this, to witt, that a preexcellent woman may iudge, bee vnderstoode by the glosse in the worde, Regina. in c. cum deuotissimam. 12. quest. 2. & in §. 1. in the worde mulieres, 15. quest. 3. that it proceedeth onely of custome, according as the fore-sayde chapter dilecti speaketh: notwithstanding this also proceedeth euen by the common lawe, because although a woman can not iudge, in that she is a woman, notwithstanding if any dignitie be delated (or brought) vnto her, by reason whereof there belongeth withall a iurisdiction, she may exercise the iurisdiction. in 1. no. de arbi. & in c. significauit. de rescript. And so peraduenture may it be vnderstood, that is here spoken of the Prophetesse Delbora. Howbeit, if it were the custome that women should iudge, that custome ought to be kept, not only in womē that were preexcellēt; but also in others. For the cause that women can not iudge, is brought in by custome only, euen as it is proued in the sayd lawe, cum Prator. §. 1. in verbo moribus ff. de iudi. And in the sayd chapter. 1. §. in verbo moribus. 3. quast. 7. therefore, by the contrarie custome, the contrarie may be induced. So holdeth, after other by him alleaged, Dominus meus Decius, in dicta lege. 2. Colum. 1. ff. de regu. iuris. Thus we see, both the ciuill lawe of the Romanes aunswere the ciuill lawe of the Romanes, and that not onely in other regions, but especially in Fraunce, where the ciuill lawe is most in force, to the moze full satisfaction of this obiection, and rule of the ciuill lawe that Danæus here alleageth.

As for that which Danæus annexeth out of Augustine, Lib. 1. de nuptijs cap. 9. saying: neither can it be doubted, that men shoulde rather haue principalitie ouer women, than women ouer men.

S. Aug. wrote
sted by Danæus.

I muse much that so excellent a man (as I gladly acknowledge Danæus to be) could be thus farre carried with affection, to cite a testimonie of any Father, or any other in this manner, both cleane besides the authors matter, which he was in hande withall, that should haue fully declared his meaning: and euen in that litle sentence which he taketh, to leane out those especiall wordes, that should haue bounded all the sentence. Albeit, he ought to haue taken notice, (at least wise, some inkling) where about S. Augustine went, euen by the verie title of the booke that here he quoteth, de nuptijs, of mariages. So that the principall drift here of Augustine is not to proue the principalitie of ciuill gouernment, that it is not competible to a woman ouer men, but onely to men ouer women: but he driueth all to that naturall principalitie, which appertayneth to the sexe, and to the state of mariage, for the propagation of man and woman-kinde. And in that ninthe chapter, Saint Augustines purpose was, to proue, that although for propagation of children, one man was then permitted to haue mo wiues: yet could it not be permitted to one woman, to haue moe husbandes. For that would not encrease, but rather hinder the propagation of children. For sayth S. Augustine, If the multitude of wiues had not therefore displeased the God of our Fathers (and which is our God also) that wanton lust should vaunt it self more abundantly: then estoones had the holy womē likewise ech one of the obeyed diuerse men. Which if any had done, what had cōpelled her, but euen the vncleannes of vnlawfull lust, that she would haue mo husbandes: sith this licentiousnesse should not haue had the mo children? Howbeit, that not one man and many women, but one man and one woman, appertayneth rayneth rather to the goodnes of marriages: euen the very first coniunction of matrimonie made by God, doth sufficiently declare, that mari-ages should fetch their beginnings frō thence, where the example should be marked with more honestie. But the race of mankinde proceeding foorth, good women were ioyned to certaine good men, the mo womē to particular men. Whereupon it appeareth, that the modestie of the dignitie rather desired that: & the nature of frutefulnes permitted this. For principalitie also can be more naturally of one ouer many, than of manie ouer one. (And here comineth in the sentence that Danęus citeth) neither can it be doubted, by naturall order, that men should rather haue principalitie ouer women, than women ouer men. Which thing the A-postle keeping sayth, The man is the head of the woman. And, women be ye sub- iect to your husbandes. And the Apostle Peter sayth, euen as Sara obeyed Abra- ham & called him Lord. Which although it be so, that the nature of the beginnings loueth singularitie, and we shall more easily see a pluralitie in the subiectes: notwithstanding, many women should neuer be lawfull-ly ioyned to one man, except from thence manie children should haue beene borne. Whereupon if she ioyne her selfe with moe men: because that frō thence she hath not the multiplication of her children, but the frequenting of wanton lust, she can not be a wife but an harlotte.

1. Cor. 11.

This is all S. Augustines whole chapter on this matter. What now is here that can be drawen (except it be drawen with violence) against a womans principalitie ouer men, in respecte of Ciuill gouernement?
 True it is, that by way of comparison, hee speaketh also here of ciuill principalitie. But both he say, a woman can not be suche a Prince, as in that respect of ciuill principalitie shee can not be principall ouer manie men that are her subiectes? No, he hath no such words nor meaning: but only by the similitude of a Prince in the state ciuill, he pzooueth the order of the naturall & æconomicall state. What lieth in naturall order, the mā by his sexe, is the womans head: and the woman also in the law & order of matrimonie, which followeth the law and order of nature is subiect to the mā that is her husband: both which he pzooueth out of S. Paules testimonie in the new Testament, & by Abrahams & Saraes example in the olde: before he concludeth, that in this naturall & æconomicall principalitie of the sex & of matrimony, it can not by any means be admitted, that the husband being the head & natural prince, should be mo thā one: & the wo-mā being the subiect in this lawe naturall & æconomicall, should be but one: & so one woman to haue mo husbands. Whereas, if the law of God had not ben against it, it had ben moze orderly of the twaine, for one man to haue had moe wiues, (as it was a while permitted for propagation of mankinde,) because this commeth nērer to the order of the ciuill state, where one Prince may haue moe subiectes. But yet, he sheweth in this

The plaine meaning of

meaning. Similitude, how the lawe of the naturall and æconomicall gouernement in matrimonie, differeth also in this comparison, from the lawe of the ciuill gouernement. For all marriages must chiefly be leueled to the proportion of their first institution, the law whereof was, that they should be but two. Though procelle of time bredde a permission to the contrarie, for the respect of that, whereof nowe sithe there is no neede: therefore in all mariages there ought to be but one man and hee the principall, and one woman and she the subiect. Whereas in the politicall or ciuill principallitie, there is one prince and many subiects. And therefore the comparison of these two kindes of principalities doe not simply resemble nor imitate the one the other. This I take to be S. Augustines plaine meaning. And this sentence cited by Danæus, had bene plaine inough, if he had but set downe the whole wordes thereof. Neither can it be doubted, that by naturall order, men should rather be principall to women, than women to men. Who may not easily perceauie here, that he speaketh not simply of all principallitie: but such principallitie onely as ariseth, by naturall order? And who denieth that? Or what is that to this purpose, of politicall order? And yet we denie not, but when these two orders, naturall and politicall, can be orderly ioyned together; it is all the better. But there is a naturall order also of inheritance, by which a woman may be nearer to ciuill principallitie than a man. Whereunto whē by the ciuill law, yea by the law of God, there accreth withall this ciuill or political principallitie. When by that natural order of inheritance, the womans gouernment ouer the mā, is not to be debarred, for any naturall prerogatiue of the mans sexe or mariage ouer the womā. And so whē all is done, this sentence of S. Augustine is no absolute prohibition to a womans principallitie ouer men, if it rather in some cases do not allowe it. When he saith, it is not to be doubted, that by natural order, men should rather be principall to womē than women to men. But as we speake not now, so much of naturall order: so neither speake we of that, that were of twaine the rather, if men might haue their choise. But they that can not haue Princes as they would, must be glad, at least wise, content with thē, as they may. And where God, & law, & nature, calleth women to this ciuill principallitie: we must not there stande descanting, what we had rather haue them, but obey thē as the higher powers of God, whether they be mē or womē. And sithe S. Augustine, in the sentence before this cited by Danæus, & as the ground thereof, doth say: for principallitie also is more naturally of one ouer many, than it can be of many ouer one: and the same S. Aug. in other places clearely alloweth a ciuill principallitie vnto women: then must it needes fall out, that either hee must admitte such a state of womens gouernment as was among the Amazons, where no men were: or else, that this woman gouernour might haue principallitie ouer men.

Danæus striketh out the verie words that shew S. Aug. meaning.

S. Aug. alloweth womens principallitie ouer men.

But

But if now we, this place be too weak, to inferre any thing against womens principallitie: if any heere in searching further S. Augustines meaning, woulde corroborate the same, with that sentence which is contained in the 45. Question out of the old testament. Tom. 4. For howe can it bee sayde of a woman, that she is the Image of God: sith that it is euident, shee is subiect to the gouernment of the man, and hath no authority, for shee can not teach, nor bee a witnesse, nor giue faith (or take an othe) or Iudge: how much lesse is she able to gouerne. These wordes in-deede, come both a little neerer to the purpose, than doth the sentence that Danaus alleageth, and also specify the particulars mentioned in the rule of the ciuill Lawe aforesaide. Albeit that the former aunswere may satisfy well ynough, likewise, all that here is saide: yet I hope our Brethren will not iustify this worke to be S. Augustines: no; yet this sentence, if it were his. The Question is this. Quomodo homo ad imaginem Dei factus sit, & utrum ad dominationem, & an mulier quoque. How man shoulde be made to the Image of God, & whether vnto gouernment, and whether also a woman? It seemeth notwithstanding to some (sayth this suborned Augustine) that man was made to the Image of God in gouernment: and because he saith, let him rule ouer the fishes of the sea, and ouer the Fowles of the heauen, and ouer the whole earth: sith that these thinges are seene to be subiect not onely to man, but also to Woman, who it is euident hath not the Image of God. Which thing verily wanteth reason, two wayes. For by this it is auouched, that neither God spake to his Sonne, Let vs make man vnto our Image and likenesse: but vnto the celestiall gouernours, which the Apostle reherbeth, if that man haue the image of God in Gouernment: and it is giuen to the woman, that she also shold be the image of God, which is absurd. And so followeth this sentence aboue cited. Nowe, as we hold not this opinion, that the Image of God, consisteth wholly or cheefely in dominion, but withall, and much moze, in that integrity of holinesse and righteousness, wherunto S. Paul exhorteth vs, & declareth that Christe hath reformed vs, which appertaineth as well to women as to men: so, howe can this author then, maintaine this to be absurde, and demaund howe it can bee spoken of a woman that she is the image of God, sith there are moze, and moze excellent respectes of Gods Image in vs, then Dominion? But rather, howe doe his owne wordes hang together, in saying, the woman hath no authority? and yet he goeth about to proue, that this Image of God cannot bee understood of gouernment, because shee hath gouernment with the man, according to the wordes of God. Which wordes are not, as he cites them, Let him rule, but, let them rule, referring the authoritie of rule, both to Man and woman. But as S. Augustine him selfe in this point of Gods Image, is so curious about the powers of the soule, to resemble the mystery womens government.

Another objection. Tom. 4. Aug. 45. Quest. ex vetrest.

Whether man & woman were both made to the image of God and to gouernment.

Wherin the Image of God consisteth.

womens go-uernment. ffery of the Trinity, and so variable thereon in manie places, that our Brethren their selues, dare not rest vpon him: so, can they presse vs the lesse, by his opinion heerein. Not but that we accorde to the sense heereof, whereunto Saint Paule (as we haue shewed applieth it) 1. Cor. 11. verse 7. The man ought not to couer his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God: but the Woman is the glory of the man. Whereupon (saith Caluine,) The same question may nowe be mooued of the Image, that was before of the heade. For, either sexe is created to Gods image, neither doth Paul bid the womē lesse than the men, to be reformed vnto that Image. But the Image whereof nowe hee speaketh, is referred vnto the order belonging to Mariage. In which sense, and in all other prerogatiues, that God by nature hath giuen to Man, yea, & that in al ciuil principalities, we euermoze so graunt the preferment to the Man: that they be not absolutely denied from the Woman. For that was so little the meaning of S. Augustine to affirme that Women can not possibly and lawfully haue any ciuil principality ouer men: that in his 253. sermon, de tempore, he acknowledgeth so farre forth the Queene of the South, that he ma-keth her not onely a good and lawfull Queene: but to be a notable figure of Christes Church. And anoucheth also (as do the other hystoriographers) that Semiramis raigned ouer the Assyrian Monarchy. Li. de Ciuit. Dei.
18. cap. 2. and that Ino came out of Ethiopia into Egypt, and that bee-ing a Queene, longe iustequē in praeauerit, she raigned farre at large, and righteously. And therefore after her death, they worshipped her for a Goddesse. Whereby we may easily see, that S. Augustine doth not utterly condemne the ciuil principality of a woman ouer men.

It is an old saying, she we me not the meate, but she we me the man. And therefore I like this order of Dancus wel, to examine the practise of this thing. But he saith the woman can not be shewed in this practise. For, a woman cannot be the Romain Empresse & Queene. Although these speeches seeme so ambiguously spoken, y the meaning may be construed diuers wayes:

wayes: since that (as these termes are now in vse) one may be called King of the Romaines, and another Emperour of Rome: for example, Charles the fift, being Emperour of Rome, his Brother Ferdinand was King of the Romaines, (which title is vsed rather for security of succession, than present possession of the state) and so peradventure it may be true, a Woman can not be Empresse of Rome and Queene also: notwithstanding, I take Danæus in no such sense, nor yet, to be as Empresses and Queenes vnder their husbands gouernment, and without all rule, saue onely bearing these Titles and names, in the honour of their husbandes, and no further: but (I take) that hee meaneth, no Woman hath had the cheefe gouernance and administration of the common-weale in the Romaine Monarchie. Which saying if it were true, albeit it were the lesse to be regarded, though a woman could not be there the Empresse and Queene, sith in so many places else (as wee haue sufficiently declared, and Danæus hath also clereely graunted) a Woman might well be either Queene or Empresse, that is to say, the principall or supreme gouernor of a Monarchie: yet how can this be true, enen for that state, by Danæus owne confession, when he streight wayes acknowledgeth, that Irene was the Romaine Empresse: If it can not be, how then was it: except he vnderstand it, that she could not be by Lawe, and therefore, he compareth her with Arhalia: But we shal examine that, anon in order. Let vs first (enen from the shet) behold that state, but cheefely, after this title and authority of the Emperours, and so shal we fully be resolved for the practise.

Functius citeth out of Berofus, Tab. 15. that Europs the second K. of the Sicionians sent his daughter Crana Helerna into Italie with certain colonies of people, Vvhich woman was by voices chosen and exalted to be their Q. vnto whom he gaue a white scepter. And that this was about 20. year before the birth of Abraham, & about 50. before the death of Noah. Moreover he alleageth out of Berofus, tab. 28. that Kitim, who for the excellency of his mind, was of the progeny of Ianus, called the Italian Atlas, gaue in mariage his daughter Eleära vnto Cöbus Blascö Prince of the progeny of Ianus. Who for this mariage sent certain colonies beyonde the Alpes nere to Italie, & Italus doth consecrate his daughter Roma to be vnder him the queen of the anciēt inhabitants of that country. This Roma laid the first foundations of the city of Rome, which were afterward so beautified by Romulus, that it was worthily called a City. As he also confirmeth it out of Quint. fab. pictor. & Sempronius, In diuis.

A viewe of the women go uernors in Italy and the Roman state.

But as Danæus heere tuffeth vs off, from searching all the Antiquities of Rome, to the time of the Romaine Emperours: so this his assertion cannot stand: & that enen in diuerse of the Emperours themselves also lining and reigning, not of the worst, but of the best Emperours that haue bene. as the men: sithe this might be bee rather ascribed to the participation of honoꝝ, than to the administration of government. Neither will I cite (as any argument to inferre the practise of Womens gouernement) the most dissolute and voluptuous time of Heliogabalus, when the Emperor him-selfe was so effeminate, as is not to be written, & the insolency of his wicked mother Semiamira which ruled all the state, had a Senate of Women by themselves, which caused the Romans afterwarde, specially that famous lawer Vlpianus to make that foresayde Law, that Women should not sitte in Iudgement, nor gouerne in the common weale. And yet notwithstanding, this Lawe was kept so small a while, that euen in the dayes of Alexander Seuerus the next and immediate emperor (which also among the heathen is accounted one of the best Emperours) both his grandmother Moesia and after her his mother Mammea, being excellent Women, had the publike administration and government of the common weale together with him, all the whole continuance of his Empire, euen in the life of Vlpian, that was (as Chytreus calleth him) Chancelor to Alexander Seuerus. And although the Emperor Valens were both a rash goner, noꝝ and an Arian, and thereby came to a miserable end: yet his wife Dominica Augusta is greatly commended foꝝ her vertue, and among other things, foꝝ her publike government of the Romane Empyre, whyle thorough her noble and politike conduct, she ouercame the Hunnes, the Alanes, and the Gothes, when they besieged Constantinople, and thereby she preserved the Empire. Eudoxia also the wife of the Emperour Arcadius had all oꝝ the chief administration of the Empire, wherein although she were to insolent, in causing Chrysostome to be banished: yet argueth it, that women were not then thought vncapable, of the publike administration of the Empire. But howsoever the mother did some what misgouerne the state: her daughter Pulcheria is greatly of all the writers recommended, foꝝ when her father Arcadius died, and committed the tutelship of his yong sonne Theodosius to Isigerdis King of Persia, but especially to his daughter Pulcheria: shee so politikely gouerned the Empire, and brought vp her yong Brother in so godly education: that he pꝛooued one of the moste excellent Emperors. Neither ceased her government euen of the Princes Court and all the affayres, euen when Theodosius came to his full yeares, and that she had pꝛocured him a wife, and in the time of his best government. And when as by subtile subornation of her euill wil-lers she was remoued from the government, and Eudocia the Emperesse had all the administration of the common weale, vnder her husbando Theodosius foꝝ seuen yeres space: Pulcheria was not onely afterwarde

Martianus to the empire, another most noble Prince, and set the crown on his head, and with him governed the Empire of Rome, not married unto him, but continuing all her life a most renowned virgin, and in that sense, as not holding the empire under Martianus, but jointly with him, is of Zonaras called Empresse. Theodora the wife of Iustinian, while her husband was not wel in his wittes, had the most part of the government of the Empire in her hands, and imprisoned Vigilus the Bishop of Rome. After Iustinian, Iustinus succeeded, who when hee died left Tiberius his successor, giving him in charge for his Widowe Sophia, ut eam (sayth Cuspinian) veluti Dominam ac reginam obseruaret, that he should hold her in reuerence as his Lady and Queene. Whereafter Martina the wife of Heraclius, after her husbands death reigned ioyntly with her sonne about two yeares. After whome, about the space of seuen score yeares, came this Irene whome here Danæus onely, of all the Romaine Empresses, doth mention, saying:

Irene.

Danæus.

And when Athalia in Iurye, and Irene the Mother of Constantine, the third, would beare the rule at Constantinople: either of them ouerturned all things, brought the worship of Idols into the Church, and this woman (Irene) layde open the romaine Empire to bee torne in peeces by the Saracens. Whereupon Charles the greate was to bee chosen into the Romaine Empire in the VVest, and Nicephorus in the East.

Of the usurpation of Athalia we haue heard sufficiently before. The Empresse Irene, notwithstanding she maintained the worship of Images, and called by her supreme authority the second Nicene Idolatrous council: the histories neuertheless accoꝝ, that she was then lawfull Empresse of Rome, yea she doing it selfe declareth, that she had the cheefe stouke in the government. And so reigned together with her sonne, ten yeeres. And when he had deposed her, she againe deposed him, and caused his eyes to be put out. Wherein although she shewed her selfe not so naturall a go-ther, yet (were she good or bad,) this infringeth Danæus rule, that a woman cannot be the Romaine Empresse and Queene. But Danæus chargeth her that she ouerturned all thinges, brought in Idolatry, and layd open the Empire to bee torne of the Saracens. If she had done all this: yet argueth it the stronger, that she had the cheefe government, or else she could neuer haue done it. Neither doe I defend, but utterlie mislike her doing, both against the true worship of God, in setting up Images: and against the course of nature, in putting downe her sonne. But in that superstitious age, were not many Kings as farre to blame for Images as was Irene? and yet for all that, they were lawfull Kings. Neither is it mete, how superstitious or vnaturall to her sonne soeuer she were, to charge her (for the more reproche to womens government) more then with matter of trueth.

trueth, and in trueth she so little layde open the Romaine Empire to the Saracens, waisting at that time the East parts, or any part of the Empire, that not only she once stopped all their great army, by intercepting their victuals: but also another time in playne battel ouercame them. By which noble doings, she bought her peace with them farre moze honozable, than many Emperors befoze had done, or did after her. Volaterrane saith, shee gouerned all things with great prudence. Zonaras saith, she sent also Legions to repress the incursions of the Arabians: the Agarens therefore going forth to seeke their prayes, when they chanced on the Romaynes army, were put to flight, many of them being ouerthrowne. Cuspinian with Volaterrane affirmeth this of her, Mulier vna rebus administrandis aptissima, & omnino nata. That she was the onely Woman that was most fitte and altogether borne for the affayres to bee administred. Neither was there any neede to chose Nicephorus, but violently and with craft while Irene was sick, he gat the Empire from her, and ruled it farre worse than shee did.

Theophania
the Mother of Otto.

And as for Charles the greates chosen Emperour in the West, it came nothing by the occasion of this Emperesse, but by the falsehood of Leo the Bishop of Rome and his predecessors, that vnder pretence of Images, had rebelled in the time of Leo Isaurus her father in lawe, and vltierly revolted from the Empire of the Grecians, and fledde to the French. Nevertheless the Emperesse Irene by her prudence so laboured the matter, that by the marriage of Charles the greates and her, the West and the East Empire had been re-united into one state, but that by the treason of Nicephorus she was hindred and despoiled. Not long after, succeeded Theodora with her sonne Theophilus. For (saith Cuspinian) hee being a childe was not able to order the reines of the Empire, and the administration of Irene the mother of Constantine, made that the Gretians not vnwillingly receiued the Empire of a woman. This Emperesse was no lesse superstitious for the worship of Images then was Irene, and yet other wise for her politike gouernment eleuen yeares space, she is greatly praised, and her deposition was her sonnes onerthrow. Besides these, not onely Zoe alone, but her sister Theodora after ward together with her, were both Emperres, and had the cheefe gouernment of the Empire. Eudochia also with her sonnes, and after with Diogenes, three yeares. Nowe, if that after the Empire was deuided, Danaus account not these for Emperres of Rome: (albeit the Chronicles doe still so call the East Empire) notwithstanding what shall we say of Theophania the Emperesse, that subdued Rome, and all the coastes about it vnto her sonne Otto? And did not the mother also of Henry the fourth Gouverne the Empire, while her sonne for his youth was not yet able? And howe then, hauing so many examples of Womens Gouernment in that state, while it was entire, & being se-

nered in eyther part thereof: can this saying of Danæus be upholden, that a Woman can-not bee Empresse of the Romaynes? As for that he addeth, that a Woman likewise can-not bee queene: If he referre it to the Romaynes, call her Empresse, or queene, or any other Title of cheefe Souerainty vnder God, so she haue the supreme Government of that Monarchie, either in her owne name, or the cheefe administration of the Common-weale, in the name of another, as we see in the diuersity of these examples, it comes all to one reckoning and sufficiently satisfieth the question of Womens publike Government. And as it was thus of the Romayne Empire, so for other Kingdomes in Chrystendome, of the Lombardes, of Cicilia, Polonia, Suetia, Demnarke, Boemia, &c. Because also we finde that euery one of these haue bene gouerned by Women, since the time they haue receiued the faith of Christe: I referre then ouer to those diuers Regions, which Danæus saith, doe admit the right of Womens cheefe Government, so well as England Spaine and Scotland doe, as appeareth by their particuler histories.

Empresse or Queene.

The gouernment of women in their states.

Nowe when Danæus hath thus farre discoursed of Womens supreme Government ouer empires and Kingdomes: descending downe, hee graunteth Womens supreme Government in inferiour states, and sayth:

But where inferior Iurisdicions, such as are Dukes, earles, Barons, Castellanes, are patrimoniall (or succeeding by inheritance) as in Fraunce: they verily in my iudgement, may be holden and possessed by Women, because these dignities & offices are not cheefe empires.

DANÆUS.

And in my iudgement, this is but a mere shift, and frivolous deuise (if I may be so bolde so to call it) to elude the matter. For although I might shewe, how diuerse Dukedomes haue bene turned into Kingdomes, as Boemia, Polonia, Muscouia, Croatia, Dalmatia, &c. And Kingdomes turned into Dukedomes, as Austriche, Burgundy, Lombardie, Gascoine, Britannie, &c: And some Dukedomes holde the mere royalties, save the bare Title of kinges, acknowledging no superiour Prince, as Venice or perhaps Florence. &c. And in some respect of vassalship, they be feudatories, inferiour to Emperours and Kinges, as Saxonie, Bauier, Prussia, Cleueland, Gelderland, &c. Besides manie that be vntied vnto kingdoms as Nomandie, Guen, Britannie, Lancaster, Cornwall, &c. And holden of kinges in respect of other Titles, as Millaine, Brabande, Holland, Zeelande, Friselande, &c. Besides many Earledomes and Baronies also vnder Emperours and kinges: yet, like in Danæus Iudgement, all these Dukedomes, Earledomes and Baronies, or the moste of these be patrimoniall, that is to say, may passe in the right of succession and enheritance, and so be holden and possessed of Women: then is the Question clearly euicted, that a Woman may be a publike gouernor.

If other states that haue royalties be competent to women: that Danæus hath assayed al his owne arguments.

cie patri-
moniall.

Which being graunted it is not the greatnesse or smalnesse nor the quality of superiourity, nor yet the supremacy, any more than the inferiority, & can be a sufficient debarre vnto them. But if any thing be, it must be the nature it selfe of publike gouernment, or else, if she may haue the iurisdiction of a Duchie, Earledome or Barony, she may haue it of a kingdom also. Yea, and in my iudgement, against his iudgement, she may haue the higher dignities much better than the inferiour dignities: because the higher, require the lesse personall exercise of those functions and actions that the inferior dignities & offices do require. And therefore where he sayth:

Danau.

But neuerthelesse these iurisdctions neither can neither ought to be exercised of the same women.

Bridges.

I gladly graunt hereunto, [so] some of these iurisdctions, and [so] the ordinary exercise of them. But this also is against Danæus him-selfe. For if in these inferiour dignities, the iurisdctions may be exercised by another, and yet they may be helde and possessed, and that by patrimony, as wel of women as of men: then what letteth, but that it may be so, and that much more easily, in the supreme gouernment of a kingdom? And withall, this answereth all Canalis and Danæus former argumentes, that a woman can not gouerne an army, nor sitte in publike iudgement, nor can doe those thinges that belong to men. May not these thinges be done in Dukedomes, Earledomes, and Baronies, so wel as in kingdoms? and if they hinder not a womans possession of the one: why hinder they her possession of the other? but here againe Danæus groweth into a mistaking, and sayth:

Danau.

Although this be vtterly euil, and most naughtily receiued any where, that Iurisdiction should be any part of patrimony, and of our rent (or reuenue) and dominion. But so largely stretcheth and rageth couetousnesse ouer all, that it hath made the thinges that are moste holy, as is magistracy, to be patrimoniall, and numbred it in a rent, but attributeth it not to the vertue and doctrine of them, that are capable of the same functions.

Bridges.

This is a moste dangerous conclusion that Danæus heere maketh of this matter. For by this rule, that Magistracy shoulde not be patrimoniall, or that it is vtterly euill and naughtily any where receiued, that iurisdiction should be any part of patrimony: he quite condemneth not only all the auncient birth-right of the Patriarkes, but also the prophery of Iacob, Gen. 49. ver. 10. The scepter shall not be taken from Iuda, and a gouernor from his Loynes, vntill he come with vs to be sent, and hee shall be the expectation of the Gentiles. And was not this promise renewed to Dauid, 2. Sam. 7. ver. 12. And to Solomon 1. Reg. 9. vers. 5. Which promises so continued, vntill their accomplishment in Iesus Chryste, that alwaies either in the supream iurisdiction of the kings, or at the least in some iurisdiction, and that in matters capitall pertaining to the Sanedrin, the Tribe of Iuda, the roote of Iesse, the stocke of David, and Salomon, or Nathan, had patrimoniall iurisdiction. Yea, the high Priest and all the Priests and all the Levites in that time before Christ, had also their iuridictions patrimoniall. And therefore patrimoniall iurisdiction is not a thing vtterly naught anie where, and brought in by the rage of couetousnesse, for it was then brought in by God himselfe. And though that sacrificing Priesthood be ceased in Christ, and the Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction of our ministerie now be not patrimoniall: yet can we not so saie of the Ciuill magistracie, for though Christ be both the King and Priest, prefigured by both their estates: yet sith he would not meddle with the external ciuill state of the magistracie, in such real manner as he medled with the Ecclesiasticall, wherein he both taught personally, and personallie also offered by himselfe, for a full and perfect sacrifice, to translate that Priesthood, and to rest it for ever in his owne person, and founded (in that respect) a newe ministerie vnto vs: but in the ciuill dominion he would not take vpon him the kindome due to him, but all in spirituall manner, confessing himselfe, though to be a King, yet that his kindome was not of this worlde: therefore the ciuill iurisdiction of magistracie and dominion, being allowed of God to be patrimoniall before, (though the Iewes pollicie and ciuill iurisdiction be extinguished,) remaineth entire throughout all Christendome, and ouer all the worlde wher soeuer it be, in the same nature, for this respect of patrimonie, that it did before, as a matter that Christ neyther translated, altered, nor medled withall.

These speeches therefore of Danzus, are most dangerous speeches, and not true. For hereby he vtterly condemneth all Princes titles of inheritance, as wel of men as of women. Yea, hee cleane contrarieth all, that his selfe hereby hath sayd before, and almost euen his owne last words. Did he not saie, that inferiour iuridictions, such as are of Dukes, Earles, Barons, Castellanes, are patrimoniall? And how then saith he heere, It is vtterly naught wher soeuer it be, that iurisdiction should bee any parte of patrimonie? May this serue (trow ye) for a sufficient excuse, to salue this most perillous assertion, because that through couetousnesse, vertue and learning is not alwaies preferred: Where election is to be bled, there (I graunt) vertue and learning is to be preferred. Yea, ther oftentimes, patrimonie is of purpose excluded, although there be both sufficient vertue and learning in the persons. But that the iurisdiction of all magistracie & dominion should goe by election, and none by patrimonie, would not onelie abrogate all that hetherto both in the Scripture, and in all Realmes Christian and Heathen, vniuersallie haue beene approued for good, lawefull, expedient, and necessarie: but would call in question all estates: yea, it would turquise and set all the world together by the eares.

I knowe also what Caluine saith on the 17. of Deut. vpon this point. But in reuerence I forbear him, and rather construe his wordes (in the gentlest sense I can) onelie vnto such offices, as may or should still passe by election. Neuerthelesse I wish, that those so excellent men had not measured all states by theirs, but remembred the olde Proverbe, Major est er- bis vrbe: and that they had bled in those so important matters, more circum- spect and aduised speeches. For some of our Brethren (I thinke) on theyr credite (if I may not rather call it credulitie) and imitation of such notable men, haue aduentured further ouer the shewes, than standeth with the due obedience of Christian (speciallie Protestant) subjects. Neither haue the disobedient Papists herein the advantage of vs, we beeing so farre from anie of their accustomed rebellious practises, that wee suffer not so much as anie of these incommodious speeches, to haue escaped anie of our dearest brethren, howsoeuer otherwise in Christ we honoꝝ them, and in the Gospel agree with them.

As for that Danæus referreth lastly vs to see the Canon, Mulierem. 33 Quest. 5. of this argument: it sufficeth to refer him also, vnto that we haue already seene, for the lawes full resolution of the same.

Now although on this foresayde occasion, I haue thus farre withdra- wen the, not vnwilling I hope to follow me (gentle Reader) from our Bre- threns Learned discourse, vpon the occasion of their citing Saint Paule, for the vncomlinesse that he reprobued among the Corinthians. 1. That Women shoulde preach in the Church: Wherevpon, in perusing the iudgement of these excellent men, Caluine and Danæus, they straight lead vs from Womens æconomicall or domesticall and matri- moniall obedience, and gouernment of man, to this question of Womens publike and ciuill gouernment; which they impugne by these arguments and contumelies aforesayd: following with Canalis the French faction, a- gainst the title and right of Womens gouernment: which hath carried me also into so whole a Discourse, that I woulde gladlie haue here stayde the course thereof, with desire of pardon, both of Danæus, (which is, GOD be praised, yet aline, and other wise an excellent ornament in Gods church) that I haue thus opposed my selfe against his opinion, for the danger of letting these things goe clære a waie vnaunswèred (which I mervail be- therto none hath looked vnto) and therefore I thought it not amisse, thus by the waie, to satisfie the scrupulous Reader somewhat in this point, and hope of the easier pardon for this long digression, though not im- pertinent, but much important: yet now, being euen readie to returne to our Brethrens Learned discourse: see how another couple (though an vn- euen paire) of famous writers as were before, Canalis and Danæus: so now Bodinus and Hotomannus, the one (whatsoeuer the other is) pro- fessing

As for Bodinus, is a great deale moze blame worthy, that twisting in generall of the common weale, not onelie vtterlie excludeth Womens government, but loadeth it after Canalis & the French manner, with heapes of vnttrue reportes & cholerik speeches. Who notwithstanding, hauing ben here in England, and with whom my selfe I haue conferred, and hee with his eyes hath beholden the excellencie of her Maiesties government, and in admiration confessed the same, yea, he hath bene toucht of her Maiesties neerer access and gracious conference: and yet see the vntthankfulnesse of the man, that I saie for the indignitie of the fact, of a man otherwise so learned (yet in his other woorkes not without great escapes) Ad vomitum canis How much

And where they were halfe hid befoze among his French, he hath now translated them into Latine, as by a tongue vniuersally moze knowen, to deface the government of women in all nations, but alacke poze, baingloious and intemperate man, in the iudgement of all godlie wise, hee procureth but his owne blemish. And yet, to giue him where hee is praise worthy; his one praise; befoze hee enter into this question, euen in the same Treatise, libro. 6. de Rep. capitulo. 5. And in concerning a Princes right of inheritaunce against election. Moreouer this, we must driue women furthest off from the maiestie of Empire (or gouernment) for the gouernment of women is an enimie vnto the lawes of nature, which hath giuen prudence, strength, magnanimitie, force of gouerning vnto men, from women hath she bereft the.

read there were, among the posterities of the progenie of the Ottomans) and most lamentable murthers of their kindred did insue: as when Amulius the younger brother, gate the kingdome of Albania from Numitor, & Aristobulus gate the kingdome of the Iewes fro Hyrcanus, For the ciuill warre: coude euer finde an ende, vntill by the sentence of Pompey the great, the kingdome was restored to Hyrcanus: notwithstanding Aristobulus seemed to bee borne for gouernment, and the other vnfit thereto. Which reason hath oftentimes caused the parents them-themselves to disturbe the rights of their children.. For when Ptolomeus the sonne of Lagus, breaking the lawe of Nations, gaue the kingdome of Egypt to the younger : hee caused the lawes of nature to bee violated, by the one brothers murthering of the other, Ptolmeus Phisco offended in the same errour. Who (beeing induced by the perswasion of his wife) preferred the younger before the elder. But when the Father was dead, the people expelled the younger, and restored the Scepters to the elder. Anaxandrides also, the king of the Lacædemonians, tooke the kingdome awaie from Cleomenus his eldest sonne, that the younger might raigne, not without great grieve of the people, because that (vnder the shew of vertue) the lawes of nations were broken, as Herodotus writeth. And although Pyrrhus had appointed the most valiant of his sons to bee the king to come : the people for all that preferred the eldest, which was more vnmeet for the warre. For, neither the vertues of the body or of the minde ought to be so esteemed, that for them we should swarue from the common Lawe of all nations.

Thus writeth Bodinus, and more at large. Pea, adding this withall, page. 730. Nec tantum propter ignauiam et inertiam primogenitus ab imperio non est repellendus, sed nec propter corporis deformitatem quidem. Neither one lie ought the eldest to be repulsed from the gouernment, for his slouthfulness and dulnesse : no, nor yet for the verie deformitie (or mishapenesse) of his bodie. Albeit by the lawes of Romulus and Lycurgus, it were lawfull to kill the monstrous births : notwithstanding, the Lawe of God suffereth not the prerogative of the first borne, to bee taken awaie by anie deformitie of the bodie. Which thing the Senate and people of Hungarie adiudged, in an example worthie memorie. For when Ladislaus was childlesse, hee adopted Almus his brothers younger sonne, refusing Coloman whome he commanded to bee entered into holie orders, and to be sent (as it were banished) ynto Parise, to take from him all desire of affecting the kingdome. For all ouer the whole state of his bodie hee was deformed, a stammerer, a buzzard, a limper, a crook back. Neuerthelesse when the king was dead, the Cities and the people had rather call that monster to the gouernment, than suffer the gouernment of the younger, and by their Embassadors obtained of the Bishop of Rome, that hee might be disgraced of his orders, sent home, and marie a wife. And no otherwise did Agefilaus, being a lame dwarfe gette the kingdome of the Lacædemonians (expelling the bastarde Leotichis) his aduersaries in vaine complaining, that they had a halting Kingdome.

Bodinusr. But Bodinus goeth further, At etiam diuina lex, &c. But the lawe of God also hath not onely bereft them the gouernment of the common weale, but also the gouernment of the familie. When as expressly it subdueth women vnder the gouernment of their husbands. And hereto he quoteth Gen. 3.

Bridges. We haue sufficientlie and at large answered already vnto Canalis and Daneus for this point, concerning the difference of the æconomicall and pollicall gouernments. The lawe of God speaketh expresse of the æconomicall gouernment of the husband. And yet euen in the æconomical gouernment, if the woman be a virgin, hauing no parents, or a widow: may she not then be chiefe Ladie, mistresse, and gouernour of her owne householde gods, and of all the persons in that her family: but that another must be her gouernour in the same? And yet, there are many things in a familie, and in the lawes and administration of an householde, that she in her owne person is as unfit, and perhaps as unable, to doe or exercise, as in a common weale, neuertheless this letteth not by Gods lawe, but that shee not hauing anie husband, is the chiefe gouernour of her householde.

Bodinusr. But for the common weale, Bodinus addeth: Bodinusr argument for GODS plagues. And almightie God so often as he testifieth, that he will most sharplie reuenge himselfe on the enemies of his name: hee threatneth that they shall be subiect to the gouernments and lawes of women, as though that were the most extreame of all euils and calamities.

Bridges. Bodinus being no great nor sound diuine, may the more be bozne with, in misquoting the Chapter, and perchance that is not his default: but his mistreporting of the holie Scripture, is in him lesse excusable. In the 8. of Esaie God indeed threatneth curses, and most dreadfull reuenge on the enemies of his name: but no such curse of womens gouernment, but a curse of the gouernment of such as were men. If he means the third Chapter of Esaie, we haue answered the same vnto Daneus, and the same answers may serue him, though no Protestant. Yea, I thinke, that when he came in to England, he wished in his heart (if he loued his Countrie) that Fraunce were cursed no worse of God, vnder their king: than England (God be praised for it) is vnder our Queene. The Prophet speaketh indeede not of anie curse, threate, or plague of God to come to the state by heroicall women: but by effeminate men. Yea, he that promised that curse: promised (and that by the same Prophet) this blessing: And Queenes shal be thy Nurses the comfort of this blessing.

Moreover (sayth he) the Romane lawes haue withdrawn women far off from all ciuill offices and publike functions, not onely for that they want prudence (as Martian thought, when among all women, hee sayde onely Pallas wanted a mother, beeing begotten of Iupiters braine, that it might bee vnderstoode wisdome could not follow from women) but also that mens functions, are contrarie to the sexe and shamefastnesse of women.

If Bodinus had anie shame, or grace, or truth, or wisdome, or wit, but so meane as might becom such a man, hee woulde neuer haue let these wordes escape him. Doth he thinke to plaie out the matter thus with this vnsauouris test that Minerva had no mother, of whom for her wisdome the Poets sained that she sprang out of Iupiters braines? Was not Bod-inus brainlesse: or had he more braines than wit, when hee wrote this?
What Martian testeth (whether he meane Martian the Emperour, or Mar-tianus Mineus, or Martianus Rota) is to little purpose. If Martianus the Emperour had not found that the Emperesse and virgin Pulcheria had had both wit, wisdome, and prudence in government of the Empire, hee had not come to the government of it.

Bridges.

Haue not diuerse women both Audenes & subiects excelled in prudence?
If Bodinus did not leaue delight to alleadge Poets than Scripture, hee shoulde haue found many commended for their great wisdome and prudence, farre passing Pallas. If the Poets also did not rather giue vs to vn-derstand, in the person of Pallas, that not onely in man, but also in woman, wisdome and prudence, namelie of government in peace and warre, was the onely and speciall gifte of God, comming not by the parents, father or mother, but that God of his mere influence, inspired this gifte of prudent government not onely to man, but vnto woman, euen as he pleased, and as we reade the examples, and finde the present experience in our Pallas, such another in deede, as France could neuer shewe the like, and therefore Bodinus braines did lesse conceiue it.

As for that hee sayth of the Romane lawes, and the practise of their estates, wee haue verie sufficientlie inough sene the quite contra-rie. And haue likewise discharged that shifte, that for Women to deale in mens functions, is contrarie to their sexe and shamefastnesse. The publik supreme government of a kingdome is no such peculiar function of a man, but that it is competible both to man and woman, and the calling and gifte of God, in which estate, they (whosoever) represent God and his power: in regarde whereof, neither person nor sexe of male or fe-

Bodinus.

Bodinus argument a minore ad maiur, and his examples.

But here Bodinus comming to examples, telleth howe nothing troubled the Romane Senate more, than that the Emperour Heliogabalus brought his mother into the Senate, not to giue her sentence, but to beholde that most holie assemblie of the Citie. Which also (sayth hee) seemed newe vnto our auncestours, when Mawd the Countesse of Arthoise was present, while the Councell iudged Robert Arthoise his cause. But, if it seeme absurde and ridiculous for women to intermeddle in the functions and assemblies of men: much more absurde ought it to seeme, that those things which appertaine to the maiestie of the gouernment, should be laide open to the lust of women: but most absurd to beare the Scepters.

Bridges

If Bodinus would tell the truth, I thinke he woulde saie, that the Senate of Rome, although at that time (God wot) not verie holie, was a little moze troubled with the presence of that effeminate and monstrous Emperour, and with his most dissolute gouernment: than with his mothers onellie comming into the Senate house, and there, so much as but looking on them. If neither she no; he had attempted farre worse things than that, neither the Senate no; the state had bene much troubled or hurt by them. Mœsia both the graundmother of him, and of Alexander Seuerus, and Mammea, Alexanders mother, did moze than thus in the state of gouernment, and that without offence vnto the Senate, or detriment vnto the state. But whatsoeuer they did, haue we not heard of many farre better examples, than that wicked mother of the monstrous Heliogabalus? As of Debora, sitting in iudgement: of Iudith, making her oration before all the assemblie of the Elders and people: and of diuerse others. Doth Bodinus come in with such an oueris and amazement, at the onellie comming of a woman into an assemblie, and but beholding, or hearing of the Iudges? Neither Moses in his sitting in iudgement, no; Salomon in all his roialtie, was euer so daintie: but that euen women also might looke vpon them, yea, and priuate Women come themselues, and pleade theyr rightes before them, and heare their inditements. But it was newes in Fraunce, to see a woman but to come into the place onellie, and standing by in silence to heare, how a matter was adiudged. If Bodinus would looke better on his owne Countries olde Chronicles, or but consider those that we haue noted, it would not seeme so new a matter. But whatsoeuer that Mawde made there: our owne Countrie hath a better example, of a moze noble Mawde the Empresse, and that had no small roialties in Fraunce to, besides many other far moze excellent women, that haue spoken many notable publike speeches, both with the praise of God & man, & to the benefit of

uid, Salomō and other Princes, per-

of the Church and common weale. So that, it is no such absurd nor ridiculous thing, for such women as haue lust cause, to bee in open assemblie. Neither is this any lapping of themselues in mens peculiar function. And therefore, for anie thing in this argument, which Bodinus on these examples sheweth, a minore ad maius: Women may gouerne wel enough, & beare the roiall Scepter, that God putteth into their hands. Not, that the things which appertain to the Maiestie of gouernment shuld be laid open to womens lust: nor to mens lust neither, but not to be locked up frō their right. These are but ouerlustie speeches for so graue a man & so weightie a matter, but more vnseemly for goble Princes Maiesties.

Heretupon he frameth a Dilemma. For first (saith he) there is one of these two. Either the woman shall bee ioyned in mariage, or else she shall gouerne by her selfe. If shee marie: yet notwithstanding it is womens gouernment: because she marieth with that lawe, that the rightes of the Maiestie & gouernment may remaine together, but not to her husband. For that expressly was excepted, when Isabel Queene of Castile was married to Ferdinand king of Aragon. And the same againe was called vpon, in the mariage of Philip Prince of Spaine, and Mary Queene of England. Which also was prouided for, in the mariage couenants of Sigismund the Emperour of the Germanes, & Marie Queene of Hungarie, whome her subiects called King Marie. Which lawes were made with most vnequall conditions, sith that the husband, which by the law of nature is the head of the family, and hath the gouernment domesticall, is compelled publikly to the womans gouernment, because the gouernment domesticall hath nothing common, with the gouernment publike. And hereto he quoteth the ciuill Lawe, Uxor non agit ad Trebell.

Dilemma.

And can Bodinus see this manifest difference: and not see withall, how he fully answers his Dilemma? But we haue seene this also sufficiently answered before, both in the examples of Debora, & the queen of the South, & diuerse others. As for the couenants in these mariages, were verie good & necessary for both estates, & nothing dishonorable to the husbands. So, not that tearme of the Queene of Hungary, that was called king: if we understand it as our Lawiers do, that, be the person raigning, man or woman, yet the law for the dignitie of the sexe, still acknowledgeth all as king. And as the Scripture containeth Eue in the name of Adam, & women & children often, in the generall name of man. And this both Bodinus owne example that he alleadgeth hereunto, confirme.

For (saith he) when Fabius Maximus, which was called Cunctator, the delaier, riding on horsback, approched neere his sonne being Consul: he was of him comanded to alight, whē as (the father) might by his fatherly authoritie haue killed him, indicta causa, without hearing the cause.

spoken? Could Fabius Maximus at that time being but sent as a Legate vnto his sonne, then Consull, & chiefe magistrate of the common weale, haue put him the chiefe magistrate to death, and that without his cause heard? Was the lawe that he quoteth, In suis de liberis et posthu (which is long since abolished & of no force) to be vnderstande so absolutely & in generall, that it admitted no exposition, no, not of the publike and chiefe magistrate? Yea rather, is not the chiefe magistrate (in a higher thā the natural & priuate respect) the Father of the Countrey & common weale, & so, of e- uery particular person or priuate Father? Which thing Fabius Maximus did well consider, that his sonne Fabius Gurges did represent in his magi- stracie & politicall fatherhood, an higher estate and maiestie, than for that time his naturall fatherhood could compare vnto. And therefore he aligh- ted forthwith, as he was commanded, & obeieith his magistrate, not his son, & reioyceth in his sonnes doing, that he could thus wisely discern between the states. Which example (with others in the Scripture, of Iacob and Io- seph: of Salomon and Bethsabée, cleerey confuteth Bodinus dilemma, & euidenth all the cause. For, if this be no blemish to the Father to obey his sonnes commandement & publike authoritie, not in respect he is his na- turall sonne, but his ciuill father, nor any absurditie or inequalitytie in the sonne, to ouer-rule & command his Father, not as his priuate Father, but as his politike subiect: (for the proportions of this rule & obedience, are not here Arithmetical, but Geometrical, & the iustice of the distributue, not comutative:) how is not this absurditie of Bodinus, and these vnequal lawes (as he supposeth) cleerey answered: when the woman obeieith her husband as her husband, & yet, the husband obeieith the wife as his prince as we haue seene before in the example of Debora & her husband, not he, but she being iudge of the people, & so, in that regard, his iudge also: with- out any inequalitytie or absurditie. Yea, much more easie may this be in the state of man and wife, than in the state betwixt the Father and the sonne: the sonne owing far more obedience to his Father, & the Father hauing more authoritie ouer the sonne, as his sonne: thā the husband hath autho- ritie ouer the wife, or the obedience that the wife oweth to her husband. But since these authorities (as Bodinus cannot chouse but confesse) are so distinguished, that the one hath nothing comon with the other, the pub- like with the domestical, the naturall with the ciuill: this iustice that giueth in each proportion Singula singulis, wil neuer confound these things, nor be- rene anye partie, sonne or wife, of their honour in the one, for their seruice in the other, but let both stand intier in their states.

The other part of Bodinus dilemma, if the Queen marrie not: because it is nothing but an heape of contumelies against womenkind, with more impotent inuectiues thā we haue had before in Canalis: both for the hono- & shamefastnes of the sex, & for the verie shame of so learned a mans forget-getting

getting himself, I passe it over as a fallation ab accidente, as was the other part of the argument. The examples of Vasthies arrogancie & disobedience is nothing pertinent. The souerainty of the kingdome was not in the right of her, but of her husband, & so, in all respects she ought obedience. As for the examples of Ioane Queen of Naples, Athalia, Cleopatra, Zenobia, Irene, &c. We haue already heard of many better, & haue seene also what is to be sayd, of the most & worst of these women. But hee ought not, for more obdiousnesse to slander anie, as that Cleopatra (to raigne alone) slue her brother: so many credible stories testifieng the contrarie.

These are the best of the arguments that he maketh. For all the other, (saue that which he hath of the Salik law) are not arguments: but his ouermuch intermedling in matters of estate. As for the byging of the Salike lawe, wee haue seene before many better consultations of it, than he alleageth anie confirmations. First, after he hath set downe the words of the law it self: De terra vero Salica nulla portio Hereditatis Mulieri veniat sed ad virilem sexum tota terra Hereditas perueniat: to proue this law, page, 745. he saith. At etiam Childeberti, &c. But also by the edict of Childebert king of the French, the which is comprehended in the Salik lawes, wherein the nephues are called to the succession of the grandfathers, the women are remoued a farre off.

Bodinus argument of the Salike lawe.

The Salike lawe.

How doth not this deuise bewray it selfe, ent as the asse in the lions skin, by his ouer long eares? saue that this forgette, by his ouershort reckoning of Childeberts time, sheweth that these Salik lawes are nothing so ancient as they pretend? For if this Edict of Childebert be comprehended in the Salike laws, and the Salike laws were made by Pharamund. There is not a nephew succeeding the grandfather, but rather the grandfather succeeding the nephues nephew. If not the great grandlie, father to these Salike laws, intruding it selfe to exclude womens government.

Bridges

But to iustifie this better, saith Bodinus. And verily if there were no Salike lawe, when as for the tipe of the gouernment, there was strife between Philip earle of Valois & king Edward: & Philip maintained the Salik law: Lege Voconia, by the law of Voconius: but Edward maintained the protection of his cause by the hereditarie laws of the Romanes: a decree was made by the consent of all the Fathers and Princes, that no man in that disputation, should vse the authoritie of forain laws: but that euery man should study to interpret the Salike lawe for his right. To what purpose should they so doo, if there had bene no Salike lawe?

Bodinus.

What kind of reason shall we call this? Might not Philip and his associates saue such a law: or might they not increase it, or misconfer it, if there had bene anie such an one? Might it not haue ben as well antiquated and altered, as long before that time Voconius lawe was? For if Voconius Lawe had at that time stood in force, howe coulde King Edwards gument.

Edward haue pleaded his right frō the Hereditarie lawes of the Romanes? Was not Voconius and his law Romane? But such broken stufte as Voconius laue, was good plea for Philips broken title. and for the Salike laws defence. As for king Edwards plea from the Romane hereditarie laws the in force, sheweth that the Romane laws were not against womens titles. And that they wer in force also euen in France, which was a good plea. Albeit King Edward pleaded higher, euen from the law of nations, and from the written lawe of God.

The foule
practises of Philip for the vphol-ding of the Salike lawe.

Pea, but (saith Bodinus) when Philip made a decree with the consent of all the Fathers & Princes, that none should vse in this disputation the authoritie of foraine lawes: but euerie one studie to interpret the Salike law for his right: why wold they so haue done, if there had ben no Salike lawe? This is a proper prooue of the autentike force and truth of the Salike law, and praise of their upright lawes, that they set out, to vphold their Salike law withall. When Philip saue that king Edward pleaded the law of God, the lawe of Nations, and the ciuill lawe of the Romanes, which law stood then forcible euen in France: by & by he forbade such pleas, and calleth them all foraine lawes. So that, for this Salike lawe, the French nation renounceth the lawe of all nations, yea, maketh Gods lawe a foraine lawe, to bring in this Heathen Salike lawe. Was not this Philip a most Christian king that made this decree? And why the used he Voconius law? Was not this foraine? But in forbidding al foreine laws, did he not forbid the Salike lawe withall? Which was a law (if there were anie such) of the olde Francs, & at that time (as yet now, & long before) of the germanes, bordering on the riuer Sala, & not nere anie part of Gallia. He forbiddeth al men to vse anie so much as disputation, in these other lawes y were not forein. Where learned he this example? of them that forbade the Disciples to speake anie moze in Christs name? But Philip goeth further, charging not onely to vse onlie y Salike law, but to studie also how to interpret it for his right. What meant he by that would he haue them studie to hale and withe with their misconstructions, the interpretation of the lawe for his purpose? What a foule practise was that, and indeed if we confer this with their own Chronicles, we haue heard, how (when he could not stop their mouths thus, that among the French defended king Edwards title) he put them to death.

Bodin^{us} his sorie conclusion of the Salike lawe.

Pea, but (saith Bodinus) could they haue done this, had there bene no Salike law. And is this then Bodinus his best conclusion? God wot, this is but a sorie conclusion to proue the truth of this law, or the force of it: when Philip was faine with such vnlawfull lawes, yea, with death it selfe to restrain the that called the credit therof in questiō. But I wold learne, what Philip meant by this law, that they shuld studie to interpret the Salik law for his right? Doth this law the admit diuers interpretations, & y such interpretations, y it may be interpreted other wise than Philip commanded the

to

to studie how they might interpret it for his title: And that they must bee fain to studie out such an interpretation of the law? Dea veritie. For if we whence those Francons were called Salij, or Salikes, whose both kingdome & name is now well neere worne out of vse: he telleth of their four peeres and Indges, Wisogast, Arbogast, Salogast, Windogast, and that fro this Salogast, they saie, that the law was found, which of him euen to this daie is called Salike, of his name, whereby theyr errour may bee reponed that name the Lawe Salike of Salte, that is, prudence: or that thinke the word Gallica to be corrupted (into Salica) then the which, nothing can be spoken more absurd. But farre greater errors haue sprong out of the same fountaine. First that by those authors it was beleued, that the Sal- like lawe did appertaine to the publik right of a Citie and Empire (or go-uernmēt) of the hereditarie successiō of a kingdōe. For the Tables of the Salike lawe were found and brought forth to light not many yeres hence.

 By the inscription of which it is knowen, that they were first written and set out about the age of Pharamund. But in those ther is extant this one Chapter. Title. 62. No portion of the inheritance of the Salike land passeth to a woman, but this the mans sexe doth obtaine, that is, the sonnes children, after long time contention is raised De allode terra, of the ownship (or right) of the land: Non per stirpes, sed per capita diuidatur. Let it bee diuided not by the stockes for issues, but by the polles. The like Lawe is extant apud Ripnaries. Tit. 58. and also apud Angliis. Tit. 7. Where it is so far off fro that that it was ordained of the inheritances of kingdōes, that those laws appertain not so much to the successions of fees, but onlie of ownships, (or the things that are ones owne) although indeed a dowrie was assigned vnto the woman out of those ownships. Thus saith Hotto- man of this Salike lawe, whereof the French erre so foulie, and make such a boasting. As for that he addeth, Howsoeuer it be, first this is euident, that although there be extant neither anie Chapter of the lawe Salike, nor yet

The argument of the 10. Booke.

THe 10. Booke concerning the Ceremonies of our Church, for the fruitfulnessse, vse, and vrging of them. Whether confirmation of children by the Bishop, and the churching or solemne thanksgiuing of women after child-birth be utterlie to be reiected. Whether the dead should be buried without anie ceremonie, forme of seruice, or sermon, or presence of the Pastor, &c. For hot contentions in small matters, & of a true pastors dutie about the Churches constitutions. Of the Pastors authoritie in common with the elders. Of the power of order and iurisdiction. Of Timothies authoritie, & of the gouerning Elders authoritie. How vnnecessarie and daungerous to the state and magistrates, the erecting of these supposed Seniors would be. Of the remouing all vsurped authoritie. What kind of mastership and office of being greatest Christ allowed: and of tyrannizing in the Church. Whether all the rules of gouernment and pollicy be set downe and prescribed in Gods worde, as the doctrine of faith, and precepts of morall life are. Whether a Bishop haue any separate authoritie frō others, or the Apostles had any such authoritie, and whether Paul deliuered anie such to Timothie. Whether his rules to Timothie be generall rules to all Bishops of their authoritie and manner of ordaining Ministers, & iudging of them. Of Paul and Barnabas elections and ordainings. Whether separate authoritie inferre sole and absolute Monarchicall authoritie. What regiment Christ left to his church, and of his sentence Matth. 18. ver. 15. for the consent of the household seruants, and whether we should consent vnto our Breth. or our brethren to vs, in these ceremonies. Whether all that consent haue authority & that equal. Of the difference of the churches, and of the Persons authorities in them.

The lear BY which it is euident that Saint Paules wordes are wrested of some, ned disc. cleane contrarie to his meaning, to make him a patrone of idle, if not hurtfull ceremonies, maintained more vpon will than reason, or graunted, of Gods word, vnder the coulour or order and decencie, not onelie with neglect, but also with great hinderance of Gods building, by spoiling the Church of so many learned pastors.

We vse no wresting of the Apostles wordes.

Dapplie Saint Paules sentence, Let all things bee done according to order, to the patronage of hurtfull or of idle ceremonies; I graunt, were an euident wresting of his wordes. But this would be proued, and not sayd onelie, that we so doe. Will haue saene and proued too euidentlie, howe our Bzethzen are overbolde to wrest Saint Paules wordes, other wise than either he spake or meant. As for vs,

We haue no maintenāce of idle and hurtfull ceremonies.

we maintaine no idle Ceremonies, & much lesse hurtful. If anie such shall be shewed, we are as readie as anie our Bzethzen in all humble and dutiful manner, to desire the abolishing of them. But we hope all such are by law and order already removed. Would God our Bz. would remeber by whose indeauour they are taken a waie, and in thankfulness be contented. For what ceremonies can they proue, are by anie authoritie commaunded to be vsed, that are idle and hurtfull? Haue we anie at al, erept those that either God himselfe hath prescribed, or we haue ground and graunt of the lawfull vse of them, out of Gods word? or that, being of their nature mere indifferent, haue as much reason as will for them to be vsed, not vnder the coulour, but in verie deede, onely for order and decencie, & so consequentlie for edification, and not other wise. And may not indifferent ceremonies be so vsed? And both the Ministers and the people, so farre forth bee bound without scruple of conscience, and matter of Religion, but onelie for obedience sake, as matters of decent comelinesse, and the edification of quiet order, to vse them: and yet neuer (vnder the coulour of preiudice to the libertie of Christianitie) to disturbe the peace of the Church, the course of the Gospell, the obedience of the Prince, for the resisting of them? Verily, if anie here by doe hinder the building of Gods Church: our bzethzen herein haue to take great heede, that make so great, and so vnnessearie troubles in the Church, for these Ceremonies, with great hinderance of Gods building. As for our partes, if anie such Ceremonies as these, indifferent in their owne nature (saue that by order they bee appointed) were also removed: we doate not on them, but could well trowgh bee content, so that by order and lawe they were removed, and some other as comelie and decent ceremonies, by her Maestties authoritie, and by our whole Churches consent, were orderly ordained in their places. But thus cere-

What ceremonies, & how we vse them

disorderlie to take these a waie, and that with such reproches, both of these ceremonies & of all those that only in this manner, for externall order, and obedience sake, doe submit the to leaue it free to euery congregation, to call all our ceremonies off, or to take what other new they shal like better, & to alter them also as they list, either euery man, or euery congregation, at their pleasure: or though they would ty themselves moze strictly to them, yet lining al vnder one state, to innouate or abrogate any authorized, without the licence & authority of that state: this were (me thinks) not onely an vndecent & disorderly thing, & nothing furthering, yea, greatly hindring the building of the church: but very dangerous both to the higher powers & to the whol realm. And as for the hinderers of Gods building, by spoiling the church of so many learned pastors: we know not any church, or learned pastor therein, that need so to be spoiled, except that any, moze vpb will than reason or learning (be they other wise neuer so well learned) doe wilfully withhold themselves from doing their moze important & necessary duty, in yelding vnto (though not necessary nor waighty ceremonies, in their owne nature: yet) so necessary & waightie in y manner as they are ordained and prescribed: that at leastwise, they ought to tollerate them, for feare of great dangers in these perillous daies, (although they wished them away) & not to spoil the Church of themselves, & of their ministry, nor to make such troubles and diuisions in the Church, for the removing of them. Which is nothing according to the duty eyther of faithfull ministers, or of loiall subiects, as they ought to be, and (these controuersies set aside) I trust they are.

There are besides these thinges, certain other matters: as confirmation, churching of women, buriall of the deade, thought to belong to the office of a B. or pastor. Whereof the first two are meere deuises of men, and ought to haue no place in the Church of Christe. The other, albeit it be to bee retained with a certain honesty, yet it is not to be tied to the proper office of a pastor.

There are now 3. other matters, confirmation of those y are baptised, Churching or publique thanksgining of women, after their deliuerance from child-birth, and lastly the buriall of the dead, which our brethren find first this fault withall: that they should be thought to belong to the office of a B. or Pastor. This goeth very hard, that none of all these thinges, may not only not be tied to a B. or a Pastors office: but that they may not bee so much as thought to belong vnto them. Their reason is, that the first two are meere deuises of men, and ought to haue no place in the Church of Christ. And is confirmation to be thus symple condemned, and that as a meere deuise of men? If they said, such confirmation, as the apertaries of the gospel bled, as, to make it a sacrament, or to tie it to necessity of salvation: or to vse it with any of the superstitious trinkets that they prophaned it withall, or to hold any of the errors that they maintained about it: then indeede this speeches should haue had good pretence. But we vse none of all these things, but such a reuerend order, as in all pointes is agreeable to the manner of the very Apostles: to understande in what sort the parties were baptized, to see that the parties which were baptized (because they are included in the covenant, that God would also be the God of our seeds) should not beeing growne to understanding, openly before that pastor, which hath the superiority of Episcopall dignity which we haue proued, that from, and in the very Apostles times, some pastor had, among & ouer some other (his fellow pastors) declare the summe of their faith, and he especially lay his handes on them, and pray for them, that God would more and more confirme them in that faith, in which they were baptized and haue professed: as the Apostles used to lay their hands, and to pray for the confirmation of such, as by other pastors had bin baptized and shall we call this order, a meere deuise of men? and say, that it ought to haue no place in the Church of Christ? True it is, that at the so doing of the Apostles, they receiued commonly withall the miraculous giftes of the holy ghost, according to the dispensation of that time. Neuerthelesse, that was not their onely ende: nor the order of laying on of handes vpon them, which were to be confirmed by him that was the foresayde apostle, vnto whom the superiour Episcopall dignity among the Pastors was committed, did so cease: but was continued, both in the Apostles times, while any one of them James, Iude or Iohn were liuing without any contradiction of them: and so, simply was used, according to the Apostles maner, til the other additions after ward, as that of Chrisme, &c, were ioined vnto it. Which addition Chrisme, though it be very ancient, yet we reiecting it as a meere deuise herein of men, & reducing confirmation to the first simplicity of prayer & to the ceremony only of laying on of handes, especially by those that haue the foresaid episcopall superiority: why should our brethren here asfirm, that it ought to haue no place in the Church of Christ?

Chrysost.

Melancthon

But this so hard censure of theirs, neither agreeth with those our Brethren of the German and Saxon Churches: nor yet with Caluine in Geneva. Melancthon in Analif. Locorum com. saith, Confirmation among the auncients, was a triall of doctrine, in which they that were to be confirmed, did recite the sum of the Christian doctrine. Whereunto was added publike praier for them. But of the Apostles was added also, imposition of hands, which the manifest giftes of the holy ghost followed. As for that popish confirmation, is altogether a voide and idle ceremony. Neuertheles in the meane time, it should bee profitable for the triall of doctrine, to be made with the publike prayer for them. Which certainly should not be in vaine. Herbrandus in compendio theologiae, following Melancthon, and writing of confirmation, sayth: What doost thou think of of Confirmation? properly it is not a sacrament, But in the ancient time it was a triall of the Doctrine, made in the Institution of Christian religion, (as the Catechisme is among vs) in the which, they that were Catechised, did render a reason of their faith, and did testify, that they embraced this onely religion, and to dissent from Ethniks and from heretikes. Which being publicly done of the B. the prayers of the Church were added, with the imposition of hands. At which imposition, in the time of the Apostles, they were manifestly endued with the holy ghost. As it is manifest in the Acts, the 19. chap. Afterward by successe of time, when myracles ceased in the Church, the ceremony of the Imposition of handes was neuerthelesse retained. Whereby those that were baptised, were prepared to the Christian conflict, & by the prayers of the Church and solemn blessing, were confirmed. But the age that came after, thrust vnto the Church a certaine feigned confirmation for a sacrament. &c.

Thus toucheth also Herbandus of this matter.

Helhusius in examine theologicis. loc. 18. de sacram. What thinkest thou of Confirmation? the answer. Confirmation is not a Sacrament. For it is not an externall action peculiarly commaunded of God, neither is it a seale of the promise of grace. The auncients searched the profiting of Children in the doctrine of the Catechisme, and those that were rightly instituted, they admitted to the holy Communion. This is a laudable discipline in the Church, if superstition be absent.

Kemnitius after he hath confuted the Papists errors of Confirmation These thinges (saith he) being thus vnfolded, the examination of the canons of confirmation shall bee easy and playne. For, whereas that the first canon condemneth such a confirmation as consisteth in a Catechisme, and childrens profession of the faith: it hath this meaning and reason. Our men haue often shewed that the rite of confirmation, (the traditions vnprofitable, superstitions & repugnāt to the scripture being remoued) both it may be vsed godly and to the churches edification, according to the consent of the scripture, after this maner: to wit, that they which are baptised in their infancy (for such is nowe the state of the church) when they came to the yeares of discretion, shoulde be diligently instructed in a certaine & simple catechism of the churches doctrine: and when they seemed to haue meetely well perceiued the beginnings: they shoulde afterwarde be presented to the Bishop and to the church. And there heare the child that was baptised in his infancie, which shold first with a short & simple warning bee admonished of his baptism: to witte, that he was baptized: howe and why: & into what hee was baptized: what the whole trinity gaue & sealed vp vnto him in that baptism the contract of peace, the couenant of grace: how the renouncing Satan the professio of faith, the promise of obediēce was there made. Secondly, the childe him-selfe should before the Church declare, his owne and the publike profession of this doctrine and faith. Thirdly, he should be asked of the principal points of the Christian religion: he should answer to euery one of them: if he did not so wel vnderstand them, he should be better instructed. Fourthly, he should be admonished, and this he should declare in his profession, that he dissenteth frō all heathē, hereticall, phanaticall, and prophane opinions. Fifthly, a graue and serious exhortation out of the worde of God, should be added, that hee should perseuer in the couenant of baptisme, and in that doctrine & faith, and with often profiting be confirmed. Sixtly, a publike prayer should be made, for those children, that God with his holy spirite woulde vouchsafe to gouerne, keepe, and confirme them, in this profession. To the which prayer, the laying on of handes may bee adhibited without superstition. Neither should that prayer be vaine, for it relieth on the promises of the gift of perseuerance, and on the grace of confirmation.

Such a rite of confirmation shal bring with it very much profit, to the edification of youth & of the whole Church. For it were agreeable both to the Scripture, and to the more pure antiquitie. For in the Apostles laying on of their hands, that there was a triall of doctrine, & profession of faith, the history, Acts. 19. manifestly doth witnesse. Of the exhortation also vnto perseuerance, of the confirming them by the worde, in the doctrine & faith which once they had receiued: the examples of the apostolicall Church are extant, Acts. 14. 15. & 18. And that publike prayer was adhibited, the history witnesseth, Acts. 8. Thus speaketh the 7. Canon of the Council of Laodicea & the 8. of the Council of Arles, concerning the triall and profession of doctrine, & faith in confirmation as we haue before noted. And therefore the Canon of the Council of Orleance, requireth a perfect age in confirming. Neither agreeth this euill hereunto, that Dionisius in the end of his ecclesiasticall Hierarchie, writeth of the Master of the catechisinges, when the children baptized in their infancy, were deliuered to be instructed, that they might with doctrine and exhortations be trayned vp to persourme & keepe the profession of the faith the renouncing of Sathan and the promise of the obedience of God made in their baptism. These things were proposed in the conference at Ratisbone in the yeare. 1541. And so hee telleth howe Eccius in the name of the papists did vtterly & proudly reiect all these thinges, affirming that in confirmation the vse of reason must not be tarried for.

Thus notably and at large, both Kernarius also declare and approue, this good order and rite of confirming children, and howe contumeliously the Papistes doe reiect it. This therefore sauezeth nothing of popery, nor of any other error, or superstition but is Godly, reuerend, and very beneficiall to youths, and to the whole Churches edification.

And

And what doth Caluine in his Institutions, differ from these, concerning the auncient custome of Confirmation? In the ancient time (saith he) this was the manner, that the children of the Christians, after they were growne vp, were presented before the Bishop, to fulfill that office (or duty) which was exacted of them, that being of ripe yeares, offered themselves to baptisme. For these sat among them that were catechized, vntill such time as being orderly instructed in the mysteries of the fayth, they were able to declare the confession of the fayth, before the B. and the people. Those infantes therefore which were initiated by baptisme, because they had not made confession of the faith before the church, at the end of their Childhood, or in the entry of their springallship, were again presented of their Parents, were examined of the Bishoppe, according to the forme of a Catechisme, which they had then certaine and common. But to the end that this action, which otherwise ought worthily to haue bin graue and holy, shoulde haue the more reuerence and dignitie, the ceremony also of the imposition of handes was adhibited. Thus was the childe (his faith being approued) dismissed with a solemne blessing. The ancients do often make mention of this maner. Pope Leo saith: if any returne from Heretikes, let him not be baptised againe: but for that which wanted vnto him, let the vertue of the spirite bee conferred vnto him, by the Bishops imposition of handes. Here our aduersaries wil cry, that it may be rightly called a sacrament, wherein the holy ghost is conferred. But Leo him-selfe elsewhere expoundeth what hee meaneth by these words. He that is baprised (saith he) among heretikes, let him not be rebaptized, but by the inuocation of the holy Ghoste, let him by imposition of handes be confirmed: because he receiued on- ly the forme of baptisme, without the sanctification. And Hierome against the Luciferians mentioneth it. Albeit I deny not that Hierome was somewhat overshoot therein, that he saith it was the Apostles obser- uation, notwithstanding, he is moſte farre from the toyes of these men. And he mitigateth the selfe same thing, when hee addeth that this blessing was giuen to the only Bishops, rather for the honor of their priest- hooſe, than of the necessity of the Lawe. Such an imposition of handes therefore which may bee done simply in the place of blessing. I doe commend, and woulde that it were restored at this day into his pure vse. But the late age hauing almost blotted out the matter, haue placed for a sacrament of God, I knowe not what feigned confirmation. &c.

So the therefore Caluine him-selfe thus farre sothe, acknowledgeth this to be the auncient order of confirmation in the Church, and com- mending the same, wisheth that it were restored and euen as hee wished, we haue restored it, and abolished all the Popish superstitions and errors that succeeded: how intemperately doe our brethren here say, that it ought to haue no place in the Church of Christ? But what reasons more than Caluine had, haue our Brethren utterly to displace it?

The learned disc.
pag. 73. And as for confirmation (say they) it ought therefore to be shut out, and haue no place in the Church of God, as well because it displaced catechizing, and brought in steede thereof vaine toyes, and childishe ceremonies to the great hurt of the Church, as for that also it derogateth much from the dignity of Baptizme, the Sacrament of the Lorde, and is extolled aboue it, beeing a deuise of man, and is pretended to be a sign to certifie the Children of the fauour and gracious goodnesse of God, towards them, falsely grounded vpon the example of the Apostles. Whereas the ministracion of baptism, is permitted to euery hedgepreest Minister and Deacon.

Bridges The confirmation that we do vse, as it bringeth no vaine toyes, nor childish ceremonies into the Church of God, nor is vsed to the great hurt nor to any hurt of the Church at all: so is it, so farre from displacing Catechizing, that (as we haue shewed out of Caluine and other) it was both vsed with catechizing in the ancient Churches, and with vs it is one of the principall means for the maintenance of it. And therefore, if there were no other reason for the holding of it, but euen this (so long as it maintaines no euil besides) sith this good at the least commeth by it, that our children are the rather endued to be catechized: it ought not to bee displaced and shut out of the church of God, since Catechizing is not onely not displaced, but so greatly furthered by it.

Our confirmation displaceth not but maintaineth catechizing.

And whereas our brethren say, also it derogateth much from the dignity of Baptizme, the sacrament of the Lord, and is extolled aboue it, being a deuise of man: If they meane the popish sacrament of confirmation, that is another matter: they impugn one thing & wee maintaine another.

Wee prefer not nor make equal confirmation with baptizme. For, we neither account confirmation to be any sacrament at all, nor extoll it aboue, nor yet make it equal vnto baptizme. But vse it onely as a good & conuenient ceremony, order, or rite, helping more and more to the confirming of them that are baptized, in the profession of their faith, which they make before the B. being now more strengthened & confirmed therein, by his approbation in solenne laying of his hands vpon them and and praying together with the Church, that God would confirm them.

And where they say, it is pretended to be a sign, to certify the children of the fauor & gracious goodnes of God towards them, falsly grounded vpon the example of the apostles: We say not confirmation is a sign, though the imposition of hands be a signe. If they mean by these wordes a signe, that we pretend such a sign as sacraments be, that are appointed of God to be visible signs of some inuisible grace: we make in confirmation no such sign. And yet we deny not, but the B. imposition of hands is a signe, as giuen euen to certify the fauor and gracious goodnesse of God towards them.

But will our Brethren thrust this signe also of Imposition of handes cleane out of the Church of God? If it be a signe that hath bene, and is, and may be well retained, wil they deny, it may certify the parties vpon whom the hands are layd, of Gods fauour and gracious goodnesse towards them? What error or superstition is in this: except it were made such a signe hercof, as we vse to call a Sacrament?

But say they, it is falsly grounded on the example of the Apostles. If the Apostles did vse the imposition of handes vpon them that were baptized, to confirme them: and vse with prayer for them, that they might receiue greater grace of God, in the confirmation of their faith, besides the extraordinary graces than of working miracles & the gift of tongues: and we vse the imposition of handes, without any of the popish or any other ceremonies: nor tye it to this, or to that, or to any grace to be necessarily giuen thereby: nor make any precise necessity at all thereof: but vse it onely as an ancient, reuerende, and conuenient order, for the foresaide reasons, and in such manner as Caluine him-selfe prayeth, and wisheth that it were restored: why may it not be truly sayde, that the vse thereof (if there bee any good vse of it at all) is grounded vpon the example of the Apostles, although they commanded it not to be vsed, as we haue heard Kemnitius alleage for examples. Act. 8. 14. 15. & 18.

Confirmation maybe well said to be grounded on the Apostles example since the apostles gaue such example though they prescribed it not.

But, say our Brethren: Whereas the Ministracion of Baptisme, is permitted to euery hedge-preeft, minister and deacon.

Our Brethren when they enueighed against the superiority of Bishops made them and all priests or pastors all elders in dignitie equall. And now in dignitie they are so vnequall, that they terme some hedge-preefts. What they meane by this contemptuous terme, let them selues expounde, but they here seeme to excuse vs prettily well, for committing the administration of Baptisme vnto Women: when they name (though in contempt) these three, Hedge-preeft, Minister, and Deacon, to whom the ministracion of baptisme is permitted. So, we permit it not to euery Deacon.

We permit not women to baptise.

But doth this argue, that confirmation is extolled aboue baptisme, because the B. doth onely confirme and euery Minister may baptize? Doe they measure the dignitie of the Sacrament by the minister? what cal they this? is not this a manifest error? or do we maintain any such opinion of confirmation: yea how doth not this the more recommend the dignitie of baptism, that it may be administred by euery neuer so meane a minister, & yet not lese his dignitie, being a sacrament. The dignitie whereof depedeth not on man, but on God. Whereas confirmation being no sacrament (which if it were, were appertaining to euery minister) is reserved to the B. not for any higher dignitie of the action compared with any Sac. but vsed for the trial of the baptised parties profession of the truth, by another higher person than the minister that baptised him. The apostles that were sent to confirme

Why the B. confirmeth.

churching. them that were baptised by Philip, took not vpon them to extoll their confirmation, aboue the baptisme that Philip had administred, and yet were they higher than he in office and dignity. For any of these reasons therfore here alleaged, against our order of Confirmation, as it had place befoze the errors and superstitious of the papistes did defile it, so may it wel haue place still amongst vs in Gods Church.

The lear And as for churching of Women, (say our Bzethzen) because it sa-ned Dis. uoureth of the Iewish purification, and of popish Institution, it ought al-Pag. 74. together to bee omitted, for it breedeth and nourisheth many superstitious opinions in the simple peoples heartes: as, that the woman which

1. Tim. 2. 15. hath born a child is vncleane or vnholý: whereas the Apostle pronounceth, that Godly women are sanctified & saued by bearing of children.
1. Tim. 2. 15. that it is vnlawful for her, for any necessity to go out of her dores, before she be churched: that this churching is a necessary part of the pastors office: that she must weare a white rayle ouer her head, when she goeth to Church by the Mid-wife, waighted home with the parishe Clarke, with diuers such like Bables, which in a well reformed Church are not to be suffered.

Bridges The first reason here alleaged against Womens publique thank-giving in the Church for their deliuerance, after the birth of their children, commonly called Churching, is because it saouureth of the Iewish purification, and of popish institution. In dede for the Iewish purification, I thinke it hath some saueur of it, so farre forth onely, as the Woman then gaue God thanks, for his speciall benefite of her deliuerance, and for her childe. For, so farre it saouureth of the mozáll Lawe. Euen as our Sabaoth also saouureth of the Iewishe Sabaoth, onely in respect of the mozáll part thereof, though not with any like bonde or necessity of the time.
Other Iewish sauoꝝ it hath none, to any whose smell or taste is not distempered.

As for popish Institution, (meaning for any popish error, or superstitious ceremony) much lesse hath it any saueur at all thereof. Our bzethzen affirme it hath. And why? For it breedeth and nourisheth many superstitious opinions, in the simple peoples hearts: as that the Woman which hath borne a childe, is vncleane or vnholý. There is no occasiõ at all, in the order prescribed by the booke, to giue the least suspitiõ in the woꝝlde, to any neuer so simple a person, that the Woman which hath borne a childe, shoulde therfore bee accounted the moze vncleane or vnholý.
What one woꝝde or sillable tendeth thereunto? If the simple people will take or nourish such an opinion on no occasiõ giuen, but onely for that the aduersaries of the Gospell held such an opinion, and therefore it ought altogether to bee omitted: we might altogether omit the solemnizing of marriage by the Minister in the Church, because the simple people might or superstition.

might thereby, nourish many erronious and superstitious opinions, which churching. the aduersaries of the Gospell before taught them, and confirmed them in, at the administration of mariages. True it is, that S. Paule, pronounceth of the woman 1. Tim. 2. 15. That she shall be saved by bearing of children, adding this caution thereunto, if she shall abide in faith, and loue, and sanctification, with sobrietie. But what doth this hinder, or not rather muche more inferre, that she ought so much the more for her child-byrth, to giue the more solenne and publike thanks to God, both for her children, and for her deliuerance from her trauell, and that he hath vouchsafed the same to be among other his especiall graces, a meanes also to wardes her saluation; and to beseech him, that as he hath preserved her in the one, so he would strengthen her to abide also in the other, to witte, in faith, and loue, and sanctification with sobrietie. So that (me thinkes) this sentence is a better inducement, to haue such a solenne forme of thankesgiuing, as our booke prescribeth vnto women in such a case; than to say, it ought altogether to be omitted.

The woman for so special a benefit and preseruatiō bound to make a speciall thankesgiuing.

But they alleage also, that it breedeth and nourisheth another superstitious opinions in the simple peoples heartes: that it is vnlawefull for her, for anie necessitie, to goe out of her doores, before shee bee Churched.

Not going abroad before shee goe to the Church.

Our Wethzen seeme to haue enquired more curiously of womens demeanour in such a time, than euer I heard of, or than (I thinke) was vsed among any neuer so simple or superstitious people. I beleaue, none haue now a dayes among vs, any such opinion, or so strict vsage. And yet a reuerend order herein, is to be retained, which though our learned Wethzen would denie, yet our sober sisters (I hope) would enen for the modestie and commendation of woman-hood, haue respect vnto. And not so soone as God shall haue strengthened them againe, rather goe forth (vnlesse any great necessitie vge them, which, as it is sayd, hath no law) to other vn-necessarie worldly affayres, or companie; than before all other thinges, to repayre in solenne and reuerend manner to the house of God, and there present themselves before the congregation, to giue God publike thanks for his great goodnes extended vnto them. Which order doth much recom-mende their deuotion, and is a good example to all other.

How commendable an vse this is

Besides this, our Wethzen note another superstitious opinion which it breedeth, that this Chnrching is a necessarie part of the Pastors office.

For such conuenient necessitie, as by lawe and order he is bound to do, as likewise, to ioyne in the celebration of mariage the man and the woman; whose office should it rather be, than the Pastors? As for any absolute necessitie of saluation, the thing it selfe is not so vrged, nor necessarie as any particular expresse commaundement of God, pertayning to his office; otherwise than in generall, and as he is the publike minister of the churching. the worde. And this order being admitted, & by law prescribed, it may be well auouched in this foresaid necessity, that this churching, that is to say, the pronouncing of the publike prayers in the Church, at the womans thanksgiuing, is a necessarie part of the Pastors office. As for that which followeth :

A white rayle on her head. That she must weare a white rayle ouer her head, when she goeth to Church by the midwife, waighted home with the parishe Clerke, with diuerse such like bables, which in a well reformed Church are not to be suffered :

The ancient matrones attyres. I thinke our Brethren, that talke thus of rayles and bables, were rather disposed disorderly to babble, on womens matters, than they would want matter to rayle on our Churches orders. Doth our booke or any law prescribe, the woman to weare a white rayle ouer her head, when shee goeth to Church? Or to be accompanied by the midwife? Or to be waighted home with the parish Clerke? Is not this a clerkely & Learned Disc. to note these matters? And why may not euē these things be done also, as well as not done? So that there be no superstition in the, as (me thinkes) there is none. For, what is the whit rayle or keuerchief, but such an anciēt couer of the womans head, as representeth the simplicitie & antiquity of womens attyre, such as the auncient matrones of Asia, Grece & Rome, are noted to haue woꝛne. And as yet in the East partes, & in Grecia, & Affrica, the sober & chaste womē go with such white linnē couerture on their heads, whē they go abroad, euen to this day. Which argueth that this attyre arose not of any superstitiō at all, but in the old time was the vsuall attyre of honest matrones. And not vnlikly, but that as other parts of Grece did vse it, so the attyre that S. Paule mentioneth of womens couering their heads, 1. Cor. 11. when they prayed in the congregation, (though he mention neither matter of linnen, wollen, silke or cotten : nor couler of white, black, or any other,) was not much different from the same.

The mid-wifes attendance & the Clerkes. And as for her companie: who sitte, among all her neighbours, for diuerse considerations, than her midwife. And if the poore Clerke would not leaue his se accustomed or his dinner, but would waight on her home, or rather waight (poore soule) to fill his belly, (without hope wherof he would giue but soꝛy attendāce) aske him, whether he minded moꝛe a bable, or the table? And must this also, as a part of this Learned discourse of Eccl. gouernment, be solemnly registred, for a matter breeding and nourishing superstitious opinions in the simple peoples hearts : which in a well reformed Church, is not to be suffred? These then are the great & waigh-tie matters, wherfoꝛe our Brethren find fault with this order of womē's churching (or cōming to the Church) to yeeld their publike thanksgiuing to God, for their childe and safe deliuerance, after their child-birth, for which causes (they say) it ought altogether to bee omitted. But who ſeeth not that theſe quarels had bene better omitted, and are altogether if not bables, yet bubbles of mere babbling (if I may haue leane to ſuch termes) rather than any cauſes of importance, to omitte or take away this reuerend matronlike and comely order. And that although any were ſo ſimple to conceaue ſuperſtitious opinions hereupon: and though this white rayle alſo were left cleane off, and that the midwife kept her ſelfe at home: and that the Clerke loſt his dinner too: yet might this order of womens Churching, beeing nothing but publike thanksgiuing in the Church, after their deliuerance, continue in neuer ſo well reformed Churches, and bee ſuffered with-out iuſt offence giuen, well-enough.

The third quarell of our Brethren is at the maner of Buriall, of which as they ſayde befoze, pag. 73. The other, albeit it be to be retayned with a certaine honeſtie, yet is it not to be tyed to the proper office of a Paſtor: ſo proceeding page. 75. they ſay:

As for the buriall of the dead, becauſe Sathan tooke occaſion vpo Ceremonies appointed thereunto, to ſow the ſeede of many hereſies in the Church, as praiers for the dead, Oblations for the dead, Purgatorie, &c. alſo many ſuperſtitious as hallowing of Church-yar-des, diſtinctions of Burials, as ſome in the Chauncell, ſome in the Church, and ſome in the Churchyards: ſome with more pompe, as ſinging, ringing, &c. ſome with leſſe, burying towards the Eaſt, lightes and holy water beſtowed on the dead, &c. it is thought good to the beſt and right reformed Churches, to burie their dead reuerently without any ceremonies of praying or preaching at them, becauſe experience hath taught them, what inconuenience may growe thereof, by example of that which hath bene before.

Our Brethren, hauing ſo peremptorily condemned the other twain, confirmation of children, & churching of womē: as though they could be reteyned with no honeſtie: ſo buriall, they are ſomewhat yet more fauourable, in ſaying it may be reteyned with a certaine honeſtie. Whereas if at the leaſt, we ſhould not aſcribe the dead thus much: we ſhould eyther let them rotte aboue the ground, or caſt them to the beaſtes or fiſhes, as did the Capſians: or let the birds eate the, as did the Hyrcans: or the dogges eate the, as did the Baſtrians: or eate them our ſelues, as did the Meſſagetians and the Derbites: or hang them vpon gybbets, as did the Tibarenes: all which were no honeſtie at all, but horrible & vnnaturall ſauagenesse: or elſe we ſhould burne the to aſhes as did the Affricans, the Romanes, & diuers other people as was the Ethnike maner amōg the Gentils: or els why may we not be bold ſimply to ſay, It is an honeſt thing to burie the dead? But that the buriall of the dead may be reteyned, albeit with a certaine honeſty. If our Brethren meane not ſimply heere the buriall of the dead, but our our manner of buriall which the booke prescribeth, that it may be reteyned with a certaine honestie: howe speake they not then against themselves, in speaking against our manner of their buriall, if with a certaine honestie, or any honestie at all it may be reteyned? But they say: yet it is not to be tyed to the proper office of a Pastor. So that they will stande to this, that it may be reteyned with a certaine honestie, and will not vse heere precisely these wordes, proper office, and the manner of tying: I graunt them also, vpon necessitie or occasion, both that other may burie the dead, and that the dead also may be buried amongst vs otherwise, and that properly of it selfe, it is no part at all of his proper office, no more than is the solemnizing of mariage. Whatbeit, it is such an action, as may be well abioyned to his office, without any blemish thereunto. Yea, if the publike ministracion of the word, be a proper part of his office, which our Brethren do not denie: if there be any publike vse and ministerie of the word at the time of the buriall of the dead: then, howe hath not the Pastor his part herein? And other partes he is not put vnto. as to digge the graue, to beare the corpe to the graue, to lay it in the graue, or to fill vp the graue againe with earth, or any such action: but only to pronounce the sentences of Scripture, that concerne the state of the dead, the information, and consolation of the liuing; the giuing thanks to God for the partis departed, and praying for our selues that are aliue: except a sermon be also preached at the funerall. If these thinges may be reteyned with a certaine honestie: to whom then are these thinges more tyed, than to the proper office of a Pastor.

But our Brethren goe further in the buriall of the dead and say: because Sathan tooke occasion vpon ceremonies appointed thereunto, to sowe the seede of many heresies in the Church, as &c. also many superstitions, &c. that therefore, it is thought good to the best and right reformed Churches, to burie their dead reuerently, without any ceremonies of praying or preaching at them.

I graunt, some heresies in the Church might be the more strengthened, by the superstitious maner of burying the dead: but I rather suppose, a euerse, that the corrupt maner of burying the dead: took occasion vpon the seede of those heresies. But here among the superstitions which our Brethren recite, of burying the dead: Howe came in these thre, vnder the name of distinction of burialles, as some in the Chauncell, some in the Church, and some in the Churchyardes: some with more pompe, as singing ringing, &c. some with lesse: burying towardes the East?

Distinction
of buriall.]

Is all distinction of burialles, absolutely and without all distinction, superstitious? Would our Brethren haue a confusion of burialles, and no distinction but all persons, Iudices, Magistrates, priuate and common people, rich and poore, to be buried all a liker. Are they offended that some should

should be buried in the Chauncell, some in the bodie of the Church, and some in the Churchyardes? What means they hereby? Would they haue none buried, in any of all these places: but euerie bodie to burie their dead in their owne proper groundes, or in some other common ground appointed properlie therunto? Neither do we contend with them, against this last mentioned ground of buriall: neither ought they to contend with vs, for the buriall of the dead, so farre as conveniently may be done, neither in Churchyearde, Church, or Chauncell. If they respect health or contagion, as diuers do: those are Physicall causes, and not superstitious.

The grounds to burie in.

If they respect the superstitions, into the which the Papistes did degenerate: we reiect them as much, as any of our Brethren, or any other doe. And howsoeuer any did abuse the buriall of the dead, with superstition, by occasion of the place: yet at the first they did not so. But as Aretius on the title of buriall sayth: the Christians when thinges were at the length sette in order, did burie the dead at the Martyrs Churches, which thing may be thought to be done therefore, because that at the Martyrs Churches, the prayers and the sermons were made. And if so be that any persecution should light vpon them by the example and constancie of the Martyrs, they were stirred vp among themselves, to constancie in the faith, and in the profession of it, to the which thing, the present sepulchers of the Martyrs did incite them.

Aretius in problems de sepult.

The originals of burying in churches.

But howsoeuer the posteritie abused this after wards with superstition (from the which, God be praised wee are free) neither are there many that are buried in the Chauncell, or in the Church, and it is a thing done not for any opinion of more holinesse in the place, but only for more stull honour of the partie, in a place counted more worshipfull. As Christ speaketh in his parable, Luk. 14. of the higher and of the lower place at the table, to be reserved for a more honorable man. And so here, the Chauncell being counted the higher place in dignitie, then the bodie of the Church: and the bodie of the Church, than the Churchyeard: if now, the dead be buried according to his higher degree, when he liued in a place of higher estimation, so there arise no daunger of superstition to the health of the soules, no daunger of contagion to the health of the bodies of the people liuing: what great matter is to be made of the distinction of these places? And if they stand so much on the distinction of these places: will they disallowe all these without distinction? If they count the buriall in the highest place, to be but pompe: why should they mislike the buriall in the Church-yearde, which is the common place of buriall for the base? If they should not be buried in the Church-yearde, neither. Where would they haue them burie them? In the open field, to be digged vp of stowes, or in mens private groundes, gardens, or orcheyards, as the worshipfull among the Iewes were, or the common sort in some common plot of ground

(as I sayde before) dedicated to that purpose? But what is that ground, other than a Church-yearde, or a yearde of many Churches or Parishes, for their burialles? Which, stande it nere or rounde about the Church, or further from it, or within the Citie, Towne or Village, or without, except some consideration be had of narrowe places in a populous Citie, and of contagious times and diseases, onely to auoyde contagion for the bodie, which consideration we holde well with. but let that place, or any other, be once made the ordinarie place of buriall: admitting withall anie ministerie of the woorde at the buriall: may not that place also be subiect to as much superstition as the other? Yea, if no ministerie of the woorde at all be there vsed: may not that also, euen for lacke of good instruction, be as much, if not more, and that more dangerous superstition?

The Church-
yeard.

Why should our Wethen therefore stretch their quarell thus farre, & uen to the buriall in the Church-yeard? For although the Chauncell and Church, be not properly dedicated vnto burials, saue that extraordinarily, some burials may be in them: yet the Churchyard is the proper place allotted thereunto, which the auncient Greeke Church called νεκροταφειον, a place to sleepe in, as the Spoken termed their Dortoir or Dormitorie, likening our death to our sleepe, and our buriall to our bedd, for the hope of our waking, at the last and generall resurrection. And yet the Hebrewes much better, call it בית החיים beth chaym, the house of the liuing: because though the bodie only be there lodged, as in a house, yet their soules sleepe not, but are liuing. The Germanes call it Gottes acker, or ager dei, the acker or field of God. And we terme it, the Churchyearde, as the measure of yeareth pertaining to the Church, deriued of the old worde, kyrke-gerth, yet vsed in the south, as the yeareth that is dedicated vnto the Lord, not vnaptly fetched from, ter de uelann. And what place sifter (all superstition being disclaimed) than is this ground, if not of the Church: yet of this Churchyard, for our burials?

Pompe in Burials.

But as our Wethen finde fault, with this distinction of places: so they finde fault with this distinctio of our manner of burying the dead: that we burie some with more pompe, as singing, ringing, &c. some with lesse.

If our Wethen take pompe in the better sense: would they haue all persons buried with like pompe? Or if in the worst sense: would they haue no pompe nor solemnitie vsed at al, at any persons buriall? but what this pompe should be, except that they mention only, singing & ringing: I can not certainly tel. For they suppress the residue, with an &c. but that singing or ringing is utterly or then vnlawfull: or any to be buried with more solemnitie than other, according to the decencie of their state & calling, me thinks our Wethen herein should not be so hard, to condemne the distinction of that also, as in it selfe merely superstitious. We read in the old Testament of great distinction, about the buriall of the dead, euen of the holy Patriarkes. Who were all buried in such solemne place & manner, as Abraham buried his wife Gen. 23. And was himselfe buried, Gen. 25. and as Isaac was buried, and Rachael Jacobs wife, Gen. 35. and as Iacob & Ioseph Gen. 50. and diuerse others, that were buried more solemnly than other were. Neither was the greater pompe of their funerall, esteemed of the holy fathers, befoze the coming of christ, a superstitious, but a decent & an honozable thing. Neither was it any such figure of Christes more honozable buriall (as Zegedinus thinketh) that it should cease after the buriall of Christ, and that we should now be buried all alike; no, it rather argueth (as Selneckerus therein thinketh much better in my opinion) that a Christian man according to his higher estate, or to the excellencie of his life in his calling, may haue without superstition, a more honozable buriall. And as it appeareth how Stephen was buried, Act. 8. with greater mourning, than were the common sort of Christians in those daies.

As so; the offence which our Bzethzen take, with burying towards the East: I thinke it not a matter so worth, as to haue bin once noted in their Learned Disc. Indeepe it is a common order among Christians, so to burie the dead; as wel to differ from Turkes & Iewes: as also (making no necessity of the matter, nor matter of religion) to be the more signe, that they haue the better hope of the resurrection; in laying the corps of the dead Christians, in such manner, as though they respected the readier rising up of them selues, when they shall all be raysed to life againe; to beholde the coming of our Saviour Christe, which to be warde ascended in the East. Not to tie him to descende here or there, or that they doubted, but y wher soeuer they be, & howsoeuer they lie, or shalbe consumed, he will at the glorious appearance of his coming, gather the all vnto him, as he saith: Luc. 13. 29. Then shall many come from the East, & from the West, & sit at the North, and from the South, & shal sit at the table in the kingdome of God. And I take that our auncestors in these west parts in so laying the dead, had this especiall respect. If any did it superstitiously, or made any matter of religion in so doing; I excuse him not, and thinke, so it be done without offence, or contempt of the common order, that they may vse it other wise, without any danger or impediment, so; any thing I know to the contrary.

Burying to-wardes the East.

As so; the other things mentioned here by our Bzeth; as they were proper to the aduersaries of the Gospell: so (God be praised) they are remoued. Neither doth our prescribed forme of Buriall allow them, or giue any the least occasion to any of all these heresies, errors, or superstitions.

But now, to auoide all occasion of heresies, errors, and superstitions: what forme of buriall would our Bzethzen haue? Forasmuch they say: It is thought good to the best & right reformed churches, to bury their dead reuerently, without any ceremonies of praying or preaching at them.

Here

There is a short manner indebe of burying the dead, and agreeth herein with the booke of the formes of Common prayer, which our Brethren haue of late set out. Wherein vpon the title of buriall, they say:

The corps is reuerently to be brought to the graue, accompanied with the neighbours in comely manner, without any further ceremonie. And this is all that they say there, of the forme of buriall. But if this be the forme of the best and right reformed Churches: what shall we then say (to goe no further, than euen to the Church of Geneua it selfe) to the booke called, The forme of prayers and ministrations of the sacramentes, &c. vsed in the English congregation at Geneua, and approued by the famous and godly learned man Iohn Caluine? Which booke on the title of buriall, pag. 88. sayth on this wise: The corps is reuerently brought to the graue, accompanied with the congregation, without any further ceremonies, which being buried, the minister goeth to the Church, if it be not farre off, and maketh some comfortable exhortation to the people, touching death, and resurrection. Here is yet a Sermon to be preached at least wise some comfortable exhortation to be made by the Minister, at the buriall of the dead, though not at the very place (for neither doe we so tie it, to the place) of buriall. The dead may be buried in the Church-yard, or any other place assigned thereunto, and the sermon be in the Church, and neuertheless be well saide, to be at the buriall, because it is made for that especiall purpose, and for that commonly, the congregation is not dismissed all in a doombe and silent action, but that some wordes of consolation are vttered by the Minister ere they depart.

Bucer in Epitome Eccl. Argenti. cap. 27.

Bucer in his Epitome Eccl. Argenti cap. 27. sayth on this wise: We teach concerning those whom the Lord in the confession of his name hath receaued to himselfe out of this life: that they are withal feare of God and honestly to be committed to the earth, and there the people out of the worde of God to be admonished, of the heauie iudgement of God against sinne, and also of the redemption of Christe who hath redeemed vs from death, and of the eternall life which he hath purchased to all his faithfull. After which men are to be exhorted also to the repentance of their sinnes and to a firme hope of the blessed resurrection and heauenly life, and also to the earnest studie and care of the life to come. Which verily is placed in the mortification of the old Adam and restoring the new. Whereunto also prayers are to be ioyned for true repentance, and confirmation of faith, and also for the blessed resurrection, both of the dead and of them that be present. To conclude, almes also are to be giuen.

Yea, Caluine himselfe in his Epistle to the Monsbelgardians Epist. 1 (wherein he telleth them what he himselfe would doe, if he suffred their person)

person) when he cometh to buriall wisteth thus. In the buriall of the dead I would haue this moderatiō to be adhibited, that the corps shold not be caried into the Church, but straight vnto the Church-yard, there also would I haue an exhortation to be made, that the companie should acknowledge that which should be spoken in the present matter of the funerall. This manner were not much to be disallowed. As for the ringing of the bell, I would not haue you stifiy reclaime against it, if it may not be obtrayned that the Prince would remitte it. Not that I allow it, but that I thinke it not a matter worthie of contention. Thus wisteth Caluine, what he would, and what he would not haue, to chuse, about the buriall of the dead. Pea enen of ringing also, though hee mislike it, yet would he haue no contention for it, but modestly referreth it to the Princes order. Neither disalloweth he the buriall in the Church-yarde. As for an exhortation to be made, it is the speciall thing that he would haue obserued at a buriall. Which exhortation, if it be a sermon (as the English Church in Geneva allowed by Caluine both also prescribe the same: then may that part of prayer, which is thankesgiuing, be vsed at the buriall of the dead. Pea and the other part of petition, though not for the dead, yet for the liuing & for the resurrection of liuing & dead, both may wel be, & are alwaies vsed in sermons, and a good part of our Bishops sermons are most what spent in the conceauing of prayers and petitions.

Now if either exhortations or sermons be to be made at the funeralls of the dead: who should rather pronounce or make them, than the Pastor? And if this be the order of the Church of England in Geneva approved by Caluine: who also wisteth it in other Churches: haue our Bishops here in Englande any iust cause now to mislike it? If they thinke Geneva the best, or any right reformed Church (for I presse them not here with the Protestantes Churches in Germanie, who haue set forth diuerse funerall sermons, and Spangelberges booke is of the same matter; nor with the Churches in Heluetia: and Brandmillerus booke, composed of 180. funerall sermons) how can our Bishops say, as here they doe, that it is thought good to the best and right reformed Churches, to burie their dead reuerently, without any ceremonies of praying or preaching at them? He thinke yet of twaine, the English order in Geneva approved by Caluine, is farre better, than this new English order of our Bishops.

Zanchius in his confession of Christian religion, cap. 25. de Eccl. militantis gubernatione. Aphorif. 33. treating of the buriall of the dead, wisteth on this wise. time to be againe restored, and to be raysed vp to life and that eternally. In the meane season the very sepulchers and the Church-yards are to be kept holily and reuerently, as among vs it is done. As for the children, or parentes, the kindred and alliance of the dead, are to be comforted. And both we studie, to yeelde all the duties of humanitie, that can be yeilded: and we teach, that they ought to be yeilded. And if any thing out of the Psalmes, concerning the resurrection of the dead, be anie where soong, while the corps is borne, or if any sermon, after the corps is enterred, be made to the people, wherein honest mention be made, of other also which holily haue slept in the Lorde: we do neuer a whitte disallowe the same. Sith that, it is not made for the sauing health of the partie, or parties that are dead; but for the consolation and vtilitie of the liuing, and to the ædification of the whole Church. For we doe beleue, that the soules of the faithfull being loosed from their bodies, do passe forthwith to Christe into heauen, and thereby haue no neede of our suffragies. Howbeit, the ædification of the Church, is alwayes vpon any occasion giuen, to be furthered. Thus reuerently writteth Zanchius of the manner of burying the dead not onely allowing a sermon after the buriall: but the buriall to be in the Church-yard. Pra, not imposing singing of the Psalmes: as Caluine befoze referred ringing to the authoritie and order of the Prince.

And therefore our publike order of buriall appointed in the Communion booke, as no whit inferiour to any of these, (if not much better) may stande well enough in state as it doth, for any reason here alleaged to the contrarie. Our Brethrens only reason is this.

Because experience hath taught, what inconuenience may grow thereof, by example of that which hath bene before.

It is a good saying, Happie is he whom other mens harmes do make to beware. But both our Brethren and we must againe be as warie, least that while we feare to stumbe at that which might be occasiõ of like inconuenience, we both of vs should mistake our causam prouisa, that to be a cause or occasion of heresies, errors, and superstition, which is no cause nor occasion of them: and so to shurne the one, runne on the other side into as grosse or grosser inconueniences, for lacke altogether of preaching or exhortation, and that part of prayer, which is thanksgiuing at the buriall of the dead, as other heretofore haue done by erroneous and superstitious abusing of the same. But our Brethren drawing now to the con-

The lear clauson of these matters, say. And as they are not to be excused, if any for small trifles onely, rayse vp hote contentions: so they haue much to aunswere before God, that suffer the people of God to lacke the only foode of their soules for such humane Constitutions.

Whether any of these things afore-saide, for the which our Brethren raise vp these hote contentions, as the burying in the Chauncell, Church, or Church-yarde, the buriall with more pompe or lesse, the laying of the corpse towards the East: the womans white rayle the mid-wiues going with her to Church, and the Clerkes attedance on her home, be trifles and small trifles, yea, in comparison herie nylles. or no: let other Judge. And yet must these be added to the residue, that the Churching or thanksgiving of women after their child-birth, might altogether be omitted: and that among the superstitions vsed in buriall, no kinde of praying nor preaching should be vsed. If preaching be the soules foode: who did last forbide it? And besides these things, what sturre and hote contentions haue bene rayfed vp, for a number of other things, which in regarde of preaching (though otherwise in their kindes and degrees they be comely and decent, yet in that respect) may be accounted for small trifles? And therefore I would wish our Brethren to take good heede, what here they say, that they are not to be excused, if any for small trifles only raise vp hote contentions: sith this toucheth themselves nearer than they wane.

What maketh them to cast forth these speeches? But that they thinke, eyther these matters, for which they thus contende, are matters of great importance: or else, that not they, but we raise vp suche hote contentions for them. And indeede, though in their owne nature many of them be indifferent: yet, being by lawfull authoritie ordeyned to be vsed, for publike order, and for comelinesse: they are become hereby more important, than that it may be lawfull to any private man, at his owne voluntarie to shake them off, except by the like lawfull authoritie, whereby they were brought in, they shall be remooued. Yea, in this case we are bounde to be hoate for defence of them also (so we exceede not the boundes of Christian charitie) both for obedience to the lawfull authoritie that made them, and also for the order and comelinesse sake, for which they were authorized, not to see them impugned, sith that in the impugning of them, not onely the obeyer yielding to them is defaced: but the lawes and Magistrates authoritie in making them, is violated and endangered. Wherein, although the defenders be hoate, yet properly not the defenders, but the impugnors are indeede the verie rayfers of these hoate contentions. And therefore by this their owne saying, our Brethren are not (in this behalfs) to be excused, but rather (with grieve, and in charitie be it spoken) to be accused, yea they accuse in these wordes their owne selues, as disturbers of the Churches quiet.

Neither can they shelter themselves vnder this worde, onely, saying: they raise not vp this hote contentions for small trifles onely: but that among their quarells, there are some of great importance: For, let any of the be of what importance soever they shalbe found to be: ought they (only or not only) to raise such hote contentions for any such small trifles? Now as in this point, they plainly make themselves not excusable: & much more, in adding these wordes:

So haue they much to answer before God, that suffer the people of God to lacke the only food of their soules, for such humane constitutions.

Verily, this goeth nearer to the quicke. For howsoeuer we may shinde out answers one to another: when we shall come to answer before God, we can not so answer before him. For if none should suffer the people of God to lacke the only foode of their soules for such humane constitutions: shall our Brethren be excusable, that being lawfully called to the office of distributing this only foode of our soules, do altogether with drawe themselves, and that onely (if they will ascribe them no better title) for such humane constitutions? But they say, the fault is not in them: for they would gladly continue in feeding the people of God, if they might be suffered.

Yet doth this their owne saying, still make them vnexcusable. For seeing they be but such humane constitutions, as should be rather suffered, than that they should suffer the people of God to lacke the only foode of their soules; they suffering this, for not suffering the other; do intincibly re-charge themselves, that herein they haue much to answer before God.

If our Brethren reply, that these humane constitutions, for which they suffer the people of God (as farre as in them lyeth) utterly to lacke the onely foode of their soules, be such as by no meanes are sufferable; and can not be topped with the defierie of the word of God: this requireth to be better proued, than yet it is. Which if they can proue, then wee must needs yelde the fault to be in vs, and that we haue much therein to answer before God, and to crise God heartily merce, and ioyne them. And also (I hope) vpon such proue, every good man will do. But (for my part) I could neuer yet see this proued. As for any humane constitution, that our comunion booke, and the Eccl. gouernment of our Church of England both require of them: hath bin further by others & I also (I trust) haue evidently & sufficiently proued, for those that as yet we haue seene, that they are none other humane constitutions, but such as may well stande with the Pastors feeding the people of God, with the onely foode of their soules, to wit, the word of God. And therefore, they haue much to answer, who (by their not yielding to them, but rather cleane forsaking the Pastorship committed to them, and ministerie of the word and sacraments) are the cause their selues, that they be not suffered to preach; and so suffer the people to lacke the only foode of their soules, for thinges, which are in comparison farre inferiour matters.

But to conclude (say our Brethren) it is the dutie of euerie true Pastor to obserue those things that are concluded by the lawfull authoritie of the Church, concerning ceremonial matters for order and comelines sake, and for edification, and not to controll publike order, by his pri-uate iudgement but vpon great and waightie causes.

This is a good conclusion, that our Brethren do here make of all these matters. But do they not yet see, how flatly withall they conclude against themselves? For we are now in hand with ceremoniall matters: And the whole Church of England hath fully concluded long since, & that by law-full authority, that these things are to be obserued, concerning ceremoni-all matters, for order and comelines sake & for edification. What solow eth then? But as our Brethren here do say, it is the dutie of euerie true Pastor to obserue those things, and not to controll publike order, by his priuate iudgement.

How then doe our Brethren in controlling and not obseruing those things, obserue the dutie of true Pastors? Do they think that their iudgement is not priuate iudgment? But what is it else? For although they were some greater number of Pastors than they be: yet being compared to the lawfull authority of the whole Church of Englande, they are but priuate Pastors, and their iudgement priuate, especially beeing deprived (by lawfull authoritie) of their Pastorship, or rather, exauthorating themselves of the ministry. Do they think this exception, which they reserve for the last case, (and place it as a reward in the end of this conclusion, but vpon great and waightie causes,) will be a sufficient starting hole to saue all vpight, & themselves from pronouncing the definitive sentence against themselves, that their doing is not the dutie of true Pastors?
No, that will not helpe them. For, these matters beeing but ceremoniall matters (as they call them) and so not great and waightie: what great & waightie causes should moue a true Pastor, by his priuate iudgement, to controll publike order, in those things that are concluded by lawfull authoritie of the Church, concerning ceremonial matters for order and comelines sake & for edification? Shal any priuate man thinke (if he think them to be indeede the Church of God) that the Churches concluding of those things by lawfull authoritie, proceeded not of greater and waigh-tier causes, than his controllment? And therefore, except men shall make so litle & light account of the true Church of God, and of her conclusions and orders by lawfull authoritie, as to preferre euerie priuate mans or Pastors priuate iudgement before hers: our Brethren by this their owne conclusion, must either needs yield to the Church of Englandes publike conclusion and lawfull authoritie, concerning these ceremoniall matters, that they are to be obserued for order and comelines sake and for edification, as the Church of England hath decreed them, and not to controll publike order by priuate iudgement: or else let our Brethren hearken to their owne conclusiue sentence and determination, that they do not the dutie of true Pastors. And thus much also for these ceremonies.

We haue hetherto intreated of the proper dutie of a Pastor himselfe: now it followeth, that we likewise set foorth his authoritie in common gouernement with the Elders. But least any man should mistake that, which we purpose to say of his authoritie, we haue need to expresse what we meane by this worde authoritie. For euen those things that we haue shewed before to be the dutie of a Pastor, may also be called his authoritie, as to preach and teach, wherein is included his authoritie to forgiue and reteine sinnes. Also his authoritie to minister the sacraments, and to doe other thinges in the Church, which none may doe but he. But in this place we vnderstande authoritie, for power of gouernement in the Church. Whereof the Apostle speaketh, that it is one of the graces and giftes of God necessarie for the building of his Church. This authority of regiment we haue declared that it ought not to be a Lordly ruling, neither ouer their flocke: nor yet ouer their fellow seruants and brethren: and least of all, that they ought to haue dominion or Lordship ouer the faith of the Church.

The Pastors
authoritie
in common gouernemēt with the Elders.

Our Brethren here promise to sette foorth that part of the Pastors authoritie, which they say, he hath, not of the proper dutie of a Pastor himselfe, but in common gouernement with the Elders. But because these wordes, as they are grounded on the presuppofall of that Eldershippe, which they make one part of their Ecclesiasticall Tetrarchie, not dealing with the woorde: so promising to treat of the authoritie of the Pastor in common gouernement; they seeme their selues to doubt, that (except they should expounde what they meane thereby) it might easily bee mistaken what they meant. Neither doubt they this mistaking without a cause, which of purpose shunne the plaine and vsuall approued distinction, of the authoritie or power of the order, and of the iurisdiction. But what-so-euer authoritie of the Pastor they will not sette foorth, and make playne what they meane thereby: when as they say, For euen those thinges which wee haue shewed before to be the dutie of a Pastor, may also bee called his authoritie, as to preache and teach, wherein is included his authoritie to forgiue and retaine sinnes: if this authoritie of the Pastor to forgiue and retayne sinnes, bee included in his authoritie of preaching and teaching: and withall, this bee a thing appertaining to the proper dutie of a Pastor himselfe, as also is his authoritie to minister the Sacramentes, and to doe other thinges in the Church which none may doe but hee: then haue not the Elders to deale in the authoritie of forgiuing and retaying sinnes. For if they shoulde; they shoulde intermeddle with the worde. For this is included in preaching and teaching. But our Bre-

then exclude the governing Elders from preaching and teaching: therefore withall they exclude them from the authoritie of forgiuing and retaining sinnes. And this by the way is not vnneccessarie to bee here obserued, because afterwarde they giue authoritie of forgiuing and retaining sinnes, vnto the governing Elders, which they confesse are not Teachers, nor Preachers, nor dealers at all with the worde. But doeth not this authoritie of the Pastor belong to iurisdiction? And therefore not onely the authoritie of his order, to which properly preaching and teaching, and ministring the Sacramentes doe appertayne: but the authoritie also of iurisdiction, to which the power of forgiuing and retaining sinnes appertaineth, is the proper dutie of the Pastor himselfe, which none may doe but he, and is an authoritie separate from that his authoritie which is in common gouernment with the Elders, or with any other which are not Pastors in the Church.

And as for that power of gouernment in the Church, whereof the A-postle speaketh, 1. Cor. 12. 28. That it is one of the graces and gifte, of God, necessary for the building of his Church: S. Paule maketh not all the graces and giftes of God, which there he speaketh of, necessarie for the building of his Church, if we speake of such perpetuall necessitie, as that the Church can neuer be without them. For S. Paul reckoneth by there great offices, graces and giftes of God, that are not necessarie in that sense. As euen the first office that he beginneth there withall, of Apostles, besides the giftes of healinges, the giftes of powers or of working mightie myracles, and the gifts of diuerse kinds of languages. All which are not now so necessary in our dayes, (nor many hundred yeres sithence) to the building of Gods Church. Neither is it agreed vpon by the best interpreters, what manner of grace and gift of God, this power of gouernment in the Church was, which S. Paule in that place speaketh of. For albeit Beza say: he declareth the order of Elders that were keepers of the Discipline and policie Ecclesiasticall: yet sayth Aretius, it is a politicall facultie of administring the common weale, and of ruling others commodiouslie, and of conseruing them in order, which gift is necessarie in Magistrates. And while the Church wanted a politique Magistracie, certaine choosen Elders gouerned the assemblies of the faithfull, as it were an ordinarie Magistracie. Here in deede hee sayeth, this gifte is necessarie, but he addeth in whome, to witte, in Magistrates: and yet he specieth in what kinde of Magistrates, to witte, politicall, and in the administring of the common wealth, not the Ecclesiastical discipline.
 And withall, he limiteth a time, how long this gift of gouernment in these Elders continued in the Church, to wit, while the Church wanted a politike Magistracie. As who say the gift of this gouernement in the Elders is ceased long since, and not now necessarie, the Church hauing a politike Gouernors. Magistracie, in whom the gift of government is still necessarie, and not in such Elders.

1. Cor. 12.

And in this sense I denie not Caluines interpretation. Gouernours, I interpret Seniors, which were the Presidentes of Discipline. For the first Church had her Senate, that helde the people in the honestie of manners, which thing Paule declareth otherwhere, whe as he setteth downe a double order of Elders, the gouernment therfore consisted of Elders, which excelled others in grauitie, experience and authoritie. So that, although Caluine distinguish the order of these Elders into two sortes, as doe our Bzethren, (which yet no necessitie doth enforce:) neuerthelesse, he both restrayneth this their gift of government, to the honestie of manners, not to any Ecclesiasticall orders: and he maketh this office and Senate not to be perpetuall, but as a thing that ceased, he sayth, prima Ecclesia habuit, the first Church had her Senate, as who say, it went no further. And so wee may say, The first Church had Apostles, Prophets, Euangelistes, and diuerse giftes of healings, miracles, tongues, &c. The ordinarie offices of which giftes haue long since ceased. And therefore we can nowe make no ordinarie nor necessarie plea vpon them, nor the gouerning Ecclesiasticall Elders that our Bzethren would erect are such Elders.

1. Cor. 12.

To the larger and better manifestation whereof, Gualter (expounding this worde, Gouernmentes sayth: The seuenth place in this order setteth downe gouernmentes, by whom is comprehended politicall men, which in matters of this world helped any bodie, and tooke intelligence of their causes, if any shoulde arise among the Christians. For as it is sayde in the sixt chapter, the Apostles would not that those which professed Christe, should contende for their goods, or for other matters pertayning to this life, before the tribunall seates of the Ethnikes. Prudent men therefore and exercised in the vse of matters, were appointed to the ouersight of such causes. By whose authoritie and Councell the contentions were decided. The same also were publikly present with the Church, if any thing were to be done before the Proconsuls or the presidentes. Which thing there is no doubt, but that it hapned oftentimes. To conclude, they with their Counsels and prudence (euen as it were certaine shipmasters gouerned the Churches being then tossed among the diuerse daungers of matters. At this day there is not in publike, such neede of such persons, sith that (as we haue aboue-sayd) the Magistrates are Christian, by whose authoritie all these thinges may more happily be dispatched. And we ought to acknowledge the singular benefite of God, which in these last dayes, vouchsafeth to giue vnto his Church, both politike and Eccl. Gouernours, euen as in the olde time hee promised by Esaias. Let none therefore lightly disturbe the order instituted of God, that that (trampling downe the authority of Princes and of Magistrates) he should institute a newe senate, that should challenge to themselves a right and Empire, (or authority) of commaunding ouer them. This thing in the olde time did certaine Bishops, perhaps of a good zeale. Howbeit that matter turned at the length into a Pontificall tyranny, & for the ambition of a fewe, did vtterly ouerturne the Christian state. Let the Princes knowe againe, that they are the members, not the Lords of the Church. And therefore let them vse their Empire to the defence thereof, and direct all their counsailes to this scope, that the order and safety thereof may be preferued.

of the popish.

Thus, euen where Gwalter speaketh against the abuses of Princes, & of the Popish Bishops: yet both hee acknowledge both their lawfull authorities: and sheweth what the authority of this seniory was, to wit, a mere publike gouernment all in seculer, and not in ecclesiasticall matters: and how long it continued: how vnecessary nowe it is: howe it is not the order instituted by God for vs, but the very disturbance of it: and that this senate can not be nowe brought in a new, without the trampling downe of the very Princes & Magistrates authority. To conclude, these gouernmentes that S. Paule here nameth, are nothing that grace, gift or office, which our Bishops here pretende, for their senate of gouerning Elders, which Gwalter rather likeneth vnto the gift of powers, which S. Paule befoze in that place did mention.

In the fourth place (saith Gwalter) proceeding these gifts are reckoned vp, powers for those that exercise lawfull power in the Church. These were seniors, which beeinge set ouer the Discipline, corrected them that had done any thing contrary to the duty of a Christian man. As for the wicked and obstinate they corrected them with a greater power of the spirite. For they were armed with a singuler gift, that they might also deliuer vnto the deuill to be afflicted, those that could not with admonitions and reproofinges bee corrected. Examples of this power were shewed from Elias and Elizeus in the olde time. Of whome he (to witte, Elias) burned vp with flames sent downe from heauen, the souldiers that were sent to take him. But this man (to witte, Elizeus) called forth the Beares, which tore in peeces the Children that more saucily mocked him. By the same vertue (or power) Peter slue Ananias and Saphira, which presumed to lye vnto the holy Ghoste. He deliuered also Simon Magus to destruction. Paule also vsed this power against Elymas the sorceror, whome he depriued of his sight, for that he proceeded to deceiue the proconsul of Cyprus with his lies. The same (Paule) writeth, that he deliuered to Sathan Himeneus and Alexander, that being stricken with some punishment, they might learne from thence forth not to blaspheme. And hereto also ought to bee referred, that which in threat-threatning manner he sayth to certaine obstinate persons, in the second Epistle to the Corinthians: but if I shall come again I will not spare you: sithe that ye seeke the experiment of Christe speaking in me. For in these wordes hee insinuateth not obscurely that with his wordes hee had a vertue ioyned, of perfourming that which hee spake, and of correcting his contemners. And in the olde time there was altogether neede of this faculty of the spirite, when as the Churches had not a Magistrate, & therefore could not vse the right of the sworde. There is no necessity to require the same at this day, when as the gift of this spirite hath ceased. And the Princes and Magistrates are Christians, who with lawes and publike authority, restraîne any whosoeuer in their office, and as for the stubborne and frowarde, they punish them. Some in-deede there are, which after the example of the auncient and primitiue Church, will institute seniors or a Senate Ecclesiasticall, which may haue Empire (or commaundement) euen also ouer the Magistrates them-selues, if they at any time shall not doe their duety. But those men ought first to haue made demonstration, that their seniors haue this power, whereof in present Paul speaketh. Which thing when as by no argumēt it appeareth: and neuerthelesse they deliuer to Sathan whome they will: they do alike, as if any would attempt to cleanse the lepers, to rayse the dead, & to worke such other myraculous worke. For because that in the olde time, suche thinges were commonlye doone in the primitiue Church.

Thus againe, Gualter : and on these graces and giftes' of God, grounding this Ecclesiasticall Seniory, not of the Worde ^{in Capitulo}, Governementes : but on the former worde ^{and power}, Powers : betokening such power as is myraculous , which although some Seniors in the Church than had it yet he alleageth the examples heereof, that such onely exercised the same in Ecclesiasticall matters, as were Ministers of the Word. But howsoever these Seniors were, or what power soener they had: he maketh them and their power, not to bee perpetuall, but abiding a while, onely for the state of that time, and so to haue ceased, after that the publike state of Christendome was setled, and gouerned by such princes and Magistrates as openly professed Christianity: and that from thence forth, the Churches were not tyed to such Seniors, but that wee (after thus many ages of Christian princes) be free from them. So that, where our Brethren say, they will not now set forth the pastors authority, in common Government with the Elders : If there bee no neede of such Elders to ioyne in commons with him in his government : then as the other authority was proper to him-selfe, so may this authority for power of government in the Church, (for any thing here to the contrary) bee as proper also to him-selfe, as the other. For, if these graces and giftes where-

of the Apostle 1. Cor. 12. 28. speaketh, were such distinct offices, as our brethren say can not be, but in distinct officers, without confusion of the: then epyther these giftes pertain to the Pastors, so well as to these Elders (as here our Brethren say they doe:) or else, if the Pastors haue au-shoulde inferre this confession, that they woulde haue vs thumne.

But now we, our brethren giuing this authority in common with the Elders: procede to the limitation of the same, and say: This authority of regiment we haue declared, that it ought not to bee a Lordly ruling, neither ouer their flocke: nor yet ouer their fellow-seruants and bret.
and least of all, that they ought to haue dominion & Lordship ouer the faith of the Church. Dominion and Lordship ouer the faith of the Church, we graunt none hath but almighty God, and Iesus Christe only, that is both God and Man. As so: the other authority, which they cal-Lordly ruling ouer their flocke, or ouer their fellow-seruantes and Brethren: as they referre vs to that they haue declared: so I referre them to that we haue declared. And among other (I hope) I haue sufficiently declared, what manner of ruling they may haue, both ouer their flocke, and ouer their fellow-seruants and brethren, both by the worde of God, by the practise of the Primitive Church, and by the approbation of diuerse the best learned protestants, in the reformed Churches of our age.
But how this authoritie of Gouvernment, which here they giue in common to the pastors with the Elders, shall be parted among them: is not yet determined. For, albeit our Brethren acknowledge, that the Pastors haue rule and authority herein, yet the forme of prayers in the English congregation at Geneva, doth deny it, and say: Pag. 43. Because the charge of the Worde of God, is of greater importaunce than that any man is able to dispencc therewith: and S. Paul exhorteth to esteem them as Ministers of Christe, and disposers of Gods mysteries: not Lordes or rulers as Peter saith ouer the flocke: therefore the Pastors or Ministers cheef office, standeth in preaching the word of God and Ministring the sacraments. So that in consultations, iudgements, elections, and other politicall affayres, his counsell rather then authority taketh place. So by this rule, he is so far from al lordly ruling: that he hath no rule nor authority at all, in Common with the Elders in these matters. But of the twaine, our Brethren here say better, that hee hath authority, under-authority. Pride and arrogancy, might be left beyond him : namely, that no elder or Minister of the Church shoulde challenge vnto him-selfe, or accept it, if it were offered vnto him, any other authority, than that is allowed by the spirite of God, but cheefely to beware, that he vsurpe no authoritie which is forbidden by the word of God. For wherefore doe we detest the Pope and his vsurped supremacy, but because he arrogateth the same vnto him-selfe, not onely without the warrant of Gods word, but also cleane contrary to the same?

Bridges All this section we confesse with our Brethren, and gladly subscribe vnto it, saue that we wish it not, as though it were onely to be done, and is not done: but we trust it is perfourmed already. If it bee not, let our Brethren proue the contrary.

The learned disc. Nowe if the reasons and authorities that haue banished the Pope, doe serue to condemne all other vsurped authority, that is practized in the Church: why shoulde not all such authority be banished as well as the Pope?

Bridges And good reason too, that all other vsurped authority, that is practized in the Church, shoulde bee as well banished as the Pope. But doe our brethren meane by these speeches, of all other vsurped authoritie, that is practized in the Church, that there is any such practised in the Church, meaning the church of England? For, these words are uttered so couertly, that we might saeme in granting the consequence, that such shoulde be banished: to graunt withall, that there is some such in the church of England, remaining and practised yet among vs. But we deny that there is any such, to our knowledge, or by the Lawes approoued in this Realme. And if there bee any steppes thereof: I doubt they will rather bee founde in the trake of our Brethren themselves, sooner than in any part of that authoritie which is allowed to our prelates.

The learned Disc. We can alleage against the Pope, and rightly, that which S. Iohn baptist did aunswere to his Disciples. No man can take vnto him-selfe any thing, except it be giuen him from heauen. Iohn. 3. 27. And that saying of the Apostle to the Hebrewes : No man may take vpon him any honoure (in the Church of God) but hee that is called of God, as was Aaron. Infomuch that Christe him-selfe did not giue him-selfe to be an high Priest, but he that said vnto him : Thou art my sonne, this day haue I begotten thee. Hee saith in another place, Thou art a preest for euer after the order of Melchizedech. Nowe seeing these rules are so general, that the Sonne of God him-selfe was not exempted from them, but shewed foorth the decree wherein he was authorized: by what rule can any man retaine that authority in the church of God, which is not called thereto by the word of God?

Theſe ſentences of our ſauour Chriſte, hauing bene beſore alleaged by our Brethren, page 28. & 29. haue bene already ſufficiently anſwered, that they neither forbid the titles, nor the authority, that we acknowledge in our Biſhops, by the confeſſion of the beſt writers euen among our Brethren themſelues. Which ſentences as they are rightly alleaged againſt the ſupremacy of the Pope, to prouue that Peter was not (ſuch) a ſuperior to the other Apoſtles, as the Papiſtes doe pretend: ſo are they not rightly alleaged, to prouue that he had neuer any kinde of ſuperiority, but no ſuch kinde of ſuperiority, as the pope falſely claimeth in the name of Peter. For, not onely all the auncient Fathers, and all the beſt writers, acknowledge, (as we haue ſeene) ſome ſuperiority in Peter, ſuch as contrariety not theſe ſentences: but alſo S. Paule is moſte plaine herein, that S. Peter had a kinde of ſuperiority, if not to all, yet to many of the other Apoſtles. And ſo theſe ſentences, as we haue already at large conſidered the people of them: ſo the firſt ſentence heere cited, alloweth in playne wordes, both a Ruler among them, and a greateſt: ſo that hee bee in humilitie and ſeruiteableneſſe, as courteous and diligent as if he were yongest, or as hee that ſerueth. The other place here cited: You haue but one Maſter, which is Chriſte, and al you are Brethren: proueth clearely, that the Pope ought not to claime that maſterſhip which he requireth: but it proueth not, that (were he other wiſe a true a true faithfull Biſhop) hee might haue no Maſterſhip at all: for than our Brethren might not be called Maſters, neither as we (and that worthily) call M. Caluine, M. Beza, &c. Maſters. But this ſentence is againſt the Pope, not againſt them: becauſe the pope, not they, woulde intrude himſelfe into that abſolute and ſupreme Maſterſhip, and Lordſhip. Which properly and onely belongeth to our Lorde and

But our brethren demaund: why doe they not likewise prooue, that the Miniſters are equall among themſelues?

Viſurped authority.

And ſo they do, in reſpect of the ſupreme Maſterſhip of Chriſte, and in reſpect ſimply of their Miniſtery: but, the reaſon why they proue not ſuch an equality, as our brethren ſurmiſe, is, becauſe they are ſpoken abſolute-ly, againſt all kinde of ſuperiority and Maſterſhip among them. And therefore, where they ſay, that, for the moſt part, al thoſe arguments and authorities of ſcripture, that are vſed to confute the viſurped authoritie of the pope, are of as great force againſt all other viſurped authorities of one paſtor ouer another: Although this be but a looſe conſequent: yet we may well graunt this concluſion, for viſurped authorities. But till our Brethren can prooue ſome ſuch among vs, as are viſurped: al theſe ſenten-ces, arguments, and authorities, are but viſurped, and wreſted againſt their authority which is lawfull.

We alſo like well the caueat of this concluſion. Woulde God our brethren would in-deede take heede vnto it. For if it be not taken heede vnto in time: their Paſtorall authority will ſo enlarge the boundes thereof, that it will not onely tyrannize ouer the authority of the Doctours, whom they cleane debarre from all publike exhortation, reprehention, conſolation, and application, and ouer all their Seniors of newe Gouernors as wee ſhall (God willing) ſee in this Diſcourſe: but ouer all the Church. And it beginneth pretily well, to abridge the Chriſtian Princes and ciuill Magiſtrates ſupreme authority in eccleſiaſticall cauſes, (as in part wee haue already ſcene) and al without the boundes of the ſcripture. But this their Paſtorall authority, by that time their gouerning Seniors were euery where ſetled and eſtabliſhed, and had enlarged her boundes in euery Congregation, would be moſtely well reſſeſſed, as we haue ſene in the forme of prayers printed at Geneua. And thus would one enlarge it ſelf ouer another, which might open, not a windowe, but the broad gates, to a worſe than Popiſh tyrannie, and ſtill al without the boundes of the ſcripture.

Wherefore while we ſearch the ſcripture, the onely rule whereby the Church of God ought to be gouerned: we finde that in regiment & gouernance of the Church, the paſtor, B. or elder, hath none authority by himſelfe, ſeperated from other. For in the Church there ought to be no Monarchie or ſole abſolute gouernment, but that is referred particularly to our ſauour Chriſte onely, 2. Tim. 6. 7. Iude. 4.

Chriſte

Christe sayth search the scriptures; for in them ye reckon vnto your selues that ye haue eternall life, and they bear witnesse of me. Iohn. 5. 39. In searching the scripture we finde this rule, where the Apostle warneth Timothy: But abide thou in those things which thou hast learned, and which are of trust committed vnto thee. Knowing of whome thou hast learned them, and that thou hast from a childe knowne the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee skilfull, concerning the saluation by the fayth which is in Christe Iesu. The whole scripture inspired from God, is profitable to Doctrine, to reprehension, to correction, to institution, which is in righteousness, that the man of God may bee perfect, being perfectly instructed to every good worke. 2. Tim. 3. And this wee confesse against the aduersaries of the scripture, and with our Brethren, that the diuine and Canonically scripture as the onely rule, that containeth all things perfectly, concerning fayth and the saluation which is in Iesus Christ, to make the man of God perfect vnto all good workes: but that the holy scripture is the onely rule, whereby the Church of God ought to bee governed: vnderstanding by these wordes, that the scripture hath set downe a perpetuall and generall rule, of all the onely order of the Churches forme of externall government, as well as it hath of faith, and of the morall part of mans actions and conuersation: if we search the scripture neuer so much, neither we nor our brethren shal euer find it, for the church of God may safely admit, according to the diuersities of the states thereof, diuers formes and orders whereby it may be governed. So that nothing be withall admitted, prejudiciall to the Law, & to the Gospel, that is to say neither against faith, nor good manners, as St. Austen termeth it.

Neither is all the Government of the Church, in the government or authority of the pastor, Bishop or Elder. For the Christian Prince and ciuill Magistrate hath a government of the Church of God also, and there be diuers approued formes. whereby princes and Magistrates gouerne the Church of God, in the diuers parts and states thereof, besides the ecclesiasticall government of pastors.

And as so that heere our Brethren say, the pastor, Bishop or Elder hath no authority by himself separated from other: These speeches are spoken ambigiously. It is true in one sense, that neither pastor nor yet Bishop (for I distinguish these tearmes that here are confusedly clapped together) hath any authority by him selfe separated from other in the regiment of the Church: but that he hath the same in common with all other in the church that bee of his calling: and not like a pope as an A-per-se, as though none other shoulde haue it but hee onely, and all other from him: Neither hath any pastor, or Bishop, or Elder any such authority by himselfe, that can properly be sayd, to be separated from other: for if it be separated from other, the it hath no government of the, nor dealing wth the.

Pea,

authority. Pea, we graunt, that whatsoener authority any Pastor, or B. or elder hath, it is the Churches authority, because it is giuen vnto them that are the partes and members of the whole Church, and to the Churches vse and profite. As S. Paule sheweth, Ephes. 4. 11. &c. Hee therefore gaue some to be Apostles, other prophets, other Euangelistes, other pastors and Doctors, to the growing together of the saints, to the worke of the Ministry, to the edification of the body of Christe. And the Apostle. 1. Cor. 12. after he hath shewed, how the spirite of God giueth seperately his spirituall giftes, saying, vers. 11. But all these worketh one and the self same spirite, distributing priuately euen as hee will: he addeth: for as the body is one, and hath many members, but all the members of one body, whē as they are many, are one body: so also Christe. For by one spirite we are al baptised into one body, whether Jewes or Grecians, whether seruants or free, and all haue drunke one drinke, into one spirite. For the body is not one member but many. If the foote say, I am not the hande, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body? and if the eare saie, I am not the eye, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But nowe hath God placed the members euery one seperately in the body? euen as he would. But if all were one member, where were the body? but nowe there are many members, and yet but one body.

S. Pauls example of the mysticall body compared to the naturall

Thus doth S. Paule reason, from the resemblance and proportion of the naturall body, and the regiment thereof, to the mysticall. So that, although, what gift, facultie, power, or gouernment soener they haue, it is not so seperated from other by themselves, that it hath no Community with the other, nor is pertaining to them. For, it pertaineth to the whole in common, as we say also in the schooles, of the soule or life of man: anima est tota in toto, & in qualibet parte. The soule or life is whole in the whole body and in euery part. But yet euery faculty and power of the soule and life, is not in the whole body, nor in euery part thereof, but in the member onely, that is the proper organe to the same. And so hath euery Bishop or pastorall Elder, some authority by him-selfe, in the regiment & gouernment of the Church, so separated from other, that other which haue not the same office, haue not the same authority. So that the community in respect of the benefite, barres not the separation in respect of the exercise of the authority, and therefore saith S. Paule, 1. Cor. 12. 27. You are all of the body of Christe and members in part, And some hath God ordeined in the Church, first Apostles, the Prophetes, thirdly Doctors, then powers, then the giftes of healing, helpings, gouernmentes, kindes of tongues. Are all Apostles? are all prophets? are all Doctors? are all powers? haue all the giftes of healing? Doe all speake with tongues?

There respects of the community and seperation.

doe all interpret? so that, as in the first and second degrees heere mencio-ned, the Apostles and Prophets had some power and authoritie in the regiment and gouernance of the Church, by themselves separated from other: so may we safelie conclude of the Doctors heere mencioned also (by which name our Brethren doe here comprehend both Bishops and Pastors) that they had some power and authoritie of regiment and gouernance in the Church, by themselves separated from other in lyke manner.

And this manifestlie appeareth in their practise. The Apostle Saint Paule by his Apostolicall authoritie in the Ecclesiasticall regiment and gouernance of the Church, setteth downe in diuerse places diuerse rules, some temporarie, some perpetuall, concerning orders, rites, and ceremonies of the Churches, without anie ioynture of those Churches authorities to whom he imioyned them. Yea, without so much as asking anie counsell of them, or deliberating with them. And 1. Cor. 11. 34. he saith in generall: other things I will set in order when I come. Yea saith not, you and I together in ioynt authoritie: and yet (no doubt) he had the ioynt consent (compromit-ted to him before, and declared after) of all good men, in all those ordinances that he had made, or should make amongst them. But the authoritie was his, not theirs, & by himselfe separated from other, he exercised the same:
I, not wee, (saith he) will dispose them. If our Brethren saie that Paule was an Apostle, and they alleage this rule, not for Apostles, but that in the regiment and gouernance of the Church, the Pastor, Bishop, or Elder, hath none authoritie by himselfe separated from other: although we haue shewed already that Saint Paule exercised sometimes the office of a pastorall Elder, which hee did also in Corinthus: yet, sith our Brethren annere this reason, For in the Church, there ought to bee no Monarchie or sole absolute gouernment, but that is referred peculiarly to our Sa-uiour Christ onelie: How doth not this reason cut off Saint Paule even as an Apostle, and all the Apostles, and all other besides our Sauour Christ onely? Did they take vpon them the Monarchie, or sole absolute gouernment, that is referred peculiarly to our Sauour Christ onely?

*Our bre. reason from Christ debarreth Apostles and all from anie separate au-
 thoritie.*

And what though no ordinarie Bishoppes, Pastors, nor Elders, haue in all things like authoritie as the Apostles had? Yet to take vpon them this monarchy and sole absolute gouernment peculiar to Christe one-ly, they and all the Angelles in heauen were as much debarred as anie other. So then, by this our Brethrens reason, the Apostles might haue none authoritie by themselves separated from other, in the regiment & gouernment of the Church: But we see how they had such separate au-thoritie: neither may we thinke, they invaded Christs monarchie, or sole absolute gouernment: and therefore Christs monarchie or sole absolute

authoritie.

gouernment may stand intire, & yet may some other Ecclesiasticall person haue from Christ some authority by himselfe separated from other in the regiment and gouernance of the Church. For he that hath some parte of the Monarkes authoritie, (and that not of himselfe, but representing the Monarke) committed to him, and that to him by himselfe, separated from other, doth not forthwith take the Monarchie on him, as that sole absolute gouernment, that is referred peculiarly to our Sauior Christ only, but the Apostles had and exercised so farre forth some authoritie in the regiment of the Church by themselves separated from other: that they appointed other also to take such authoritie vpon them, and giue them rules of the same.

Timothies
authoritie
giuen him separate to himselfe
both in teaching and gouerning.

And as we haue shewd out of our Brethren themselves, that Timothy (whose example they would elude, vnder pretence that hee was an Euangelist) was the Pastor of Ephesus, and the chiefe Pastor there, Antistes, Bishop, and that their first or Archbishop: so Saint Paule that had it and vsed it by himselfe, giueth Timothie likewise authoritie by himselfe, separated (in respect of the authoritie) from other, and that not onelie in the function of teaching, but also in the Ecclesiasticall and publike gouernment of the Church. For teaching, he saith 1. Tim. 1. 3. As I besought thee to abide still in Ephesus, when I departed into Macedonia, that thou shouldest command some, not to teach other doctrine. And in the 4. Chap. verse. 11. &c. These things command and teach. Let no man despise thy youth, but bee vnto them that beleene, an example in word, in conuersation, in loue, in spirit, in faith, & in purenesse, till I come, giue attendance to reading, to exhortation, and to doctrine. Despise not the gift that is in thee, which was giuen thee by prophesie, with the laying on of handes of the Presbiterie (or Eldership.) These things exercise thou, in these things be thou, that they profiting may be manifest among all. Take heede to thy selfe & to thy doctrine continue these things, For doing the same, thou shalt saue thy selfe, and the hearers of thee. Al which authoritie as it is peculiar to & proper dutie of the pastorall office, and in comon to Saint Paule, to the Apostles, Euangelists, Bishops, Pastors, & to all Elders & Ministers of the word by themselves separated from other: (in which part, neither anie of them, nor all they, nor al the Angels in heauen, can make, nor teach anie other Gospel:) so, for that which followeth in the next Chapter, consisting all as most of that authoritie, which our Brethren saie, they now vnderstand for power of gouernment in the Church, the Apostle ascribeth also many parts, and those the chiefe and principall partes of that authoritie, to the rule and gouernance of Timothie by himselfe, separated from others in that authoritie, euen as he did befoze in the doctrine. And in this respect with much better reason, that in these things both Paule and Timothie had, and the Bishoppes & pastors haue moze authoritie, as in matters that men might make, and some of them also alterable. As for example. Rebuke not an Elder,

Elder (saith Saint Paule to Timothie, 1. Tim. 5. 17.) but exhorte him as a separate father. The rebuking therefore of an Elder appertained to his authoritie authority in the government of the Church. But hee might rebuke him by himselfe, and separated from other, that is, as well by his etone pastorall authoritie separated from others authoritie, as *pruati*li by himselfe, or separating the Elders from other.

Moreover (saith Paule to Timothie, verse. 11.) reiect the younger widowes. The reiecting therefore of the widowes (to whome Beza ascribes an Ecclesiasticall office) appertained also vnto Timothie. And verse 19. Against an Elder admit no accusation, except vnder 2. or 3. witnesses. Not onelie therefore the hearing, and all the chiefe processe in iudgement, but the berie admitting of the accusation, appertained particularly to his authoritie by himselfe separated from other, though not so separated, that they might not sit with him, but that in the admitting and determining such accusations, even in the Consistorie against an Elder, and the Elder a Pastor also: the authoritie of the negative voice is ascribed here to him, and in his person to a Bishop.

This may also be referred (saith Hemingius) vnto the honour of Priests (or Elders) that the Bishop should not giue care, to the slanderers of the life and fame of them, except they were conuicted before, by lawful witnesses. For if he would hearken to tale tellers, without euident knowledge of the cause, it cannot bee but that oftentimes hee should giue ouerhastie iudgement, and should be carried rashly against the innocent. Wherein he plainlie ascribeth the authoritie of iudgement (ouer a Pastor accused) to the Bishop.

The proposition of this place is (saith Aretius) that a Bishop must endeavour himselfe, that the Ecclesiasticall iudgements may most holilie be administred. He appointeth the partes from the diuision: For sinne either is hidden, and therefore by witnesses to bee conuicted: or is notorious, neither hath the sinner neede of witnesse, because the sinne is euident, or else also hee doth confesse it. Of either of this kinde hee brieflie treateth, but he beginneth with that that is hidden. As it is wont in great men, such as are the Presidents of the Common weale and of the Church, whose sinne is not euident, for because of their authoritie. These if they bee complained vpon, inquirie must bee made by witnesses. Signifieng, that the complainers must not easilie bee beleued.

Moreover, that the fame and name of those that are good, must bee fauoured, that they bee not openlie defaced with euerie small rumour. First, heere I take Priest or Elder, by office and age, that is, the Ministers must not bee condemned, except diligent inquisition be had.

authoritie.* Neither onely the Ministers, but all persons of graue yeeres. For vnto whome God hath giuen a good name and grauitie of age, it behoueth to worshipspe them in the place of parents. Therefore diligent heede is to be had, that the defamers bee not rashlye beleueed against such persons.

Moreouer, because such Priests or Elders were Iudges and Senatours Ecclesiasticall, that corrected other for their sinne, according to the reason of their fault: it is credible that they incurred the offence of many, insomuch that they shoulde not want backbiters. It was therefore a matter worthy of admonition, that nothing shoulde rashly bee credited against them. Neither followeth it therevpon, that witnesses shoulde bee had onely in these, and in other they must proceede without witnesses: yea rather, because in these grauitie is required: he teacheth that the same must be had in euery Ecclesiasticall iudgement. In the meane time there are many light and childish matters, in which neither the integritie of the same nor name is touched, wherein there is no neede of like rigour. Let vs therefore establish this for a common rule, that in all Ecclesiasticall iudgement the president or gouernour must haue care, that in a godly and holy sorte inquisition may be made of mens sinnes.

The rule gi-uen to Ti-mothie, is generall to all present gouernours
and Bishops

Thus doth likewise Aretius shew this precept of Paule to Timothie, to a generall rule; that in the consistorie & in criminall causes, euen against a Minister, to whom he calleth also a President ouer the people the hearing, that the Bishop is a higher President aboue him, and hath the admittance, and his iudging of the matter.

Beza in 1.
Tim. 5.

And what differeth Beza herein from these? Against an Elder (saith he) quod magis scriptum The Greekes referre this to men of more auncient yeeres, which to mee seemeth verie absurde. For although somewhat ought to be giuen to the hoare head, yet I see no cause why in this point the condition ought not to be alike. But in a Priest there is a farre other reason, because it is certaine that Sathan layeth his snare chieflie against this sort of men. And for that cause none are so much thrall to slaunders and backbitings. In hearing therefore the accusations of them, there is most neede of great heedfulnessse. But thou wilt saie, what is that? Heere mee thinkes some haue stumbled, while they thinke that nothing is heere prescribed of Paule, which in all iudgements is to bee observed. And therefore they sweate much in vntying this knotte, and doo manifestlie wrest the wordes of the Apostle, insomuch verily that some (which thing Erasmus out of a certayne Epistle written by Saint Ierome to Marcella rehearseth) doo cleane blotte out all that member following, and then expounde it: receiue not, that is; receiue not easilie. Howbeit I doo not suppose anie difficultie to bee heere, heere, for it is one thing to admit the accusation, and another thing to parate and absolue, or condemne the accused. But this is the office of a iudge, to tharitie, heare anie that will accuse, whom afterward if they shall not throughly A Iudges prone him guiltie, he may chastise according to their deserts. But for all office. this, when as a Priest is accused, the Apostle would haue a certaine peculiar thing to be obserued, that no man shoulde bee admitted, no not so much as to accuse him, except before hand, afore two or three witnesses, he shall cause his accusation that is to come, to bee beleueed. So that the Priest be not straight waie condemned, or the cause heard in his absence, But that after it shal appare that it wil not be a friuolous accusatio: That then at the length the guiltie partie shall be called, and that it shall bee lawfullie determined on the whole matter. But I finde the cause of this Apostolicall constitution to be two folde: to wit, because (as I said right now) none are alike thrall vnto slander, as are godly Doctors, And then because in a manner no priuate iudgement can bee ordained against a Priest, sith that it must needes bee ioyned with the publike offence of the whole Church. Insomuch, that although hee bee absolved, notwithstanding some infamie therevpon shall redound to the whole Church, and that there should bee neede of great caution, not onelie in iudging him, but also in admitting his accuser. Moreover, we must note out of this place, that Timothy in the Ephesine Presbiterie, was then pastor, that is, (Antistes) the Bishop, as Iustine calleth him, not that he should doe all things, as he listeth, but that for his godlinesse and wisdom hee shoulde moderate all things, that all things in the assemblie should bee well done and in order.

By Priest or Elder, he meaneth
 Doctor or Teacher.

Thus both euen Beza also not onelie acknowledge Tymothie to haue bene the Bishop of the Church of Ephesus: but also that both he had, and e-uerie Bishop by this rule ought to haue this authoritie of moderation, whether anie accusation, (and how farre forth) shoulde be admitted against a Pastoral Elder, and in hearing and determining the cause to be his iudge.
 Which authoritie (in so great a Consistorie as then and there was) beeing singled and separated out from other vnto him: how had other anie parte with him of the same? And as it was thus in triall of matters pleaded before him: so if anie Pastors were found to haue openly offended, Timothy againe in the next verse (and in Timothy euerie Bishop) hath authoritie given him ouer anie such pastors openly to reprove them. And the reason is adde by the Apostle, That the other also (speaking especiallie of the other Pastors) may haue feare. From hence (saith Aretius) is this noble argument drawen. Feare in the church is to be confirmed, therefore Ecclesiastical iudgements are granelly to be administred: so that, sith the Bishops authoritie should be such, as shoulde strike feare in the other pastors, it is apparant, they had not the same nor equall authoritie with him.

The office
of a Iudge.

A Iudges of fice is an office separate from all the bench.

And so Hyperius referreth all this in generall to the authoritie of Bishops, though the matter be brought before the Church, and that the Bishops should seeme to fauour their sinnes, if he deale not thus. And he concludes in these wordes. But of what matter the Priests (or Elders) may be accused and reprov'd before the Bishop, it were long to dispute. And the next verse declares yet further his separate authoritie, I charge thee before God, and the Lord Iesus Christ, and the elect Angels, that thou obserue these things, without preferring one before another, and do nothing partially. This contestation (saith Hemingius) wherewith as it were with an oathe, Paul bindeth Timothie, declareth howe harde the office of a Bishop is. And it containeth a verie serious admonition, least that in the sight of so great witnesses, God the Father, Christ, and the elect Angels, (he calleth these elect, for the difference of the reprobate) he should doo anie of those things that pertaine to the office of a Bishoppe, of priuate affections. But that he should doo all things lawfully and orderlie, to the glorie of God, and to the edification of the Church, according to the prescribed Canons, preferring none to any thing for priuate causes. And speaking of the diuerse readings of this sentence, he saith: al these readings although they differ in wordes, yet they offer the same sentence, that is to wit, a Bishop according to the Canons prescribed of Paule, shoulde doo and iudge al things, esteeming more the verity of the cause, than the condition of the person. Which thing verilie is in common commended to all Iudges, Exod. 18. Wherein (saith Beza) he is sayd of the Grecians, οὐκ ἀποφαινεῖ, to giue preiudicate iudgement, that accounteth anie man as excellent and choise. But a Iudge ought in iudging to laie downe all these opinions, as he that sitteth not to iudge of the persons, but of the cause, &c. For a Iudge ought to weigh the rights of the pleaders, as it were in a ballance, so that he should incline to neither parte. Otherwise it will not be a right iudgement. But a Iudges authoritie in all such iudgements is the chiefeest on the bench, whosoener sit with him as assistant: neither doth he (whosoener he communicate with other in counsell & deliberation) ioyne anie with him in the authoritie of iudgement: the Bishop therefore being such a Iudge, in these matters pertaining to the Ecclesiastical regimēt and gouernance of the Church: we finde by searching of the Scripture, that a Bishop hath authoritie by himselfe separate from other, cleane contrarie to our Brethrens saying.

Neither hath the Bishoppe this authoritie onely, concerning their liues and conuersation. But for their verie entrie and admittance also into the ministerie, al the authoritie of being ordained was to passe (by whom so euer they were elected) by his onely ordeining of them, as appeareth further, verse 23. Laie handes lightlie on no man. And although Beza heere doe abidge this his authoritie in ordaining Ministers, and saie: Laie handes, that is, admit not euerie one lightlie to haue anie Ecclesiasticall ^{separate} ~~sum~~ ^{authoritie.} ~~tion~~, to wit, so much as in thee is. For neither all the authoritie laie in ^{Beza restray} ~~Timothie~~ alone, but by election made of the suffragies (or voices or the ^{ning the Bi-} ~~whole~~ Church, as we haue sayd, A^{shops} ~~ct.~~ 14. d. 23. and appeareth by the ele- ^{thops} ~~ction~~ of Matthias, and of the Deacons. And then afterward, the ^{authoritie.} ~~or~~ Bishoppe, in the name of the Presbiterie, did by the imposition of handes consecrate vnto the Lorde the elected partie, as is abouesayde 4. d. 14.

But al this ouer nice minding, serueth not the turne, for, in the elections ^{The electio} ~~which~~ Beza here citeth for example of like manner, there is great diffe- ^{of Matthias} ~~rence.~~ In the example of Matthias, A^{A². 14} ~~ct.~~ 1. his election was by lot, and not by voices, nor anie laying on of hands is there mentioned. In the Deacons, A² ~~ct.~~ 6. the multitude chose them, and the Apostles, not anie of the other Elders, laide their handes on them. And as for the example, A² ~~ct.~~ 14. whereof although we haue seene somwhat already, yet so often as our brethren leade vs to this place, which is one of their principall sanctuaries to which they runne: it shall not be amisse so often to shew, that they claime a wrong priuiledge. And first, that it was done by the peoples voices & holding vp their handes, as a testification of their consentes vnto them, which the wordes of the text doe not inforce. ^{Erasmus.} ~~but~~ ordaining by the hande vnto them, Priests (or Elders) by euerie Church: although Erasmus interpret ^{Caluine.} ~~quum creassent per suffragia~~: and when they had created by voices Elders vnto them: whom Caluine followeth, saying: The word ~~signifieth~~ ^{signifieth} to discerne by holding vp the handes, as is wont to be done in solemnities or assemblies of the people.

And Beza followeth him, saying: This word sprang of the custome of ^{Beza.} ~~the~~ Grecians, which gaue their voices with their hands held out. Wherevpon sprang that decree noted of Cicero for Lucius Flaccus, they stretched out their hands. And diuerse others most excellent learned among our Brethren and vs, followe that translation: and albeit our Geneva translation saith, And when they had ordeined them Elders by election, but adding this note in the margine: The word signifieth to elect by putting vp of hands, which declareth, that Ministers were not made without the consent of the people: yet (with the good leaue and reuerence of all these singular learned men bee it spoken) not onelie no necessitie driueth them to this interpretation: but I see not (though I woulde bee right gladd to learne) howe it can stande with the sense and reason of the Text.

For first the text maketh there no mention at all of their election, whereof we doubt not, but that they were not made without the consent of the people. But the question is, who did make, create, or ordaine them? ^{The wordes} ~~of the text~~ ^{menctio} ~~of~~ ^{electio.}

χειροτονια is referred onely to Paule and Barnabas.

Whether the people together with Paul and Barnabas: or Paul and Barnabas onely? But it is most euident that the word χειροτονια, is referred onely to Paule and Barnabas: and therefore whatsoeuer the people did in voice, or hands, in the election, the handes onely of Paule and Barnabas were in the creating and ordaining of them. And although that the Hea-then Grecians had such an vse, that when a lawe or decree was to bee ap- proued of the people, they gaue their consent therunto in their great assem- blies, by holding vp their hands: yet to take the word here in such a pro- phane sense, me thinks Caluine answers himselte sufficientlie: Not- withstanding the Ecclesiasticall writers vse the name χειρονομια in another sense. that is to wit, in a solemne custome of ordaining, which in the Scriptures is called the laying on of hands. Moreouer, by this forme of speaking is excellentlie expressed the lawfull manner in creating Pastors. Paule and Barnabas are sayd to choose the Elders. Doe they this alone by their priuate office? Yea rather, they permit the matter to the voices of them all. Therefore in the Pastors that were to bee created, there was a free election of the people. But, that nothing should be done tumultu- ouslie, Paule and Barnabas (as it were moderators) had the government. Thus ought the decree of the Councell of Laodicia to bee vnderstoode, which forbiddeth the election to be permitted to the people.

Paul & Barnabas moderators of the election

Thus writeth Caluine. Wherein he diueth all to the election. But the worde χειροτονια, importeth by his owne interpretation, and by the Ecclesi- call custome in the Scripture, the ordination by laying on of handes. As for the election was another matter, which then in parte pertayned to the people. And yet therein Paule and Barnabas had a generall higher author- itie by themselves, than anie other had ioyntly with them.

As for the decree in the Councell of Laodicia, (which was holden a- bout the yere of our Lord 360.) the words and meaning are plaine, Chap. 13. That it must not be permitted vnto the people, to make election of them, that were to be promoted vnto Priesthood. What tumultes they had found therein, I remit to the Ecclesiasticall histories. So that we can- not (as Caluine doth) vnderstand the words of the Councell so, as that they onely take a waie the moderation of the voices from the people: for that they neuer had so much, as to bee moderators of their owne voices. But the Councels meaning is most apparant, that the people should no lon- ger haue anie voices at all to elect the pastor. And therefore that ancient Councell (in making this decree) declareth, that they take not the peoples election to be anie necessarie and materiall part of creating, ordaining, or consecrating of a Pastor.

But whatsoeuer authoritie our Brethren would renne vnto the peo- ple, concerning election: What is that to the ordaining of him? The elec- tion maketh him but ordinable or capable to be ordained. As for that ex- ample ample which Beza addeth, Act. 4. mentioneth indeede Imposition of hands of the presbiterie or elder ship: Which word if we shoulde heere understand, for a number of Elders, that laide their hands on him, (which Caluine saith we neede not do, and we haue shewed the contrarie:) yet, neither followeth it of necessitie, that they were anie Elders that dealt in the government of the Church and not in the word, as Beza himselfe confesseth: neither that this imposition of hands on him, was at his first creating, minister of the word or pastor, but on some other occasion, and therefore saith Beza, die impositionis id est, in ministerio, vel in magisterio. of Prophecie, that is, to prophecie, or in prophecie, as Rom. 4. b. 11, or by prophecie, that is, the holie Ghost by the mouth of the Prophets so commending, as is aboue sayde, Chap. 1. d. 18. howbeit because mention is made of the gifte bestowed vpon him: I prefer the former interpretation. For it is more probable, when as he had alreadye an excellent gift of prophecie, that hee was chosen for a while, to wit, vntill he were of the Lorde called to some other place, for he was an Euangelist. Which laying on of hands out of doubt did confirme the grace of God in him, as 2. Tim. 1. b. 6. But of Prophets, what was their function hath often bene declared of vs. Of the presbiterie in quocumque loco, that is, of the order of the Priestles or Elders. In the which name it is probable, that the companie is signified of all them, which laboured in the word, in the Church of Ephesus, as Act. 20. d. 17. and f. 28. For sometimes these names of Bishops and Priestles, yea, and of Deacons also are generall. See, Phil. 1. a. 1, a certaine fellowe translateth it the Senate, as in another place for the Church, hee sayde, the common weale.

Imposition of hands.
The imposition of hands of the presbiterie.

Imposition of hands pertained to pastors.

Thus writeth Beza, of the imposition of hands, and of the presbiterie, both counting the name Senate, to prophane a name of the presbiterie: and ascribing the imposition of hands, to those onelie that were labourers in the word: and that Timothie was a minister of the word before this imposition of their hands.

But if now we shall understand, that in this place 1. Tim. 4. 14. by laying on of hands vpon Timothie, was also meant the ordaining or creating of him a minister of the word, as saint Paule meaneth it in his precept to Timothie, 1 Tim. 5. 22. and as Caluine taketh it: let vs see againe what Caluine saith thereon: He saith that grace was given vnto him by prophecie. How? To wit, because (as we sayde before) the holie Ghost by Oracle appointed Timothie, that hee shoulde be chosen into the order of pastors. For he was not chosen onelie by the iudgement of man, as is wont to be done, but the calling of the spirit went before. He saith it was given him with the imposition of hands. Wherein hee signifieth, that together with the ministry he was also indued with necessary gifts. It was vsuall and solemne to the Apostles to ordaine Ministers, by the imposition of handes. And verily of this custome, and of the originall and signification thereof, I haue touched somewhat before; and the residue may be gathered out of my Institution: The Presbiterie: they which thinke this worde is colledine; put for the Colledge of the Priests (or Elders) doe in my iudgement thinke well. Notwithstanding (all thinges weighed) I graunt that the other sense, dooth not ill agree thereto, that it should be the name of the office, &c. And because Beza referreth the expounding of this place, to the 1. Tim. 1.6. on these wordes: Therefore I warne thee that thou stirre up the gifts of God which is in thee by the imposition of my handes. Let vs see againe withall what Caluine saith thereon: There is no doubt but that Timothie was wished for with the common desire of the Church, and not elected by the priuate will of Paule alone. But it is not absurde, that Paule should ascribe the election prinatlie to himselfe, whereof hee was the chiefest author. Although here he rather treateth of the ordeining of him than of the electing, that is, of the solemne custome of his being instituted.

The separat

of hands.

Moreouer, it dooth not cleerlie appeare, whether that when any was to be consecrated, all were wont to lay their hande vpon his head, or one onelie in the place and name of all. My coniecture rather inclineth vnto this, that there was one onelie which layde his handes vpon him: Howbeit, it may bee doubted, whether this present imposition of handes bee referred to his ordaining, because at that time the graces of the spirite, whereof Saint Paule treateth to the Romanes Chap. 12. and 1. Corin. 12. were conferred by imposition of handes vnto many also which were not instituted Pastors. But I easilie gather of the former Epistle, that Paule treateth heere of the Pastors office. For this place agreeth with that: Neglect not the grace which is given to thee with the imposition of the handes of the Presbiterie. Whereby it appeareth that the handes of the Presbiterie in the ordaining and consecrating a pastor, might be well inough not the handes of many, but of one alorie, that had principall authoritie about the other in that action.

1. Tim. 5.

And as Paule testifieth thus of his alone manner of ordaining Timothie: so hee proceeth in his precept to Timothie, 1. Tim. 5. 23. Let hands lightlie on no man. Whereon sayth Caluine: There is no doubt but that hee woulde put awaie enuie from Timothie, and meete with many complaintes, that oftentimes arise against the godly seruantes of Christe, which refuse to obey the ambitious praiers of anie who soeuer. For some accuse them of roughnesse, some of enuie, some crie out that they bee cruell, because they doo not by and by admit those that vaunt themselves by anie manner of commendation. Of which thing at this daie wee haue too much experience. Paule therefore

fore exhorteth Timothie, not to goe from his granitie, nor suffer himselfe to bee overcome with preposterous studies. Not that Timothie had so much neede of such admonition, as that by his authoritie hee might repress those, which otherwise might bee troublesome vnto Timothie.
 First the imposition of hands signifieth the ordination, that is, the signe much facilitie admit anie, which as yet is not so tried a man. For some there are which for the studie of noueltie would haue enrit man though most vnknown, to bee promoted so soone as euer he hath set forth anie one shew or other that liketh them. It becometh a grane & prudent Bishop to resist this importunate desire, euen as Paul heere commendeth Timothie to do.

In which wordes Caluine draweth this especiall rule to Timothie, to a generall rule to all Bishoppes to see the like. As likewise heere vpon both Hemingius. He addeth (saith he) another Counsell, or an other Canon concerning those that are to bee ordained to Ecclesiasticall offices, that he shoulde not laie handes vpon anie that is not fit or proued inough, that is, that hee shoulde ordaine none to an Ecclesiasticall functio. For by (the Figure called) Metonimia, the signe is put for the thing signified. Hee requireth heere a stoute Bishop which shoulde not admit euery one by and by vnto an Ecclesiasticall office, but onely tryed euen according to the former Canons.

Hemingius

Aretius like wise draweth this precept to an ordinarie and general rule so; Bishops. A Bishop (saith he) must doo his diligence to be heedfull and wary in Ministers that are to bee chosen. For heerein also is a fault, euen in celerity and rashnesse of indgement, that a man shuld indge him to bee fit, which is nothing so.

Aretius.

Thus doe all these, and a number moe of excellent Protestantes agree, that not onelie Saint Paule giueth this power of gouernement in the Church, as a peculiar authoritie to Timothie to ordaine Ministers, and to repell those that bee thought vnmeet, but also that heere-in and in the pointes aforesayde, Timothy is a pattern for all other Bishops to follow.

With therefore Saint Paule maketh a rule heereof, and this rule stretcheth to the duetie, and so to the authoritie of all Bishoppes. I mervaille how our Brethren can iustifie that which heere they affirme, That while wee search the Scripture, the onely rule whereby the Church of God ought to be gouerned, we finde that in the regiment and gouernance of the Church, the Pastor, Bishop, or Elder, hath no authoritie by himselfe separated from other.

As for the reason which our Brethren render: for in the Church there ought regiment. ought to be no monarchie, or sole absolute gouernment, but that is referred peculiarly to our sauour Christ onely, 2. Tim. 6. 7. Iudæ. 4. If their meaning all this while bee, onely of such gouernment, wee gladly graunt the same, that none other than our Sauour Christ, hath such a monarchie, or sole absolute gouernment, neither by himselfe separated from other, nor yet ioyned with other in the Church. For anie (except the Pope onely) that I heare of, takes it vpon him. But this debarreth not, but that there may well be, and is, some monarchie, as in Chyistian Princes, and also of Bishoppes some absolute gouernment of our Sauour Christ also. And therefore these two quotations, 1. Tim. 6. 15. and Iudæ. 4. are cited in

The lear ned disc. And that regiment which he hath left vnto his Church is a consent of his householde seruantes, to doo all things according to his prescription, as hee witnesseth Math. 18. 19. If two of you consent vpon earth vpon anie matter, whatsoeuer yee shall aske, it shall bee graunted to you of my Father which is in heauen. For wheresoeuer two or three bee gathered together in my name, there am I in the middest of them. Seeing therefore that our sauour Christ hath neither authorized nor promised to blesse anie other forme of regiment, than that which consisteth of the consent and gathering together of his seruants in his name: wee hold vs content with this simplicitie, and therefore wee are bolde to saie, that the authority of the pastor in publik regiment or discipline, separate from others, is nothing at all.

Pag. 81 Math. 18. 19 Bridges These wordes, that regiment, which he (meaning Christ) hath left vnto his Church, is a consent of his householde seruants, &c. are spoken to generally. If they had sayd that Ecclesiasticall regiment, it had yet ben the moze tollerable. For Christ hath left other politicall and ciuill regiment vnto his Church, besides the Ecclesiasticall regiment of it. True it is, that in that also there is a consent of his householde: but neither so, that it debarreth the ciuill Princes monarchie in the Church, and his gouernment in many things by himselfe: neither hath Christ prescribed all orders and lawes in particular, for the Princes and Magistrates to doe all things according to his prescription of them. And this sentence Math. 18. if it should be thus opposed to the regiment of Princes, is manifestlie weakened, and dangerouslie concluded, That our Sauour Christ hath neither authorized nor promised to blesse any other forme of regiment, than that which consisteth of the consent and gathering together of his seruants in his name.

ing of Christ's sentence.
Mat. 18.*

Neither yet helpeth it the matter, to vnderstande all this, for the onely Ecclesiasticall regiment. For although we denie not, but that those causes which appertaine either to the ciuill or ecclesiasticall regiment of the Church, should not be ordained nor imposed vpon the Church, without any the fully spoken: and much more that which our Brethren abbe, it is a consent regiment. of his householde seruants to doo all things according to his praescription. For by this rule the Ecclesiasticall regiment of the Church is in no other thing, than Christ hath praescribed.

But our Brethren haue graunted, page 76. euen in their last point of ceremoniall matters, that the Church had lawfull authoritie, to conlude a publike ordinance of them, for order and comelinesse sake, and for edification: and it is euident that many things are of their owne nature indifferent, which may be so ordered and authorized by the Church, as our Brethren already haue confessed. But the Church coulde haue no such authoritie of them, or of anie thing, if it be already by Christ praescribed: and therefore the Churches regiment is not onely a consent (as our Brethren saie) to doo all things according to his praescription. For hee hath made no praescription of these things, whether they shoulde be done or no. Except they vnderstand this to be his praescriptio, & they shal be done for order and comelinesse sake, and for edification. But those pointes concerne the endes wherefore, and the manner how they shoulde be done, & not the things and matters that are done, or consented vpon to be done. And it is one thing to doe, or how to doe the things that are consented vpon to be done, and another thing to consent that such things shoulde be done. For, the Churches regiment in these matters, consisteth most in the consent (as heere is sayde) to authorize them to bee done, and the Bishoppes or the Pastors regiment, in the authoritie of dooing or executing of them.

The difference of the Churches consent, and of the Bishops and Pastors.

But, for the consent of them to be done, what is this that they call here a consent of his householde seruants? Is it requisite, that expresse consent be had of all those that are Christs householde seruants, that is to saie, of euerie particular person in the Church? What if it seeme other wise to some one, or few, that will giue no consent thereto, but dissent? Doth this cut off the Churches regiment? No. For, our Brethren, to proue that all things must be done with the Churches consent, alleadge this sentence: If two of you consent vpon earth vpon anie matter, whatsoever yee shall aske, it shall be graunted you of my Father which is in heauen. And must this consent then, of the regiment of the Church, be contracted to anie two of the householde seruants: though the most part of all the other, that bee no lesse seruants, and faithfull seruants of the Lordes household, doe dissent from them? But wherefore doe our Brethren alleage this sentence to this matter? To confirme their regiment in the Church, being in comparison but two, to two thousand, that haue consented to the orders of the Churches regiment now established: and they dissent from our consent heretofore. Indee, were it matter of faith in doctrine, and substance of religion, or anie thing already praescribed, not onely the consent of two, and the dissent of

of one, is better than the consent of all the rest in error (as wee alleadge Gerson and Panormitane against the Papists, when they boast of consent and Councils, against the manifest truth of Gods word) but when wee all therein agree with full consent, against all the errors and superstitions of the Papists, and yet in some matters of Ceremonies, of their owne nature indifferent: and of those pointes in the Churches regiment, that concerne comelinesse, order, and edification, some seruants of the householde, dissent from other some: whether is it better that many, and almost all, and the most experient, and that in matters of regiment, and counted as learned as anie of the other, and the chiefest also in authoritie, yea, the Prince also hauing the supream authoritie, and that in the publyke regiment of Ecclesiasticall matters, shoulde giue place to two or three, or to a few persons dissenting: or that these few shoulde leaue their dissention, giue place and consent, to the greater and better parte of the companie:

The sentence

And will God graunt the requests consented vpon by two or three, and not their requestes consented vpon by so manye thousandes, when they are also gathered in the name of Christe, as not onelie the people are in our publik praiers, but also all the estates of the whole realme, and chiefe partes of the Church of England, all which haue often bene assembled, and giuen already their consent, to the establishment of this forme of the Churches regiment that we haue. And therfore this promise of our Sauour Christ, if it may be drawn to matters of publike Ecclesiasticall regiment: both more and more confirme vs in our forme established: that God approoueth it, and was in the midst of them that consented on it, and is still in the midst of our assemblies gathered in his name, when we direct our actions according therunto. And now, seeing that our Sauour Christ hath neither authorized, nor promised to blesse anie other forme of regiment, than that which consisteth of the consent and gathering together of his seruants in his name: we holde vs content with this simplicitie, and therefore we are bolde to saie, that God hath promised to blesse, and (as we haue found the experience, if we haue grace in thankfulnessse to acknowledge his manifold blessings) hath diuerse wayes already blessed our forme of regiment, which with such consent, and gathering together of his seruants in his name, is established. And our brethren haue not to be ouerbolde, but rather to feare & bethinke themselves, how they gather themselves in consent and consoyt, against this authorized form of regiment: least their gathering together breed a banding in factions of themselves, to dissipate the vnitie of the Church, & to make scismes amongst vs.

And now, where our Brethren conclude this Section, saying: And therefore wee are bolde to saie, that the authoritie of a pastor in publike like regiment or discipline, separate from others, is nothing at all:

I will be bolde also to saie thus much: that it is nothing at all against our pastors authoritie, in publik regiment or discipline. For (as they haue described it) he hath none such giuen him, nor exerciseth anye such (by anye authoritie in this Realme established) that is separate from others, that is to saie (as befoze our Brethren haue expounded their meaning) a Monarchiall authoritie or sole absolute gouernment. But that is referred peculiarie to our Sauior Christ onelie. 1. Tim. 6. v. 7. Iude. 4. Otherwise, if they meane not such authoritie: I dare be bold again to saie thus much, & not onlie this exception of Christs Monarchical or sole absolute authoritie is alleaged here in vaine, & is nothing at all vnto the abridging of the Bishop or Pastors authoritie: but that also in manner and matter afoze rehearsed, a Bishoppe or Pastoz hath a greate authoritie separated by himselfe, as the foresayde examples and preceptes to Timothie haue declared.

Let vs then see, what is his authoritie ioyned with others, & first, who are so ioyned in Commission with him, that without their consent hee can doo nothing. We saie therefore, that the authoritie of Christ is lefte vnto his whole Church, and so to euery Church: that none maye challenge Episcopall or Metropolitall authoritie, as it is with vs at this day ouer other, without great tyrannie and manifest iniurie.

That the Pastor or the Bishop can doo nothing by his authoritie, in the gouernment of the Church, without the consent of others ioyned in commission with him, soe euery particular act that he must doo: our brethren haue not yet proued. Yea, wee haue shewed the cleane contrarie both in making Ministers, and in admitting, hearing, iudging, and determining of their causes, by their owne authoritie, without anye ioyned in commission with them. Not that they did all thinges alone, but vsed the counsell and consent of others, and perhaps of the whole Churches: but that, they were not ioyned in comission with them, nor were their equals in the authoritie of those doings.

Neither is this conclusion better than the antecedent: We saie therefore that the authoritie of Christ is lefte vnto his whole Church, and so to euery Church: &c. For my parte, I dare not bee thus bolde to affirme thus indefinite and in generall, that the authoritie of Christ is lefte vnto his whole Church, and so to euery Church. But that certayne partes of the authoritie of Christ is lefte, and that in a certayne legall and ministeriall manner, vnto his whole Church, and so to euery Church. And yet not so, that euery Church, that is, euery particular congregation, hath as full authoritie of that part, as the whole Church hath: but

but that, the whole, or to euerie Church, it is so lefte, that none maie chalenge Episcopall or Metropolitall authoritie, as it is with vs at this day ouer other, without great tyrannie and manifest iniurie: This indeed is a miere, we saie it, not: we proue it. Against this our Brethrens we saie, as though all laie on their bare saying, and that whatsoever they saie, we must holde it by and by for an oracle, or for such a principle, as the Pythagoreans did the saying of their Maister, autus ipse, he said it. We haue heard at large what Saint Paule hath said to Timothie, and what a number of most excellent men in the primitive Church, and some immediatlie after the Apostles times, by the clere testimonies of the unsuspected histories, and auuientest fathers, and by the graunt of the best late writers in the reformed Churches, haue had both Episcopall, and also Metropolitall authoritie, as it is with vs at this daie ouer other, without anie tyrannie great or little, & without anie iniurie manifest or hidden, at all. And if they might haue it, they might chalenge it. Yea, to chalenge them for it, much more to take it from them, were rather not onelie the greater tyrannie and more manifest iniurie of the twain: but to saie, the authoritie of Christ is left vnto his whole church, & so to euery church that none in the church hath anie power or exercise thereof ouer other: is the greatest and most manifest confusion y can be. For by this rule we must not saie (as our B^{is}. here doe) Let vs then see what is his authoritie ioyned with others, & first who are so ioyned in commission with him, that without their consent he can doe nothing: but we must rather saie, Let vs then see, what is his authoritie ioyned with others, and first, who are not so ioyned in commission with him, that without their consent he can doo nothing: if the authoritie of Christ be left vnto his whole Church, & so, to euery church, that none may chalenge it ouer other. So that now, there shuld not only be, no Metropolitall authority ouer Bishops, nor Episcopall ouer Pastors: but also no pastorall authoritie ouer the people. For, the people are some bodie (as I take it) both in the whole Church, and in euerie Church also.

Yea, if these words which our Brethren so generally saie, we saie therefore, that the authoritie of the Church is left vnto his whole Church, and so to euerie Church, be not restrained to that parte of his authoritie, that consisteth onelie in the Ecclesiasticall regiment of his Church: it will as much indanger all Magistrates ciuill estates, that they haue no authoritie neither ouer other. For, they hold that also of Iesus Christ, and it is a part of his authoritie ouer his Church. But, howsoeuer that may stande or fall hereby, the Princes supream authoritie in Ecclesiasticall causes, ouer all persons Ecclesiasticall and ciuill in their dominions, is cleane taken awaie from them, euen as wel as the Metropolitall ouer the Bishops, or the Bishops authoritie ouer the Pastors.

So we, although this moste absurd, and moste dangerous confusion promise. of all authorities Ecclesiasticall and ciuill might ensewe beereon: Yet Mat. 18. our Brethren hauing promised heerein, that they woulde be bolde to say these sayings: and hauing hethereto (though boldly, yet but barely) saide them: they will now be bolde, (as good reason is they shoulde) to assay to proue them.

For, seeing our Sauour Christe promised his presence and authority to euery Church indifferently, Mathewe 18. 19. 20. None may chal- The lear lenge any such prerogatiue afore other: but as the churches are limited ned disc out for order and conueniency, so is euery one of them of like authority pag. 82 in it selfe: but because they make all but one Church, and one body of Math. 18. 19. Christe, therefore there is but one authority in them, to determine of 10. matters concerning them all.

This argument still relying on this former cited sentence, Mathew Bridges 18. 19. 20. which properly treateth of the efficacy of prayer, where the faithfull, although they be in neuer so small a number assembled, to make their petitions in Christes name, are promised that God the Father will graunt their requestes, and that Christ also will be present among them: neither comprehendeth all the authority that Christe hath left vnto his whole Church, or to any especiall persons in the same: neither (if it be drawn to matters of gouernment and authority) is any debarre against any particular auth. of any Pastor, more than of any Christian Prince or magistrate. For, how followeth this? Christ will be present where 2. or 3. are gathered together in his name: therefore, wher but one maketh his prayers alone vnto him, he will not be present: except our bre. can bring this exclusive, only, or, at the least, into this promise of Christ, that where 2. or 3. only, or two or three at the least are gathered together in his name, hee will be present with them. If then, this followe not in prayer, wher- This sentence of this sentence properly is spoken: howe much lesse doth it holde, if we is principal- stretch this promise of Christe, to matters of gouernment in the church, ly spoken of as (I graunt) it reacheth also thereto. As, to reason thus: Christ hath pro- consent in mised that where two or three bee gathered together in his name, to prayer, nor consent on the establishment of any authority or gouernment of his is any debar Church, his presence and authority shall bee among them: therefore, if er of one the Christian Prince eyther by him-selfe, and his supreme authority, doe alone. establish any thing in the Church: or though hee ioine other with him, yet not in authority, but as counsellors, or, though in authority also, yet, not as equall in authority with him: except hee, and they, and all, gathered together in the name of Christe, bee of the like authority in giuing their consents vnto the matter: neither Christes presence will bee with them, nor his authoritie will ratifie their doing.

Mat. 18. lution in these matters that are done of the christian Prince neither yet of him alone, but of other in cōsultation with the prince, but the only superiour and supreme ouer all other which are all partes of the Church, and assembled about matters of the Churches Gouernment: both it holds anye more against Bishops and Pastors: How agréeth this euen with their own assertions after ward? Pag. 114. of Iames his prerogatiue, in the assembly of the Elders at Ierusalem: Was not the holy ghost among them because one had this prerogatiue? Neither helpeth it þ they say this prerogatiue was only of order, & not of authority: for if it were not of authority, it were no orderly prerogatiue, but a tyranny. But they say, he may challenge no authority. If it be orderly giuen him, & so his due: why may he not chalége it? but yet they say, he may challenge no episcopal or metropolitall authority, as it is at this day with vs. If it were so with them, in the auncient and holy Church yea in the Apostles times, as in this respect, it is at this day to be, euen by Caluines own testimony (as he haue heard) both for Episcopal authority, & that Iames his authority was it selfe Episcopall: then is this neither any tyranny, nor any let to the presence of the holy ghost, that one among them hath & chalégeth episcopal or metropolitall authority afore the rest, as it is with vs this day ouer other. Our bre. therefore make here a lose conclusion: that seeing our sauour Christ hath promised his presence & authority to euery church indifferently, Mat. 18. 19. 20. Therefore none may challenge any such prerogatiue afore other, meaning such as Bishops and Metropolitanes doe challenge. But since the wordes of Christ are spoken (as they say) indifferently. Why might they not conclude as well, any such prerogatiue afore other, as Christian Princes also challenge in the Churches Gouernment?

How Christ promised his authority.

All particu-

not alike in dignity.

In deede the matter that Christe there promised to ratify with his presence & authority, he promised the same to euery Church (as our Bre. say) indifferently: but he neither promised there or other where his auth. to all and to euery one in the Church indifferently: nor yet all kinde of authority to euery Church indifferently. With some Church may haue some such prerogatiue, as appertaineth to dignity & preheminance, afore other Churches. Ierusalem being a Metropolitall Church had a prerogatiue afore many other smaller Churches rounde about it, euen in the Apostles time. And so (it appeareth) had Ephesus in Asia; Antiochia in Syria, &c. yea although no church might haue any prerogatiue at all, afore other churches: yet both not our Bre. argumēt hold, frō the churches to the pastors or B. in the Churches. Our bre. reason thus: Seeing our sauour Christ promised his presence and authority to euery Church indifferently. Mat. 18 19. 20. none may challenge any such prerogatiue afore other. What is signified here by this worde, none: but no person in the church: as much, & more to the purpose, then to say none, that is to say no Church. And if our Brethren would haue none in the Church, to haue any such prerogative as appertaineth to the auth. of Gouvernement, in or of the Church afore other: what else were this, than to giue euery person in the church, a-qual authority? whether this wold breed confusio or no, let theselues iudge.

If they say they mean by these wordes: none may chalége any such prerogative afore other: not, no person afore other persons, but no church afore other churches: and that they expound their meaning in the wordes following, saying: but as the churches are limited out for order and conueniency: so is euery one of them of like authority in it self: although this also be not true, for diuerse respects, in comparison of churches one with another: yet, what is this to the Question now in hande, for the B. or pastors authority in the Gouvernement of the church, whether he haue any by himselfe, seperated from other, yea, or no? Our brethren say, hee hath none, and we say, he hath some. They, to prooue he hath none, haue allea-ged the promise of Christe Math. 18. And are come now to see what is his authority ioyned with others, and first, who are so ioyned, in commision with him, that without their consent, he can do nothing. Upon whom is all this spoken? & who is this, he, so often mentioned. Is this he turned into a shee? that is to say, into a Church? and is this our Question, whether a church hath any authority by her selfe separated from others? or, whether a B. or pastor hath any authority by himselfe separated from others? And what ment they by this conclusion? We say therefore that the authority of Christ, is left vnto his whol church, & so to euery church, that none may challenge episcopall or metropolical authority, as it is with vs at this day ouer other, without gret tirany & manifest iniury: who is here this none that may challenge no episcopall or metropolical authority: do not B. & Archb. as it is with vs at this day challenge this authority? And therefore, except they reason of the persons: their reasons are not to the purpose. But they name the churches for the persons: because they challenge the autority in the right of their Churches: although in this controuersy, their chalenge is rather in the right of their office, than of their Churches.

But as the churches are limited out for order & conueniency, so is e-uery one of them of like authority in it selfe: but because they make all but one Church, and one body of Christ, therefore there is but one authority in them, to determine of matters concerning them all.

To speak of the church, as the mystical body of Christ, I grant, it is all but one body, & but one church. Howbeit, in y^e respect, haue al the parts therof one only, & the like authority: no: al, one only, & the like exercise of functions & actions. As I shewed before, how Paul reasoneth, 1. Cor. 12.
17. If all the body were the eye, where were the hearing? if all were hearing where were the smelling? But nowe God hath placed the members euery one of them in the body, euen as he would. But when they say heere, the churches are limited out for order & conueniencie: in that respect, as they make them not all one Church, but in a different sense, different Churches: so is there lesse necessitie, that all their authorities should be but one. For, as in that respect, they may differ in regiment, concerning many orders and conveniencies among them, this Church from that church: so may they differ also in preeminences and authorities of the same orders, and so determining of such different matters. But now although there were but one authority in the whole, and in every church, to determine matters concerning them all: yet if the same be not equally distributed among them all: in the whole and in every part alike: what letteth, but that both some churches, and much more some persons in the churches, may have some separate authority by them selves, and some more authority than other have and some prerogative also above other?

By which there appeareth to be a double authority of the Pastor, one with the severall congregation, in which he is pastor, the other with the whole Synode or assembly whereof hee is a member, and both these authorities wee finde sufficiently authorized in the Scripture, as shall plainly appeare in the severall discourses of them. First therefore, wee will speake of his authority in his severall church, in which hee may doe nothing without the consent of the church.

Our Brethren doe here divide againe or subdivide the Pastors authority. They divided it before, Page. 76. & 77. into the authority or power of government in the church, or authority in common Government with the Elders: and into the authority or power that belongeth to the proper duty of the Pastor him-selfe. Which was somewhat an intricate Division.

Bridges.
The Pastors authority not one but indifferent.

With the authority or power belonging to his proper duty, is a great part of his publique Government in the church. This authority now, which before they sayde, that they vnderstood for power of Government in the church, they divide againe, into a double authority: the one with the severall congregation, in which hee is Pastor: the other with the whole Synode or assemblie whereof hee is a member. If now their selves doe here finde, and that twice together, that in one function, there is not onely a former double and different authority: but also of one of the former divided partes, a redoubled and different authority in the Pastors: howe then did they anouche immediately before, that there is but one authority in them, to determine of matters concerning them all? but perhaps they mean that, of the churches authority: and here they speak of the authority pertaining to the pastors of the churches. But that helps not. For if the Pastors authority, which he hath in common with the Elders (whom they make the church) be thus divided: then is the churches authority divided also.

First therefore (say they) wee will speake of his authority in his severall all Church in which hee may doe nothing without the consent of the ^{authority.} Church.

I would gladly learne, where our Brethren haue all those diuisions ^{Bridges.} and subdivisions, all these Canons and limitations of a Pastors authority. For although it bee heere promised, that wee finde them sufficiently ^{Our Breth.} authorized in the Scripture: yet hetherto, heere is no Scripture cited for ^{diuision &} them, saue, 1. Tim. 6. 13. that God is blessed and onely mighty, the king ^{positions} of kings and Lord of Lordes And Math. 18. 19. 20. Which was before ^{besides the} alleaged to other purposes, although God wot very impertinently. But they promise vs further, that, both these authorities we finde sufficiently authorized in the Scripture, as shall plainly appeare in the seuerall discourses of them. So that, heere is yet nothing that we can finde, which may be counted a sufficient authorizing in the Scripture of these things. And therefore our Brethren in this their Learned Discourse made hereupon, doe well and learnedly (in my opinion) to let all this passe that they haue already alleaged, as insufficient, and referre vs to the hope of better proofes, in their moze Learned Discourse to come, as shall plainly (they promise vs,) appeare in the seuerall Discourses of them. But when we shall come also (God willing) vnto those seuerall Discourses of them, to searche, whether these authorities and assertions of our Brethren, be sufficiently authorized in the Scripture: I doubt, we shall finde that this sufficient authorizing in Scripture, is not any expresse and and plaine testimony of the Scripture: but onelye their owne collection thereon. And if this be sufficient to make vs reckon a thing sufficiently authorized (as in some cases we deny it not, if they can make it plainely appeare, that it followeth by necessity of consequence, though verbatim it be not expresse in the Scripture) if we must permit this in them, that their collections on the Scripture, must goe for authorizings in the Scripture: why must not the same manner of authorizings, where wee proue necessary consequence, bee of as good authority on our parties? In the meane time betwene vs both, for any thing yet by these oure Learned Brethren alleadged: till I see better prooffe thereof, either out of expresse and plaine Scripture, or out of some necessary consequence of Scripture I yeld not to this their dubble Canonized Canon, as shooting off nothing but a bare bolde, wee say: not, any Testimonie or prooffe sufficiently authorized in the Scripture: that the Pastor by his authority in his seuerall Church, may doe nothing, without the consent of the Church. Nothing (they say) hath no saueur, and this hath no trueth. It is so farre from being sufficiently authorized: that it is moze then sufficiently confuted, as already hath often appeared, and playnely in the manifest example of Saint Pauls preceptes to Timothie, euen by Caluines and Bezaes owne cleare Confessions, besides diners others on the same. Not, that we deny, but that Paule and Timothie had the churches consentes (for the better part among them) in what things soever they did by their authoritie in their churches: but, that in all things they asked not their consentes before, nor that they which gave their consentes had such a negative authority, but that if they would not have given them, Saint Paule and Timothie might have proceeded in some things against their consentes: which when they were given, were not the sufficient or any authorizing at all, of Paule and Timothies doings among them.

The

THE 11. booke is of the third kind of Tetrarkes which our Brethren call Gouvernors: beginning first with the (bur-ches diffused authority: & of confusion in the multitude: & of the appointing to auoide it certaine officers for gouernment: how the name of Gouvernors and Rulers is understood, Rom. 12. & 1. Cor. 12. how these gouernors must rule euery seueral congregation, & how their gouernment stretcheth to al matters. Howe these Gouvernors authority is to bee moderated. And first for the election of these gouernors, wha should chose them, & what qualities they must haue. What elders were elected, Act. 14. And what elders are mentioned. 1. Tim. 5. 17. & of the 3. conclusions that our brethren would haue vs learn out of that testimony. How the name elders is common to Pastors & gouernors, & how the words may be well understood of relation betwene the ciuil officers then among the & the pastors. How the wordes inferre not such gouernors as our brethren imagine: and how that although they might be so understood, yet they inferre no perpetuity, as well of the one sort of Elders, gouerning & not teaching, as of the other of gouerning & teaching elders. Howe the words infer no such distinction of eccl. elders the one teaching & gouerning, the other not at al teaching but only gouerning: but rather seem to infer a distinctiō of the trauels, than of the function: or if of the functiō to encline to the distinctiō betwene past. deac. or betwene those Pastors that were ~~antistates~~ antistates, B. and others, that laboured more in ministering the Sacraments then in preaching. How Caluine dare not inferre any such necessary sense as he conceueth on this place, but only saith, it may be collected. How our brethren inueighing against them, make these gouernors, dumb & not teaching Bishops & preaching prelates. How the Apostles words infer not their ioint gouernment with the Episcopall Elders. How the auncient Fathers that haue expounded this Epistle, Chrysost, Oecumenius, Theodoret, Theophilaet, and Ambrose, haue interpreted this place, especially because Calvin, Beza & Danaus alleage Ambrose for these Elders. How Beza further alleageth Cyprian, with a full examination of Cyprian for them. How Snecanus likewise alleageth Cyprian & Tertullian with parsel of Tertullian for them, besides the examining of Clemens Alex: Irenaus, Iustinus Martyr, Ignatius & Polycarpus. How Danaus alleageth the Ecclesiasticall histories cheefe-ly Socrates, with his allegations out of Augustine, Basil, Dionysius, Jerome and the canon Lawe, with the examination of the ecclesiasticall histories, the Fathers, and the canons, for these Elders: and of the cause of these so learned mens mistaking in all these searchings for them, making all not only nothing for them, but cleane against them, nor being euer able to prooue nor one such consistory, no not one such Elder. Howe Danaus with Beza and Caluine return back again to search the Scriptures better for them Rom. 12. 1. Corinthians 12. Ephes. 4. Act. 20. 1. Peter 5. And of Caluines and Danaus contradictions. Of Danaus return again to the Ecclesiasticall history in Sozomen, in which speeding as it as before, if not worse for any practise that he would find, he comes again to the scripture, searching for these Elders, Acts. 15. Act. 21. Philip. 4. 1. Tim. 3. 1. Per. 3. 1 Corinth. 14. & Iac. 5. And so home again to that, wherewith our bret. began the inquiry for them, at Act. 14. Lastly of the second point of moderating these Elders authority, by propounding all their actions to the people, to confirm them. And of the popular state & our Bret. fear (But not auoiding) of horrible confusion. And of the example they seek to auoid it by, in the manner of Saint Pauls excommunication of the incestuous Corinthian.

AND first (say our Bishops) let vs examine, whether this authoritie be so diffused ouer the whole Church, that the hearing, trying and determining of all matters, pertaineth to the whole multitude, or to some speciall choosen persons amonge them, meete for that purpose.

Pag. 83.

One they note in almost at the last end, saying: Bridges.
and first let vs examine, whether this authoritie be so diffused ouer the whole Church, &c. What means our Bishops hereby? That the first shall be last, and the last shall be first? Should they not haue examined this before? They saye in the former page, 82. that the authoritie of Christ is left vnto his whole Church. And also before that page 81. That regiment which he hath left vnto his Church, is a consent of his householde seruantes. And that our sauour Christ hath neither authorized, nor promised to blesse anie other forme of regiment, than that which consisteth of the consent and gathering together of his seruantes in his name. What else, can any of the seruantes of the householde of Christ suppose, when they heare of this, but that where-so-euer they be diffused, they must gather themselues together, either the whole church vniuersally, or euery whole Church particularly, and giue their consent thereunto; or else, the matter whatsoeuer, is not authorized by the authoritie that Christ hath left vnto his Church. And that he hath blessed none other forme of regiment? And must it now be called in question, and examined, whether this authoritie be so diffused ouer the whole Church, that the hearing, trying and determining of all matters, pertaineth to the whole multitude? And why not, if the former sayings be true? Do our Bishops begin now, to call this a diffused authoritie? Diffused commeth neere confused. And I thinke, shortly they will finde it confused too. And as they now beginne to encline, to some speciall choosen persons amongst them, meete for that purpose: so by little and little, they will peraduenture come downe at length, to some authoritie of gouernement euen of one Pastor afore other in one congregation, and perhaps in one Diocese also. Which is the thing that they now so peremptorilie denie. Let our Bishops now therefore in their good moode, proceede.

The authoritie is the power of our Lorde Iesus Christ, graunted vnto the Church.

Our Bishops saye in the page before, that the authoritie of Christe is left vnto his whole Church: here yet, they say more circumspectly: the authoritie is the power of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Not that Christe hath left authoritie. left his authoritie vnto the Church: but that, the authoritie which he hath left vnto his Church, is not so the Churches, but that it still remaineth his authoritie. For, that he hath left that his authoritie to his whole Church, as they saye before, but (as they say here) it is graunted vnto the Church. Which may well stande, if any parte or persons of the Church haue it, although the whole Church haue it not.

The learned discourse. But (say they) because the iudgement of the multitude is confuse, whereas God is not the author of confusion, but of order: and that we finde in the worde of God, certaine officers appointed for gouernment: we are bold to affirme, that that charge belongeth vnto those that are such.

Bridges Were our Brethren in this Learned discoursing of the matter, bene now at length found out, not diffusion, but plaine confusion, in the iudgement of the multitude. So that, we may now (I hope) with our Brethrens good leaue, dismisse in peace the gathering together of the houlholde seruantes nor enquire after their consentes: but for the consent only of certaine officers appointed for gouernment. And here our Brethren say: they are bold to affirme, that that charge belongeth vnto those that are such.

This boldnes of our Brethren is here yet the more comenbable, that they feare not to repell the peoples consent and iudgement, for feares of confusion. Whereas God is not the author of confusion, but of order. But it had bene better (in my simple iudgement) not at all to haue sette the multitude a-gogge, as hauing an interest of consent and authoritie, to heare, trie, and determine all matters, onely to bide the Pastors and the Bishops authoritie: than now, hauing brought them in, to thrust them out. Turpis excusatio quæ non admittitur hospes. Will the multitude hearing, that Christ hath giuen his authoritie to his whole Church, and so to euerie Church indifferently, & that that regiment which he hath left vnto his Church, is a consent of his houlholde seruantes: and that he hath neither authorized nor promised to blesse any other forme of regiment, than that which consisteth of the consent and gathering together of his seruantes, (if they thinke themselves to be any part of his whole church, or of anie particular Churches, and seruantes of his houlholde) suffer themselves after they are gathered together to vse their authoritie, and to give their consent, to be thus mocked, & in the end be told, it pertaineth not to the whole multitude, but to some special chosen persons amongst them: because the iudgement of the multitude is confuse, and God is not the author of confusion but of order? What maketh our Brethren to waite so bold, to take away not only the Bishops & Pastors authority of gouernment, but thus also to mocke & dally with the multitude? But (as matter of conscience mouing them hereto) they say: we finde in the word of God, certaine officers appointed for gouernment. And they say very wisely.

Confusion in the multitudes iudgment.

How our Brethren mocke the multitude.

What officers are appointed in Gods word for gouernment.

But

But do they not find also in the word of God, that Princes & Magistrats are certaine officers appointed for gouernment? If they say, they meane it of Eccl. gouernment: Doe they not finde likewise in the word of God, that Bishops & Pastors are certaine officers appointed also for Eccl. gouernment? But they meane certaine other officers: w^{ch} they will further describe anon. And if we should graunt this also, and withall, that that charge belongeth vnto those that are such: would it follo^w, that it belongeth only vnto those that are such? No: that, there should be such alwaies & in euery congregatioⁿ, to haue that charge which those haue, when they finde in the word of God, that any such supposed officers were, according to the time & place appointed, for their extraordinary kind the of gouernment? This is ouer much boldnes to affirme, neither shall they finde so much in the word of God. But let vs now see, where they will finde it.

Our Breth^r. too bolde presupposals.

And that doth S. Paule plainly declare, where he putteth a difference of the seuerall offices of the Church, whereof he nameth Gouernours for one. 1. Cor. 12. 29. and Rom. 12. 8, Let him that ruleth doe it with diligence.

The learned disc. Pag. 84.

Our Breth^r. haue found out these sentences, 2. 4. times already, and we haue sene at large, the discussing of these places. But because they find it againe, let vs craue pardon of the readers, once againe to peruse the, least any should thinke, when they alleage any testimonie for p^{ro}of, besides their bare sayings, that we sleightlly shoke it off. They say, S. Paule doth plainly declare it, where he putteth a difference of the seuerall offices of the Church, whereof he nameth Gouernours. Our Breth^r. then doe well indeede to say, seuerall offices: but our question is now, of seuerall officers.

Bridges. Seuerall offices, and yet not seuerall officers.

For although by some of these seuerall offices, may also seuerall officers be vnderstoode: yet not so, but that more than one seuerally of these offices, yea, many of them ioyntly, were compatibill sometimes to one man. According as God hath delt to euery man the measure of faith. (as S. Paule sayth, Rom. 12.) for as we haue manie members in one bodie, and all the members haue not one office: so wee being many, are one bodie in Christe, and euery one, one anothers members. Seeing then we haue giftes that are diuerse, according to the grace that is giuen vnto vs: whether Prophetic, according to the proportion of faith, for the ministerie in ministering: eith^r hee that teacheth, in doctrine: he that exhorteth, in exhorting: hee that giueth, in simplicitie: he that ruleth, in carefulnesse: hee that hath mercie, in cheerefulness. Might not one man haue diuers of these giftes or offices? May not he that prophesieth, teach? May, is not prophesying mixt with teaching, yea a teaching it selfe? And haue we not shewen sufficiently howe teaching may be ioynd with exhortation, and exhortation with teaching? And may not both of them be ioynd with the ministerie, or with an office as some translate it? And may not giuing and shewing mercie, mercies, be ioyned together, as well as they may bee separated a sinners. And why then may not bee, that hath all these giftes (as some haue had them all) rule also, as well as he that hath but some of them, or but the gifte of rule onely? Wee may not these wordes here of him that rule: be vnderstoode also of ciuill officers or gouernours, and not onely of Ecclesiasticall? And haue wee not also heard, that some excellent wilters among our Brethren, do so expounde here the wordes hath hee that gouerneth? And therefore no certaintie of our Brethrens gouernours, can be gathered out of this place.

Rom. 12. Diuers giftes and offices in one officer.

And as for the other place of 1. Cor. 12. 28. the Apostle sayde before, ver. 7. &c. But vnto every one is giuen the manifestation of the spirit to praefite. For to one is giuen by the spirit the worde of wisdom, to another the worde of knowledge by the same spirit, to another faith in the same spirit, to another the giftes of healings in the same spirit, to another the operations of powers, to another prophesie, to another discerning of spirits, to another the kindes of tongues, to another the interpretation of tongues. But all these things worketh one and the selfe same spirit, deuiding to euery one, euen as he will. So that, no certaintie neither, can be affirmed heere, in what measure these giftes were giuen. Whether one to euery one, or to one more. And this seemeth the more probable; that some had more than one of these giftes, because many of these are coincident, and distinguished not so much by diuerse officers, as by diuerse offices of these giftes. And euen so, for that which followeth, ver. 28. And some indeede hath he placed in the Church, first Apostles, secondly Prophetes, thirdly Doctors, then powers, afterwarde the giftes of healings, helpings, gouernances, kindes of tongues. Are all Apostles? Are all Prophetes? Are all Doctors? Are all powers? Haue all the giftes of healings? Do all speake with tongues? Do all interpret? Did not all these giftes concur in the Apostles heere first mentioned, and some of them in the Prophetes, and in the Doctors? Wee, when he commeth to the repetition of this gift, and should by order (as he doth the other) mention the gift of gouerning, which our Brethren here especially discourse vpon, & vize more than the other; the Apostle, though he reckon by other generally. yet, as though gouerning might be better included in the other, he repeteth it not, nor sayth: are all gouernances? As he sayde before, are all Apostles? Are all Prophetes? Are all Doctors? are all powers? But either conteyneth it in one, or some, or all, of the former offices or giftes: or else passeth it in silence, as not so necessarie as the other, and yet the other are not ordinarie offices. And so hee omitteth helpings; except in the gifte of healings he include it. Besides that, hee expreth not here also, any more than in the other place Rom. 12. what kinde of gouernment in the Church he meaneth. Whether ciuill briefly, or Ecclesiasticall only, or both of them mixt, or separate. And howe then can our Brethren so boldly affirme, that S. Paule doeth plainly declare these

This place also 1. Cor. 12. sheweth not whether one might not haue more than one of these giftes.

The Apostle includeth the gouernors in the other officers.

these officers, that must be ioyned in comission with the Pastors or with the Bishop, and giue their consent with him, in the hearing, trying, and determining of all matters: But nowe upon the bare allegation of these two places, our Wethers proceede to this conclusion.

Therefore there ought to be in euerie Church, a Consistorie or Seg-norie of Elders or Gouernors, which ought to haue the hearing, examination and determining of al matters, pertayning to discipline and gouernement of that congregation.

 Pag. 84.

The premises inferreth not this conclusion, S. Paule speaketh not at all in those places, of euerie Church, and congregation: no: how many offices ought to be in euerie of them: no: of any consistorie or Seniorie at all of Elders or Gouernors in them: no: of the hearing, examination, & determining of all matters, pertayning to discipline and gouernement of that congregation: no: how, or how many of them ought to be these things: no: of any certaine perpetuall and ordinarie platfforme of officers, or offices, to the whole Church, or to euerie particular Church and congregation. None of all these pointes are here either plainly declared, or inclusively insinuated by S. Paule: and yet see, how our Wethers when they are once growne to be bolde to affirme one point out of Gods word, for these officers, more than the worde of God leade them into:
 dare from one point, proceeding to another, waxe bolder and bolder, & in the ende so bolde, not nowe only to affirme plainly all these things: But to make a flat and plaine conclusion on them, and that a necessarie; that, therefore there ought to be in every Church, a Consistorie or Signorie of Elders or Gouernors, which ought to haue the hearing, examination and determining of all matters, pertaining to discipline and government of that congregation: and then in dede farewell, not only our former questions of womens gouernement: but of all Princes gouerne-ment, women or men, in any of their dominions. For, here is not onely mentioned discipline, but also gouernement: and not in Ecclesiasticall matters only, but in all matters pertayning to the gouernement of that congregation: and not onely the hearing and examination of all matters, but also the determining of them all. And all this, not to be done in some, but in euerie Church, and in euerie congregation in the Realme, yea, in the whole worlde. And all this, to be done, not by any officers of the Prince, but by a Consistorie or Segnorie of Elders or Gouernours chosen among themselves, not any officers of the Prince, being so muche as mentioned among them: no, now when it cometh to the conclusion, either Pastor or Bishop is ioyned with them. So that both the Pastor and the Bishop is now so farre removed, from hauing any authoritie of gouernemnt in the Church, separated from others by him selfe: that he may heape it by him selfe haue he any, for with them (in conclusion) hee gette none, they will haue all separately by themselves. Are not these matters (trow we) in this Learned Discourse of our Brethren, properly concluded, and to the great beautifying of Gods Church, and to the quiet establishment of this Realme? O Brethren, Brethren, it is more than high time to looke to such a Segnorie, the verie passing out of whose heades, and the first appearing in the Discourfing of them, shall beginne his course, on this course, fashion: and vnder pretence of putting by the Bishoppe, and of ioyning with the Pastor, shall so exclude the Princes established authoritie, and sette vp such a strange newe gouernement among them-selues, and that in euerie particular Congregation, that is, in euerie parish Church, both with vs in Englande, and through out all Christendome. But now, to mitigate all this, least it might growe into the wide suspition of most dangerous troubles, inuouations and confusions of all Realmes and States, by giuing too great authoritie to the Segnories of these Congregationall Elders and Gouernours: Our Brethren adioyne heereunto (with great circumspection) certaine cautions of moderation.

pag. 84

Which authority of theirs (say they) neuerthelesse ought to be moderated, that their iudgement may be rightly accounted the iudgement of the holy Church.

Bridges.

I thinke they would say, of the whole Church. But the terme holie, is well enough. For verily, if the Church be not the holier this Segnorie might breede a myserie of great mischief and vholinesse, except their iudgement in choosing and the authoritie of those that be chosen, shall the better be moderated. Let vs therefore marke our Brethrens moderating of these Gouernours, to brydle and repress all these inconueniences.

The learned disc.
Pag. 84.

Which thing consisteth in these two points. First, that the Elders be elected and chosen by consent of the whole Congregation, men of godlinesse and wisdom, in whom the whole Church repositeth such confidence that they committe vnto them their authority, in hearing and determining such matters, as without horrible confusion they cannot performe themselves.

Bridges.

I looked here, for the moderating of these Elders, that their authoritie should haue been so restrayned or limited, that either they should not deale in all matter of gouernement, or not procede ouer farre therein. But our Brethren talke of no such moderating of them. Their moderation consisteth in two pointes, whereof the first is, for their election, that the Elders be elected and chosen by the consent of the whole congregation. What? And shall neither Prince, Magistrate, Bishop, Pastor, nor any officer ciuill or Eccl. haue any stroake, ouer and aboue the whole multitude of the congregation, in the election of them, whiche shall deale in all matters matters of gouernment? This first point, is a point as dangerous, as any of the residue. And how shall the whole congregation giue their consent in the electing of them? Shall they doe it by some other chosen persons among them, that shall giue their consent for them? And then who shall choose them, that shall choose those, that shall choose these Elders, chosen for them? Or shall euery person of the whole congregation by himselfe, or all of them together on a huddle, choose them? And what if they cannot consent vpon them? Shall the halfe, or greater parte, goe for the whole: when the other halfe, or the lesser part of the whole congregation dissenteth from the election? And how then will they choose such men of godlinesse and wisdom, as they imagine? And what also if the greater part themselves of the congregation, want wisdom to make such choice of them? Or affection of loue, hate, feare, hope, &c. overcome their wisdom? As we see it doth oftentimes, not only in selues, but in multitudes. And the greatest parte hath not alwayes the greatest wisdom, nor greatest godlinesse. Whereupon ariseth the common saying: maior pars vincit meliorem, the greatest part overcomes the better. And our greater part must be accounted for the whole, or else no choice at all will be made among them. And where then shall our men of wisdom and godlinesse, by the consent of the whole congregation be elected and chosen?

How the whole congregation shall choose the Elders.

The wisdom and godlinesse of the greater part.

Well (say they) yet they shall be men of such wisdom and godlinesse as in whome the whole Church reposeth such confidence, that they committe vnto them their authoritie, in hearing and determining such matters, as without horrible confusion, they can not performe themselves.

And can they not giue their consent to the hearing & determining such matters, without not only confusion, but horrible confusion? And yet can they giue their consent to choose such persons without horrible or any confusion? And how is it sayd, to be their authoritie in such matters, wherof they themselves cannot performe the hearing & determining without horrible confusion? And is the authoritie then, not the Gouernors, but the peoples authoritie? And the Gouernors do but represent the people, whom they gouerne? And are chosen onely as the peoples, or the whole congregations debities or executioners, to do for them, that they can not performe themselves without horrible confusion? And is this the peoples only remedy to repose such confidence in other, that they comit all their authoritie, vnto the authoritie of these Gouernours? And may not these committies themselves vpon such confidence committed vnto them, committe as horrible confusions, and breede as foule dissensions and disorders, as may the people themselves? Are not all these pointes, (besides a number mo, and perhaps more horrible, that experience would teach vs) confused and intricate?

The horrible confusion of the whole congregations dealing here in.

The lear And hereto also (say our Brethren) may be referred that, which is said of ned disc. election of Pastors that the Apostles Paule and Barnabas did ordeine by
pag. 85. election of the congregatiō, Elders vnto many Churches Act. 14. 23. beet 86. cause the name of Elders is cōmon both to Pastors & Gouernours and is Act. 14. 23. vsed in the scripture to cōprehend both at once, as it appeareth manifest 1. Tim. 5. 17. ly by S. Paule 1. Tim. 5. 17. Those Elders that gouerne well are woorthie of double honour, especially those that labour in the worde and doctrine. Of which testimonie we learne these threethings: first, that there be Elders in the Church, which meddle not with teaching, but are occupied altogether in gouerning. Secondly, that the Elders which labour in teaching, otherwise called Pastors, are ioyned also in gouernment with them, which teach not. And thirdly, that the name of Elder, comprehendeth both sortes of Elders. And especially in the place before alleaged for election, there is great reason to lead vs to thinke, that the Elders for gouernment, are as well vnderstoode, as the other for doctrine, because it is written in the same place, that after they had ordeyned them Elders in euerie congregation by election, as hauing set the Churches in perfect order (which they committed them to the Lords, in whom they beleened.

Our Brethr.

 what ought to be, tell vs what may be.

To confirme that which our Brethren haue so boldly affirmed, that there ought to be in euerie Church a Consistorie or Segnorie of Elders or Gouernours, which ought to haue the hearing, examination and determining of all matters pertayning to discipline and gouernement of that congregation: they alleage here againe the example of the scripture Act. 14. 23. which they haue before twise or thise alleaged and is sufficiently answered vnto. But their prooue for the election of these Consis-torie gouernours, standeth vpon no certaine grounde by our Brethrens own confession. For they say not: hereto also must be referred that which is saide of election of Pastors, &c. but, hereto also may be referred, &c.
 So that this example relying at the most, but on coniecture of probabilitie, can make no sounde plea of argument, that so it must be alleaged. Ne-uerthelesse vpon good hope to proue it, our Brethren will assay to bestow an argument on it. And (if they reason at all) thus they reason:

Our Brethr.
 argument for their gouernours.

The name of Elders is common to both, to Pastors and Gouernours, and is vsed to comprehend both at once:

But Paule and Barnabas did ordaine by election of the congregation Elders vnto many Churches:

Therefore, by these Elders that Paule and Barnabas did ordaine vnto many Churches, is comprehended Pastors and Gouernours both at once.

This conclusion in sensu coniuuncto may be graunted. For, what doth this conclusion let, but that these Elders were Pastors and Gouernours too both

both at once, being Gouvernors in that they were Pastors? If they mean it of distinct persons and offices: then, if the maior of this argument meane, that the name of Elders is so common to both, that is to say, to Pastors and gouvernors, as distinct persons, that it is vsed alwaies to comprehend both at once: I denie the Maior. The scripture is most manifest to the contrarie, and their selues also.

Other wise, granting the Maior, that it is so vsed now and then: to shewe that it is so vsed in this place heere cited by our Brethren in their Minor: howe will they proue it? Which if they doe not: where is the argument? But what neede we seeke further confutation of their Minor, than their owne Learned discourse heereon? Haue not their selues alleaged this example for Pastors, Page. 33. treating there onely of the Pastors proper dutie, and ioyning this place, Act. 14. 23. vnto the con- liation of these, 1. Pet. 5. and Tit. 1. 5? Yea, what other are their owne wordes here present? Do they not say: And hereto also may be referred that which is sayde of election of Pastors? And whereas the text sayth, ἐκλεγοντων δὲ αὐτοὺς ἐπισκόπους, they restrayne here the word, Presbyters, Priestes or Elders vnto the Pastors. So that, by their owne exposition they doe but hale and drawe this place, to proue such gouernors as are not Pastors. I speak not this, that I utterly denie, there were any such Elders in the Apostles times, as were chiefly gouernours, little dealing with the publike ministerie of the worde, in such places as they wanted Ma- gistrates that were Christians: but that these Gouvernours (as wee haue seen at large out of Gualter) vpon, 1. Cor. 12. and out of Gellius Sene- canus on 1. Cor. 6. were rather as Magistrats among the in those times. Which persons hauing receaued of the spirite of God the gife of gouerne- ment, the name of Elders (I graunt) accordeth also well vnto them. And so, both in the olde Testament and in the newe, the Ciuill gouernors are called Elders. But these were not Eccl. Elders.

And that this place Act. 14. 23. is to be referred to no other Elders then Pastors, the testimonie also of Caluine (euen where he acknowledgeth that there were such Elders, as medled not with the ministerie of the worde) doth manifestly herein confute our Breth. When they had created Elders. Hereupon (sayth Caluine) it appeareth that it sufficeth not for men to haue been once indued with the doctrin of godlines, & to hold a summe of the faith: except they make continuall encrease mentes. Therefore, Christ not only sent the Apostles that should spread abroad the Gospel: but also he commanded that Pastors should be ordeyned, that the prea- ching of the Gospel should be perpetuall and in daily vse. This order set of Christ, do Paule and Barnabas obserue, when they assigne Pastors to euery Church, least that after their departure, the doctrine should cease and become silent. Whereupon this place teacheth, that the Church can not want the ordinarie ministerie, neither can they bee accounted Christians before God, saue those that willingly are disciples all the race of their life. I expounde it that Elders are heere called those, vnto whome the office of teaching was enioyned. For that there were certaine which were onely censors (or controuersers) of manners appeareth out of Paule, 1. Tim. 5. 17.

Our Brethr. own prowes that that place Act. 14. is vnder- stood of gouernors that are Pa- stors.

What go- uernors those Elders were that medled no- thing with the word.

The Ciuill officers had not imposition of the Ministers hands.

So that etien here, where Caluine alleageth the other testimonie that our Bzethzen also doe, yet he clearly cutteth off this Testimonie, Act. 14. 23. to inferre any profe at all of these Consistorie gouernors, and Elders that are not teachers. Neither do our Bzethzen here thus violently draw in their Gouernors, vnder the name of Elders, where it is apparant that Pastors are ment onely; but also the word which should yet better proue, that it is ment of Pastors, that is to wite, χειρωνατο, the ordeyning of them by handes, to carrie the better shewe that it was not of Pastors onely, but of Gouernours, they translate it thus: They did ordeyne Elders by election of the congregation. Where the worde neither speaketh of, nor necessarily inferreth, any election at all, and much lesse of the congregation, but onely, of ordeyning or creating with handes, signifying the consecration of them, by laying on of handes vpon them. Which ceremonie was not vsed in those that were Gouernours onely as were these controuersers of manners. For although there might be suche at that time ciuill Elders (the people being in such case) elected among them: yet can it not be shewed, that they had also the imposition of hands. Although peraduenture that prophane or ciuill order of holding vppon their handes among the Grecians, for which Beza citeth Cicero, might be well vsed in the election of them. And albeit Caluine also interprete χειρωνατο, quum creassent suffragiis, when they had, by suffrages (or voyces) created Elders: and mention also (as we haue sene before) the heathen manner of holding vp of the handes: yet, as noting this to bee too prophane, he sayth: notwithstanding the Ecclesiasticall writers vse the name, χειρωνατο, of ordeyning by handes in an other sence, to wite, for the solemne custome of ordeyning that in the Scriptures is called, the laying on of handes. And therefore, where he applyeth this to election, and that also to the peoples election, although he giue the moderation of the election, not to the people, but to the Apostles: yet if the worde χειρωνατο, be vnderstood Ecclesiasticall (as the Ecclesiasticall writers vse the name) for the solemne custome of ordeyning, that in the scriptures is called, laying on of handes: then cannot this worde be tokening ordeyning, be drawn to election, and much lesse to the election of the people, that had no authoritie of the laying on of hands, neither in ordeyning nor in electing.

This therefore may suffice hether to answer the minor of our Bzethzens thyens argument. But they (as though all were safe and sure, if they on-^{1. Tim. 5.} ly strengthen their Maioi) goe about to confirme it by an other place, say-^{17.} ing:

Because the name of Elders is common to both, to Pastors and Go-uernors, and is vsed in the scripture to comprehend both at once, as it appeareth manifestly by S. Paule, 1. Tim. 5. 17. those Elders that gouerne well, are woorthie of double honour, especially those that labour^{1. Tim. 5. 17} in the word and doctrine.

This confirmation of the maior is here needles, to proue that the name of Elders is common to both, (that is to wite) Pastors and Gouvernors, and to comprehend them both at once. For as we haue sayde) euen so it doth in euery place, where the pastors are called Elders. Because that in the nature of their Pastorship an Eccl. gouernement is comprehended. Especially, Hebr. 13. ver. 7. and 17. Where the pastorall Elders are called by sum, Gouvernors. So that, pastors and Gouvernors, may both of them at once be very well comprehended in the name of Elders. But our Brethren meane it here not onely so: but that the name also comprehendeth sometime, as well Elders that were Gouvernours and not Pastors, as Pastors and Gouvernours. For, I thinke they will not say Pastors are not also Gouvernors, though no such Gouvernours as they meane. Neither doe we denie, that the name of Elders comprehendeth Gouvernours that are no Pastors. For (as we haue sayde before) the name of Elders was an ordinarie and generall name for the iudges, the head officers, and Magistrates of the people.

But that either this place, 1. Tim. 5. 17. confirmeth that place, Act. 14.
23. to be vnderstode of both sortes of Elders, especially, of Elders that were Gouvernors and not Pastors, as it is of Pastors that were Gouvernors: that will be too harde (I thinke) for our Brethren to proue. Yea, (to let alone the confirming of that place, Act. 14.) I doubt it will bee somewhat harde also (except they will presse me with the authoritie of our Brethren onely themselves, that so thinke) to proue any necessitie of vnderstanding this place, 1. Tim. 5. (vnderstanding Ecclesiastical officers) for such a double kind of Elders, some medling with teaching, and some not medling with teaching, as they gather thereupon and inferre, saying:

Of which testimonie wae learne these three thinges: first, that there be Elders in the Church, which meddle not with teaching, but are occupied altogether in gouerning. Secondly, that the Elders which labour in teaching otherwise called Pastors, are ioyned also in gouernment with them which teach not. And thirdly that the name of Elders, compre-hendeth both sortes of Elders.

 teacheth vs : but not all that men shall gather thereon, except they proue vnto vs with all, that their teaching followeth in necessitie of consequence thereupon. This place neither in expresse wordes teacheth these three thinges, no; they teache, no; can teache, that these three thinges which here they sette downe, followe (by any necessitie of consequence) on this testimonie. And howe then doe wee learne thereon these three thinges? For my part, I will offer my selfe to become their scholler to learne them gladly, if they substantially (as Learned discoursers should) can teach them.

We are not

 Brethr. collections.

The first thing that
 our Brethr.
 say we learn
 hereon.

And thus forewarde (as one ready to learne) I will shew my selfe before hande, concerning the first and chiefeest point, that here, in this innersed order of these three thinges, is proposed: that I denie not but freely graunt, Saint Pauls wordes may indeede bee well enough understood of suche Elders in the Church, as meddled not with ordinarie and publike administration of teaching the wordes, but onely with gouernement, being chosen among them-selues in those dayes, as their ciuill Christian rulers, or petite Magistrates, to compose and take vpp their controuersies, that they should not strine and goe to lawe, before the heathen superiour and publike Magistrates, to the obloquie of the Gospell. And that they were not onely (as Caluine calleth them) controulers of manners onely : but meddling also in the oversight of Ecclesiasticall causes, as the ciuill Christian Magistrates doe now (God be prayd) more openly, and with more authoritie than at that time, because the chiefe ciuill Magistrates were not then Christians : and yet the generall direction and oversight for manners pertayned in dutie vnto them.

The Magistrates are the governing & not teaching Elders in the Church.

But what necessitie inferreth this : that because there were such Governours then ; therefore now also, wee learne that there bee Elders in the Church, which meddle not with teaching, but are occupied altogether in gouerning? For, although this be graunted, that there be Elders in the Church, which meddle not with teaching, but with gouerning, meaning the Ciuill Christian Magistrates, for they both bee, and be in the Church, and that lawefully : yet, what are our Brethren the nearer, for the proue of such Elders as they here con-tende for, except they will make them, the ciuill Christian Magistrates?
 But vnderstanding by this worde Elder, such Ecclesiasticall Elders as they suppose: although againe I graunt them, where they say, there be Elders in the Church, &c. If in this worde bee, they signifie the time present : that indeede there bee such Elders in the Church as they would haue, that is to say, there be such in those Churches of our Brethren, in some other Countries, as the French or Dutch in vsuall: notwithstanding I learne it not by this place, 1. Tim. 5. 17. that there be any, but rather that there were some, though not such in all pointes, as they imagine they were. And both this followes that because wee learne likewise, and more clearly, and with more apparant warrant and nature of the offices, that there were Apostles, Euangelistes, and Prophetes in the Church: therefore we learne there be Apostles, Euangelistes, and Prophetes in the Church still among vs: But if our Brethren meane by these wordes, wee learne that there bee Elders in the Church, &c. That is to saye, there ought to be, and that perpetually, and that in euerie Church and congregation, such gouerning Elders as they pretende, which meddle not with teaching: that, we learne not here, nor they proue, nor (I thinke) shall euer be able to proue, that S. Paule heere, as hee as any other, in anye other place of all the Scripture, doth teache as touch it.

tie of these Elders.
We learne in the scripture that there were Apostles, &c. but not that there be.

Difference betweene there be, & there ought to be.

Presupposing there were then 2. such kindes of Elders, yet though the one were perpetuall, it followeth not that the other was so

If our Brethren say that the wordes of S. Paule inferre a perpetuall necessitie, that there shoulde bee Elders gouerning the Church, which should be labourers in the worde and doctrine: admitting therfore that he speaketh here of 2. distinct sorts of Eccl. Elders in the Church, the one medling with teaching, the other not: if the one inferre a perpetuall necessitie of the office, so doth the other.

I graunt againe, that both there, and in other places, S. Pauls wordes inferre, and so do others also in the scripture, a perpetuall necessitie, that there should be Elders gouerning in the Church which should be labourers in the worde and doctrine. Albeit he speaketh there, either of those that were then, as should be at any time in the Church, what honour they should haue: which was the Apostles purpose in these wordes: The Elders that gouerne well, are worthy of double honour, especially such as labour in the worde and doctrine. And I pray you, was not S. Paule, and the other Apostles, Euangelistes, and Prophetes, Elders also, and worthy of as much honour, as were those Elders, who and whatsoeuer? And yet are nowe and long since, these functions ceased, for any necessitie, as ordinarie neede or exercise of them in the Church. Though, more or lesse, there haue still bene in all ages, (at least-wise there ought alwayes to haue bene in all ages,) labourers in the worde and doctrine. And therefore admitting there were then together in the Church, such distinct offices, the dutie to haue them honoured accordingly, inferreth no such necessitie of perpetuallitie, that if the one continue in the Church, the other also must continue. For then we should still haue Apostles, except our Brethren can teach it, and we shall learne it better, than that this place will inferre any necessitie, or continuance of it.

Now, as we see here, that we can not learne this by any necessity of the

ction.

Apostles wordes, that there bee, that is to say, there ought to be in the Church, that is to say, in euery congregation; Elders, that is to say, a Consistorie or Seignorie: not medling with teaching, that is to say not medling in the publike administration of the worde & sacraments: but are occupied altogether in gouerning, that is to say, which ought to haue the hearing, examination & determining of all matters, pertainyng to discipline and gouernment of that congregation: for this is their own exposition of their wordes: admitting still that the Apostle speaketh here of two diuers sorts of Elders, that ought in good order of teaching these 3. things to haue been the first point, which our breth. shuld haue taught vs, & we to haue learned, & they haue here placed it last: so, let vs now see, what necessitie driueth vs first or last to learne, on these wordes of the Apostle, 1. Tim. 5. 17. that there were such Elders then in the Church, & that Paule there meaneth of such Elders, as medled not with teaching, but were occupied altogether in gouerning. For first, S. Paul sayth not this in plain wordes. It is our Brethrens collection. Colligere hinc licet (sayth Caluine hereupon) it is lawfull to gather, that there were then two kindes of Elders, because all were not ordeyned to teach. For the words do openly sound, that some gouerned well & honestly, to whom notwithstanding the partes of teaching were not comitted. And indeede out of the people were chosen graue and tryed men, which together with the Pastors in common counsell & authoritie of the Church, administred the discipline, and were as it were the Censors or controllers in correcting maners. Caluine sayth here, it may be gathered, and so alreadie (to search out the matter better) we haue admitted it, that such there were, and yet not such neither, as our Brethren prescribe, nor Caluine agreth fully to him selfe of their authoritie. For where he sayth here, that together with the Pastors in common counsell and authoritie of the Church they administred the discipline, and were as it were controllers in correcting maners, on the former place, Act. 14. 23. he sayth, fuisse enim quosdam duntaxat morum Censores, apparet, 1. Tim. 5. 17. that there were certaine (Elders) the controllers of maners onely, (for we can not so expounde it, that they were the onely controllers of maners, sayth the Pastors were controllers of maners also) it appeareth out of Paule, 1. Tim. 5. 17. And here when he cometh to the place that he referreth vs vnto, he lea- neth cleane out this duntaxat, onely: and giueth them together with the Pastors in common counsell and authoritie of the Church, the admini- stration of discipline. Thus doth Caluine with this contradiction, or wa- uering in his speeches hereon, infringe the authozitie of his owne collecti- on.

But what maketh him, or any other of our Brethren, to thinke this so plaine and necessarie a collection. On S. Pauls wordes, that there were two kinds of Elders in the Church, the one medling with teaching, and the other not, but occupied altogether in governing? It is because the Apostle useth this worde chiefly, especially, most of all, or about all other? And must needs this specially of the persons, make a specialtie also of the functions? Might they not as well be all of one function, and yet so some specialtie in their labours, either in gift, or in trauell, or in diligence, or in dexteritie, or in successe, ^{as the 12. have} haue a more speciall recommendation then some other? And yet no displaye vnto the other, which though they were ministers of the worde also, yet some of them, according as they excelled in diuersitie of giftes, might be most employed otherwise. The Apostles were ministers of the woorde and medled with teaching, before they chose Deacons: and yet they say, it liketh vs not that leauing the worde we should minister to the tables, which plainly argueth, that they laboured not so much in the worde and doctrine before, as they did after, and yet then were they Elders medling with teaching, and according to that time governing well also, and deserving double honour, though not in comparison of their labours in the worde and doctrine, after they had chosen the Deacons to helpe them.

The example in the Apostles themselves.

Yea, the Deacons also were not excluded from medling with teaching, as appeareth both by Stephen Act. 7. and by Philip. Act. 8. When Paule and Barnabas were chosen out by the holy Ghost, vnto the worke whereunto he called them, which was a worke in both of them medling with the woorde, Act. 13. yet because S. Paule medled more with the worde than Barnabas did: not onely the Licaonians called Barnabas Iupiter, and Paule Mercurie: but S. Luke addeth the reason thereof, ^{in the 14. verse} Because he (to wit, Paule) was the guide or ruler of the worde, that is to say, the chiefe teacher of it, who laboured more in the worde not onely than Barnabas, but than all the residue, 1. Cor. 15. 10. and yet medled with teaching, as well as Paule did. The specialtie therefore of labouring in the worde, more chiefly and about other, debarreth not other, but that they may meddle with teaching also, yea and be of the same function in that behalfe: neither S. Paule maketh his distinction, of medling with the worde, but of labouring in the word and to expresse the more painefull or effectuall labour therein, hee doubleth his speech, saying, that labour in the worde and doctrine. And Caluine himselfe constructeth these wordes thus, qui benepresunt. They that rule well, that is, which faithfully and stoutly trauaile in their office. And they that labour in the worde and doctrine, that is, they which are intentiue or earnest in teaching the worde, referring it not to the diuersitie of the office, but to the diuersitie of the industrie in the office.

The example in the Deacons.

The labouring in the worde.

ing Prelates go-
uernment.

I speake not this neither so peremptorily, that of necessitie we should on the other side conclude that he speaketh there but of those Elders onely, that were all Elders of the worde, and yet that he commendeth some more especially than others, for their more especial labours in the worde: but that wee may thus also consider his wordes, with probabilitie and reason inough, for any thing herein to the contrarie.

And thus sithe neither these wordes, 1. Tim. 5. 17. inferre any necessitie of such Elders as meddle not with teaching, but were altogether occupied in gouerning: nor yet, if they had ment any suche Elders then, they inferre any rule of perpetuities, that there should be such still: and what their gouernement was, is not here set downe, nor insinuated, and not onely some enlarge it, some restraine it, but Caluine himselfe, which is the chiefest (if not the first) that so construesth these wordes, is so contradictory to him selfe or vncertaine and varying therein: howe shall wee learne this first point, (except our Brethren shall teach vs better) that there be Elders in the Church which meddle not with teaching, but are occupied altogether in gouerning? meaning such gouernment, of such Elders, & such necessarie being of them, in such Churches of euery particular congregation, as our Bzth. here do pretend & vrgye on this testimonie.

thing that
our Brethr.
say we learn
on this testi-monie.
1. Tim. 5. 17.

Now as we can not as yet, vpon any necessitie of consequence, out of this sentence, 1. Tim. 5. 17. Learne the first point: so I (in my dull head) much lesse the second, that the Elders which labor in teaching, otherwise called Pastors, are ioyned also in gouernement with them, which teach not. For admitting againe, that there were 2. kindes of Elders in distinct function, intended in this testimonie, the one medling with teaching, the other not: and both gouerned, as it is sayde here generally, in quibus quiescentibus, the Elders that rule well: where with all. is not to be forgotten how Paule to expresse their well ruling useth the very worde, quiescentibus, that Beza ascribeth to Timothie, not only for an Elder of the worde, but also for such a principall Elder of the worde, as Beza calleth out of Iussus, assistentem, a Bishop. So that, vntlesse our Brethren will make eche Elder of the Seignorie in euery Congregation a Bishop, and so set vp vnpreach- ing Prelates like the Popish dombe Bishops: they can not so properly expounde it of Elders not medling with the worde, as medling with it. But vnderstand it either waies, as they list. (For so they call them B. as we haue seen in Beza & the Geneva note, on Phil. 1. 1) yet both not this sentence make their gouernements ioyne with the Bishops and Pastors teaching. Yea, in the one and better halfe, that is in the gouernement of teaching the worde, they they selues doe disioyne their gouernements. And if (as we haue seene out of Gualter) they were only politike and ciuill Christian gouernors: except our Brethren will giue politike and ciuill iurisdiction also to the Pastors: how doe they ioyne in gouernement?

¶ See how doe our Brethren here say. that the Pastors are ioyned in gouernment with them which teache not: and yet in their formes of Common prayers and ministrations of sacramentes, both that which was set out in Geneva, and that which nowe of late is set out againe at London by our Brethren, they doe confesse (which I haue often before noted) that the pastors and Ministers cheefe office standeth in preaching the worde of God and Ministring the sacramentes, so that in consultations, iudgements, elections, and other ecclesiasticall affayres, his counsell rather than authority taketh place.

And this they say is approoued by Caluine. And yet Caluine plainly sayth (as we haue heard before) that these Elders not teaching, together with the pastors in common counsell and authoritie of the Church, administered the Discipline, and were as it were the censors to correct the manners. Are not those sayings cleane contrary: no: doe they think to help all with these wordes: that the Prayer booke speaketh of his cheefe office which indeede it doth: but, so, that it debarreth from him (in the other inferior matters) all authority quite and cleane, and leaues him onely to bare Councell where Caluine giueth him and them both Councell and authoritie in common: and likewise our Brethren heere say that the pastors are ioyned also in gouernment with them. Which saying of our brethren is yet far better then his abiding, abasing, or rather annihilating of the Pastors authority in the gouernment of the Church, and giuing all to these not teaching Elders and onely counsell to the pastors. Howbeit the sayde booke of Common Prayer, doe after ward cleane againe contrary themselves, saying, in the title of Elders: whose office standeth in gouerning with the rest of the Minist. in consulting, admonishing, correcting & ording al things pertaining to the comely directiō of the congregation they differ from the Ministers in that they preach not the word nor minister the sacraments. In which wordes, they giue the Pastors not onely counsell but authority, and (as doe our Brethren heere) ioine them in Gouernment both together. Which though of the twaine it be the better, yet to ioine these Elders not teaching in equall and ioynt authoritie of Ecclesiasticall Gouernment with the Pastors, neyther is it convenient, nor oure Brethren haue proued it, nor wee learne it by any playne wordes, or necessary consequence, out of this testimonie, 1. Timothy. 5. 17.

The pastors authority cleane set out of ioint by the ioint authority of these newe gouernors.

And as for the third point, which shoulde rather haue bene the first, or second, that the name of Elder comprehendeth both sortes of Elders: for such Elders as our Brethren heere pleade, they can not proue it, at leastwise, as yet they haue not. Notwithstanding, (taking Elders, as we haue sayde before) though this place of Saint Paule doe not inferre it, and so wee learne it not also out of this testimony: yet in other places wee learne it

Now although this may suffice to aunswere our Bzethzens testimonyes out of S. Paule to Timothy, that wee can not learne by any inferrence of this place, there were such Elders then, as our Bzethzen gather that there were: yet on this occasion, to procede a little further herein, either for our Bzethzens fuller satisfaction, at least wise for the plainer opening of the matter, to any indifferent, or not to much forestalled indigement: it is the more probable by all likelihood, that S. Paul in this place, meant not any such gouerning Elders as medled not with teaching, because the text it selfe (if we peruse that that goeth before, and that commeth after) speaketh of such Elders as either our Bzethzen them selues vnderstande for Elders in age, not in office, as ver. 1. rebuking not an Elder: or if in office, of such onely as medled with teaching, so well as with go-uernment. As immediately after his prooffe of this testimony, S. Paule procedeth saying: against an Elder admit no accusation, except vnder 2. or 3. witnesses. Which our bzeth. confesse, is spoken of an Elder medling with teaching, as we haue before at large declared. And as for all the aun-cient fathers (at least, those which I haue red) gather in their Commentaries thereupon, no other kind of Elder, then such as medled with teaching in their Gouernment.

Chrisostome Homil. 15. writing vpon this place, sayth: on this wise,
The Elders that gouerne well are worthy of double honour, moſte of all they that labor in the word and doctrine. For sayth the Scripture, Thou shalt not mouſe the mouthe of the Oxe that treadeth out the corne, and the Worke-man is worthie his rewarde. Hee calleth in this place obedience and the yeelding of necessary things, honor. For that which followeth: Thou shalt not mouſe the mouth of the Oxe that treadeth out the Corne and the Worke-man is worthie his rewarde signifieth this. And therefore, when hee commaunded Widowes to bee nourished with honour, it shoulde bee referred to their necessary liuing, that it may serue to suffice them that are widowes indeede.

And agayne: Honor the Widdowes, that is, those that are in poore estate. For howe much the poorer shee is, the more shee is a Widdow.
Hee setteth downe the testimony of the Lawe, and addeth the testimony of Christe, and both of them agree together. For the Lawe sayth: Thou shalt not mouſe the Oxe's mouth, that treadeth out the Corne. Thou seest howe hee woulde haue the Doctor to labor. Truly there is no other labour to bee compared thereunto. Hee addeth the Testimonie of Christe. For hee that is hired is worthy his rewarde, let vs not therefore looke onely to the rewarde. But let vs nowe also heare the precept.
He that is hired (saith he) is worthy his rewarde. If any therfore shall bee dainty or remis: he indeed is not worthy. Except any (that be the oxe treading

ding out the Corne, and bearing the yoke, he shall draw against the cold and against the thrones, nor depart till he haue done: he is not worthy. It behoueth therefore that the doctors haue their liuing abundantly ministred vnto them, least they faint or be weakened or be occupied in the least matters, and deprive them-selues and others of the great, that they may labor the matters that are spiritual, hauing no regard to the secular things. Such kinde of persons were the Leuites which had no care to the things secular, in such sorte as had the laity. For the caring for the Leuites was permitted to them, (to witte, to the Laity) and by lawe were appointed for them reuenues, tenths, Golde, first frutes, vowes (or offerings) and many other things, but these things were by the lawe worthily permitted to them, that only sought the things present and earthly. I may boldly say therefore that the prelates (or gouernors) of the Church, ought to haue nothing but their liuing and their apparelling, that they shoulde not bee drawn with lusting after these things.

But what is that he saith with double honor? think we, that it is spoken of double, for that it is stretched to the widdowes and to the Deacons (or ministers) or else is it put, of double, that is to say, of grace? let vs not therefore, look onely to that that he sayd he is worthy of double honor: but let vs much more mark that which hee added, they that gouern well.

But what is it to gouern well? Harken to Christe saying: the good pastor layeth his life for his sheepe. To gouern wel therefore is this, to spare none of them for their gouernment sake. Chiefly, saith he, they which labor in the word & doctrine. Wher now are they that say, there is no need of the word and doctrine? sith with such study Paul admonisheth Timothy saying: meditate these things, in these things be thou. And again, Intend to reading and consolation, for doing this thou shalt both saue thy self and them that hear thee. And these he commandeth chiefly of all, to be honored, & he addeth the cause, saying: for they sustain much labor. And how right is this? for when as another watcheth not, nor is pined with care, but is euery where secure and quiet in his daily talk & companies, this man is stricken with care & continually applet meditation, especially if he be vnexpert of external discipline: who seeth not how much he is to be preferred before other: sith that he hath exposed him-selfe to so many labors? for he is laid open to be torn in peeces with tongues innumerable, one blameth him, another praiseth him, another defaceth him, one calls in question his memorie, another his stile. Great constancy hath hee need of, to bear these things. And very much it serdereth the edification of the Church, if the prelates doe excell in the grace which except they haue, very many things of the discipline eccl. shal perish. Therefore after he had sayd, it behoueth a doctor to keepe hospitality, to be curteous, to be vnreprouable: he reckoneth this also, and addeth a Doctor. For to what purpose is he called Doctor, but that hee shoulde teache? but perhaps thou wilt say, that he shoulde teache philosophy, by the example of life. These things are vaine: For the Mastership of wordes is necessary also, and therefore Paule sayth, cheefely those that labour in the worde and doctrine. For where as he treateth of matters of opinion, what place hath the holinesse of life? What force hath that? Neither yet will I praise that sermon which swelling in haughtinesse followeth the boast of outward cunning, but that which hath much power and iuice, which is waightie in sense and full of Wisedome. He hath no neede therefore of furniture and pompe of speaking: but of intelligence and of force meet to vtter that, that hee thinketh ought to be vttered.

Theodore
mentioneth
no such elder interpreting this place.

By these wordes it appeareth that Chrysostom taketh S. Pauls wordes to betoken no other Elder Gouverning Ecclesiasticall Discipline, than such as medled or ought to haue medled with teaching. And that the more they excelled therein, Paule ment they were worthy to bee more honoured. As for other kindes of Elders not teaching at all, hee mentioned here, or commended none.

As for the reference of any other compared vnto these Elders (whom here also hee calleth Doctors, not knowing of any so nice distinction betwene Doctors and Pastors as our Bzethren deuise) which might seeme by this worde δοκτορας, to insinuate some other kinde of Elders: besides the comparison of those that labor more or lesse in the word and doctrine: he taketh it to also to be spoken, in comparison of those Elders, that were eyther the fore-named Elder Widows, or else, of the Deacons or Ministers of the church, without mention of any other, saue of the Layty, that prouided of maintenaunce of the Clergies liuings. And here hee maketh an agreeable probation, betwene the state of the Leuites and of the Laytie, in the state of the olde Lawe vnder Moses: and the state of the newe, vnder this generall precept of Christe, the workeman is worthy of his reward. And as for the outward Discipline of the Church, he maketh the same to appertain to those Gouverning Elders, that labour also in the Worde and Doctrine, shewing what paine they take till they be growne to experience therein. Of other vnpreaching Prelates or Ecclesiasticall Gouvernors of the Church, or Churches Ecclesiasticall Discipline pertaining to any such Elders, as were Ecclesiasticall Gouvernors, not teaching at all: neyther here nor any where else Chrysostome maketh any mention. But, as in this place, so in all other, he useth the worde πρεσβυτερος, Presbyter, Presb or Ecclesiasticall Elder, onely for such as are Ministers of the Worde. And that this is the very meaning of Chrysostome: Theophylactus his abridger doth clearly expound it. He calleth Honor (saith Theophylact) as appeareth in that which followeth, the thinges that are bestowed for their their maintenance. For they that instruct other, must abound in those things, that are necessary for the life of man: leaste beeing distracted with the care of them, they omit the function of preaching. But he inferred it shoulde bee double, in respect of the Widowes or of the Deacons. But wherein all the Worlde are they, which affirme, there is neede of a kinde of a kinde of good life, and not of speeche, wherewith other may be instructed? Which question Oecrinus, repeateth yet playner, saying: But where nowe are they that say, hee that gouerneth hath no neede of speeches nor of Doctrine, but of like onely? Marke, marke (good Brethren) and answer to your call for Oecumenus plainly calleth for all such as say there were some such Ecclesiasticall Gouernors of the church, that woulde meddle all with manners and Discipline of life, and nothing in speeche and teaching doctrine. Neither can ye possit it of to those that preache the seldomer, or can not preache: for these do the best they can, and teach yet some way or other: it leaist, it is their duety and profession. But your Gouerning Seigniors profess onely ruling, and remooue teaching.

Theodorete hauing noted on the first verse of this Chapter, 1. Tim, 5. rebuke not an Elder, and sayde, non dicis hic sacerdotem. &c. Heere hee nameth not a preeste, but one that is waxen olde: when he commeth to this 17. verse, the Elders that gouerne well; &c. without any distinction, as naming there onely such as were Ministers of the worde, he saith: so laudable a thing is Doctrine. Hee putteth double honor for more ample. So that, if Theodorete had thought that Paul had also ment here, any such kinde of Elder, as medled not at all with Doctrine, there is no likelihood, but he woulde also haue expressed it. Especially saying before on the 4. Chap. ver. 14. Despise not the grace that is in thee, which was giuen thee by Prophecy, with the imposition of the handes of the Presbytery or Eldership. Here hee called Doctrine, Grace. But the presbytery heere hee calleth those, which receiued the Apostolicall Grace. So also hath the holy scripture called them Elders which were honorable in Israel. Likewise here Theodorete had good occasion, to haue noted these Elders gouerning the Ecclesiasticall regiment of the Church, not medling with teaching, if he had thought Saint Paule had meant of any suche kinde of Elders.

Theodoret mentioneth no such elder interpreting this place.

The commentary that is added vnto Hierome, saith: The Elders that rule well: are those that fulfill their office: are worthy of double honor, both of the office and of the Doctrine: cheefely they that labour in the word and Doctrine: He sayde not of all that haue the Word, but that labour in the Worde. But hee commaundeth him to ordeine all that haue it.

The commentary on 1. Tim. added to Ierome.

As who say, all the Elders are ordeined into the office and Ministry of in 1. Tim. 5 of the worde, as hauing the word, and so are to be honoured with a double honour, both for their office, and for the Worde sake, whereof they be officers, but they are moſte of all to bee honoured with this double honour, that are painfull laborers therein, whether Ierome in the name of Presbyter, Preest or Elder vnderstand in any place, such Elders as our Brethren pretend: we shall heere moze after ward.

Caluine allegation of Ambr. for the gouerning & not teaching Elders.

But Caluine alleageth Ambrose, and so doth Beza, and Dancus, for these Elders gouerning the Ecclesiasticall Discipline, and not meddling with teaching of the worde. Caluine hauing alleaged (as we haue heard) on this testimony, 1. Tim. 5. 17. that we might gather there was such Elders, sayth: Ambrose complaineth that this manner was worne out of vse, through the slouthfulnesse or rather the pride of the Doctors, while they onely would excell. But what is this vnto this place, 1. Timothy, 5. 17.

Ambr. in interpretation of this place 1. Tim. 5. 17.

Upon the which, Ambrose hath only these words: The Elders that rule well, &c. The good and faithfull dispensers or stewards are not onely to be iudged worthy of high honor, but also of earthly, that they might not be made sad for want of maintenaunce, but rather that they might reioyce of their faith and Doctrine. For if hee bee not humbled with neede, hee will become more earnest: and authority will encrease in him, when hee seeth him-selfe euen in the present time to enioy the fruyte of his labour. Not so that hee shoulde abounde, but so that hee shoulde not want. And this is all that Ambrose there saith hereon. Manifestly acknowledginge in this sentence, but one kinde of function of Elders to be spoken of, and those to be Dispensers of the VVorde. And as for other kinde of Elders not Dispensers nor medlers vvith teachinge at all, hee medleth not at all in this place with them.

Ambrose in 1. Tim. 5. 1.

True it is that on this first verse of the fifth Chapter, Rebuke not an Elder but exhort him as a Father. &c. Hee sayth before: For the honorablenesse of age, hee that is the greater in yeares, is to bee prouoked to do well, with gentlenesse, that hee may take the admonition the more easily. For hee that is warned, may bee afrayde, leaste hee shoulde afterwarde be rebuked, which is vnseemely for a senior. For verily among all nations old age is honourable whereuppon also the synagog and afterward the church, had Seniors, without whose counsel nothing was done in the Church. Which thing by what negligence it grewe out of vse, I can not tell, except perhaps by the slouth of the Doctors, or rather by their pride, while they alone would seeme to bee somewhat.

Thus sayth Ambrose, but whether they had no partes at all in meddling with the Worde, because they laboured not altogether therein, as the

the Doctors did, or what their office was, if they had any peculier office, or onely so reuerenced for their age, that their onely counsell was asked, or whether they ioined in authority and gouernment in common with the Pastorall and teaching Elders, or when they came into the Church, or how they began, or whether it were but onely a continuance, or imitation of the Iewes order in the Synagogue, or there were any commaundement of them, eyther from the Lorde, or from the Apostles, or whether there were any such in the Apostles times, or whether they were in euery congregati- on, or but in some principall and greate Churches, or how long they con- tinued, in euery or any Church where they were, or when they ceased or grewe out of vse, whether al at once, or by litle and little: none of all these thinges (which were very materiall to our consideration of them) wee can learne on these wordes of Ambrose. But it seemeth (sith they were gone so long before S. Ambrose time,) that he confesseth he did not knowe howe they were cleane woyne out of vse: Whether it were likely or no, that they were thought conuenient to remayne, it is apparant they were not counted so necessary, as were the offices of Bishops, of Pastors and Teachers, and of Deacons. For if they had so esteemed of them, they would haue continued in the Church, as well as the other, at leaste wise in some places, neither negligence nor slouth, nor pride, eyther of Doctors, or of any other, nor of all the Church, coulde haue enter so cleane, and that so long time before S. Ambrose, and so many hundred yeres since, haue abolished them.

But if this yet satisfie not our Bzethren for Ambroses Judgement vpon these other Elders that were not Labourers in the Worde and Doctrin: because hee sayth they were such Gouernours, as that nothing was done in the Church without them? Albeit that also may be limited in the vnderstanding of such consent or assistance, as wherein the Deacons were euer ready at hande, attendaunt on the Bishoppes and Pastors yet why might it not then (if wee will not vnderstande it, neither of those temporary ciuill officers, that were at that time as Magistrates among them, such as Brentius, Gualter, Snecanus, and other doe say, that then they had:) bee well ynough vnderstande, euen for suche Elders, who though they were not the Bishop or the Especiall Doctors that our Bzethren distinguish from Pastors: (which Doctors laboured moste in the Worde and Doctrin, though they ioyned exhortation and application to ther Doctrin, (as did the Pastors) yet these other not so much labouring in that manner, sith there was nothing doone in the Church without them, (except our Bzethren will count teaching no- thing) it argueth (if they dealt more or lesse in all thinges, that were to be done in the Church,) that they were not cleane excluded from all tea- ching.

uerning El-

the doctors.

But whatsoeuer office those Elders had, that Saint Ambrose saith, was growne out of vse: it is plaine impossible, that he beeing him-selfe an Arch-bishop and approuing so farre forth (as we haue heard) the superior separate authoritie of euery Bishop one in a City: and reckoning them to succede in the Apostles places: shoulde withall conceiue, that they had euer any such office of ioint-authority in all thinges, yea, in excommunication with the Bishop, as our Brethren ascribe vnto them, but the contrary thereof, we shall see after (God willing) further in the practise of S. Ambrose him-selfe,

In the meane time, because this Testimonie out of Ambrose, doth not yet sufficiently describe vnto vs, what kinne officers these were: (for if by the slouth or by the Pride of the Doctors these Elders decayed: then belike they had some kinde of teaching:) yet leaue our Brethren hauing no better testimony than these vncertaine wordes of Ambrose, shoulde vnder pretence of reuiving these olde Elders deade and buried long agoe, obtaine vnto vs some newe yong Elders, misbegotten and fathered in these olde Elders names, let vs now see further what other Elder Fathers, for these Elder Gouvernours, that medle not with teaching, and yet ioine in common Gouvernment with the Pastors, our Brethren alleage also besides Saint Ambrose

Beza that sayde in his confession of the christian faith, Cap. 5. de eccl. artic. 32. But that the Elders were chosen by suffrages, or at least by the approouing of the whole company, as it openly ynough appeareth out of Ambrose, complaining that certaine men transferred this righte vnto themselves: addeth hereunto: and out of Cyprian also, of whom we may eftsoones vnderstand that matter, that the Bishop gouerned a Colledge of Elders, not that hee shoulde there reigne: but that according to their sentence, hee shoulde gouerne the Ecclesiasticall policie, especially while at that time the Aphricane Churches were not holpen of the Magistrate but rather most cruelly vexed.

By the leape still of this so excellent man, whome other wise (saue in these matters of Discipline and Gouvernment) I honour as highly as any of our Brethren do, and herein withall reuerence dissent from him (as I haue befoze of him, and of all other our like reuerent brethren protested) this which here Beza saith, that it openly ynough appeareth by Ambrose (quoting Ambrose in 1 Tim. 5.) that the Elders (which there Beza speaketh of) were chosen by suffrages, or at leaste by the approouing of the whole company: neither any choosing of them eyther by suffrages, or by approouing of the whole or any of the company, appeareth, openly or darkelie, ynough or at all. Ambrose mentioneth no such matter, in all the whole Chapter. Howe openly ynough Ambrose there speaketh of these Elders, we haue already seene. It is not so open ynough, that we can learn thereby, thereby, eyther what office, or authority, or ground thereof they had: nor yet where, when, nor howe they beganne, continued or ended. And therefore it is not so open ynough, but that to p^{ro}oue, these Elders which our B^{re}thren woulde bring in to be like vnto those: and to bring warrant ynough that we are bounde to receiue and chose them: I thinke our B^{re}thren woulde wishe it were more open and apparant than Ambrose maketh it: And so woulde I wishe also, that we might once certainly knowe, whether we must needs choose them, or we may choose, whether we will choose them, yea or no: supposing they had bene suche, as our B^{re}thren suppose they were: which neither coulde be, nor hath any probability, but all contrarie, by the testimonies, coniectures and reasons that we haue seene.

But because, if it be not open ynough, Beza will open it more by Cyprian, that was Ambroses auncient, by almoste two hundred yeares. Let vs seache likewise what his Quotations out of Cyprian, will open vnto vs, and whether in his time which was about the yeare of our Lorde, two hundred and sixty, there were anye such Elders as medled not with teaching, that Governed the Ecclesiasticall Discipline and spirituall iurisdiction. For so Beza in the beginning of this article sayth, that the spirituall iurisdiction was committed to them.

Now to p^{ro}oue this, after he hath done with Ambrose, he addeth: and out of Cyprian also, of whome wee may est-soones vnderstande that matter, that the Bishoppe Governed a College of Elders, not that hee shoulde there reigne, but that according to their sentence hee should gouerne the Ecclesiasticall policy. Or euer we come to see by his Quotations, what manner of Elders soeuer those were, whether such as Beza goeth about to p^{ro}oue and our B^{re}thren urge, yea or no: (let that fall out after, as it shall:) this is first wo^rthy the noting, that the Bishop governed the College of these Elders, and so was about them. And that not for an action or two, or for any set dayes, moneths, or yeares: but continued, as the College continued, during his time, except he were deposed of his life, or deposed of his dignity, or exiled from his Country, or otherwise absent, or fled, as then Cyprian him-selfe was fled from his College, by reason perhaps of the personall persecution against him. And yet he remained still, as well absent as present, the Governor of them.

Whether Cyprian mention any such Elders.

Yea, but (sayth Beza, not to reigne there, God forbid, we shoulde allowe any bishoppe to raigne ouer those, of whom he hath the Government. Let that bee vphayled to the Pope. Will youe our selues content with this, that Beza sayth, hee shoulde rule the Ecclesiasticall policy.

This go-uernment
of the B. was permanent in him

Yea but (sayth Beza) according to their sentence. And what rule is that, if they giue the sentence, and he onely rule according to their sentence? doe not they rather rule than bee? or is he any better than their servant, Officer, or executioner of their sentence, and they his Governours, not he theirs: therefore that shoulde be opened yet more plainly, what is meant by their sentence, and how farre it stretcheth. Or else it is not yet made by Beza open ynough, to whome the Government doth belong, to him or to them. But so farre soorth as belongs to him, hee still is all their superior therein. Nowe then, if it shall fall out, that this College of Elders ouer which the Bishop is Governour, shall proue to be a College of such Elders, as medled as well with teaching of the worde, as with the Government of Ecclesiasticall Discipline: and bee of those Elders that be his Brethren in the office of Eldership, which we call (of Presbyters) Presbites: then haue we here againe the permanent superiority of Bishops ouer Pastorall Elders, whereof wee haue so much before debated.

Bezaes confession that these Elders governing with the B. were in the time of persecution.

But Beza goeth about another matter cleane contrary, to proue that this College of Elders were of such Elders as were not medlers with teaching of the Worde. Which if they were, as wee shall see anon, by triall out of these Epistles of Cyprian: yet sayth Beza, that this was then, when as especially by that time, the Churches of Aphrica were not helped of the Magistrate, but rather moste cruelly vexed. And what meaneth Beza to come in with this, Especially of that time of heathen Magistrates and their persecution? When Gualter maketh the same reason, that there were such Elders not teaching (though not Ecclesiasticall Governours as our Brethren imagine) in the Church then, when as there wanted Christian Magistrates and Princes: what other thing did hee inferre thereon, but this: that now syth there are Christian Magistrates and Princes, and that the Governement of Ecclesiasticall matters so well as temporall pertaineth to them, as we also acknowledge, and that moste rightly in the Queenes most excellent Maiesty (and if in her, then in the right of all other Christian Princes,) that therefore, this defect beeing nowe furnished, this supply of these Elders is needlesse and no longer necessary. Yea, and shoulde nowe be preiudiciall to the authority and Government of Christian Princes. And what other thing sayth Gualter there, but that this reason of Beza doth inferre? Our Brethren reason on S. Paules wordes, 1. Tim. 5. 17. That because S. Paule bringeth in these wordes, Especially those that labour in the worde and Doctrine: therefore there were other governing Elders, that were not teachers. And may not we reason as well and much better: that sith the Elders which were no teachers, but onely ruled the Ecclesiastical Discipline, were then, when as especially at that time the churches were not holpen of the Magistrate: therefore being nowe holpen of the Magistrate, there neede no such Elders to be the rulers of the churches Discipline.

How Bezaes words confirme Gualters.

But

But let vs now see by the search of these Quotations, that Beza citeth out of Cyprian for these elders, what manner of Elders they were: whether not meddling with teaching, (as Beza and our Brethren pretende) or Ministers of the word and Doctrine. And first, for the seconde booke of his Epistles, the first epistle: which is here first by Beza quoted, the superscription is thus,

Cyprianus presbyteris & Diaconis & plebi vniuersa salutem. Cyprian to the Elders, and Deacons, and to the whole people, Greeting.

Cyp. lib. 2.
epist. 5.

Here are Elders named before Deacons, as the Deacons before the people. But whether they medled with the word or no, as yet appeareth not. But by the like stile in his other Epistles precedent, when he writeth to other, or writeth of other, whome he calleth Presbyteros, and applieth to them the name Sacerdos: we may he bolder (before hande) conclude that he meaneth in that name, no such Elders as our Brethren please for. Cyprian commendeth to these Elders, Deacons and people, one Aurelius whome hee had ordeined a Reader. And in the beginning of his Epistle sayth: In the Clarke that are to bee ordeined (moste deare Brethren) we are wont to consult with you, and in common counsell, to weigh the manners and merites of euery one. In these wordes hee telleth them what he was wont to doe with them, in ordeining of the Clergy. But he sayth not that they had the authority thereof so well and as far forth as he, and that they ioyned in Common government with him, but in common counsell, and that onely to consider of their conuersation: nor that he was so necessarily bound thereto, but that when he himselfe apparantly knewe the party to be fitte (as he commendeth this Aurelius to be) hee was not then bound to consult with them thereon, but he himselfe without any further consultation, might ordein the party, as here hee did this Aurelius. And he sayth Merebatur talis Clerica ordinationis vltiores gradus & incrementa maiora, non de annis suis, sed de meritis estimandus, sed interim placuit vt ab officio lectionis incipiat, &c. Such an other as he deserued further degrees of the Clericall ordination, and greater aduancements, not being to bee esteemed by his yeares, but by his merites. Neuertheless it pleased mee in the meane season, that hee shoulde begin from the office of reading: because both nothing doth more agree vnto the voyce that hath confessed the Lorde by glorious preaching, than with celebrating the Diuine Lessons, to sounde out afterwarde the high words: he which hath vttered the Martyrdom of Christe, to reade the Gospell of Christe from whence the Martyrs are made, to come to the pulpit after the stocks: to haue bene beholden there of the multitude of the Gentiles, and here to be beholden of the Br. there to haue bene heard with the wonder of the people standing about him, & here to be heard with the reioysing of the Brotherhood. Know yee therefore (most Heere hee speaketh of Colleagues indede, that ioyned with this holy Archbishop Cyprian in ordeining this man a Reader. But hee sheweth that all the action was at his pleasure, and that hee mought haue giuen him higher orders if he had pleased. But what is here to proue that these Colleagues, though he gouerned them, were of any College vnder him, or were not Elders meddling with the Worde? yea rather because he speaketh of ordeining, and that he ioyned them with him in the ordeining, and that action was done by imposition of handes, which wee haue seene before, was onely of those that were Ministers of the Worde: why shoulde we not think that these colleagues, were elders that medled with the word and teaching, when the reader whome they ordeyned medled with it?

Heere is at leaste (to beginne with) a good coniecture, that these Elders medled with teaching, when they ioyned thus farre in the ordeining of Teachers: but heere is nothing at all, whereon wee may coniecture, that these Elders did not meddle at all with teaching.

Cypri. lib. 3.
epist. 10.

The next testimony that Beza quoteth out of Cyprian, for these gouerning Elders not medling with teaching, is in the thirde Booke the tenth Epistle. And here he beginneth as he did before (saue for the people) Cyprian to the Elders and Deacons his brethren, Greeting. Whome hee meaneth here also by the name of these Presbyters, Preestes or Elders, and in what matters they medled, appeareth moze playnely by this Epistle.

Verly I wished (most deare brethren) that I might haue saluted with my letters, our whole Cleargy intyre and safe. But because this malicious tempest, which hath beaten downe our people for the moste part, hath from hence also added an heape vnto our greenes, insomuch that in the slaughter thereof, it hath wrung in a portion also of the Cleargy: we beseeche the Lorde that wee may salute you, whome wee knowe to stande in constancie, and in the vertue (or power) of fayth, becing protected heereafter also through the mercy of God. And although the cause compell mee, that I my selfe ought to hasten and come vnto you, first for the longing and desire of you, which thing is one of my chiefeest wishes: and then moreouer, that those things which the common profit about the Gouernment of the Church requireth, we may treat of (or handle) them together, and may file them being examined by the counsell of many: neuerthelesse it is rather thought good, yet a while in the meane season, to keepe a priuie corner and rest, in respect of other commodities, which appertaine vnto the peace and health of vs all.

Whereof

Whereof a reason shall be rendred to you, of our moste deare Brother Elders, Tertullus. Who for his other care which in godly workes he greatly imployeth, was also the author of this counsell, that I shoulde abide warie and refraining, nor rashly commit my selfe vnto those places, where I was so often inquired after and sought for. Reposing my selfe therefore on your loue and religion, which I haue knowne sufficiently, I doe by these letters both exhort you, and commaund (or charge) you, that you (whose presence there is not enuied, nor so much daungerous,) occupy my roome (or steede) about those thinges to bee done which the religious (or Ecclesiasticall) administration doth require. And againe his concluding his Epistle hee saith: but vnto that which our Elders Donatus, Nouatus, and Curdius haue written vnto mee, I beeing alone could write nothing againe, si the that from the beginning of my Bishopricke, I haue determined to doe nothing of mine owne sentence priuately, without your counsell, and without the consent of the people, but when as by the grace of G O D I shall come vnto you, then will wee treat in common of those thinges that are either done or to be done, according as mutuall honor doth require.

Et honor & mando.

Vice mea fungamini.

In this Epistle (as in the other) he sayth he will treat together in common with them, of those thinges that concerne the government of the Church, and therein do nothing without their counsell: How Cy- prian joined in common counsell with the elder his authority re- served. Notwith he maketh this nothing else, but his own determination with him-selfe so to do. Neither giueth he to them in common any ioint or equall authority with him in these thinges, as of their right and office, otherwise than as hee made them his deputies in the authority thereof. Pea, hee not onely exhorteth them, but commaundeth and chargeth them to stande in his steede.

And all this he doth in his absence, which recommendeth the more his authority in his presence. Although therfore in his presence among them, he would in all thinges consult, examine and (as he sayth) file out matters with the counsell of many (so, plus vident oculi quam oculus) yet can wee not gather thereupon, that this their counsell and treating in common argueth the authority of Governing those thinges, to be in common also among them. So, where he attributeth to these elders thus much, that hee would doe nothing without their counsell: he addeth, & without the consent of the people. And consent is more than counsell (so a man may giue his counsell, and yet, it may be done without his consent: but if it shall not be done without his consent, then he hath a greater stroke therein, than in giuing his aduice or counsell) & shall wee say then, that the people also had the authority, and that greater authority to, in the government of the churches discipline, than had these Elders? these humble and courteous speeches therfore, of these his doings (so far as here he saith, mutual honor required) argue not the peoples, nor the Elders & deacons ioint-authority with him. Pea our brethren their-selues giue not this authority and government to the Deacons. And yet here Cyprian, looke what dealing in the Government of the Ecclesiasticall Discipline he yeeldeth to the Elders: he ioyneth the Deacons ioyntly with them.

That these Elders to wh^o Cyprian wrote were ministers of the word

But admit now, that these Elders and Deacons had ioint authority in common with him, in the government of the Churches Discipline: still our Question is, who, and what manner of Elders these were: whether Governing Elders not meddling with the Worde, as Beza and our Brethren doe affirme: but if we shall better consider this, that heere he maketh them and the Deacons to be his Deputies: although the Deacons were inferior, but were not excluded from meddling in the Ministry of the Worde: what likelihood is there, but that these Elders their superiours, were Ministers of the Worde also? and what unlikelihoode is there not in this? that if there had beene any other kinde of Elders, to wit, pastorall Elders, higher then both of them, as they must needs eyther grant that there were, (if these that he writeth to were not Pastorall Elders, or else, that they wanted Pastors and Ministers of the Worde and Sacramentes) that hee woulde make these Elders and Deacons his Deputies, rather than the Pastorall Elders amongst them? the Pastors being of the same function of eldership that him-selfe was of, and so might much better represent him, he only differing in degree of dignity and authority of Government ouer them.

One of Cyprians elders was Nouatus a teacher of puritanisme

But to make it yet more playne, when as hee mentioneth also in this Epistle, three of these Elders, Donatus, Nouatus and Curdus, whatsoeuer the other were, this Nouatus (for I can finde no other Nouatus but one, that was in Cyprians time, and one of his elders,) not onely medled but ouermedled with the Worde. And both wrot vnto him, and afterwards much troubled him, breeding a moste daungerous Schisme and heresy in the Church, and all vnder a pretence of more seuer Discipline and purity, and yet was him-selfe, when he was well sought out, a most impure and licentious man. This Nouatus being an elder of Carthage, where Cyprian was Bishop, fledde from Carthage to Rome, and there also brake forth into such factions, as we haue scene befoze out of Eusebius, Lib. 6. Cap. 33.

Cyprian. epist. li. 2. epist. 8.

The description of Nouatus.

Whereupon Cornelius the B. of Rome, writeth of him vnto Cyprian. Whome Cyprian answering, Lib. Epist. 2. Epist. 8. sayth: Concerning Nouatus, there was no neede to shewe vs from thence: when rather by vs Nouatus ought to haue beene shewed vnto you, that hee was alwayes desirous of newe matters. Of couetousnesse vnsatiabie, furious in rauening, puffed vp with arrogancie, and an vnsensiblenesse of a prowde swelling, euer knowne there vnto the Bishops in an ill sort, condemndemned by the voyce of all the Preeſtes, as an Heretike alwayes, and faithleſſe, euermore curious that hee might betraye, flattering to this ende that hee might beguile, that hee might loue neuer faythfull, a fyre-brande and fire to kindle the flambes of ſedition, a whirle-winde and Tempeſt to make Shipwrackes of the ſayth, an aduerſary of tranquillitye, an enemye of peace: to conclude, Nouatus departing thence from vs, that is to ſay, the ſtorme and the Whirle-winde departing from vs: quietneſſe was partly made, and the glorious and good confeſſors, which by his inciting were gone from the Church, after that hee was gone from the Citye, came to the Church. Againe, The ſame Nouatus is hee, that amongeſt vs firſt ſowed the flambes of diſcorde and Scisme, which heere ſeuered ſome of the brethren from the Biſhop. Which euen in the very perſecution it ſelfe, that hee might turne away the mindes of the brethren, was another kinde of perſecution vnto our people.

It is euen hee, which by his faction and ambition, made Feliciffimus his Catch-pole a Deacon, neither I permitting it, neither writing of it. And ſaying with his tempeſt to ouerturne the Church at Rome alſo, hee hath there attempted the like and euen ſuch partes, pulling a portion of the people from the Cleargye, cutting aſunder the concord of the brotherhoode, that helde well together among them ſelues and loued one another. Certainelye ſithe that, according to the bigneſſe thereof, Rome ought to goe before Carthage. Hee hath there committed greater and more greuous thinges, hee that heere againſt the Church made a Deacon, made there a biſhoppe. Neyther let anye man meruayle at this in ſuche kinde of men. The euill are euer caried madde in their furye. And when they haue committed their wickedneſſe, they are vexed with the conſcience it ſelfe of their wicked minde. Neither can they abide in the church of God, which haue not holden the Diſcipline of Gods making, and that which is Eccleſiaſticall, neyther in the conuerſation of their dooing nor in the peace of their manners. The pupilles whome hee hath ſpoyled, the Widowes whome hee hath defrauded, the churches moneye which hee hath denied, require theſe puniſhmentes which wee ſee in his furye.

ness of his crimes long agoe. For this cause hee made sure reckoning, that hee shoulde not onely be called oute of the Presbyterie, but also excommunicated, and the Brethren wring it, the Daye of his triall approched, in the which before as his cause should be handled, if that the persecution had not come before it. Which hee taking holde of, with a certaine kinde of vowe that hee might escape and save his condemnation, committed and intermixed all these thinges, (as hee which was to be cast out of the Church and excluded) prevented the iudgement of the preestes, by his voluntary departing: as though, to have prevented the sentence, were to have escaped the punishment.

This presbytery consisted of such Elders as were Sacerdotes, Ministers of the word &
sacraments.

By this inuention of Cyprian, it is not onely moste apparant that this Elder Nouatus was a Minister of the word and sacraments: but that also these consistories or colleges of Elders, in such great cities as Rome & Carthage, that with the Bishops were assistants in the governmēt of the Ecclesiasticall Discipline, were not of such Elders as medled not with the worde: but were of such Presbyters Preestes or Elders, as were also called sacerdotes. Which in the Epistle before this that Beza next citeth, is called of Cyprian, the corpe of the Preestes. Lib. 3. epist. 13. Where, after againe he hath inneighed against this Nouatus, whome there hee calleth Nouatian, he saith: for therefore (moste deere Brother) the corpe of the Preestes is abundant, coupled together with the glue of mutuall concord and bonde of vnity: that if any of our college shall attempt to make an hieresie, and to rende and waste the flocke of Christe, the other shoulde helpe, and as profitable and mercifull pastors shoulde gather together into the folde the Lordes sheepe. And thus by the occasion of this one Scismaticall Elder, wee finde not onely a profitable warning for vs all to take heede, of making schisme in the Church vnder pretence of greater purity, and innouating newe orders of more seuerer Discipline: but also, which is the point we now relie vpon, that these Colleges of Elders, whose counselles the Bishops used in the Governmēt of the churches discipline, were colleges of pastorall Elders.

li. 3. epi. 14.

But to search it yet further with Beza, let vs procede vnto his next quotation, Epist. 14. euen the next Epistle to that we last cited, although we haue partly seene the same already, for the superiority of Bishops ouer pastorall Elders. Wherein Cyprian writeth to the Elders and Deacons as before. The occasion was, because they admitted some to the supper of the Lord, and to the peace of the Church, who had fallen in the time of persecution, and had not before their receiuing, publicly confessed their offence, and declared their vnfeigned repentance. Whereupon sayth Cyprian:

I haue long helde my patience (most deare Bre.) as though our shame-fast

faſte ſilence ſhould gaine quietnes. But when the immoderate and cut-ted preſumption of ſome, endeouoreth by their raſhnes to diſturbe both the honour of the Martyrs, and the ſhamefaſtneſſe of the confeſſors, and the tranquillitie of the whole people: I muſt not holde my peace anie longer, leaſt too much ſilence growe to the daunger, both of the people together and of our ſelues. For what daunger of offending the Lord ought we not to feare, when as ſome of the Elders, neither mindefull of the Goſpell, nor of their place, neither thinking of the iudgment of the Lorde to come, nor of the Biſhop that now is placed ouer them, claime all to themſelues with the contumely and contempt of their gouernor.
 Which thing was neuer done at all vnder our aunceſtors. Yea, would to God they claimed not all thinges to them, with the ouerthrowe of our Brethrens ſaluation. I can winke at and beare the contumely of our Biſhopricke, as I haue alwayes winked at it, and thoroughly borne it. But there is now no place of winking at it, when as our Bretherhood is beguiled by certaine of you, who while without the reaſon of reſtoring them to ſaluation, are deſirous to be plauſible: they doe rather hinder ſuch as are fallen. For, that it is a moſt hainous offence which perfection compelled to be committed, euen they alſo doe knowe that haue committed it, when as the Lorde and our iudge hath ſayde: He that ſhall confeſſe me before men, I will acknowledge him alſo before my father which is in heauen. But he that ſhall denie me, I will alſo denie him. And againe, all finnes ſhalbe forgiven to the ſonnes of men, yea blaſphemie, but he that ſhall blaſpheme a-gainſt the holy Ghoſt, ſhall haue no forgiveness, but is guiltie of aternall ſinne.
 Again the bleſſed Apoſtle ſayde: ye can not drinke the cup of the Lorde and the cup of Diuels; ye can not communicate at the table of the Lord, and at the table of Diuels. Hee that concealeth theſe thinges from our Brethren, be-guileth the miſers, as though that they which truly repenting them, might ſatiſfie vnto God the father for mercie by their prayers & workes, ſhould be ſeduced, that they might periſh the more. And thoſe that might erect themſelues, might the more fall. For when in leſſer finnes, the ſinners declare themſelues penitent at a iuſt time, and come to the confeſ-ſion of their finnes, according to the order of diſcipline, and by the laying on of the Biſhops and the Clergies handes, they receaue the right of communicating: they are now (in the rawe time of the perſecution, yet continuing, the peace of the Church it ſelfe being not yet reſtored) admitted to the communicating, and their name is offered vp, and hauing not done their penitence, their confeſſion of their finnes being not yet finiſhed, nor the hand either of the Biſhop or of the Clergie being as yet layde vpon them; the ſacrament of thankſgiuing is given vnto them.
 When as it is written, He that ſhal eate the bread or drinke the cup of the Lord unworthily ſhalbe guiltie of the bodie and blood of the Lorde. But now are not they guiltie that knowe not the lawe of the Scripture, but they are guiltie that are the Gouernours, and doe not declare these thinges vnto their Bretheren, that they beeing instructed of their Gouernours, might doe all thinges with the feare of God, and with the obseruation giuen and prescribed of him. Moreouer, they cause the blessed Martyrs to be enuied, and set at strife the glorious seruantes of God, with the Priestes of God; that when as they that are mindefull of our lawe shall haue directed their letters to me, and shall haue requested that the desires of euerie one may be examined, and the peace to bee giuen, when as our mother her selfe shall haue first by the Lordes mercie receiued peace, and that the diuine protection shall haue brought you againe vnto the Church: these men taking awaye the honour which the blessed Martyrs, which the Confessors keepe vnto vs, contemning the lawe and obseruation of the Lord, which the same Martyrs and Confessors commande to be holden, doe communicate with those that are fallen, and offer, and deliuer the Sacrament of thanksgiuing, before the feare of persecution be extinguished, before our returne, before almost the very departure it selfe of the Martyrs. Whē as the Martyrs yea if so be through the heate of glorie not so much looking vpon the scripture, should desire any thing more than they ought, contrarie to the lawe of God; they ought to be admonished of the Elders and Deacons suggesting (or declaring it) as it hath alwayes in times past been done.

Thus both Cyprian most clearly shewe, that these Elders (whom also hee calleth by the name of Gouernours.) not onely with the Bishoppe layde their handes on the penitent, but administred the supper of the Lorde vnto them. Which thing they dooing with-out the offenders due acknowledgement of their faultes: no; they preaching the lawe of God and repentance to them, as they ought to haue doone: and laying their handes on the penitent, or euer their Bishop was returned: as Cyprian rebuketh them for these presumptions; so by this he declareth, that these Gouernours Consistoriall were suche Elders, as we call Priestes, that is, Ministers of the worde and sacramentes; and not such Elders as medled only with gouerning and not teaching, as our Beshpen and Beza do pretende.

And because Beza quoteth yet an other testimonie out of Cyprian, to wit, the 15. Epistle, for praise of these Elders: it behooueth vs to see that also, least we should leaue any thing out that our Beshpen affirme. And so farre (for my part to my poore skill) as I finde ought in them, although I growe ouer tedious thereby. Yet I more couet the full boulding out of the truth, and throught satisfiying the desire euen of the most scrupulous & curious reader, in so boate and great controuersies, especially as this is of this Eldership than I feare the glutting of the, that care not much for these questions questions, or wilbe easily though with reason answered.

The 15. Epistle is written to his brethren, the martyrs and confes-sors in his Church, who hauing written to their Byshop Cyprian, for the orderly admitting into the communion of the church, such as had fallen, he returneth this answer to them. The carefulnesse of our place and the feare of the Lorde compelleth me (most valiant & most blessed martyrs) to admonish you by our letters, that of whome the faith of the L. is so deuoutly and so stoutly conserued, of the same also the lawe and discipline of the Lorde may be reserued. For sithe all the souldiours of Christe ought to keepe the preceptes of their Emperour, then muche more conuenient is it, that you should more obey his preceptes, which are made vnto other an example, both of vertue & of the feare of God.
And verily I beleueed, that the Elders & Deacons which are there present, warned and enstructed you most fully, concerning the lawe of the Gospell, euen as also in times past it hath alwayes beene done vnder our auncestors, that the Deacons resorting vnto the prison, should with their counsels and with the preceptes of the scriptures, ouerrule the desires of the Martyrs. But now I knowe with most great grieve of minde, that not onely the commaundementes of God are there not declared: but as yet they are rather hindred, in so much that euen those thinges also which of your selues are warily doone, both concerning God, and honourably concerning the sacred Priest of God, are againe vndone by certaine of the Elders. Who neither thinking on the feare of God, nor of the Bishoppes honour, when as you directed vnto me your letters, by the which your requestes were to be examined, and that you craved I would giue peace vnto certaine that were fallen at suche time as the persecution beeing finished, wee should beginne to come together in one with the Clergie, and be recollected: they contrarie to the lawe of the Gospell, and to your honourable petition, before the accomplishment of their penitence, before the confession made of the moste greuous and extreeme trespasse, before the hande of the Bishoppe and the Clergie layde vppon them for their poenitence, durst offer (he meaneth prayers and thanksgiuing) for them, and giue them the sacrament of thanksgiuing, that is, durst prophane the holie bodie of the Lorde. And verily to them that were fallen, pardon in this point might be graunted. Who beeing dead, woulde not make haste to bee quickned? Who would not hasten to come to his health? But it is the dutie of the Gouvernours to keepe the commaundement, and both to instructe them that either hasten, or bee ignoraunt, leaste that they which ought to be the Pastors of the sheepe, should become their butchers. For, to graunt those thinges that should turne to ones destruction, is to deceaue him, neither is the fallen reared vpp on that fashion,

How greatly Beza and our Brethren are deceived in the college of Elders governors that Cyprian mentioneth Epist. lib. 3.
Epist. 16.

What can be plainer spoken than these speeches, to declare that these Elders which Cyprian writeth of, were such Gouvernours, that both the ministration of the worde and sacramentes pertayned to them, and were such as in plaine termes he calleth Pastors, and that they ought to teach?

Thus haue we seene howe all these Epistles which Beza citeth, for a college of governing Elders not medling with teaching of the worde, to haue bene no such kinde of Elders, as he and our Brethren do imagine but cleane contrarie. And though his quotation proceedeth further in a generalitie, & alys deinceps, and in other Epistles following: yet in none of his Epistles, eyther following, or going before, can I finde that he mentioneth any such Elders, as he and our Brethren do conceaue. In the 16. Epistle, speaking of the Presbyters, Priests or Elders, he sayth: whom our Elders and Deacons ought to haue warned, that they might nourish the sheepe committed to them, and by their diuine maisterhip, instruct the vnto the way that is to be prayed for. In the 17. Epistle, he saith: I maruell, most deare Brethren (writting to the Elders and Deacons) that vnto many my Epistles which I haue often sent vnto you, you haue written nothing againe. When as eyther the Profite or the necessitie of our brotherhoode should verily be thus gouerned, if that we being of you instructed, may file our counsell for the ording of matters. Notwithstanding because I see I haue not habilitie as yet to come vnto you, and nowe the sommer is begunne which time afflicteth men with continuall and greuous infirmities: I thinke good to helpe our Brethren, as those that haue receaued libelles from the Martyrs, that if they be preuented with any hurt or daunger of infirmitie, they should not expect our presence. But that before any Elder beeing present, or if an Elder shall not be founde, and their ende beginne to vrge them, they may declare the confession of their trespasse, before a Deacon also, that hee laying his hande vpon them for their repentance, they may come vnto the Lorde with the peace, which the Martyrs in their letters giuen vnto vs, haue desired. The other part of the people that is fallen, nourish ye the with your presence, and refresh them with your comforte, that they fall not away from the faith and mercie of the Lorde, &c.

Their feeding and comforting of the other repentantes.

Epist. 18.

In the next Epistle, writting again to the Elders and Deacons, (hauing receaued letters from them of the same matter) he sayth: I haue receaued your letters (most deere Brethren) in the which yee haue written, that your wholsome counsell vnto our Brethren is not wanting, that setting aside this rash haste making, they should giue vnto God a religious patience, that when by the mercie of God we shall come together, we may treate

treate of all kindes, according to the Ecclesiasticall discipline. Especially, when as it is written: Remember from whence thou hast fallen, and repent.
But he repenteth, that is meeke and patient to the commaundements of God, and obedient to the Priestes of God, and winneth the Lorde, with his seruiceablenes and workes. Howbeit, because you haue signified, that certaine are immoderate, and doe vrge hastily to receaue the communion, and you haue desired a forme to be giuen of me vnto you for this matter: knowe ye that I haue fully written for this matter, in the last letters that I wrote vnto you. And so telleth them (as before) how they should lay their handes on them, and absolve them.

In the next Epistle, writing yet further vnto them on this matter: he sayth, But I haue read also the letters of all the Confessors, which they would haue made knowne by me to al my colleagues, and the peace that they haue giuen to come vnto them: of which matters so that a reason be apparant before vs, what they haue done after the fault committed: which thing, sithe it tendeth to the counsel and sentence of vs all: I dare not iudge it before hande, and claime to me onely a matter common.
And therefore let them stande on the Epistles which I last made, an example wherof I haue also sent alreadie to my colleagues (he meaneth by this worde Colleagues not the Elders of his Colledge, for he wrote to the, Whom Cy-but other his fellowe Bishops) who haue written that that which wee haue decreed liketh them, &c. Here with some thinges he will not medle alone, but with his Colleagues. And yet this decree he made alone, and in his absence, as appeareth by the two former Epistles.

In the 22. Epistle, writing to the Elders and Deacons, he sayth: Least any thing should be hiddé from your conscience (most deere Brethren) what is written to me, I haue sent you a copie of eyther Epistle, and I beleue, that which I haue written again to you, misliketh you not. But this also I ought by my letters to declare vnto you, that vppon vrgent cause I sent letters to the Clergie being in the citie: and because I should write by Clerkes: albeit I know that many of ours are absent, and as for those fewe which are there, do scarce suffice vnto the daily ministerie of the worke: it was necessarie to constitute some newe which shoulde bee sent, wit yee therefore, that I haue made Saturus a reader, and Optatus the Confessor a Sub-deacon. Whom we had made a good while since, by the last comon Clergie Counsell. When on Easter day we gaue once and twice the reading (or the lesson) eyther vnto Saturus or to Op-tatus. With the Priestes (or Elders) Doctors and Readers we constituted a Doctor of the hearers (by the name of Doctors he meaneth the Ca-techisers, as wee shewed of Pantenus, Clemens, Origene, &c.) examining whether all thinges agreed vnto them, that ought to bee in those that are appointed for the Clergie. I haue therefore done no new thing

Epist. 14.

In your absence, but that which began long a-go, by the common counsell of vs all, is promoted (or aduanced further) necessitie vrging it. Thus againe both he in his absence promote to higher orders in the Clergie (as needs required) those whom before by their Counsell, he had begunne to chuse into the Clergie. But still, for these Priests, or Elders, they were in the number of the Clergie, such as we haue before shewed, being Pastors, whom he placeth before the Doctors or Catechisers.

In the 14. Epistle, (allowing in his absence, a portion of his own stpende, to helpe the poore persecuted amongst them) he calleth Rogatian compresbyterum his fellowe Elder. Not that he had like authoritie to him, as Bishop: but, that he was of the same Priesthoode or Eldership of the worde and Sacraments, that Cyprian was.

And the next Epistle he directeth vnto nine other Bishops, whom he calleth Compresbopis his fellowe Bishops, item Compresbyteris & Diaconis in metallo constitutis martyribus, &c. and also to his fellowe Elders, and to the Deacons placed in the mines, the Martyrs of God the Father Almighty and of Iesus Christ the Lorde & God our Sauour, &c. And thus calling the one companie his fellowe Bishops, being none of them Bishop of Carthage, where he only was the B. though absent, & yet was not Carthage being so great a citie destitute of Pastors: and calling the other sort Compresbyteros and placing these Elders betwene Bishops & Deacons, and withal distinguishing them from both of these, and giuing them the terme that S. Peter both, of Compresbyter, fellow Elder, which S. Peter ascribeth to the Pastors: it is most manifest that he meaneth only by these Elders such as were ministers of the word and Sacraments, but not Bishops.

Epist. 4.

In the next and last booke of his Epistles, he speaketh little of them, and writeth seldome to them. In the 4. Epistle writing to two Elders that had bene constant in persecution, he citeth vnto the as part of their dutie, this sentence of Christ, Mat. 28. Go and teach all Nations, baptizing them, in the name of the father, and of the sonne, and of the holy Ghoste, teaching them to obserue whatsoever I haue commanded you, &c. when ye shall shew forth these precepts, you haue kept the diuine and heauenly commandements.

Epist.

To conclude, the last of all his Epistles, is not the least to confirme this matter, what was the dignitie and office of these Elders, that were assistants to the B. in such great Cathedrall Churches, & such famous Cities as was Carthage. Cyprian to the Elders and to the Deacons & to all the people his most deere and best beloued Brethren, greeting.

An Elder chosen to be an Elder at Carthage.

Most deere Brethr, I haue to signifie vnto you, that which I haue thought appertayneth to the common reioysing, and to the greatest glory of our church. For, knowe ye, being admonished & instructed by the diuine fauour, that the Elder Numidicus is to be enrolled in the number of the Elders of Carthage, and that he sit in the clergie, being famous with the most

most cleare light of his confession, and aduanced with the honour both of vertue and faith, who by his exhortation hath sent before him a plentiful number of Martyrs with stones & fire, Which ioyfully behelde his wife that cleued to his side, who as together with other she was burned. He himselfe being halfe burned, and ouerwhelmed with stones, & left for dead. While that afterwarde his daughter with a carefull seruice of godlines seeketh the corps of her father, where he being founde almost dead, & refreshed, and drawn out from his companions whom he had sent before him, remained against his will. But this (as wee see) was the cause of his remaying that the Lorde would ioyne him vnto our Clergie, and woulde adorne gloriosi Sacerdotibus, with his glorious Sacred Priests, the abundance of our Elders being desolate. And verily, he shall be promoted, as time shall permitte, vnto a more worshipfull place of his religion, when through the Lordes protection we shall come in presence. In the meane season, let this be done that is declared, that we may receiue this gift of God with thanks giuing, hoping that by the mercie of the Lord, such ornaments shall be also furnished, that renuing the strength of his Church, he will make our so meeke and humble consistories, to flourish in honour.

ders.

The Elders were married

The Elders that sit in the Consistorie of Carthage, were Sacerdotes.

Confessus.

Whereby we plainlie see, not onely the Bishoppes authoritie ouer the consistorie of the Elders, in making this Elder Numidicus, an Elder in the cleargie and consistorie of Carthage: but also that he was a Preacher & exhorter of the people. And that Cyprian vseth the name of Presbyter, and Sacerdos, indifferently, as betokening one and the same office for the which, we in English (wanting a proper name for Sacerdos) vse the contraction of the other better and lesse offensive terme Presbyter, calling them Priests, signifying these Elders ministering the wordes and Sacramentes. And of other sortes, whom Cyprian calleth Presbyteri, Priests or Elders assistant to the Bishop in the gouernement of the Ecclesie, discipline, I finde no mention, nor inking of them in all the Epistles of Saint Cyprian. Neither cite I him in these editions, that the Wapites haue of late corrupted him. And therefore I maruell not a little, that such an excellent man as Bexa is (God be praised for his gifts in him) was so ouershot to cite these Epistles of Cyprian, for a Consistory or Colledge of such Elders gouerned by a Bishop, which together with him should haue the spirituall iurisdiction, and the gouernment of Ecclesie discipline, that were not ministers of the wordes and Sacramentes.

As for that which Gellius Seneanus citeth also out of Cyprians Epistles Epist. 2. lib. 1. there is no mention there at all of any other of the Clergie, then onely of Bishops, or of such Priests as hee calleth Sacerdotes & Pastores. Which Epistle being written to Cornelius Bishop of Rome, by Cyprian and a great number of other Bishops of Africa, toynd in counsell counsell with him: he useth there this terme Collegues, meaning other Bishops that were of his owne function. But if (sayth he) there shall bee any of the Collegues, which when persecution vrgeeth them, thinketh the peace should not be giuen to our brothers and sisters: let him in the day of iudgement render a reason to the Lorde, eyther of his importune censure, or of his inhumaine roughnes. Is this any thing to any governing Elder in the Church that is not a minister of the worde and sacraments? As for any other Collegues eyther of those that bee wrote of, or wrote vnto, or that wrote with him, in this or any other Epistle: I finde none. For our Bishops can shew any such Elders as they wrote vnto be, in all these Epistles, or any other worke of Cyprian.

*Tertullianus;
geni. cap. 39.*

But because Gellius Seneanus aduoceth also the testimony of Tertullian in his Apologie against the Gentiles, cap. 39. which was bene like, wise already saide, for the manner and forme of the primitive Church, in their publike prayers: neuertheless, to the fuller serch of these Elders which our Bishops would haue, let vs againe consider what Tertullian sayth, especially he going not onely immediately before Cyprian, about the yeare of our Lorde, 200. but being in such estimation with Cyprian that he alwayes called him his Maister. I will nowe my selfe (sayth Tertullian) set forth the affayres of the Christian faction, that I which haue refuted the euill thinges, may shewe the good. We are a bodie of the conscience of religion, and of the truth of discipline, and of the couenant of hope. We come together into an assembly and congregation that praying vnto God (as though by prayers wee strived for workes) this force is acceptable vnto God. We pray also for the Emperours, for their ministers and powers, for the state of the worlde, for the quietnes of their affayres, and for the prolonging of their ende. We are gathered together to the reciting of the diuine scriptures, if so be that, the qualitie of the present time doe compell vs to giue fore-warning, or to reknowledge it. Certainly we feede our faith with the holy speeches, we erecte our hope, we fixe our confidence. Neuertheless, we thicken (or encrease) the discipline of the maisters, (or of the preceptes) by prouocations or inculcations. At the same place are also exhortations, chasticements & the diuine corrections: for the iudgement is giuen with great waight, as among them that are sure that God beholdes them. And it is the chiefeest foreiudging of the iudgement to come, if any man do so trespasse, that he be banished from the communicating of prayer and of the assemblie and of all the holy partaking. The Presidents or Gouvernours are all of them approoued Seniors, hauing obtayned this honour not with price, but with testimonie.

What is there here in any of these wordes, to proue that these Elders which (as he termeth it) presidentes did gouerne the congregations, medled medled not with teaching? Q; rather both be not ascribe teaching to the Alexandr.

When he saith, Wee are a corps of the conscience of religion, of truth, of discipline, and of the couenant of hope? When he saith, their comming together was for prayers, and for recording the Scriptures? When he saying addes how they fed their faith with the word of God, erecting their hope, and fixing their confidence, they ioyne this withall, that neuertheless they do increase the discipline of the maisters by their inculcations or often calling vpon them? Q; if we should consider these two Dis- plinam preceptorum, for the discipline, not of the maisters, but of the procepts: so that we take it not that they did increase the discipline of mens commandements. And both be not also ioyne exhortations together with castigations of the diuine censurer? By all which and much more. we may well gather out of this place, that these Presidents or gouernours of these congregations were not such as medled not with teaching. For if the Elders not teaching were gouerned (as Beza saith) in their Colleges and corporations, of the Bishops: howe were these Elders the presidents or Gouernours? or not rather the gouerned? And hee speaketh of them that obtained the honour of their government or Presidentship, not by price of money, but by testimonie. All which accordeth with our Bishops owne saings, for the election of Bishops and pastorall Elders. And hee speaketh of such tried and approued Elders, as Paule in pastorall Elders gaue charge to Timothie. But when withall, he useth for their government, that verie terms which he vses in other places, speaking also of the Christian assemblies, as in his booke de Corona militis, where he saith: Eucharistia sacramen- tum et in tempore victus, et omnibus, mandatum a Domino, etiam ante-lucanis entibus, nec de aliorum manu quam de presidentium sumimus. The Sacrament of thankgiuing is commanded of the Lord, both in the time of repast, & in all times, yea also in our assembles before the breake of the daie, neither do we receiue it at the hand of anie other than of those that are our Presidents (or Gouernours.) Whereby it is plain, that those of whom heere he saith, President probati quique Seniores, the Seniors that are Presidents (or that gouerne) are euerie one of them tried (or approued) men: twer euerie one of them none other, but such as ministred the Sacraments, & of consequence, teachers of the word. And of such Elders gouerning in the Church of Christ, & of none other, speaketh Clemens Alexandrinus (who also was an elder in office, & in time was somewhat elder than Tertullian) li. 6. Stromas. He is in verie deed (saith he) an elder of the Church & a true Deacon, that is a minister of Gods will, if so be he do & teach the things that are of the Lord, not that as he is ordained of men, neither that he must be accounted righteous that is an elder, but that he which is righteous should be brought into the eldership, &c. Wherein making also after ward the degree of Elder to be in dignitie different from, & placed betwene Bishop & Deacon: he ac-knowledgeth no such kinde of Elder governing the Church in his time, that is not a teacher of the word.

*Irenaeus contra heret. li. 1.
ca. 11.
Lib. 3. ca. 39*

And the same also is manifest in Irenaeus, who in his first booke against heresies, ca. 1. 2. saith against the heretike Marcus: Wherefore iustlie and aptlie vnto such thy blindnesse, the diuine Elder and fit preacher of the truth inueighed against thee, &c. And in the 2. booke, cap. 39. speaking both of Elder in age and office, he saith of Christ: And so hee was a Senior (or Elder) among the Seniors, that he might be a perfect master in al things, not only according to the exposition of the truth, but according to age, sanctifieng together also the Seniors (or Elders) himselfe becomming an example vnto thes, &c. And againe, But because the age of 30. yeres, is of a young man of his first towardnesse, and stretcheth to 40. euerie one will graunt that from the 40. or 30. yeres, he now declineth into an elder age, which age our Lord hauing, he taught, as the Gospell & all the Elders testifie, which assembled together vnto Iohn the Disciple of the Lord. And the same thing did Iohn deliuer vnto thes. Now although herein Irenaeus feuly ouerthoote himselfe in Christs age, more regarding the relation and tradition of the Elders, than exatlie considering the iust time: yet still he acknowledgeth those that were called Elders, not in yeres but in office, concerning the Ecclesiasticall state of Christ his Church, to be such as taught & witnessse & relation of those things that were deliuered them by the Apostles, though they remembred not so well the Apostles reckoning. And this he hath more plaine, li. 3. ca. 2. when againe we chalenge them that are against the tradition, to come to that traditio which is from the Apostles, which is kept in the Churches by the succession of the Elders, they will say, they being more wise, not only than the Elders, but also than the Apostles, haue found out the sincere truth. And li. 4. ca. 43. Wherefore it be- houeth vs to heare these Elders that are in the Church, those which haue their succession from the Apostle, as wee haue shewed, who with the suc- cession of the Bishop, haue (according to the decree of the Father) recei- ued a sure grace (or gift) of the truth. And in the next Chapter: But such as of many are supposed to be Elders, but serue their pleasures, &c. fro all such therefore we must abstaine, & cleaue vnto these, which (as wee haue also said before) keepe the doctrine of the Apostles, & with their order of the Eldership, shew forth the sound word & their conuersation without offence, to the information and correction of the residue. Wilberunto al- leaging the examples of Moses, Samuel, and St. Paul, he saith: Euen as the Apostle Paul when he was of good conscience, sayde to the Corinthians: For we are not as many are, adulterating the word of God, wee haue corrupted none, we haue circumcised none, such Elders doth the church nourish: Of who also the Prophet saith: And I will giue thee thy Princes in peace, and thy Bishops in right- newnesse. Of whom also the Lord said: For he therefore is a faithfull agent, li. 4. cap. 43.

good, and wise, whom the Lord shall preserve ever his familie, to give them measure in time? Haplye is that servant whom the Lord shall find so doing when he cometh. What can be plainer than this, to shew that by the name of these Presbyters, Priests, or Elders in the government of the Church, Irenaeus alwaies meant such, as were teachers of the word, and none other?

Justin the martyr in his defence of the Christians unto the Emperour Antoninus, mencioneth (as we have seene) one onlie governor of the congregation, whom he calleth the chiefe brother. But he telleth wthal, that he maketh the exhortation to the congregation befoze the receiuing of the Sacrament, & he offereth the psalters and thanksgiving, & first celebrateth the whole action of the Lords supper, & the Deacons deliuer the bread & the cup, to euery one present; & of other Elders or Gouvernors among the, that I can find he maketh no mention. As for Ignatius, because our Bjs. in their pamphlet of the learned mans iudgement for the 3. kinds of Bishops, do allow of the Bishop mentioned in Ignatius: by as good reason they haue also to allow of his Elders & Deacons. For almost in euery Epistle (if they be the Epistles of Ignatius) he mencioneth speciallie these three, & maketh the Elders the Successors of the Apostles. In the first Epistle to the Trallians, he saith: Be ye subiect to the Elders, as to the Apostles of Iesu Christ concerning our hope, in who persevering, we shal be found in him. And therefore ye must by all meanes please the Deacons, which are for the ministerie of Iesus Christ, for they are not ministers in meate and drink, but of the ministerie of the Church of God. It behoueth therefore to keepe their precepts, euen as the burning fire. And let them be such, but as for your reuerence ye them as the Lord Iesus Christ, because they are the keepers of his place, as the bishop is the forme of the Father of al, but the Elders of the consistorie of God, and ioyning together of the Apostles of Christ, for without them it is not the elected church, nor the collection of the Saints, nor the holie Congregation. And again. What is the Eldership but a holie institution of a counsellour or confessor of a Bishop. What also are the Deacons but followers of Christ ministering to the Bishop, as Christ to the Father, and working vnto him a cleane & vnspotred work, euen as Saine Stephen vnto the most blessed Iames, and Timothie, & Irenaeus vnto Paul and Anacleus, and Clement vnto Peter. And in the 4. Epistle to the Phillippians: Yet I saie to the Bishop and to the Elders in the Lord, that whosoener shall keepe the Passouer with the Iews, or take vp the solemnities of their feast daies, shall be compartner with them that haue killed the Lorde and his Apostles.

Justin's martyr in Apolog. Christ. ad Antonin.

Ignatius explains ad Trallianen.

These and such other speeches of the Presbyteral Elders do declare, that whosoener in Ignatius name wote the, for I dare not so boldly (as our Bjs. doe) affirme them to bee his, yet in waiting thus of the Consistorie of the Elders) yea, of the Deacons vnder them, he thought them both to meddle with teaching, and with the administration of the Sacraments. As for the Epistle that is aduoynd in the name of Polycarpus & the Elders with him, it is most manifest howe they toynd teaching to their gouerning. Let the Elders bee simple, in all things, mercifull, conuerting all from error, visiting all the sicke, not neglecting the widowes, the fatherlesse and the poore, but alwaies providing good things before the Lorde, and before me. As for any other y^e is moze suspected of, I cite not. But be they suspected, or be they not, as I graunt they are verie euident: so we can finde in none of them, such Elders mencioned, as our W^{ts} escape vpon vs y^e there were, neither yet in anye ancient & autentike Ecclesiasticall historie.

For as for that Danneus writing of the office of Elders, in Christ, Isagog, part. 3. cap. 10. citeth, saying: Lites autem dirimere, &c. But to decide debates, and (as out of Socrates, lib. 7. cap. 37. may be gathered) to behaue themselves as Iudges and arbiters, I neuer read that it was the function of Elders, or parte of their office. This proueth nothing at all, that the Cleargie of whom Socrates there speaketh, were not Ministers of the worde and Sacraments: but rather seemeth to inferre that they were, and that the Bishop of whom Socrates speaketh, would not haue them by a waye too much stoned from their function, to the hearing and determining of such controuersies. Albeit Socrates telleth that Siluanus the Bishop did it, when as hee sawe the Clarke to make a gaine by the controuersies of the striuers, that from thence forth hee permitted none of the Cleargie to be a Iudge, but taking the bills of those that made supplications, he preferred one faithfull laie man, whom he knewe to fauour that which was right and good, to haue the hearing of those matters, and so he set free the striuers from contention and controuersie. Were the Cleargie that had the dealing in those matters, the Bishop by his superiour authoritie toke it fro the, & appointed it not to the consideration of Elders, but to one laie man. But to the moze fullie and plainlie that Socrates alwaies vnderstands by the tearme of Elders, onely such as we call Priestes, to wit, Ministers of the worde and Sacraments: Let vs also see some testimonies out of Socrates, because Danneus citeth him for these Elders. And I would gladly search all the testimonies & examples generallie, if that Caluine, Beza, & Danneus, or anye other autho^r haue ought, for the prooffe or but probabilitye of these Elders.

In the 3. Chap. of his first booke, he saith: And on a certaine time, the Presbyters, (Priests, or Elders) being present which were vnder him, (he speaketh of Alexander, Bishoppe of Alexandria) and the residue of the Cleargie, hee treated somewhat more curiously and subtilly of the Trinitie, and philosophicallie proued, that in the Godhead there is the vnitie in the Trinitie. But Arius being one of the number of the Elders, which in that degree were placed vnder Alexander, a man not ignorant of the quirkes of Logicks, because he suspected that he would afresh bring into the Church the error of the Affricane Sabellius, being kindled with the desire of contention, declined to an opinion cleane contrarie to the opinion of that Affricane, and affirmed, that if the Father begat the sonne, he that was begotten had a beginning of his being. And that therevpon it is cleere, that there was a time when the sonne was not, & that necessarily it followed, that he had his being of nothing. When he had concluded with this new kinde of reason, and neuer before heard of: he stirred vp many of them to seeke after those matters, and of a little sparke was kindled a great great flame, &c. Wherevpon Alexander calling a councell of many Bishops, he deposed (saith Socrates) Arius, and the fautors of his opinion, from the degree of the Eldership. By which it plainly appeareth, that these elders were ministers and teachers of the worde.

Socrates.

And to this nat onells accordeth Rufinus, lib. 10. Eccl. hist. cap. 1. saith: A certaine Elder at Alexandria named Arius, a man more religious in shew and forme than vertue, began to set forth certaine wicked points concerning the faith of Christ, &c. And Theodoretus, lib. 1. cap. 2. yet more plainlie: In these times (saith he) Arius which was in the companie and order of the Elders, and had the authority of interpreting the diuine Scriptures. When he saw the gouernment of the Sacerdottall Priesthood or Bishopricke, to be committed to Alexander, being impatient of enuie wherewith he was chafed, he began to seek occasions of prouokements, of discords and struiings. And albeit the dignity of the man, and his laudable administration, brake off the web of all flanders, yet could not enuie let him rest. The enimie therefore of truth hauing gotten this fellow, he moued and stirred vp the waues of the Church, and so prouoked him, that he durst openly gainsay the Apostolical doctrine of Alexander. As for Alexander, he auouched the speeches of the diuine Scripture, that the sonne is of the same dignitie with the Father, and hath the same essence with his begetter. But Arius fighting against the truth, called him a creation and a worke made. Adding those wordes, that there was some time when he was not. Which things may better be knowne out of the Scriptures themselves. These things did he not only in the Churches continually, but also in other outward assemblies and meetings, and treating vpon them house by house, hee drue awaie as many as hee was able.

And yet to shew further, not onely that this order of Elders was aboue the Deacons, but that of Deacons they were made Elders: Sozomenus li. 1. cap. 14. saith: Of these disputations Arius was the author, an Elder of the Church of Alexandria which is in Egypt. Who although at the beginning he seemed very studious of the doctrine of Christ: yet was hee a

Whose parts when he forsooke, he was of Peter Bishop of Alexandria ordained Deacon; And afterward of him cast out of the Church, whē Peter deposed the fautors of Meletius, and improued Baptisme. This Arius inueighed grievously against the Acts of Peter, and could by no meanes bee quiet. But when Peter had suffered martyrdome, Arius crauing pardon of Achilles, was not onely permitted to exercise his Deaconship, but also was exalted to the degree of the Eldership. Afterward Alexander had him in great estimation, &c.

2. cap. 18*

By this it may not onely appeare that the orders and Senates of Elders in such great Churches as these, were Ministers of the worde, but also were thereto promoted, hauing before ben Deacons. When therfore we reade in Socrates (as in the restoring of Athanasius, lib. 2. cap. 18.) the Letters of the Emperour Constantinus directed vnto the Bishops and to the Elders of the Catholike Church, saying: Moreover, vnto the benefit bestowed on him, this also we thought good to bee noted, that all those that are inrolled into this holie number and companie of the Clergie, may vnderstand, that securitie is giuen vnto all, be they Bishoppes or bee they Clarkes, that haue holden with him; it argueth, that there was indeed such a companie of Elders, whom beere bee calleth Clarkes, but we cannot gather hereupon, that they were such as ministred not at all the word and Sacraments, but rather the contrarie. For els if Athanasius the Bishop had bene the onely Minister of the word and Sacramentes, all the people of Alexandria had bene destitute of the worde and Sacramentes all the while of Athanasius banishment. And to confirme this, that these Elders about the Bishops had not onely the publike ministration of the word, but also that some one or other of their number, was appointed to heare the confessions of such as were penitent, and in token of their vnsained repentance, to inioyne them to submit themselves to some bodily chastisement, which thereupon was called penance:

cap. 19*

At that time (saith Socrates, li. 5. ca. 19.) the Church thought good, that the Elders which had the gouernment of the order of inioyning penitence in euerie Church, was take awaie. And that on this occasion: fro the time wherein the Nouatians separated themselves from the Church, & refused to communicate with those, which in the time of the persecution raised in the raigne of Decius, had fallen: the Bishops of the Churches added vnto the Canon, that in euerie of the Churches there should bee one certain Elder, which shuld be ouer the Penitencies, to the end, that those which after Baptisme were fallen, should before the Elder appointed for that purpose, confesse their offences. This Canon as yet among other sects remaineth ratified and firme. They onely which confesse the Father and the

the Sonne to be one in substance, and the Nouatians that consent in faith with them, reiected this Penitenciarie Elder. The Nouatians would neuer from the beginning suffer this to be so much as a hanger by. The bishops which now gouern the Churches, although for a good space of time they haue held this institution: notwithstanding in the times of the Bishop Nestarius, they chaunged the same, by reason of such an offence as then by chance was committed in the Church: a certaine noble womā came vnto the Penitenciarie Elder, confessing particularlie such faulces as after her Baptisme she had committed. The Elder commaunded the woman that she should giue her selfe to fastings, and to continuall praiers. Whereby together with the acknowledgment of her sinnes, shee shoulde declare a worke meete for her repentaunce. The woman proceeding further in confessing, accuseth her selfe of another fault, and declareth that a Deacon had laine with her. For the which offence (by this meanes beeing made manifest) the Deacon was driuen out of the Church, and a tumult was made among the multitude of the people. For they grudged not onelie against the offence committed, but also for the note of the grievous slander and reproch, that thereby was raised on the Church. Who as therefore the sacred Priests were verie much euill spoken on for this cause, Eudemon a certaine Elder of the Church, a Countie man of Alexandria, gaue counsell to the Bishoppes Nestarius to remoue the Penitenciarie Elder, and to giue free power that euery one according to his own conscience, should come to the participation of the mysteries. For by that onelie meanes it should come to passe, that the Church shoulde be voide of all spot of infamie. These things because (saith Socrates) euen I my selfe had them of Eudemon, I doubted not plainly to commit them to this our historie.

In which wordes, these Elders hauing this office among them, which pertaineth especiallie to the ministration of the worde, and all of them indifferently called Sacerdotes, as well as Presbyters: it is againe apparent, by Socrates whome Danæus citeth, that these Elders were not such, as here our Bishops doe conceiue or pretend, but Ministers of the worde and Sacramentes, which in the next Chapter (saue one) following, doeth yet more fullie appeare. Where Socrates shewing the diuinities in diuers places, concerning Easter daie, Fasting, Marringe, Diuine Service, and other Ecclesiasticall obseruations, amongst other matters, saith on this wise.

Moreover, I my selfe haue knowen another custome to haue growen in Thessalia, that there he which is a Cleark, if after he be made a Cleark, he lie with his wife whom he married while hee was a laie man, is deposed from his Cleargie. Whereas all the famous Elders in the East, yea, the Bishops and all, are by no lawe compelled to abstaine from their wines, except it please themselues. For euen while they gouerne their Bishop-rikes, not a few of them beget children of their lawfull wines. Hee that was the author of that custome in Theffalia, was Heliodorus of Trica, a citie of that region, of whose making are the amorous bookes, which hee composed when he was a young man, and intituled them, The Ethiopian historie (hee meaneth that of Theagenes and Cariclea:) The same custome is kept also at Theffalonica, and in Macedonia, and in Hellas. Besides this I haue knowen another custome in Theffalia, to wit, that they baptize in the dayes of the feast of Easter onely. For which cause, all of them (except a very few) die without baptisme. The Church of Antioche in Syria is set contrarie to other Churches, for the Altar (or Communion table) is not set Eastward, but Westward. In Hellas, and at Hierusalem, & at Theffalia, the prayers are made while the candles are lighted, after the manner of the Nouatians that are at Constantinople. In like manner at Cæsarea of Cappadocia, and in Cyprus, * the Elders and the Bishops expound the Scriptures enermore on Saterday and on Sondag, at euening by candle light. The Nouatians that are at Hellespont, keepe not in all pointes the like manner, as doo the Nouatians that are at Constantinople, but for the more parte they followe the order of the chiefe Church among them. To conclude, in all the formes of religions & sects, you shall neuer finde two, that in * the maner of their praiers agree among them- selues. Furthermore, at Alexandria an Elder preacheth not, which cus- tome hath had his beginning, since the time that Arius disturbed the Church.

And here at length is noted, where onely, and vppon what occasion, the Elders preached not. Howbeit he saith not, that heerevpon they were pro- hibited vtterlie the ministerie of the word and Sacramentes. For as hee sheweth befoze lib. 2. cap. 8. the verie Deacons out of whose order the El- ders were made, did saie the publike praiers before the people. But this the Elders ceasing of preaching, how long time after Arius troubles it be- gan at Alexandria, & how long time it continued: he declareth not. But in noting the same (as such a strange and diuerse order, different from al other Churches) it declareth, that it directly belonged to their office, and that in al other Churches the Elders were such, as were not prohibited to preach; & that they preached there also, befoze that occasion did fall out. And where- as a little after hee citeth (for not troubling the Church about indifferent things) the decree made by the Apostles, the Elders, and the brethren, Act. 15. 23. it appeareth that Socrates take also those Elders that are there mentioned, to be no other kinde of Elders, than such as medled with teach- ing. And so both the verie text insinnate, that those Elders were, when it saith, Act. 15. 6. The Apostles and Elders came together to looke to this matter.

Which matter was a great controuersie in doctrine. And Caluine himself saith thereon: Luke saith not that the whole Church was gathered together, but those that excelled in doctrine and iudgement, & they that by reason of their office, were lawfull Iudges of this cause, it may be that the disputation was holden before the people, but least anie should thinke that the people wer admitted indifferentlie to meddle in the cause: Luke expressly nameth the Apostles and the Elders, as those that were more fit to take notice thereof. And to the further into these Elders more, he saith on these words: When there was great disputing; when as the grave men and publike Doctors of the Church were chosen, neither yet could they agree among themselves, &c.

And to the that these Elders in all other Churches were full of this forte, Socrates proceeding to his 6. booke, chap. 2. telleth, that when the Bishopricke of Constantinople was vacant by Nectarius decesse, which took awaye the penitenciarie Elder as yet, and that they laboured much about the choosung of a Bishoppe, and some sought one, and some another for that office, & that they had consulted often thereupon: at length it was thought good to call from Antioche, for Iohn an Elder of Antioche. For the fame of him was great, that he was meete to teach them, & very skifull in the gift of vterance.

And in the seuenth booke (which Dancus citeth) cap. 2. speaking of Atticus, which was after ward like wise made Bishoppe of Constantinople, he saith: When he first obtained the degree of the Presbyterie, Priesthood, or Eldership, the Sermons which he recited in the Church, he made them with great studie, and conned word by word: after ward by often vse and diligence getting more audacitie, he beganne to preach ex tempore (on the sodaine occasion) and attained to a more popular manner of teaching.

And in the Chapter he telleth of Sabatius an Elder among the Nouatians preaching in his Sermon this false doctrine: Cursed bee he whoe soeuer celebrateth the feast of Easter without vneleuened bread.

In the sixth Chapter he telleth of two Arian Elders preachers and interpreters of the Scriptures.

Besides that, Chap. 16. hee telleth of three Elders, Philip, Proclus, and Sifinius, that stood for the Bishopricke of Constantinople, of which Sifinius by the desire of the people, hee being an Elder not ordained in anie Church within the Citie, but of Elea a suburbe of the Citie, obtained the Bishopricke. Wherby it appeareth also, that these Elders had seuerall Congregations and Churches in and about the Citie, and were Ministers of the worde and Sacraments in them. And although Proclus was after ward made Bishop of Cilecium, whom the Citie would not receive, but sent one Dalmatius a sponke, and so Proclus went not thither, but continued in preaching.

preaching at Constantinople, and after ward was made Bishoppe of that Citty, after Maximianus, which did leade a monasticall life, yet by degree of dignitie he was an Elder. So that these Presbyters, Priestes, or Elders were not (as Danæus supposeth) a Senate or a Consistorie chosen from among the people assistant to the Bishop, and much lesse to euery Pastor, (as our Bzeth: affirme) gouerning onelie the discipline of the Church, but not meddling with teaching: Socrates neuer speaketh of such kinde of Elders, but simply and plainely of such as we call Priests, and our bzethzen call Pastors.

To conclude, this no lesse appeareth in the last Chapter (saue this) of all Socrates Hystorie: euen in Paulus the Bishoppe of the Nouatians: who before his death calling together all the sacred Priestes of the Churches that were vnder him, sayde vnto them. Provide yee, while I am yet aliue, that a Bishoppe may bee appointed vnto you. When they answered: The power of choosing the Bishoppe is not to bee permitted vnto vs. For (saie they) while one of vs thinketh this, another that, we shal neuer name one and the same man: But wee desire that you woulde designe, whome you would haue vs choose. Deliuer me then (sayd hee) this your promise in writing, that yee will choose him whom I will name vnto you. Which writing beeing made, and subscribed with their hande, raising vp himselfe a little in his bedde: he secretlie (they that were present not priue thereto) wrote therein the name of Martian, which was one that had obtained to the order of the Elders, and therein had learned a rigorous kinde of life, and at that time by chance was absent. And when hee had sealed vp the writing, and had brought the chiefe of the Elders to confirme the same also with their seales: he deliuered it to, &c. I note this onelie that these Nouatians also, which were a kinde of Precisians in that antiquitie, hauing for their precise aueritie of life, cut off and diuided themselves from all other Churches (albeit in substance and groundes of faith and doctrine not dissenting, but in profession of more severe discipline) not onely had their Bishops in the chiefe Cities, and many Elders vnder them: but also that these Elders (as in all other Churches) were Sacerdotes, Ministers of the sacred word and Sacraments, and not such as medled not with teaching, or were equall in the Churches gouernment with the Bishop.

This we see was the continuall and vniuersall practise of the Church, from the Apostles times, untill this age, when Ambrose, Ierome, and Augustine began to flourish. Neither anie thing as yet alledged by Beza, Caluine, Snetanus, and Danæus out of Ambrose, or Cyprian, or Iustine, or Tertullian, or anie other annient father: or out of Socrates, or Sozomene, or anie other Ecclesiasticall Hystoriographer, that can proue their Ecclesiasticall Elder gouerning only and not teaching: but all these (as we haue seen) the contrarye.

But yet we haue not doone. Danzus besides and before Socrates allegeth Saint Augustine Serm. 19. De verbis Domini in Marib. for prooue of such gouerning & not teaching Elders. Now although there be no like likelihood, we should finde mention of those in Saint Augustine; that liued some what after Socrates time, and the Fathers aforesaide: yet because I would glablie for all, that for my part I can finde in anie of our brethren, for the practise & prooue of these Elders, what office they had, both for mine owne and for others satisfaction: let vs biew also what these wordes are, which Danzus understandeth for these Elders. Saint Augustine treating of the stipends of souldiours, and of their spoiles and hatches, saith on this wise: Illud autem quale est, quum ob errorem aliquem a Senioribus arguuntur, &c. But what manner of thing is that, when for some error they are reprov'd of the Elders, and anie of them is charged, why he was dronke, why he invaded other mens goods, why in his hurle burle hee committed manslaughter: that he wil answer, what shuld I have done? I am a secular man, or a souldior. Am I professed a Monk, or a Clerk? Although it wer lawful for every one that is not a Monk, or a clerk, to do that which is vnlawful?

Here indeede is mentioned this word Elders, & that in the Latine terme, Seniores. But so generally: that whether he meane Senior or elder in yeres or in office: and if in office, whether ciuill or Ecclesiasticall; and if Ecclesiasticall, whether meddling with teaching, yea, or no: no, necessaris certaintie can be groundd hereupon. Is there any word here, or going before, or coming after, that may proue these Elders reprov'ing these souldiours not to meddle with teaching? Or may we not rather (if we shal go by conjecture) a great deale more probably gather the cleane contrary, that they medled with teaching, & with reprehension, which is also part of the Ministers office? And namely the example that St. Augustine in the said sermon bringeth hereof (for St. Iohn Baptiste teaching the Publicans & souldiours their dutie what they ought to do) both plainly intimates, that he meant by these Seniors or Elders, the verie teachers of the word, and Ministers of the Sacraments, as was Iohn Baptiste that reprov'd, taught, and baptized the souldiours. *August. li. 1. When the Manichees defaced & discredited the Clergy for their liues (wherein would to God our Bz. would not resemble that practise of so euil men) St. Aug. commending the Clergie *li. 1. that the Elders are in office and dignitie above the Deacons, using this name Sacerdos and Presbiter indifferently, and as betokening all one office, concluding thus: For except the Priest vnto whom they owe attendance, the Deacons are placed before all, meaning all the other inferior orders Ecclesiasticall, so that Augustine acknowledgeth no such governing and not teaching Ecclesiasticall orders, as our Bishops would haue, preferring withal these Elders before the Deacons, and preferring the teachers and Pastors before these Elders, but not in the Churches government.
If there had bene anye such in S. Augustines time, other than the Priests, Ministers of the word, and between the Priests and the Deacons: he could neuer haue placed the Deacons above all other, save the ministering Priests.
Wherby it is plaine, that hee counteth Elders and Priests to be all one.

Aug. in quinquaginta homilis, hom. 5
at 7.

Now, Danzus himselfe proceeding a little further, in this foresayd tenth Chapter of these Elders, alleadgeth Augustine hereunto, in his fiftie Homilies, Homil. 5. & 7. that the saying of Elsie, Elam, ne esset, &c. appertai-neth not onely to Bishoppes but to Elders. The wordes of Augustine are these, Homil. 7. If ye marke diligently (most deere Brethren) ye know that all the Priests of the Lord, not onely the Bishops, but also the Elders and Ministers of the Churches, are in great perill. For the holy Ghost witnesseth vnto them, saying: Crie out, cease not, lift vp thy voice like as it were a trumpet, and tell my people their offences, and the house of Iacob their sinnes. Is not this, lifting vp of the voice, a meddling with the worde and publike preaching or teaching? So that Danzus must needs confesse, that these Elders which Saint Augustine mencioneth, were not such as medled not with teaching, but were publike teachers or Preachers of Gods worde.

To conclude, concerning Augustine, here is nothing that Danzus alleageth for Elders out of him Homil. 7. in 50. Sermon. 16. in Math. 18. 15. in Luc.
1. Sermon. 24. that maketh anye mention at all, or anye insinuing of suspition for such Elders, as our Bishops imagine, and Danzus would proue: but are all for Pastorall Elders, meddling with teaching. Neither onlie meddle not these places with anye of these supposed Elders: but also no other place that I can yet finde out, in all the Tomes and writings of Saint Augustine.

But Danzus alleadgeth not onely Saint Augustine, but Basil, Dionissius, & Hierome. And in his seventh Chapter 1. 4. 6. 8. Christ. parte. 2. he saith, But these orders that are appointed for euer in the Church of God remai-

remaining in this earth and visible, are few. Which Basil vpon the 33. Psalme, seemeth obscurely to reuoke vnto foure kindes, to wit, that some of them should be as it were the eyes, as the Seniors: other like the tong, as the Pastors: other like the hands, as the Deacons: other like the feete as those that attend vpon the baser ministeries of the Church, as are the doore keepers.

It goeth hard belike with our Breth. for the pzoofe of these Elders, when such obscure coniectures out of the fathers, must vnderprop them. And here is alleaged a sentence out of Basil, which notwithstanding Dancus dares not anonch, to make any clere or plain assertion for these Elders. But he saith, that Basil seemeth, and that obscurely, to reuoke (all the perpetuall orders of the Ecclesiasticall ministerie in the Church) vnto 4. kindes, whereof he maketh these Seniors or Elders to bee the first, and compareth the into the eyes. Indee this is well adde, to saie he seemeth obscurely, for if we shall bring Basils sentence to the light, there is not one word that maketh for these Seniors. Basil vpon the 33 (or as we better accout it to the Hebrues the 34.) Psalme, verse. 15. The eyes of the Lord are vpon the righteous, and his eares on their crye, hath these wordes: Even as the Saintes are the bodie of Christ, and in part members: and God hath placed these in the Church as eyes, those as eares, other as hauing a proportio of the hands, other of the feete: so also the holy spirituall vertues (or powers) occupied about the holie place, some of them are called the eyes, to whom the care of vs is committed; so the eares, which receiue our praiers, and refer (or bring) them to God. But now this our vertue or power contemplatiue and helping of our praiers, he called the eyes and the eares. The eyes therefore of the Lord are vpon the righteous and his eares on their praiers because all the action of the righteous is fit to be holden and considered of God. And to conclude, euery woorde (sith nothing is of him spoken idly) standeth fruitfull & very profitable. Therefore he saith here, that the righteous is continually both seene and heard.

Thus saith Basil. And is there any word here that may so much as but obscurely seeme, to infer these our brethren Governing elders not meddling with teaching, to be any of those that bee called the vertue or power contemplatiue, which he resemblith in the mysticall bodie of Christ vnto the eyes? And who then are these which he compareth to the eares? If (as Dancus saith) he compareth the Pastors to the tongue, which he both not, nor maketh there any application at all either of the tongue, or of the handes, or of the feete: but onely of the eyes and eares. And likeneth the eyes to those, vnto whome the care of vs is committed. And the eares to those which receiue our praiers, and referre or bring them vnto God. Wherby as it is plaine, that by the eares, he meaneth the Ministers, which make the publike praiers vnto God for vs: So what letteth but by the eyes, to whom whome he ascribeth the spirituall and contemplatiue power of gouernment, and placeth them first and before the eares, we may well (for) anie thing here to the contrarie) vnderstand the Bishoppes. Whose verie name Episcopus (betokening an ouerseer) is answerable to the contemplatiue vertue of the eie, and his office is in spirituall contemplation, more then these not teaching Seniors, whose gouernment they make to consist, onlie in externall discipline, and in the correction of manners. As for the hands, that he should meane the Deacons, is further applied than Basil went. For he reffecth his application onelie on these two members, the eies & the eares, saying: But now our vertue contemplatiue and helping of praiers, he called the eies, and that the eies of the Lord are over the righteous, and his eares vnto their praiers, because all the action of the righteous is meete, that it should of God be beholden and considered. So that in the end, he directeth all, vnto Gods beholding and considering the action of the righteous man, seeming to meane the minister of God, that directeth all his spirituall and contemplatiue power of seeing, that is, of taking care of vs: & of hearing, that is, of offering praiers to God for vs. And as for anie resemblance of the tongue, he mentioneth not at all. But sith the praiers (namelie publike) not onely procede from the heart, but are vttered with a tongue (the tongue also fitting well therto) he concludeth, saying: And finallie, euerie word (sith nothing is idly spoke of him) remaineth fruitfull & very profitable. And therefore he saith here, the righteous man is both seene and heard continually. And can Danaus or any other man, be his eies neuer so good, se in this sentence, that Basil meant, there were 4 perpetual continuing orders of the Ecclesiastical ministry in the Church, wherof these Seniors not teaching, are likened to the eies, and haue the first place euen above the Pastors: He had need haue better eies than I haue, that should see this. And yet (I thanke God) I can see thus much, that if Danaus had but turned ouer the former leafe, and looked vpon the 11. verse, that in the Psalme goeth a little before: wee & other may easilie see this, that Basil in plaine words, ascribeth to the teachers of the word, and not vnto anie not teaching Seniors, the eie & ouersight of the Churches discipline, saying: Heare (my children) heare me, I will teach you the feare of the Lord. This is as the voice of a most louing maister (or teacher) and of one that euen by the Fathers bowels allureth them to discipline. For the Scholler also is the sonne of the spirituall maister. For whosoever receiueth of any the forme of godlinesse, he verily is as it were fashioned of him, and brought forth into the light, euen as a woman with childe that beareth the infants fashioned in her wombe. So Paul when all the Church of the Galatians did fall from their first discipline, beeing sorted with a certaine droufinesse and astonishment of the mind, hee taking them againe, reforming and instructing Christ in the, calleth them his sonnes. And because after his griefe, he erected them being fallen, and reduced them vnto the dutie of their faith: he therefore minded also to trauell for their heauines that were fallen a waie. My children (saith he) of whom I trauell againe, till Christ be fashioned (in you). Come therefore (my children) heare me. What then hath our spiritual Father for to teach vs: I wil teach you (saith he) the feare of the Lord.

This sentence (loe) of Basil euen in the same treatise, is a greatesse clearer, and without all obscuritie sheweth, that he took those whom he afterward calleth the eies, to be these that the oversight & care of discipline belongeth vnto, declaring withal, that these are such spiritual Fathers, as to whom the teaching of the feare of God, & the instructing, exhorting, & reducing Gods people vnto the true faith, from all error & wickednes both pertaine, & not to Elders that medled not with teaching. And so shew this yet more plaine in Basil: His booke De Institutione Monachorum, translated by Rufinus, an Elder also of Aquilegia, but withal, a teacher of the word, liuing in Hieromes time, dooth sufficientlie declare. Where Cap. 16. and treating of a gouernor of the Church, he maketh the Monke (so he proce- doth dialogue wise) to aske this question. Monachus. What ought hee to thinke of himselfe which is a gouernor? And what manner of man ought he to be towards them whom he commandeth and gouerneth? Basilus. Verilie before God, euen as the minister of Christ, & the stewarde of the ministeries (or rather, the mysteries) of God, fearing least that besides the will of God, or besides that which is evidently commanded in the holie Scriptures, he either speak any thing, or comānd any thing, or bee found as a false witnes of Christ, or a sacrilegious person, or a bringer in of anie thing that is strange, frō the doctrine of God, yea, or leuing out or going beyōd any of those things that are acceptable vnto God. But to the brethren he ought to be as it were a nurse that cherisheth her litle ones. And he must be ready according to the will of God, & according as is expedient for euery one, to comūicate with them not onely the Gospell, but his life also. Being mindfull of the commandement of the Lord, and our God, saying: I giue you a new commandement, that ye loue together as I haue loved you. No man hath a greater lode than this, that hee should giue his life for his friends. Whereby it appeareth y Basil acknowledgeth no other Eccles. gouernors of the Church, but such Elders as were ministers of the worde & Sacraments. And this also he saith of those y were the correcters of their bꝛ. ca. 17. Mo. How shal we (O Father) reprove & amēd him that offendeth? Ba. As it is written, the Lord speaking it, If thy brother that sinneth against thee, go and reprove him betweene thee and him alone. If he shall heare thee, thou hast won thy brother. But if he will not heare thee, take with thee another or two, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, euery word may stand. But if he will not heare them, tell the Church. And if he wil not heare the Church, let him be to thee as an Ethnik or publicane. If perhaps this rebuking which is made of many, may fall out vnto him for his health.

Cap. 17.

The Eccles-iasticall go-uernors duty of publik reprehensio.

And

And as the Apostle sayd reprove, beseech, comfort, in all patience and doctrine. And againe, if anie man obey not the worde, note him by an Epistle, and keepe not fellowship with him. Without doubt (he meaneth) for the participation of the table. Thus writeth Basil of his dutie, especially, to whome the reprovings of faultes doth belong, that he should not onlie be a private admonisher, but such a publike reproveer also, as occasion requireth, and that with doctrine, as saint Paule prescribeth to a Pastor. And if our Brethren will understand these wordes, Die Ecclesia, tell the Church, to be the onelie of Elders: then let those Elders be such reproveers, as heere Basil applyeth the Apostles sentence vnto, that they teach doctrine with their reprehensions, so that if they bee not with all teachers of doctrine, they cannot be the Churches officers for publike Ecclesiasticall reprehension.

And as we see Basils iudgement sufficiently by these his writings: so for his owne estate and his life, set out by Gregorie Nazianzen, that was also an Elder under Basil, is apparant in Gregories Monodia; who having before declared the parentage, the youth, the studie of Basil, at length he cometh to this Eldership, and sayth, illum vero dei dispensatio per Sacerdotij gradus illustrum ac notum omnibus fecit, ac inter Presbyteros consuevit, non, &c.

Monodia Gregorij Nazianzen, de vita Basilij.

As for him the dispensation of GOD made him famous and known by the degrees of the sacred Priesthoode, and placed him among the Elders, howbeit not by and by, and besides order, but by little and little, proceeding and being promoted by degrees and courses. In which wordes he manifestlie sheweth, that to bee preferred from one degree to another, till he come to a governing Presbyter, Priest, or Elder, was not to come to be one that medled not with teaching, but to bee Sacerdos, to wit, a Minister of the sacred worde of God and of his Sacramentes. For (sayth Gregorie) I praise not them that without order, are by and by promoted in the Church: I rather commend the Mariners custome. For they make not their governour at the first dash, and on a sodaine: but first they exercise and trie him by all the offices of a Seaman. They will before see howe hee can rowe, and then placing him in the fore-part of the shippe, to knowe and perfectlie to learne the windes, acquainting himselfe cunninglie to shunne the chiffer and rockes. Last of all, hauing bene exercised in all the offices, they place him in the hinder parte of the shippe, and giue him the stearne in his hande, and make him governour. Likewise also in the discipline of warre, first hee is made a souldier, then a wiffier to set them in their ranks, and lastly he is made a Captaine.

The same is the manner both of the Phisition and of the Painter, the one, that before hee make his profession, hee haue conned manie rules rules, and have seene and had in handling manye diseases: the other to know how to mixe and temper his colours before, and then to drawe his lines and last of all to giue perfect figures vnto his colourers.

But we see (which is a ridiculous matter, or rather a lamentable) how a Bishop is made with tumult and confusion (hee speaketh of that time when the Bishops were choosen by the election and voyces of the people, as the Ecclesiasticall Histories are full of such tumults & confusions) neither in order nor directly, but by viciousnes and crafte, not hee that is worthie but he that is mightier. For he is not promoted that is exercised before, but he that is ignorant and rude of the Churches affayres, in so much that he commeth fresh from the seculer life, as the Giantes at Thebes for (as the Poetes feigne) when Cadmus at Thebes in Boecia, had sowed the teeth of Dragons, suddenly there sprang vp Giantes, armed downe to the navel, and so making bartell one with an other, were slaine the same daye. And euen so we make Prelates of one dayes breede. And wee hauing not learned what they be, doe beleue that they be wise men, which were fortified before with no degree, with no vertue, with no eloquence, hauing susteyned no trauayle for righteousness, nor any thing at all for the Church. For hee which onely meditateth diuine matters, and subdueth his bodie to the spirit, that hereafter he may be fitte for a place in heauen, is gladly content to holde a lowe and inferiour place among men. But he that is ignorant, and without learning, being puffed vp and loftie, is aduanced about his betters, nor is moued with the example of goodnesse or humilitie: but with all his indouour onely seeking honours, promiseth him selfe witte and wisdom (to springe) out of his power. Whereupon that of Demosthenes is true, to atchieue a matter luckily besides worthinesse, is an occasion for fooles to imagine and thinke euill. But our Basil as he is made a rule and example vnto other of his other vertues: so also of a Priest and of the Ecclesiasticall ordination. For euen from the first swathing-bands of the Sacerdotal offices, he grew vp by little and little, in so much that hee disdayned not in anie wise to be made a Reader of the holie scriptures, and then to bee made an interpreter and expounder of them, euen as Dauid sayth: Let those of the chayre of the Elders prayse the Lorde: and so at length deserued he to be made a Bishop. Which place he neuer at any time sought nor euer wished.

The disorder making
B. and Elders

How Basil
ascended to be an Elder or Priest by degrees.

In which sentence, we not onely see the complaint of Gregorie, howe many came to be Elders, yea and Bishops also in those dayes (as in all ages like corruptions, and complaints haue bene) but especially it grew then of the disordered and factions elections of the people: so for the purpose now in hande, we see hereby, that these Elders were the sacred Priestes, whose office consisted not in gouerning only, but with all in the ministerie of the worde and Sacraments. And how by degrees, still exercising themselves in matters tending vnto teaching, they attained, or ought to haue attained, vnto this Eldership & from thence such as excelled were, or ought to haue been, promoted to be Bishops. Except it fel out other wise, by extraordinary occasion in some rare and singular men, as in Ambrose, and Thalassius euen in Cesarea where Basil was Bishop, &c. and of other Elders than these, here is no mention.

Basil exercised vnder his Bishop while he was Elder.

Howe when Basil was thus ordeyned an Elder. Gregorie the tertiſt how he exercised himselfe vnder Eusebius B. of Cesarea, how he laboured against the Heretikes, in exhorting and teaching of the people, how he sent for Gregorie to come & helpe him. And here Gregorie setteth to worke Basils example vnto him. For (sayth he) euen as Barnabas in times past was present with Paule, to make manifest the trueth of the Gospell, and common conflict of the faith: so came I then vnto my Basil, as his fellowe against his fight with the Arians. Listen to the Epistle where-with he called me. Make readie thy selfe, haue regarde to deliuer me in this present conflict, and with vs to meete them which desire vtterly to ouerthrowe vs, whose boldnesse thou shalt bridle onely with thy countenance, and shalt cause that they shall not make our matters goe to wracke; and therefore all shall knowe howe thou onely (by the grace of God) dost gouerne our congregation, and that thou shalt easily repress every wicked mouth and the insolencie of them that speake against God.

But (sayth Gregorie) to returne my speech to my purpose. Basill returning to Cesarea, regarded nothing more than to pacifie Eusebius to the end that he might ouerthrow the Heresie, and wholly to serue him, and be ready at his hande in all those thinges that were of God, that hee might make apparant to all men, that all thinges which hee had suffered of him (for Eusebius had bene heauie before vnto him) proceeded from the instigation of the Diuell, that the common enemies of the sayth might haue the greater aduantage by their raging. (as the Papistes get noſe by our Brethren and our Bishops falling out, though the Bishops doe all they can to pacifie them, whereas Basilius laboured all that he could to pacifie his bishoppe) but he when as he knewe very well the lawes of obedience, and of a spirituall life, hee was attendant on him in all thinges, in hearing, in consulting, and in doing, he employed his spirituall and diligent endeuour for the bishop. And to say at one word, he grewe as much into his fauour, as before he seemed to be farre from it. For which cause Eusebius helde indeede as bishop, the chiefe place, in the Church, but Basill had the power of the Church and the authoritie. The one sate in the chiefe dignitie, the other went about all the businesse.

Basil's authoritie vnder the Bishop.

business. For there was a singular and wonderfull concord betweene them: The one helping the other, and taking strength the one of the other, the bishop growing strong by the counsell and wit of Basil, and Basil by taking authoritie of the bishop. To conclude, the bishop had the people, and he the bishop. And euen as he that tamed a Lyon, being inferiour in strength, doth handle him gently, and make him tame by a certaine arte, by which meanes well neere he asswageth & molifieth the violence and fiercenesse of the wilde beast: so Basil the greate behaved himselfe about Eusebius. For when he hauing ben of late a laie man, and ignorant of Ecclesiasticall matters, was exalted vnto this dignitie, especially at the same time that the flame of Arius heresie did beare the swaie, he was not fit inough for this burthen. Wherevpon hee wanted Basil to be his guide and helper, chieflie by whose vertue there was hope, that the matters would haue prosperous and good successe. And therefore it was not as some suppose, that Basil was vnder the Emperor Iulia, but he was bishop after the death of Valens. But whē as he receiued the gouernment & administration of the Church of Caesarea vnder the bishop Eusebius, he appeased all discords, hee remooued all priue grudges, he established their manners, not onelie with his words and excellent Sermons that he vttered: but also by the example of his life. For hee endeauoured to helpe the people both with his spirit and his bodie, with his body by labour and exercise caring for them, by walking about euery waye, by courteous behauiour, and by helping the with his riches: spiritually, by teaching, by admonishing, and by giuing to all men a measure and instructions of their life.

The bishops defect hauing bene before but a lay man.

Basil's gouernment.

Thus both Gregorie set forth the ecclesiasticall gouernment of Basil and of his owne gouernment also, being Elders vnder the bishop in the Church of Caesarea, consisting as muche and more in teaching, than in the correction and composing of manners and censures of discipline. And that these were not distinct offices in the diuerse kindes of Elders, but they medled with both together, and both vnder the bishop, was knowne to all men. This ecclesiasticall gouernment, untill Basil himselfe after the decease of Eusebius was made their bishop. And then sayth Gregorie, after hee had praysed Basil in this promotion: as for mee, all men thought when they heard of his promotion, that I would forthwith departe (he meaneth from the place where he then was) and that I would goe to him, and that I should haue equall power with him they knowe that there was such friendship and beneuolence betweene vs. But (I when as I shunned enue, leaste I shoulde seeme to occupie the places of those that were neere him; and with all, leaste they shoulde falsely iudge that Basil hauing receaued mee, preferred mee before other, for priuate friendship.)

In the Consistorie and order of the Elders one was called the first Elder.

refrayned and forbore my selfe as much as I could. While that in this behalfe, I desired rather to yeelde to reason, than to my appetite. But he ceased not to call mee, and nowe and then to complaine vpon my lingring. And yet he tooke my cause and excuse in good parte. At the length, certaine dayes after I came vnto him, and when hee would haue placed mee about the residue, and would haue created mee the first or chiefest Elder; I straightwayes refused it, and soorth-with renounced the honour, for the cause which I haue before declared. Wherby it appeareth, that there was in that great Cathedrall Church a number of other, and as it were a Consistorie or Seniorie of them in this Eldershippe, and some one called the first Elder, which is all one with the terme the Arch-elder or chiefe among the Elders. But all vnder the Bishoppe, and all ministers of the woorde and Sacramentes. And to shewe this better, he telleth after wards, how Valens the Emperour in Basils time, and being desirous to see, and to terrifie Basil, and persecuting the professors of the truth: tooke 80. faithful Elders that were sent vnto him, to entreate him to forsake his wickednesse, and bynding them put them in a shippe to bee driuen with the windes, and at length burned the. Socrates telling the storie at large, sayth, that these 80. Elders were religious men of the eccl. order. And in proceeding further Gregorie also telleth how Basil defended a widow that fled to the Church, when she was haied to be married against her will, and when he was called in question for this fact, Tell me (sayth Gregorie in his defence) I pray you, what should not only Basil the great, but a simple priest haue done? I omit his appealing the cōtrouersie with the Archbishop of Tyana, for calling the Bishops fro his part of Cappadocia, Caesarea being the ancient Metropolitane Church, and so he continued while hee liued. And after in the funerall of Basil, sayth Gregorie: hee was of the Priestes carried soorth in a Cophin thorough the Citie.

cap. 13.

All which here in Basil being put together and considered: it sheweth that in Basils time, there was in his Citie and Cathedrall Church, and with all in others; a Senate College, Eldership, Seniorie or Consistorie, of such Elders, vnder the Metropolitane Archb. and assistant vnto him, both in the gouernmēt of the Church and in teaching of the word, as rising from one degree of ecclesiastical orders and offices to an other were attendant in the ministerie of the worde, till they came to this degree of Presbyters, Priestes, or Elders, who were also called indifferētly Sacerdotes. And of other Elders, such as our Brethren and Danus doe pretende, wee finde no mention at all in Basil. And therefore, as we haue all these cleere testimonies, both of Basil himselfe, and such as wrote of him, and were Elders with him: what neede we stande harping about about blinde coniectures, which Danzus him-selfe confesseth, doe but seeme, and that obscurely, that there were such imagined Elders. As hee fancieth.

So we to strengthen this obscure seeming of Basill, Danzus proceedeth to an other witnesse, for these not teaching Elders, saying:

Danzus allegation of Dionisius for these Elders.

But Dionisius reckneth onely three orders in the Church, to wit, Bishoppes Elders and Deacons. Therefore they may be thus better distinguished, that of the perpetuall orders in the Church, some are occupied eyther in the treatise of the woorde of God. Which Paule generally calleth ~~Prophecie~~ Prophecie, Rom. 12. verse, 6. or in the procuring of other matters which seemeth to be called of other by a general name ~~gouernance~~, gouernance, but of Paul it is called, ~~ministerium~~ ministerie or Deaconship, Rom. 12.

Is not this conclusion properly inferred? What because (after Basill obscurely seemeth as is aforesayd) Dionisius mencioneth onely these three Ecclesiasticall orders of the Church: therefore these three may bee thus better distinguished into these two, to wit, into those that meddle with the treatise of the word, and those that meddle with the Ecclesiastical gouernment. Doe not those that meddle with the treatise of the word, meddle with the Ecclesiastical gouernment? And why then may it not be, that those which meddle with the Ecclesiastical gouernment, as gouernours Ecclesiastical, may also meddle with the treatise of the word? What is there here in Saint Paule, Rom. 12. or anie where else to the contrarie, more in the one than in the other? But how followeth this argument from Dionisius particular, diuiding the Ecclesiasticall orders into three: to S. Pauls generall diuision into two? And is Dionysius now with our Brethren become authentickall, that he also must be alleaged for proofe of these Elders? What will T. C. thinke if he shall heare of this? If we alleage any such suspicious fathers for neuer so meane a point. Lorde holue our Brethren triumphe vpon vs. And yet we must take these for god proues, and credible witnesse at their handes, in this so waightie a matter. And for my parte so will I, so desirous am I to heare any tydings of suche Elders, in any of the fathers, that were in the annient Church, be they neuer so much suspected to be forged. For I denie not, but that this Dionysius was of some antiquitie, whome I take to haue bene also before Basill, and whose testimonie wee haue heard already cited by other our Brethren, though a more counterfeite of that Dionisius the Areopagite which eyther he feigneth him selfe to be, or at least whose name he beares.

Dionisius auncient but not the Areopagite.

Let vs now see, what this Dionysius hath to proue these Elders. Dionisius (sayth Danzus) reckoneth vp three orders in the Church that is to wit Bishops, Elders, and Deacons. And where doth Dionysius reckon vp these three orders? Can Danzus set vs downe any certaine place, that that we might see and consider of these wordes better: So I warrant you, but we must be faine to search for it, as well as we can, and we shall finde it all at leasure. True it is, that euen at the verie first fronte and title of his first worke we finde by and by the name of Bishop, Διονύσιος Ἀρχιεπίσκοπος Ἀθηναίων. Of Dionysius the Areopagite (or one that was a iudge in the streete of Mars) Bishop of the Athenians, vnto Timothie Bishop, concerning the celestiaall Hierarchie, (or heauenly holy gouernement. Here is Bishop named, which is one of these three orders, but our question is nowe vpon these Elders.

And lo good lucke againe, euen immediately after the argument of the first Chapter, it followeth: Τὸ ὑπομνηστικὸν τῶν πρεσβυτέρων Διονύσιος ἱεροκήρυκος. Dionysius the Elder vnto his fellowe Elder Timothie. Heere is indeede the name of Elder and of fellowe Elder also, euen as our Bzethzen cited before the sentence, 1. Pet. 5. 1. the Elders that are among you, I exhort as a fellowe Elder. But what Elders did S. Peter here acknowledge them and himselfe to be? Any other than of whom it followeth: And a witness of the sufferings of Christe, and a communicatour of the glorie to come that shall be reuealed, feede the flocke of God that is amonge you, προκαθήμενος &c. ouer-seeing it, &c. both he speake here of any elders or fellowe elders, that medled all with gouerning and not with teaching? And euen so both this Dionysius vse the name of Elder and of fellowe Elders, in this place. For not onely in the wordes before, these are both of them called Bishops: but what a teaching Elder Timothie was, and was commaunded to be: the scripture is plaine, and we haue hearde at large out of S. Paule in both his Epistles witten to him, among other thinges, namely for that purpose. Therefore here is nothing yet for any such Elders as our Bzethzen seeke for, distinct from both Bishop and Pastor, meddling not with teaching, but all with gouerning; nay, this name of Elder as it is here taken, maketh cleane against them. And the like stile he vseth in his ecclesiasticall Hierarchie or holy gouernment of the Church, and in the stile of his booke of the diuine names. Saue that there, he calleth Timothie Bishop of Ephesus. As also in the stile of his mysticall Theologie. But when we come to the viewe of all the bookes, and of all the Epistles that he wrote: where shall wee finde these three reckoned vp, Bishops, Elders, and Deacons? We hath in some seldome places the name of Bishop, as for the name of Elder, except it be in one onely place, (besides the title aforesayd) which is the 8. Epistle: we shall neuer finde it. But once is as good as a 1000 times, if it be to the purpose. Let vs therefore see what this Dionysius sayth in that place, for profe that there were any such eccl. officers as these gouerning and not teaching Elders. And to speake plainly (sayeth this Dionysius) in all thinges that are, they are distributed from the first to the second, according ding to their dignitie, concerning the god order, & most righteous prouidence of the. And that those which are appointed of God to gouerne others, should giue to them that are their inferiors and their subiects, the things that are, according to their worthinesse. As for Demophilus, let him with reason cutte off wrath and concupiscence according to their woorthinesse. And let him not violate his owne dignitie, but let reason bearing the rule, gouerne her subiects. For if in the market we see an houlsholde seruant reuiling his Maister, και ημεσιν ουδενος &c. and a yong man reuiling an Elder, eyther also the sonne reuiling the Father, and with all rushing on him and laying on stripes: we also should seeme to begodlesse, if we should not running to them, hasten to helpe them that are the better, &c. *What can we gather on this worde ημεσιν in this place, but simplie by the name of Elder, an Elder man in age, and the other a younger man the relation of the one to the other, the termes of Master and houlsholde seruant, of father and sonne, the one going befoze, the other comming after, and both vnderstande in their literall & naturall sense, to conclude, the whole dyist and circumstance of the place considered: who would fetch this so farre, as to thinke that he spake here, oꝝ so much as dreamed of, either an eccl. or a ciuill Elder? If it be replied, y the whole argument of this Epistle arose, vpon a Priest that was beaten and misused: true it is indeede. But by what name calleth he the Priest oꝝ any priest Presbyterum? or ἐπίσκοπον, Sacerdotem, he that giueth the sacred word and Sacramentes. Which worde not onely hee vseth moze than halfe a scope of times in this Epistle, and he hath once also euen here the name of Bishop: but neither here noꝝ any other where that I can finde, he hath the name of Deacon. Not that he acknowledgeth no Deacons; but that he comprehendeth them (as I take it) in the name of λειτουργος, a minister or worker of the publike seruices. And as in all places where he treateth therof, he maketh indeede most especiall mention of three eccl. orders, namely, in his eccl. Hierarchie, cap. 2. 3. and 5. resembling them to the proportion of his celestially Hierarchie, in these thre pointes of perfecting, illuminating, & purging, of whome the Bishop is still called ἐπίσκοπος: the priest or Elder, πρεσβυτερος; and the thirde, διακονος. And so, euen in this example within a few lines after he had named the Elder, that is, the old man afoze-sayde: hee sayth of all these thre: αυτοις ολην την διακονiam της οικιας, και της εκκλησιας, και της κοινης της αληθινης ελευθεριας εν εμεν αυτοις ολην την διακονiam της οικιας, και της εκκλησιας, και της κοινης της αληθινης ελευθεριας εν εμεν. Thou thy selfe therefore distribute to thy concupiscence and to thine anger, and to thy speech, the things that are according to their worthinesse. But to thy selfe, let the diuine publike ministers distribute: and vnto them, the Priestes: vnto the Priests, the Byshoppes; and vnto the Bishops, the Apostles and the successors of the Apostles.*

Where are here these Elders that meddle not with teaching? If they be neyther conteyned in the Bishops, nor in the Priests (both which, meddle principally with teaching) then eyther they haue no place at al, or they must be included in the 3. number of the Antistes, wherein he comprehendeth not only all the inferiour officers of the Church, but Monkes also. So that (I thinke) these governing Elders would be loath to be thrust down into so base a companie. Although the purging be giuen vnto them, which is somewhat answerable to the correction of manners, that they would meddle with all. Saue that Dionysius also maketh these purgers, but to pull off the clothes of those that should be baptized, and to boyde the Church at the communion, of those that were possessed with foule spirites, or were not thoroughly taught their Catechisme, and to keepe backe the laie people, and such other seruile offices. If now, they disdain to be of the number of these purgantes; and will not become ministers of the worde and Sacramentes; nor with the Bishops be perficientes; nor with the Priestes, be illuminantes: then Dionysius cleane renounceth these Seniors that would be tantum dominantes, and will haue none such in his eccl. Hierarchie. And therefore, if I might counsell such an excellent learned man as is Danæus; he should neuer bring in Dionysius for these Elders. But eyther race his name out of his booke; or else, how so euer an other haue at his perill, counterfeited the name of Dionysius the Arcopagite mentioned Act. 17. let not vs counterfeite any thing in his name, but alleage his wordes rightly as he uttered them. For he is wrong inough of himselfe. But right or wrong, sithe we shall neuer bring any thing out of him, that may make so much as a shadowe for these governing and not teaching Ecclesiasticall Elders: let vs now go to be better resolved of that more reuerende Fathers iudgement, whom Danæus also citeth for these Seniors.

Danæus in Christ. I sag.
2. pars. ca. 7.

Danæus proceeding in the 7. chap. aforesayd, 2. pars. Christ. I sag. saith: Ceterum ratio, &c. But the assembly of the eccl. gouernors, that is of the that are set ouer euery Church, is called the Senate of the Church, Hieron. ad Rustic. It is also in the Canon, Ecclesia, 16. quæst. 1. least perhaps any man should suppose, that this name now were of vs first forged and vsurped for ostentation.

We thinke not that this name of the Churches Senate, is newe forged or feygned by our Brethren. Wee thinke more reuerently also of Danæus, than to make any such forgerie, vsurpation, or ostentation of this name, the Senate of the Church. And we grant the name hath bene vled of other heretofore, albeit (as we haue hearde) Caluine himselfe esteemeth the name of Senate to be somewhat too prophane or seculer a name, though we denie not but the name is reuerent. Howebeit, our question is here, in what sense Hierome vseth it, whether for suche an an Ecclesiasticall senate of Elders, that are gouernors and not teachers, as our Bzethzen woulde beare vs in hand. And this is the point that Danæus alleageth it for. If now Hierome alleage it for any Senate of such Ecclesiasticall Elders: then hath Danæus and our Bzethzen gotten a good and a strong testimony, that there were some such Seniory of Elders in those dayes. But if Hierome alleage no such matter: but rather the cleane contrary, to witte, if hee alleage it for a senate of those Elders that were teachers: what then hath Danæus or our bzethzen gained out of Hierome for these Gouerning and not teaching Elders? Nowe therefore to examine better this testimony also of Saint Hierome, in his Epistle written to Rusticus: wee finde that hee wrote two Epistles to men of that name: wherof that which here is ment is the former, writtē to one Rust. Gallus a yong man that was become a Monke. Howbeit such a Monke, as Erasmus well obserueth thereupon, saying: Lease that shoulde offende any, that in this Epistle, (as neither also in the former) S. Ierom commaundeth none of those things, that are required of Monkes in these dayes: he suffereth them to haue the possession of household stuffe, so it be moderate. He permitteth them to liue with their Mother, with their Sister, to conclude, with any body men or women, so that they shunne suspicious and dangerous company, Hee exhorteth him, hee exacteth not, that if he had leauer liue abroad: he shoulde rather liue in the fellowship of many together vnder the discretion of some Father, than to liue after his own all alone. As concerning any certayn Monastery or form, or color, or matter of garment: there is no mention in any place. Only hee woulde haue such apparell, that neither with the fluttishnes thereof it should fauour of hypocrisy, nor with the neatnesse it shoulde fauour of pride. Nowe concerning the three vowes which they call solemne: there is not one worde. Hee prayseth in this man the study of eloquence, and that to attaine learning, hee trauelled to Countries far distant. But we must remember, (which thing is manifestly apparant by these mens writings) that there was not in the age of Hierom, this kind of Monks, such as we see in our age, which wold to God the world had them all as good, as it hath many, and so excellent ouer other in holines, as they differ in apparell. In those dayes Monkes were nothing else, but such as professed the contempt of the Worlde, in a more seuerelife. Howbeit they obeyed their Bishop as other did, and exercised the office of Clearks euen as other also.

Ieronimus in epistola ad Rusticum gal-

Erasmus obseruatiōs of Ieromes example for the difference of the Monkes in Ieroms time, and the popish Monkes in these dayes.

I doe the rather by the way note this obseruation, lease any shoulde mistake that kinde of life, when they reade in these old fathers, as in Basil also, and in the Ecclesiasticall Historie the names of Monks, least they shoulde thinke it maketh any thing for the maintenance of such superstitious sectes as swarme in popery, & are expelled from vs.

Now

poſe then vnto this Ruſticus: being a yong man, and ſuch a kinde of Monke writeth olde Father Hierom this epiſtle, full of fatherly precepts and good counsell. howe to behaue himſelf in that profeſſion. And at length (among other things) comming to this, hee ſayth: Neque vero peccantium &c. Neither be thou caried away with the multitude of ſinners, neither let the number of them that periſh trouble thee, that thou ſhouldeſt think with thy ſelfe, what? and ſhall all periſh then that dwell in the Cities? Loe they enioy their goods, they miniſter to the Chnrches, they haunte the bathes, they diſpiſe not oyntmentes, and yet are they commonly in euery mans mouth. To the which I aunſwered alſo before, and nowe breefely I anſwere, that in this preſent pamphlet I diſpute not of clearks but inſtruct a Monke. The Clearkes are holy, and the life of them all is laudable. So therefore behaue thy ſelfe, and liue in the Monaſtery, that thou mayeſt deſerue to be a Cleark, that thou deſile not thy youth with any vncleanneſſe, that thou mayeſt come vnto the altar of Chriſte, euen as a virgine out of her chamber, and that abroad thou haue a good teſtimony, and that the women know thy name, but not knowe thy countenance. When as thou ſhalt come to a perfect age (if ſo be thou ſhalt liue ſo long) and that eyther the people, or elſe the Biſhop of the City, ſhall choſe thee into the Cleargy: doe thoſe thinges that pertaine to a Cleark, and among them followe the better, becauſe, in euery condition and degree, the beſt are mixed with the worſt. Nor leape thou out by and by to write, & be caried away with a light madnes, be long time learning that thou teacheſt, giue not credit to thoſe that are the prayſers of thee: Yea rather, to the mockers of thee willingly liſten thou not. Whome when they ſhall haue foaded thee with their floutings, and ſhal after a ſort ſet thee beſides thy ſelfe. If thou ſhalt ſuddenly looke about thee, thou ſhalt eyther finde the neckes of the ſtrokes bowing behinde thee, or the Aſſes eares to be ſolſaed with the hande, or the hot panting tong of the Dog to be lolled out. (Hee meaneth, that with ſuch beaſtly partes they will mocke him behinde his backe, tohorne to his face they prayſe). Backbite no man, neither count thy ſelfe holy herein, if thou deface other men. Wee accuſe often-times that which wee doe, and are eloquent againſt our owne ſelues. We are caried with inuectiues againſt our vices, while the ſilent iudge the eloquent. Grunnius comming forth to ſpeake, with his pace like a ſnayle, ſcraſſly carped out, and that by certayne yawning pawſes, fewe wordes, that hee woulde rather think hee ſobbed than hee ſpake: and yet when the table beeing ſette, he hadde layde forth an heape of Bookes, bending his eye browe, ſnuſſing vp his noſe, and wrinkling his foreheade, Phillipped with bothe his fingers, by this ſigne prouoking this ſhollers to here him.

Then

Then beganne hee to powre out his meere stoyes, and to declayne against euery one. You woulde haue sayde, hee had beene Longinus the Critike (or one that giues his iudgement against euery body) and a Censor (or Master Controller) of the Romaine eloquence, to note whome it liked him, Et de Senatu doctorum excludere. And to exclude him out of the Senate of the Doctors (or of the Learned men.) This fellowe is wel monied, hee is better liked in his dinners, &c. Here at length wee are come to the worde Senate, which Danæus applyeth at, in saying: But the assembly of Ecclesiasticall Gouvernours, that is, of them that are placed ouer euery Church, is called the senate of the church. Hieronymus ad Rusticum.

But as Hierome speaketh all this sentence, in deriding the contemptuous and scoznesfull inuectiues, of the rich and proude disdainers of all other, hee they neuer so learned men: (and therefore that we might the more fully perceine his meaning, I haue set downe his wordes thus at large) so what can bee gathered hereupon, that hee alluded to any Ecclesiastical senate of that time? Especially vnderstanding the same for such an Ecclesiastical senate, as were gouernors of the church, and not teachers of it? Erasmus in his scholies conuining to these wordes, De senatu Doctorum: applieth them to an allusion of the Senate of Rome, saying: For this also was lawful for the Romaine censors (or Lorde controllers of the Romaine manners) to expel out of the senate: as Portius Cato removed out of the senate Titus Flamminius, Iunius Brutus removed Lucius Antonius, and others removed other, as Valerius Maximus recordeth, li. 2. cap. de Censoria nota. So that by these termes, de Senatu doctorum excludere, Hierome meant, that this Grunnius tooke vpon him like a Censor or Lorde controller, to exclude such and such as hee pleased out of the senate, that is, out of the number of all those that are accounted Learned men. And is not this no we a proper prooffe, to inferre that in Hieromes time, in euery or in any congregation or church, there was a senate of Learned men and yet not teachers? If Danæus wil needes apply it to the state of a senate then present in the Church: yet where is here become this Ecclesiastical senate, that hee woulde prooue was then, by these wordes? If hee say, that it is included in this worde doctorem: what shall wee call these? Learned men? or Doctors? if they were Senatus doctorem, a senate of Doctors: What Doctors were they, if they medled not with teaching? Were they such as the common saying decideth: doctores a docendo sicut mons a monendo? and will our Bzethzen allow such Doctors, rather than they will not prooue an Ecclesiastical senate of gouerning and not teaching? If he say, that by these wordes, he meaneth a senate of learned men, but not actiuelly of Doctors or teachers, but passiuely, of such as are taught or learned. Doth not Hierome here deride those, that being their selues vnlearned, will in teaching their schollers, inueighe against all other that bee learned? And if he make here this arrogant asse, a teacher of schollers: doth he not much more allowe the Learned themselves to be Teachers? I dare not precisely say, of so darke and generall wordes, what Ieromes meaning was, but (me thinkes) the wordes in Doctorem, sound rather for a Senate of Teachers, than for a Senate of those that were not teachers. But what is this vnto our Elders: he speaketh there (as we haue seene also) of Clarke, and of a number of them, commending the life of them to be lawdable, and willetth him so to line, that he may deserue to bee made a Clarke, and if that (God lending him life) either the people or the Bishop of the City chose him into the clergie, that he shoulde then line as a Clarke shoulde doe, and that he shoulde followe the better sort of them: but what then were these Clarke? (if perhaps they were this Ecclesiastical Senate) But so soone as ener hee had spoken of these Clarke (if Rusticus shoulde be made one of them) doth he not straight wayes say: leape not out by and by to bee a writer, and be caried away with a light madnesse, bee long time learning that thou teachest. And also in the same Epistle he saide befoze, Hac dico &c. I say these thinges, that if thou be tickled with the desire to bee of the Cleargy, that thou shouldest learne that, which thou mightest bee able to teache and mightest offer vnto Christe the reasonable offering. Bee not a man of armes, before thou haste beene a yong souldior, be not a Maister before thou haste bin a scholler.

So that it appeareth, this Cleargy were teachers, at least wise, their profession was not separate from teaching, though all among were not a like able, yea, the very Readers in the Cleargy, cheefely had a kind of teaching euen in reading. As for the Elders in the Cleargy, Gouverning Elders, were much more Teachers. For he would not haue Rusticus (when he shoulde no longer become one of Cleargy) such a Teacher as shoulde finde fault with other, and be culpable himselfe of the same faultes, specially in learning: nor to be like Gruninus a M. Controller, corrector & displacer of learned men, being him-selfe vnlearned. So that I can see none so fitte, that we may resemble these Gouverning Seniors vnto, that are not Teachers, and yet are Censors or Controllers, (for Caluine also gineth that tearme Censors, as we haue heard) vnto them: as vnto these Elders that our Brethren plead for. For as they take not vpon them to be Teachers, so they had not neede, being their selues vnlearned. At leaste wise, for the moste part it would so fall out, that this Seniory in euery parish could not be of Learned men: and yet must they bee the Censors and controllers of the Learned men, and that not onely for manners, but to see that the Learned teachers, teache no false doctrine. Which in many Parishes would be

be. Sur Meintrum. And to the hoggish and rich Grinnus, must grumble and play these partes (that Hierome describeth) against the learned teacher, & teache his teacher, being him selfe no teacher. But both Ierome like of this: I think not, & yet this would often times fall out, if our Bzet, seniory were brought in, who would play Grinnus part more lively then he that were as Ierom's faith beere, bene nummatus plus placebat in prandio, a well monied man, fitter to please vs with good chere than with good doctrine? which fault our Bzet's finde notes in some vnlarned pastors among vs, and call them unpreachyng Bzetes and Bzetates: and yet it shoulde then be common, in these governing and not teaching, controlling and vnlarned seniors among them. And so it shoulde bee, not Senatum doctorem (as Hierom sayth) but Senatum indoctum, as our bzethen and we too soone shoulde finde it. If it were not farre worse, as it followeth afterwarde in Hierome, against these vnlarned Controllers of the Learned Pastors, and yet flatterers of the people, saying: Nec mirum est. Neither is it mervell, if hee that was wont to feede many with his baytes, come forth abroad, making a trayne after him, of the babblers that make a noyse about him (as of the people giving him all their voices, & saying as this M. Senior Controller saith) Inim Nere sunt Cato, se- The descrip- tion of such Controllers not teachers

And such a Senate compact of such as Grymsyre Grinnus, a Critical longinus (if not rather such a blind longinus, as is sayde to haue pierced the side of Christe with his speare) such inward Nereos, and outward Catoes, such Lions, Dragons and Chimeres, might quickly crape into this Senate of vnlarned Seniors, that woulde become the Electors of all Ecclesiasticall officers, the Gouernors of all Ecclesiasticall Government, the Censors and controllers of all the Discipline and manners of the Teachers, and then selues no teachers, nor able to meddle with teaching. And Ierome alloweth not any Ecclesiasticall Senate of such Seniors. But when Ierome mentioneth such Elders or Seniors, as he twelue and alloweth (as hee doth within a fewe wordes after) hee sayth: veritas angulos non amat, &c. Truth loueth not Corners, nor seeketh out Whisperers. eth of Seniors not onely in age, but in dignity. And applieth S. Pauls sentence to them, 1. Tim. 5. 19. which we haue seene, held by the testimony of Caluin and Beza, is spoken of such Elders, as are Pastors & teachers. Yea Danzus himselfe to expounding it, & saying thereon: It is a transition (or passing from the one part to speak of the other) for now he treateth of the 2. part of this argument, to witte, what is the office of Elders themselves towards themselves and their Colleagues, least any offence shoulde arise on that part. For first, heede must be taken, leaste that they doe excuse one another and spare themselves, while that notwithstanding, they correct other severely, and leaste that in them the olde prouerbe haue place, The mules do nibble one another. Let that sentence of Christe come rather to their minde, You are the salt of the earth, if the salt mele away, in what shall it be salted? you are the light of the World, Mat. 5. 13. 14. And also those sayings, let your loines be girt, & burning lampes in your handes. Luk. 11. ver. 35. Yea and those also of Peter, that the pastors ought to be an example in soundnesse of life and purity of Doctrine, and to shine before other. 1. Pet. 5. 12. Therefore as on the one part, they must diligentlie take heede, that they winke not in their owne, and in the sinnes of their Colleagues: so on the other part they must looke, that they giue not to froward men, and to such as refuse and shake of the yoke of Ecclesiasticall Discipline, an entry vnto an easie appeachement and accusation. &c. These are the onely Elders in office that Hierome in this Epistle mentioneth.

These Elders therefore and their Colleagues (as Danzus feareth them) being these Pastorall Elders, and to whom these sentences, and that which followeth, Ezech. 18 doe appertaine: What is here to relect these other kinde of Elders, not pastorall that are all gouerning & meddling with teaching? Nowe, if our Brethren will but turne by the other side of the leafe, before that where this worde senate is of Hierome named, which here Danzus taketh hold vpon: we shall finde perhaps such an Ecclesiasticall company intimated, as againe may make a senate Ecclesiasticall. Nulle ars est. There is no Art (sayth Hierome to this Monk Rusticus) that is learned without a Master, yea the dumbelining creatures and herds of wilde Beastes followe their guides. Among the Bees there are their Princes, the cranes followe one another in a lettered order, or like the rowe of Letters. The Emperour is one, the Iudge of the prouince is one. So soone as Rome was built, it coulde not haue 2. brothers to be kings both of them together, and it was dedicated in Parricide (or in the blood of one brother murdering another) so that it is lesse maruell, if it haue ever since bin the city of blood from whence such horrible murders, treasons and vnnaturall massacres euer haue bin contriued, euen fro the laying of the foundation of it: & yet lesse maruell, for there is no more in but single (or one) the archpreestes but one, the Archd. but one, & euery eccl. order resteth vpon his governors. In a ship there is one gouernor, in a house there is one M. in euery great army one ensigne or standarde is expected, and (leaste that in vnfoldng mo things, I shoulde accloy the reader) my speech by all these tendeth therunto, that I might teach thee (sayth Ier. to Rust.) that thou shold not be left to thine own choise, but to line in a Monastery vnder the discipline of one Father, and in the consort or company of many. If any thing in this epistle come neere to the nature and matter (though not to the word) of Senate, but consort, & that ecclesiasticall, it is here (me thinks) nerer touched, than where the name of the Senate of doctors, or learned men, was spoken of. But what is ther here, to the to whether all in this consorte were seniors, & those that were seniors, whether teachers, or no; but teachers or not teachers, to whom is here the Government referred: to the consort? no but to one ouer them.

The consort is of many, the government of all, is still referred vnto one.
Indeed he begins at this point, to the Monasticall state. He leste (say I) it seemeth to such an Ecclesiasticall senate of Elders, as our B. refer it vnto to sea, but he bozoweth examples not onely fro many naturall & ciuill orders, but also fro the Eccl. order of the church. we grant he doth so, & they much more shold line in order, & therein be example to other. If therfore any Eccl. senate be amog the clergy: omnis ordo eccl. (sayth Ierom) suis rectoribus nititur. All eccl. order resteth on their gouernors. And into them, a) how many are these gouernors: in sayth but one. Here are three orders of the clergy reckoned vp, the deacons as the lowest, & they haue their archd. for their gouernor: the Elders middlemost, and they are distinct heere from the deacons, and from the B. and haue their arch-elder among themselves, & ouer them al, in the senates of them. And the B. are sheefest ouer the seueral churches. Except we shall find in seueral prouinces, archb. also ouer them. which authority like wise Ierom allowed among and ouer the B. though he make none but Christ the vniuersall head and gouernor ouer all these in general, that the pope now taketh vpon him. But where is here this go-uernment of al this senate of governing Elders: & where are these governing elders that are not teachers: noth Ierom here, or any other where, ac-

Senate, College, Consistory or seniorie, of any other Presbyters, Presbites, seniors and Elders, than such as he saith, were sometimes called Bishops: or than such, as he calleth indifferently, (as well as he calleth Bishops) sacerdotes, and such as were more or lesse teachers, and Ministers of the Word and sacramentes: Doth he not say in his Epistle to Euagrius: Quid enim facit excepta ordinatione episcopi quod Presbyter non faciat? For what doth the Bishop except ordaining, that an Elder doth not?

As for the other Epistle to the other Rusticus, being altogether of another argument: we finde nothing tending hereunto, save only that he hath these wordes: Vnde et ad viros Ecclesiasticos, &c. Whereupon also vnto the Ecclesiasticall men, which are called the walls and towers of the church, the saying of the prophet speaketh: powre foorth your teares ye Wallles of Sion. But because here he neither sheweth what he meant by these ecclesiasticall men, nor speaketh of any Senate of them: wee can gather nothing directly either for Elders or other Ecclesiasticall persons. And if he meant elders: why not such as are teachers and Ministers of the Word and sacramentes, and such as he meant of in the other Epistle, and in all other places where he mentioneth any ecclesiasticall elders: Thus, as we finde nothing in Hierome, that can make any thing for any ecclesiasticall senate of elders governing and not teaching: so, because Danzus citeth not Hierom simple, but endorseth him with a confirmation of the decree in the Canon Law, as though it were a perpetual Canon, that ther shold be such an ecclesiasticall senate: albeit the same being fetched out of this sentence of Hierome, as we haue seene, maketh more against it than any thing for it: so that this decree being grounded thereon, the one fallies to the grounds with the other: neuertheless, for the more full satisfaction of the reader, in this eldership so much urged: let vs also repayze to the decrees, and peruse what is there like vnto for this senate of Governing and not teaching elders. And here indeede is expresse mention made, that the church hath a Senate of elders, ecclesia habet senatum eorum presbyterorum, &c.

Danzus allegation of the Canon Law for this Senate of Elders, Canon. Eccles. 16 quest 1.

The Church hath a senate, the company of the Elders, without whose consent it is not lawfull for the Monkes to doe any thing. Roboam the sonne of Solomon did therefore leese his kingdome, because hee would not heare his elders. The Romaynes also had a senate by whose counsel they did all thinges, and wee haue our senate, the company or assembly of the elders. These wordes are plaine, that the church hath a senate, and this senate is the company of the elders, and that also the Monkes coulde doe nothing without their counsell. Howbeit this Canon applieth not this restraint to the B. but to the Monkes. And if wee shoulde vnderstande it of Bishops also, which this Canon doth not, yet were it but of counsell, not of necessary consent, and much lesse of ioint authority with with him. But the Question is now, what manner of elders these were? Lawe.

 whether they were such as these examples of the Romane Senate, or as the Elders whose counsel Roboam did refuse: or they were Ministers of the word and Sacraments? For our better understanding herof, we haue to resort to the cause handled immediately before, which was the 15. cause.

Quest. 7. Absque Synodali. Without a synodal audience, for a Preeft to bee Canon condemned, it was in the Councell of Hispalis, wherein Isidorus was pre- Absque Sy- sent, forbidden, on this wise: Sexta actio, &c. In the sixth action we finde, nodali causa that Flagitanus an Elder of the Church of Corduba, was in times past 15. quest. 7. deposed by his Bishop, and being innocent was condemned to exile (or banishment:) whome we finde againe to be restored to his own order: the same thing haue we againe decreed against your presumption, that according to the synodall sentence of the holie fathers, none of you think that any Elder or Deacon ought to be deposed, without the examination of a Councell. For there are many that by tyrannicall power, not by authoritie Canonically, doe condemne those that haue not bene examined. And as they exalt some for fauour sake, so they debase some for for hatred and enuy, and condem them vpon a * lighte blast of opinion whose fault they mislike. For a bishoppe can alone giue honour vnto preestes and ministers: but he can not alone take it from them. For if those which in this worlde haue of their Lordes atteyned to the honor of their liberty, are not tumbled downe againe into the bond of seruitude, except they shal haue beene publikely accused, before the Prætors or cheefe Iustices and gouernours in the iudgement Court: how much more, they that beeing consecrated to the Altars of God are adorned with Ecclesiasticall honour: which verily neither by one condemning These elders them, nor one iudging them, can bee deposed from the priuiledge of were mini- their honor, but by a present Synodall iudgement. That thing must sters of the wholly be determined of them, that the Canon hath commaunded. sacramenta,

And it followeth si quid. &c. If any thing shall come to thine eares of any Clearke, that may iustly offend thee, beleue it not easily, leaste the matter being not knowne doe inflambe thee by reuengement. But the truth of the matter is to be searched out diligently in the presence of Seniors of the Church, and then, (if the quality of the matter shall require it) let the Canonically correction strike the fault of the offender.

Here are Seniors also of the Church named.

And againe, Episcopus. Let the Bishop hear the cause of none without the presence of his Clearkes, otherwise the bishoppes sentence shall bee The B. & lining, &c. But who are these Clearkes, Ministers, Seniors, and Elders, in whose presence he must doe these thinges? Doth hee admitte any other then Bishops them-selues, or at least the Sacerdotall Preestes? the glosse (disputing this matter, who should be this Counsel, or Chapter, or sitters by with the Bishops,) to proue that they must be all Clearkes, referreth vs to the first cause, Quest. 3. Scire. Knowe yee, that to be a certayne prouince, which hath ten or eleuen Cities, and one King, and as many inferior potestates vnder him, one Metropolitane, and other suffraganes, 10 or 11. Bishops, being Iudges, vnto whose Iudgement all the causes of the Bishops, and of other preestes and Cities, may bee referred. That matters may be discerned by all these, Iustly and with consonant voice, except they that are to be iudgd do appeal to a higher authority. It must not bee that euery prouince shoulde be debased or dishonoured, but shoulde haue in it selfe Iudges, euery of the Preestes and Bishops. That is to wit, according to their orders. Whereby it appeareth that these Ecclesiasticall Senates of such as sat in the Councelles and Iudgements of Preestes were eyther Bishops or at leaste Sacerdotall preestes onely, and not persons of inferior orders, but euery one was Iudged according to their estate, by them that were (at the least) of their owne orders, and not Teachers by such as were no Teachers.

Nowe after this fiftenth cause wherein hee treateth of Clearkes, Elders, Seniors, Ministers and Priests indifferently: This next cause, to wit, the sixteenth which Danzus citeth, is altogether of Monkes, and especially that first Question which he alleageth. Whether they may doe that thing (in respect simply they be Monkes, that secular Clearkes and preestes or Elders) may doe. This first Question is this, Utrum Monachis liceat officia populis celebrare, penitentiam dare, & baptizare. Whether Monkes may celebrate the Diuine seruice to the people, enioyne penitence and baptise: To the which, the answer is this, They can-not. And anon amongst other reasons, he alleageth this out of Hierome also, Ad Riparium & desiderium: Monachus non docentis sed plangentis habet officium. A Monke hath not the office of a Teacher, but of a mourner. And euen immediatly before that which Danzus citeth, are these wordes: Alia causa. The cause of a Monke is another, and another the cause of a Clarke: The Clarke, feede the Sheepe, (sayth the Monke) I am fedde: they liue of the Altar, the Axe is put to me, as at the roote of an vnfruitfull tree: If I bring not my gift vnto the Altar, It is not lawfull for me to sitte before an Elder: if I shall sinne, it is lawfull for him to deliuer me to Sathan, for the destruction of the Flesh, that the spirite in day of the Lorde might bee safe. Idem ad Rusticum. The same (is in Hieroms Epistle), vnto Rusticus. And here commeth in that which Danzus citeth: Ecclesia. The church hath a Senate, the assembly of Elders, without whose councell it is lawfull for the the Monkes to doe nothing. All this now duely considered: it is manifest, that by this the Churches Senate or assembly of Elders, is meant onely a Senate of such Elders, as did feede both the people and the Monkes also, with the Worde and Sacramentes. For so the glosse expoundeth the Monkes wordes, Ego pascor, I am fedde, A sacramentis ipsorum, of their Sacraments. And that these Elders liued of the Altar, and that the very Monkes in those days, were not exempted from paying tythes or offerings vnto them. And that these Elders might excommunicate these Monkes so well as they might other men. By all which it appeareth, that this Ecclesiasticall Senate was none other, but an assembly, Colleage or Consistory of Preestes or Pastorall Elders.

The Monks payde tythes & offerings to the elders The Elders might excommunicate the Monkes

And as for any other Ecclesiasticall Presbyters or Elders, in all or any of the Canons either of the Councells Generall or Prouinciall, or of the Bishops, or of the whole body of the Canon Lawes, Decrees or Decretals, then such Elders as were Ministers of the Worde and Sacramentes: Our Brethren shall finde but so very comfort. So not in any of the Doctors of the Church. And therefore it is their best (as I take it) to leaue all further search that wayes, for any proofs or practise at all of such Ecclesiasticall Gouverning and not teaching Elders in the Church, euen from the verie Apostles times. And this withall is to be obserued, that where our Bret. would now beare the worde in hande, there were such Senates and Segniories of these gouerning and not teaching Elders, in the Primitiue & in the auncient Church: and for prooofe heereof, dare aduenture to cite all these testimonies: (and if I coulde finde that they cited any mo,) I would craue pardon to search them like wise) which when they are all viewed & examined: there is not one Father, not one Historiographer, not one Canon, that maketh any whit, for any such kinde of Elder, as our Brethren pretende to vs, is woynne out of vse, and they now endeauour to haue againe eniued.

I knowe that these our reuerend Brethren (beeing both godly and learned men) doe not cite these authoys of any set purpose to deceiue vs, in ffathering that on them which they neuer spak, nor thought, nor knew: but as the prouerbe sayth mistaking makes misse-reckoning: so they (hauing conceiued this with them-selues, that such a kinde of Gouverning and not teaching Ecclesiasticall Elders there was in the Apostles times, and in the Primitiue Church:) so often as they reade in the Fathers the name of Presbyters or Elders, especially, if there bee any mention of Senate, Colleage or company of them, and that these in any matters ioyned with the Bishop (to whom they apply onely the name and office of Pastorall Elder:) straight-way they conceiued that which they fancied, that these Elders were those Ecclesiasticall Elders gouerning onely and not meddling with teaching.

The cause of our Bret. & these reuerend mens mistaking these allegations of these Elders

Which too quick conceiving, upon their sojested opinion, (especially in the heate of zeale to haue things amended,) may fall out nowe and then, for lacke of moze mature deliberation and examining, even to the best learned and most holy men. And that (I thinke) hath beene the cause of our Brethrens mistaking and misreporting the Fathers meaninges in the Eldership. Which when their selues shall apperceiue, I doubt not (for the reuerent opinion I haue of them, and of all our Brethren) but that they will relent in this behalf, at leastwise, for these fathers thus cited amisse, and eyther let them all goe, or seeke further in them, or in other, for other and better Testimonies, than these alleaged. Which if they shall finde, and can clearely eniue thereby, that there were any such: for my part, I shall be mooste ready to acknowledge it. Notwithstanding, when they shall haue pzooued, that such at any time in the Church of Christe there were: yet woulde not that example inferre a necessity, that there ought to bee such alwayes and euery where, because there was such sometimes, perhappes, and in some places.

But sence as yet, we neither heare of rule, nor example of them: we may (I hope) with safe conscience dissent from them. With therefore, it can not hetherto be pzooued by any of these Fathers: Let vs nowe see these excellent learned mens allegations and examples for these Elders, out of the holy Scriptures, if yet in them, we may finde better and inuincible pzoofs, that at least in the Apostles times, there were such Elders, for then there is no remedy, but wee must needes yeelde that such there were, with we also (as is our bounden duety) do admit and reuerence the holy Scriptures, with the same honoz that our Brethren doe. Albeit, neither we nor they can make any perpetuall rule, of euery particular example in the scripture. But let the rule thereof fall out as it shall, let vs yet see, what examples in the scripture our Brethren a- uouche.

2. parte
Christ. l. 1. g.
Cap. 7.

In the seuenth Chapter aforesayde, 2. Parte Christ. l. 1. g. Danzus after his citations of Basil and Dionysius, alleageth saint Paule (as yee haue heard) saying: Therefore they may thus better be distinguished, that of the perpetuall orders in the Church, other shoulde bee occupied in the treatie of the Worde of God, which Paule generally calleth sermone, Prophety, Rom. 12. verse. 6. Or else in the procuring of other things, the which seemeth by a Generall name to bee of other called sollicitudo, Gouernance, but of Paule it is called ministratio, Rom. 12.

Caluines
allegation of the same in Instit. cap
8. sect. 43

This Testimony is also alleaged of Beza in his Christian Confession, Chapter 5. Artic 32. with the 1 Corinth. 12. verse 28. prefixed thereunto. The same Testimony likewise citeth Caluine, in his Institutions Cap. 8. Sec. 42. saying.

But as for that that I called bishops, & elders, and pastors, & Ministers indifindifferently, those that gouerne the Church: I did it out of the vse of the scripture, which confundeth these tearmes. For whosoever enioy Elders, the ministry of the worde, it giueth to them the title of Bishops. So with Paule, where Titus was commaunded to be by to ordaine Elders, streight-ways is set vnder it, for a Bishop must bee blamelesse, &c. So in another place hee saluteth moe Bishops in one City. And in the Acts is rehearsed, that hee called the Ephesine Elders together, whom hee his selfe in his oration nameth Bishops. Heere nowe wee must obserue that hetherto wee haue reckoned none, but those offices that consist in the ministry of the Worde, neyther of other doth Paule make remembraunce in that fourth Chapter to the Ephesians, which we haue cited. Howbeit, in the Epistle to the Romaines, and in the former to the Corinthians, he reckoneth vp other, as powers, the giftes of healing, interpretation, Gouernment, tendance on the poore, of the which I omit those that were temporary, because it is no importance to stande long about them. But there are two which abide perpetually: gouernment, and the care of the poore. Gouernours (I thinke) were seniors, chosen from among the common people, which shoulde together with the bishops, rule the Censure or controlement of manners, and the discipline that shoulde bee exercised. For yee can not otherwise interpret that which hee sayth: hee that ruleth let him do it in carefulnesse. Therefore every Church from the beginning had her senate enrolled, of Godly, graue and holy men. Moreouer that that kinde of order was not of that onely age, the experience it selfe doth declare. Therefore this gift also of Gouernment is necessary for all ages.

1. Cor. 12.

Thus doe Caluine, Beza and Danzeus (for in these three as principall I comprehend any other of our Brethren that followe them) gather this Senate of Gouerning and not teaching Elders, on these two testimonies Romaines 12. and 1 Corinthians 12. As for that which Caluine here speaketh of the scriptures indifferent vse of the names of bishops and Elders: We haue already seene sufficiently, howe it was used, and howe it was altered, euen in the Apostles times, and haue seene withall, sufficient prooffe of the superiority of one among the Elders, yea, among the Apostles themselves, which was more peculiarly called bishop, and that by Caluines and Bezaes owne confessions. But for these two places in the Scripture here cited, Romans 12. & 1. Corinthians 12. that al the gifts or offices there mencioned, are either temporary or perpetuall, the Apostle expresseth not, the ouer onely sheweth that point: Not but that Gouernment shoulde be alwayes in the Church, and care of the poore also. As our Saviour sayth, Iohn, 12. The poore yee shall haue alwayes with you: and then charity inferreth a good consequence, that wee shoulde alwayes haue a care of the poore, and the Scripture is plentiful in that behalfe.

behalf. And so likewise for Governors and care of Government. But whether the like forme of Government, and of care for the poore, and the like, or rather the same kinde of officers for these thinges, should be alwayes in the Church and perdetually abiding: that is not here declared. Neither yet that the gistes or offices of Government mentioned in these places, were of any such officers and Elders Governing and not teaching, as our Brethren do pretende they were. Onely Caluine sayth Exissimo. &c. I suppose (or thinke) that the Governors were Seniors chosen out of the common people, which together with the Bishop should rule the censure (or controulement) of manners, and the Discipline that should be exercised. This is but Caluines thinking. Who though hee were a most excellent man, yet his supposing and thinking, though it may mooue many to thinke as he did, yet it bindeth none, but that another man may thinke otherwise, as Beza also in many thinges, thinketh otherwise than Caluine doth. But when Caluine addeth on his thinking, that these wordes, Hee that ruleth, let him doe it in carefulnesse, cannot be interpreted otherwise: This is some-what further then needeth. Can none that ruleth be carefull in his ruling, but he must be a ruler chosen from among the common people: that hee must be a controller of manners, and of the Discipline that should be exercised? and that in this Government he must ioyne together with the Bishop: and that he must not meddle with teaching: what necessity is there in these Testimonies, to interpret these Gouvernours to be such Gouvernours: and that it can not be interpreted otherwise: is there any other heere alleged than Caluines bare thinking: and wee haue herad already howe excellent men haue thought and interpreted these wordes otherwise, and alleged their reasons for the same. And I see no reason to the contrary: why they may not be interpreted, both for civil Magistrates in the church and also for Bishops and Pastors that are Teachers: or for who-soever hath any rule and Government committed to him, to doe it heedfully and with carefulnesse.

Every Church had not a Sanate

So we vpon these his bare supposall or thinking, and on his onely auouching that it can be interpreted no otherwise, which must easily and without any absurdity, may be understood for diuers other: Caluine con-cludeth, that therefore every Church from the beginning, hadde her sonate enrolled of Godly graue and holy men, that had the iurisdiction of correcting vices. Whereas Saint Paule mentioneth no such thing, neither in these places, nor in any other. Neither is there any likelihood, that it was in every Church, if it were in some, or in any, nor Danzus him-selfe dare goe so farre, as to every Church, but to some Churches.

Danzus confesseth, that from the beginning there were in diuers pastorall

for all Elders in euery Church. And he alleageth a reason, saying: Cap. 10. For the former and cheefest care was in the Churches, that the word of God should be preached. And therefore as pastors, Preachers should bee chosen. The 2. kinde of Elders (hee meaneth these Elders, noine in Question) was wont to be appointed in euery greater City only, wherein there was a large and populous Church, and a great number of the faythfull, which is cleane contrary both to Caluine, and to our Brethren in this Learned discourse, that would haue these Elders in euery church and Congregation. And much lesse doth this appeare, that it was in euery Church euen from the very beginning thereof. The Apostles themselves had not the office of Deacons, no not in Hierusalem the another Church of all, from the beginning. But in continuance the same was added (as the number increasing) there grew neede of them.

But Caluine proceeding on this conclusion, saith: that nowe it was not an order of one age, meaning it was of more then one. And Seculum an age, is commonly vnderstoode for an hundred yeares. As though it left not of in so short a space, and hereupon he puts him-selfe for prooffe, to the declaration of the experience. But what time, or whether any full ages, or howe many: he him-selfe declareth not, but leaueth vs to search. But (so that we haue already searched,) wee can not hear so much as of any one age. Age? nay, no: one yeare, no: one yoneth, no: one weeke, no: one day, no: one houre, no: one moment, eyther of any one such Senate or, but of one such mā. for any certainty that we haue hether to founde. But in all the experience that our Brethren hether to haue declared: we haue founde eyther playne prooffe, or farre more probabilitie, that all those whome they haue alleaged were such Elders, as withall were Ministers of the Worde. And yet, if all this, that Caluine vpon his bare thinking runneth on withall, coulde be anouched: it were not able to bear out his final conclusion, for these his supposed Elders, saying: Therefore this office also of Government is necessary for all ages. Where in dede he might haue concluded much better, that it is not necessary for all ages. Yea, although there had bene experince of some ages, Churches, or persons: yet, wanting a rule and commandement for them: what necessity can or ought to be perpetually imposed on all Churches for them, without a manifest oppression of our Christian liberty? And therefore, away with this vayne necessary (except it bee construed in some gentlesence) especially, when as yet we haue not certainlie found, in the experience of the Doctors and of the Fathers, and of the historiographers, any one age of the Church of Christe, since, no: in the Apostles age, that had any such Ecclesiasticall Senate of Governing and not teaching Elders, as they imagine and would obtrude vnto vs.

And sixth Caluine heere referreth that testimony of St. Paule, Ephesians

4. vers. 11. to no other, but to such as were teachers of the word: and so Paule sheweth the reason why those giftes and offices were given, to wit, For the renewing of the Sayntes into the worke of the administration of the body of Christe, untill we all come into the unity of sayth, and of the knowledge of the Sonne of God, into a perfect man, and into the measure of a full ripe age, that wee shoulde not now be Children any longer, which are caried away with every blast of Doctrine: but following the truth in love, wee shoulde waxe strong by all thinges in him that is the heade, to witte Christe, in whome the whole body being coupled and compacted through out every ioint of the Ministration, according to the act in the measure of every part: maketh the encrease of the body, so the edification of it selfe, by love: Ephes. 4.

If all this can be done by the offices there cited, of the which none haue perpetuity hereunto, but these twain (as our Bishops denide them, which may be also well contracted into one) Pastors and Doctors: either our Gouverning Elders that our Bishops pleade for, must be included within these, and then can they not be such as they pleade for (for they woulde haue them neither Pastors and Doctors, but a distinguished office from them both, and not meddling with teaching, which is the cheefest thing in Pastors and Doctors) or else there is no necessity of their perpetuity, nor of necessary helping to the accomplishment of these so necessary ends. If they replie, that the Deacons neither be there mentioned, and yet they be perpetuall, and helping hereunto: albeit we shall God willing hereafter see, in their more proper treatise, howe they are perpetuall and necessary, and how not: yet what letteth, but that, (as at the very first example, Steuen and Philip. Neither can this shift serue, to say, that Philip (besides) was Euangelist, except they shew the like also for Steuen. And why then may not Deacons be comprehended in so. Pauls partition, Eph. 4. well ynough, and so Governours, Interpreters, Healers, Helpers, speakers with diuerse languages, which might be all teachers, save onely these, not teaching but governing Ecclesiasticall Elders. whose office (as implying a contradiction of teaching and not teaching) is not compatible with the other offices.

Of the perpetuity and necessity of Deacons.

And if (as Danæus here sayth) the name noçimov. governaunce, that the Apostle useth, Rom. 12. be there generall howe is it then restrayned to such a proper kinde of Ecclesiasticall Government, of Elders not teachers, more than of teaching elders, or more then of Deacons? And if Paule (as Danæus saith) vse the name παις, for these governours: which is either proper to Deacons, or taken generally, for the Ministry: why may it not better comprehend the pastors and teachers, which ordinarily are called Ministers, then these governing elders that are not teachers?

The next proof out of the scripture that Danæus citeth (after his former allegation allegation of Hierome ad Rusticum, for the imitation of the Iewes Synedrion, we shall come to it (God willing) after wards, our Wethren leading us to that argument. But because that standeth rather on a presupposall of an imitation, or continuance of the order in the old law among the Iewes, than any promise of institution in the newe, among the Christians: let us nowe first, go to those arguments, whereby Daneus will euince, both manifest example and institution of these Elders, in the newe Testament. ca. 10. part, Christ. 2. Isagog. (or introduction) (he sayth: Horum igitur Presbyterorum qui, &c.) The offices therefore of these Elders, that rule the manners, is to attende vpon the flocke, and to watche as well ouer the doctrine, as ouer the manners of the Church, and of the faithfull that be in the same. Act. 20. ver. 28. 1. Pet. 5. ver. 2. and especially in his parish, that is, in that part of the Church or region, which is committed peculiarly to him. And verily concerning doctrine, least anie Heresie should be brought in, and least any error should be sowed, and generally least the substance of the faith should be corrupted. Act. 20. ver. 29. 21. ver. 18. which thing may be done, and thereupon arise offences, and those grieuous.

*Daneus in
2. part. ca. 10.*

Here are three testimonies of scripture alleaged, of which the two former, Act. 20. and 1. Pet. 5. we haue seene sufficiently before, concerning those Elders, especially those that are mentioned, Act. 20. whether they were all Bishops of Ephesus, in the proper sense of the name of Bishop: but there the question was all of such Elders, as, whether they were all equal, or no, yet were they all Pastorall Elders, Teachers, and Ministers of the worde and Sacramentes. And our Wethren in this Learned Discourse, in their treatise of the Pastors office haue cited already for such Elders onely, these testimonies Act. 20. 1. Pet. 5. saying: pag. 19. Besides Doctors, there must be Pastors ordeyned in euery congregation, which haue diuerse appellations in the scripture, as Ephes. 4. they are called by the name of Pastors, because they ought to feede the seuerall flockes of Gods sheepe committed to their charge. As appeareth, Act. 20. 28. 1. Pet. 5. 2. they are also called Elders &c. Again page, 21, 22, and 23. where at large they vige this, that all the functions of the Elders mentioned, 1. Pet. 5. and Act. 20. is to be employed in such gouernement only, as is feeding, euen as a Pastor doth his sheepe. And that therfore they are called Bishops, Super-intendentes, or Ouer-seers. And yet see how boldly Daneus citeth these testimonies, for these gouerning and not teaching Elders: wherein, although our Wethren holde the truer opinion, and the text is plaine enough, that the elders there mentioned, were onely such as medled with the worde: yet the rather to moue Daneus with the iudge-ment of Caluine also thereupon: Caluine likewise in his Institutions ca. 8. sec. 4. treating of the Pastors office, sayth: Of these and other places which he saith: And in the Actes is rehearsed, that he called together the Ephesian Elders, whom he himselfe in his oration nameth Bishops. Heere now is to be obserued, that hethertoh we haue reckoned vp none, but those offices, that consist in the ministerie of the word. In his Comen-tatie indeed vpon the same ver. 17. he saith: Moreouer it shal more cleerly appeere out of the context, that the Seniors are called, not they which were of olde age, but they which ruled the Church. But it is vsuall almost in all tongues, that they should be called Auncients, and Fathers, which were the Governours to rule others, although their Age did not alwaie: answer therevnto.

Heere he speaketh of governing Elders or Governours; which is the terme, wherby our Bishops, signifie their Segniorie. But now, what manner of Governours or governing Elders, maketh he them to be? On these wordes, For sitis, &c. ver. 18. In this sermon (saith he) Paul chetfly with hereunto, that those whome he had created the Pastors of Ephesus; hee might by his example, exhort them to performe their office faithfully.
 For so is the censure (or correction) of mannners made aright, and au-thoritie gotten to the doctrine, when the teacher prescribeth nothing with words, the which he hath not before in the deede: it selfe perfourmed. And so he goeth on, applying so. Pauls wordes in every verse, to Ministers and Pastors. And on the 26. verse, he saith; Moreouer this place conteineth a brieft summe of teaching orderly and well; and he exhor-teth the Doctors themselues with a vehement and seuerer statute, that they should diligently apply their office. And to this dutie of the Pastors; in the next verse he applieth the sayings of Ezech. 3. 18. 20. till he come to the 28. verse, which Danus citeth, where he concludeth thus; Since the time they were created Pastors, they are not their owne men, but pub-likely bound to the whole flock. And on these wordes; The holy Ghost hath made you Bishops. Furthermore (saith he) although from the beginning the L. would haue the Ministers of the word chosen by voices: neuer-theles he alwaies chalengeth to himselfe the government of the Church, &c. And as he saith; We must breefly note this, of the name of Bishop; that all the Ephesine Elders were of Paule so called: so withall, we must note, that he said before in his Institutions: Whosoever enioyeth the ministerie of the word, hee giueth them the title of Bishops. And on these wordes;

words; To rule the Church: The Greeke word episcopos signifieth to feed: Per. 5. but by an apt similitude it is translated to any regiment. And on the 29. verse, This is verely as it were the perpetual destinie of the Church, that it should be vexed of wolves: wherefore there is neuer anie time of sleeping. Howbeit, he more, & the more hurtful doo breake in; the more attentiu watches must be made of the Pastors, &c. And on the 30. ver. Then doth the synceritie of the word of God flourish, when the Pastors with a common studie doo gather disciples vnto Christ, &c. And in the 31. That he saith, he warneth euerie one, may be as well referred to the common people, as to the Elders. For sith he had purposed to make his sermō common to the whole Church: he speaketh as though the whole bodie were present. Notwithstanding, if any had rather restraîne it to the order of the Pastors, &c. So that in all this assembly of these Elders, he mentioneth stil none other, but such as were Pastors and Ministers of the word and sacraments. This place therefore, Act. 20. (be it spoken by Damasus leane) is marily abused, for the ppose of any Senate of not teaching Elders.

And the same answer serueth to the other testimonie, 1. Pet. 5. 2. which likewise our Breth. ioyne in this learned discourse, to their former testimonie for Pastors onely: pag. 19. 22. 25. & 32. And the like doth Caluine (with all other interpreters new and olde) saying both in his Instit. ca. 13. Sect. 7. Peter therefore while he warneth the Pastors of their office, exhorteth them so to feede the flocke, that they exercise not a dominion ouer the Clergie. By which name he signifieth the inheritance of God, that is, the people of the faithfull. And in his Comm. While hee would exhort the Pastors to their dutie, he noteth chiefly three things, that are woont much to hinder thé, that is to wit, slothfulnes, desire of getting gain & licentiousnes of gouerning. True it is, y^e he afterward saith vpon y^e name Elders: By this name he designeth Pastors, and whosoever were appointed to the gouernement of the Church: but they called them Elders or Seniors for honors sake, not that all were olde in age, but because they were chiefly chosen out of old mē. For age hath for the most part, more wisdom, grauitie & experience. Howbeit because now & then (as is said in the Greeke prouerb) The heare heare is not wisdom: and there are young men found that are more fit, such as Timothie was: it is receaued in vse, that they also are called Elders, after they are chosen into the order. Whē as Peter likewise nameth himselfe an Elder, it appeareth that this name was common, the which also is manifest more cleerly in very many places. Furthermore by this title he getteth authoritie to himselfe: as though he said, that of his owne right he warneth the Pastors because he himselfe was one of them. For this mutual libertie ought to betweene them that are Colleagues.

feeding.

Here he sayth that the name of Elder is a common name, not onely for olde age, but of dignitie. And he sayth, that the Apostle designeth in this name, Pastors and whosoeuer are appointed to the regiment of the Church: but both he not still restrayne the vnderstanding of it in this place, to such Gouernours only, as either are Pastorall elders or to such teachers as himselfe (although he were also an Apostle) was one in the same office of this Eldership, a Colleague among them: And what was their office of this Eldership that he requireth of them? But euen that which followeth in the seconde verse of Danzeus cited: feede so much as lieth in you the flocke of God. And what was the foode wherewith these Elders should feede them so much as lay in them? Any other than the doctrine of Gods worde? Hereupon (sayth Caluine) wee gather what the name of Elder doth import, to wit, that it contayneth in it the office of feeding. The Pope createth his Elders farre to an other ende, that is to wit, that they should dayly offer vp Christ. In their ordeyning there is no mention of feeding. Let vs therefore remember to discerne the order of Christ, from the confusion of the Pope, euen as it were the light from darkenesse. The definition also of the word ought to be holden. Because the flocke of Christ cannot be fedde, but with pure doctrine which alone is the spirituall fodder. Wherefore Pastors are not either dombe ghoses, or such as sprinkle their forged tales, as it were deadly poyson to kill the soules.

And vpon this worde in nouum, I doubt not (sayth he) but that Peter would expresse the office and name of a bishopricke: it may also cut off other places of scripture be gathered, that these 2. Bishop and Elder, are names betokening one thing. He chargeth them therefore, howe they should rightly exercise the Pastorall office.

Who saith not hereby, that Caluine in this place restrayneth the name of Elder to such onely as were feeders of the people with the worde, not that Peter in that place, speaketh to any other officers? And to what purpose should he charge those, to feede the people with the doctrine of the worde, that were no feeders, and medled not at all with teaching? So that this testimonie of Peter, 1. Pet. 5. maketh nothing for any such eccl. Elders gouerning the Church and not teaching, if rather it make not cleane against them, being such ecclesiasticall Elders as be onely dominium exercentes in Clerum; exercising gouernement ouer the Clergie, and doe not pascere nor meddle at all with feeding or teaching the people.

As for that which Danzeus gathereth on these two testimonies, Act. 20. and 1. Pet. 5. that the office of these Elders was to attende and watche both ouer the doctrine and ouer the manners of the Church and of the faithfull that are therein, and especially in his parish, that is, in that parte of the Church that is peculiarly committed vnto him: in what thing the attendance attendance and watching of the Elders consisted, in these forseaybe places, we haue fully seene; Not only (as Danæus sayth) ouer the doctrine and ouer the maners: but as themselues expressing the example of the manners: so also feeding with the doctrine so much as in them did lye. If they say, that is nothing at all, because they were but Controuersers and Over-seers of others, and themselues meddled not with teaching: then were they not such Elders as S. Paule and S. Peter do prescribe, but what meaneth Danæus by these wordes, his parish? Which he expoundeth to be that part of the Church that peculiarly was committed to him? Was there diuerse parishes in those great Cities that he speaketh of, where he supposeth a Senate of these Elders were, and that euery one of them had a part of the Citie assigned to his oversight, which was called a Parish? And that all these Elders of seuerall parishes, had some one great and mother Church, wherein all these Elders helde their Senate, Seignorie, or Consistorie? And can this also be proued out of these two places, or out of the scripture, that the Apostles ordeined any such Senate of gouerning and not teaching Elders, of seuerall parishes? If it could, how would this agree with these our Brethren, that would haue a Senate, Seniorie, or Consistorie of these Elders in euery parish Church and Congregation, except they would bring the whole Citie (as London) but to one Congregation? But whereupon gathereth Danæus this? Upon these testimonies, Act. 20. or 1 Pet. 5? No, he citeth them after in the conclusion of his former assertion. For when he had sayde: the seconde kinde of Elders was wont to be ordeyned in euery great Citie only, wherein there was a large and populous Church, and a great number of the faithfull: he proueth it thus, for euery part of the Citie, and of the Church, as it were a parish, had his owne Elder. As it may be gathered, ex Herm. Sozomen. lib. 1. cap. 8. and the historie of the auncient Church. These last wordes, the historie of the auncient Church, are too generall. When the places are particularly quoted, they may be better examined. And we haue examined a good many already. But we could finde no such seconde kinde of Elders. And I am halfe a fraide before hande, that wee shall finde none euen in this place. And for triall, let vs start asse, and see it.

The title of the Chapter sheweth the argument: An enumeration of the noble actes of Constantine, both in purchasing the libertie of the Christians, and in building of temples, and other thinges beneficiall to the common-weale. In which chapter among other matters, he sayth: he builded also in the Palace a Church, and he made a tente expressing the figure of a Church, the which he vsed to carie about with him when he marched in battell against his enemies: to this ende, that a Church should not be wanting to him nor to the armie, while hee abode in the wilderness. In which Church they should prayse God, they should call vpon vpon him with their praier, and receaue the holy mysteries. Nam *Sacerdotes & Diaconi, &c. For the Priests & Deacons which according to the institution of the Church should performe these functions, did continually follow the Tabernacle. *Ex eo tempore militares Romanorum ordines habueruntque secum * & Sacerdotes & Diaconos, ad rem diuinam faciendam designatos.* From that time foorth the militarie orders of the Romanes, which are now called the Numbers, euery one of them builded a seueral Tabernacle, and had both Priestes and Deacons with them, appointed to execute the diuine seruice.

This is all that Sozomenus hath of this matter, and is not here a faire proue, that in euery greater Citie, wherein there was a faire & populous Church, & magnus fidelium numerus, and a great number of the faithfull, euery part of the Citie and Church had his Elder, whose office was to attend vpon the flocke, and to watch both ouer the doctrine and ouer the manners of the Church, and of the faithfull that are therein, and especially in his Parish, that is, in that part of the Church that is committed vnto him. And here there is mention made of some like wordes, that Danzus gathereth.

Danzus
miscollecti-
on of Sozomenus
wordes.

Sozomenus telleth, how Constantine made a Tabernacle or Tent expressing the figure of a Church: therupon Danzus belike gathereth these wordes; An ample and a populous Church: except he gather that of the wordes before; As for that that pertaineth to the holy Temples, they that were large inough, were repaired: other were raised higher & made broder, not without increase of stateliness.

Sozomenus telleth, how this Tabernacle was caried about in the wil-dernesse, while Constantine marched against his enemies: and Danzus ga-thereth belike of this Wildernesse, a great Citie. Except also he gather that of the wordes before: Moreouer, out of the land which was tribu-tarie in euery Citie, he tooke the rated tribute, that was wont to be paied to the Eschequer (or Treasurie) and distributed it to the Churches & to the Clergie: which gift he enacted by Lawe to be ratified for euer.

Sozomenus telleth of the militarie orders of the Romanes: and Danzus belike gathereth thereupon, the flocke of the faithfull.

Sozomenus telleth, that these militarie orders of the Romanes were those which were then called; & ἱππῆες, Numeri, Numbers: and Danzus belike gathereth thereupon, that there was Magnus fidelium numerus, A great number of the faithfull.

Sozomenus telleth, that From that time forth euery one of these militarie Orders builded a seuerall Tabernacle to themselues: and Danzus belike gathereth thereupon these wordes, Euery part or parish of the Ci-tie and of the Church.

Sozome-

Sozomenus telleth, how they had these 2. eccl. orders, Sacerdotes & Diaconus, sacred Priests & Deacons with the: & Danæus belike gathereth here upon Secundum genus Presbyterorum, the second kinde of Elders, Priests, or Presbyters. mis-

Sozomenus telleth, how these did follow the Tabernacles, and were designed according to the Institution of the Church, to execute the diuine seruice and performe these functions; to wit, to praise God, to cal vpon him with praiers, and to minister the Sacraments: and Danæus hereupon belike doth gather, that their office was to attend the flock, & to watch both ouer the doctrine and ouer the manners of the Church, and of the faithfull that are therein, ech one in the parish, part, or region committed to him.

Whereby, except Danæus gather these his collections, on these wordes of Sozomenus (soz they be the wordes that me thinks come nearest vnto his) I know not on what wordes els, he can make this collection. But to consider Danæus to the best: (as he is our Reuerend Brother, & excellent learned Father in the Lord: so, Bonus aliquando dormitat Homerus,) he over-trusted and followed too much some others ill collection, and considered not the place himselfe, and so might easely be abused. Which least we also in so weightie a matter might be, especially on the trust of so notable a man (as, I am afraid, too many of our Brethren be, running too much on the credite of such a credible partie): it standeth vs vpon (craving euermore pardon of him and all our betters) to search better the places, our selues, that are alleadged; and to see, whether they be rightly alleadged, yea, or no. If yea: then humbly, (so farre forth as is requisite) to yelde vnto them, be the partie neuer so meane, that doth alleadge them. If no: then modestly to dissent from them, and not allowe them, be the parties otherwise neuer so learned. Christ biddeth vs, to Search, yea, the very Scriptures: and so shall we finde whether they be well or ill alleadged. And the Bereans are euen therefore commended, soz that daily they searched the Scriptures, to see, whether those things were so, that St. Paule had preached. And then must our Brethren be content to giue vs leaue, if we examine these testimonies by the originals, which in this place also when we haue done, (besides a number of other grosse escapes,) what is here for y^e proofe of these Cōsistorie governing & not teaching Elders? Is this Elder now become ipso, Sacerdos, a sacred Priest, the executer of the diuine seruice; & a minister of the holy mysteries? Well the, since we find not as yet these Elders here; let vs return again to Danæus search for the in the scripture.

The third testimonie of Scripture that here he cited, was Act. 11. 18. And when we were come to Ierusalem (saith St. Luke, verse 17.) the Brethren did receaue vs gladly. But the next day Paule entred in with vs vnto Iames; and all the Elders were assembled.

The lack of through searching, the cause of our Br. mistaking.

Act. 17. 11.

The Elders that Sozomenus mentioneth were teaching elders.

Danæus testimony for these elders. Act. 21. 18.

The probabilities that the Elders mentioned Act 21. 18. were teachers.

There are againe Elders named, and an assembly of them all at Ierusalem. But whether these Elders were onely gouernors and not medlers with teaching of the worde, that is not mencioned. Neither is there any circumstance, that should encline to such opinion of them, but rather to the cleane contrarie. Caluine sayth: out of this place we may gather, that which we had in the 15. chapter, that so often as any waigh- tie businesse was to be treated vpon, the Seniors were woont to come together, that the consultation might bee the more orderly composed without the multitude. We shall afterwarde see in their order that the people were admitted. Howbeit, after that the Seniors had had their Innermore Counsell.

With therefore these Seniors consultation with the Apostles, was not onely about manners and discipline, but about principall pointes of the substance of doctrine: and withall, that Caluine referreth vs to these Seniors (or Elders) in the counsell holden at Ierusalem, Act. 15. where Caluine sayde before, as he sayth here, that all the Church was not gathered: sed eos qui doctrina & iudicio pollebant, & qui ex ratione officij, huius cause legitimi erant iudices: but those that excelled in doctrine and iudgement, and they that by reason of their office, were the lawfull iudges of this cause: what likelihood is there, that these Elders meddled not with teaching the doctrine, which excelled in the doctrine, and in iudgement, and by their offices were the lawfull iudges, in the decision of the controuerxies of doctrine?

These Elders were exhorters of Paul.

But since the oration that is made vnto Paule, Act. 31. is by S. Luke set downe in the name of them all: albeit some one among them spake it in their names: and they were such as of whom Caluine sayth, vpon these their wordes to Paule: Thou seest (brother) how manie thousands, &c. Moreover, they exhort him, that taking vpon him a solemne vowe, he should purge himselfe, &c. There is no doubt, but that zeale of the Lawe was faultie: and verely the Elders doo sufficiently declare, that they liked it not. For although they do not openly condemne it, neither yet complaine thereon more sharply: neuertheles, because they separate themselves from their affection, secretly they confesse that they doo erre. If it had bene a zeale according to knowledge, it ought to haue begun from them. But they strue not for the Lawe it selfe, nor they pretend iust renuerence thereof, nor they subscribe vnto them that were zealous of the same, as they call them: therefore they insinuate that they thinke otherwise, & that they like not the peoples superstition. But this ouerthwarteth it, that they say Paule was burdened with a false infamie. Furthermore, when they exact of him a satisfaction, they seeme to nourish that zeale, &c.

They were such as first who knowledge should begin.

They were such as were not of the people, but distinct from them.

And againe: Neither verely was the libertie of Paule vnknownen to the Elders, Elders, when as therefore they knew the matter well, onely this they wil, that it should be witnessed to the vnskilfull and rude, that Paule purposed nothing lesse, than that hee should bring the Iewes to the contempt of the lawe. Wherefore they looke not vpon the bare matter, but knowing what was the peoples iudgement of Paule, by reason of the malicious backbitings: they desire to remedie it. Although I knowe not whether they required this of Paul more importunacie than was meet. But heerevpon it appeareth, how preposterous is the credulitie (or light beleeve) of men, in taking holde of slanders: and howe stiffe an ill opinion once rashlie conceived, cleaueth fast. There is no doubt but that Iames and his colleagues did their indeauor to defende the fame of Paul. And againe, in the meane season wee see howe modestlie the Seniors behaued themselves in nourishing concorde: while in good time they prevent the peoples offence, excepte in that they beare peraduenture too much with their weaknesse, in exacting a vowe of Paule. But this moderation is to bee kept in the Church, that the Pastors shoulde indeede excell in authoritie: but they shoulde not rule prouderlie, nor despise the residue of the bodie. For the distinction of their orders, which is the bonde of peace, ought not to bee the cause of discord.

What can bee more cleere than this, that these Elders which spake these things, and took this authoritie in these matters vpon them, were Pastors? As Caluine in plaine wordes applyeth all they dooings vnto Pastors. And yet this more appeareth in his obseruation of that which followeth in the 23. verse: Doe this therefore that wee saie vnto thee, wee haue foure men which haue made a vowe, &c. Although it may bee, that these (he meaneth the foure men) wer as yet nouices, & that therefore their faith as yet were tender, and scarce well framed, whervpon the Doctors (or teachers) suffered them to performe the vow, that by ignorance they had rashly vowed.

These elders Act. 21. are here plainly called Doctors.

In these wordes, the Elders that befoze he called Iames and his colleagues, and of their doings gathered the rule and authoritie of the Pastors: he plainlie heere calleth Doctors and teachers. And therefore what kinde of Elders these were vnder Iames and the Apostles at Hierusalem, we neede seeke no further, it is manifest they were not gouernours that medled not with teaching, but with ouersight of doctrine, and with correction of manners and discipline onelie: so; as they were teachers, and beere taught, though not so wel: so, their chiefest meddling was with teaching. And that their selues testifie in the conclusion of their Oracion, saying: For as touching those of the Gentiles that haue beleeued, we haue written, decreeing that they should keepe no such thing, &c.

If our Brethren replie, that that decree went in the name not onelie of the Apostles and Elders, but also of the brethren, which in the verse before, Act. 15. 22. he calleth the whole Church: and yet, we cannot conclude hereon, that therefore the whole Church were teachers: Caluine (referring vs to that, which he noted on that decree) saith, on the 22. ver, Act. 15. Not without the singular grace of God was that tempest ceased, that the cause being well discussed, all should descend into the consent of the true doctrine. The modestie also of the common people is gathered herevpon, that after they had permitted the iudgement vnto the Apostles, & to the residue of the Doctors (or teachers): then also the people subscribed vnto their decree. The Apostles also on the other side, gaue a shewe of their equity, because they established nothing concerning the common cause of all the godlie, but the people beeing admitted therevnto. For, verilie, of the pride of the Pastors this tyrannie hath sprong, that those things which pertain to the common state of the whole Church, haue bene subiect (the people being thrust out) vnto the will, that I might not saie vnto the lust of a few men. But the Apostles and the Elders did prudentlie decree, that Judas and Silas shoulde bee sent, to the end the matter might bee lesse suspected.

Concerning this complaint we haue already answered: and let them giue the people no more than the notice and approbation, so that the debating and determining be referred to the authoritie of those that succede the Apostles, and the Elders, that are Doctors and Pastors, meddling only with such matters as are these, not with the affaires and authoritie of Princes: and we can be content to asseure the people no lesse, being such modest and godlie people as these were. But our question is now, what were these Elders? (For here are but three sorts reckoned by, the Apostles, the Elders, and the whole Church, or the brethren. Forsooth (still saith Caluine) the Doctors and the Pastors. And for other kind of Elders governing and not teaching among them, we heare as yet of none.

testimonie
for those Elders.
Phil. 4. v. 8.

But Danæus citeth another testimonie out of the Scripture, for prooof of these Elders, saying:

For they ought to haue that admonition of Paule alwaies before their eyes, that if there be anie thing honest, right and holie before GOD, they should inculcate (or often vrge) the same vnto the faithfull. Phi. 4. verse. 8. and it ought to take place in Gods Church,

This testimonie is so little seruing for these governing and not teaching Elders, that except they would haue vs thinke, the Epistle was onelie, or especiallie written vnto such Elders: I cannot see how it is more applicable vnto them, than vnto anie others, or howe it can bee proued heer vpon, that there were anie such Elders in that Church. First, the Epistle it selfe is written to none such, as appeareth by the first verse: Paule and Timothie the seruants of Iesus Christe, vnto all the Saintes in Christo Iesu, which are at Philippus, with the Bishoppes and the Deacons. There is none of these Elders not meddling with teaching, named. For although Beza and the Geneva Bible would include them in the name of Bishoppes, which is verie harde: notwithstanding (sith we haue heard, howe Caluine (even where he taketh all these names confusible) doth saie in his Institutions, Cap. 8. Sec. 42. But as concerning Bishoppes, and Elders, and Pastors, and Ministers, in that I haue called them without difference: I did it by the vse of the Scripture, which confoundeth these tearmes. For whosoever inioy the ministerie of the worde, vnto them it attributeth the title of Bishoppes. And heere to be addeth this testimonie for prooffe, Phil. 1. 2. 1. therefore, howsoever they would include Elders heere in the name of Bishoppes, yet can they vnderstand no such Elders, as Danæus and our Brethren pleade for, but such onelie as inioye the ministerie of the worde.

But what is there in this testimonie, Phil. 4. 8. that shoulde bee properlie pertaining to an Elders office? That which remaineth (Brethren) whatsoeuer things are true, whatsoeuer are waightie, whatsoeuer are righteous, whatsoeuer are pure, whatsoeuer are honest, if there bee anie vertue, if there bee anie praise: thinke of these things: which ye haue learned, and haue receiued, and haue heard, and haue seene in mee. Doe these things, and the God of peace shall be with you. Can anie thing bee gathered out of these wordes, that is peculiar to an Ecclesiasticall Elders office? Caluine sayth: Generall exhortations followe, which are stretched to the whole life. And yet if they were peculiar to Elders, and that they shoulde doe, all that which they learned, and receiued, and heard, and sawe in Saint Paule: When Caluine sayth, By this repetition of wordes he signifieth, that hee was continuall in preaching these things, as though hee shoulde saie, this was my doctrine, this was my tradition, this was my speech among you: And on these wordes: Yee haue seene in mee: but this is the first thing in a preacher, that hee shoulde not onelie speake with his mouth, but with his life, and with his goodnesse of his life get credite to his doctrine: Paule therefore worthilie getteth authoritie to his exhortation thereupon, that hee was a guide and maister of vertues with his life, no lesse than with his mouth: And therefore if this bee spoken to Ecclesiasticall Elders, and if they shoulde doe the lyke action: howe shoulde they not be such Elders, as taught not onelie with their lines, but with their mouths also, exhorting and preaching the doctrine? But what neede better testimonie, than Danæus against himselfe? When hee sayth: These Elders should inculcate this saying of Saint Paule vnto the faithfull: For, what else is this inculcation, but their often teaching of the people, the things contained in that sentence? But Danæus (belike not perceiuing how he confutes himselfe) proceedeth, saying:

tions for El-

Act. 20.

Aug. in hom.

30. hom. 5. &

But these Elders ought to watch both prinatlie by enerie house, and publikelie in the assemblie of the Church. Act. 20. verse. 20. Augustine there fore in his fiftie Homilies, Homilie the 5. and 7. teacheth, that that saying of Esaie, Crie, cease nor: pertaineth not onlie to the Bishoppes, but also to the Elders. For, when many mischeifes may be done at home: and they that corrupt the faithfull are wont also to enter into houses, as Paul saith, 2. Tim. 3. ve. 6. It is the office of them that watch, to looke also house by house, least either the good doctrine or the holie manners bee corrupted. But of those things that may be done amisse in houses, there is example, 1. Pet. 3. verse 3. But of those that edifie euill publiklie, there is example, 1. Cor. 14. verse. 34. and 35.

Not one of these places mencioneth anye such Elders, as are Ecclesiasticall gouernours and not teachers, neither can they be haied, but with violence, so them. The 20. of the Acts, we haue seene and seene againe to the full, how it is all of such Elders, as were teachers of the worde. The place in Augustine we haue likewise seene. And that of Esaie is so appurtenant for teachers and preachers of the word, that I am euen ashamed that so learned a man should (of all places) allege that, for not teaching Elders, which speaketh of such crying out, exalting the voice like a trumpet, and telling the people of their sinnes.

Esa. 58.

As for this, 2. Tim. 3. verse. 6. wherein Saint Paule hauing described the wicked hypocrites of these later dayes, that shoulde trouble the Church of God, he saith: For of these there are, that craftilie enter into houses, and leade women captiue, laden with sinnes, the which are lead with diuerse lusts, alwayes learning, &c. Whereupon saith Caluine, You woulde saie, that Paule heere of purpose painted out a lielic pourtraiture of Monkerie. But to omitt the name of Monkes: the notes themselues with the which Paule setteth out the false and counterfaite Doctors or teachers, are open inough. Their insinuation or creepings into householdes, theyr baites in taking women, theyr vn honest flatterie, their leading them about by diuerse superstitions. It behoueth vs to marke diligentlie these notes, if we desire to discerne betweene the vnprofitable drones, and the good ministers of Christ.

Difference
of the false teacher and true teacher

Here Caluine woulde haue vs diligentlie to marke the difference, betwene these false and counterfaite teachers, and the good Ministers of Christ: not betwene them and these Elders, that woulde haue Ecclesiasticall gouernment, and not meddle with teaching. For me thinkes, they rather seeme to resemble those Monkes, than anye Elders, that Saint Paule there woulde haue, to oppose themselues against these false teachers. For who shoulde better set himselfe against them, than a Bishoppe or an Elder that is a good Minister of Christ, and a true teacher: And therefore he willeth Timothie (being a teaching Elder,) to take notice of them, saying:

ing, verse 1: But knowe thou this, that in the last daies, perillous times shall approach, men shall bee louers of themselves, &c. And hauing described these wicked teachers: hee stirreth vp Timothie to oppose himselfe against them, verse 10. saying: But thou hast attained my doctrine, institution, purpose, faith, tollerance, loue, patience, &c.

And hereupon sayth Caluine: This argument also dooth hee vse to stirre vp Timothie, that he shall not come forth into the combat, a rude and vnskilfull young souldiour: beeing such an one as Paule himselfe had long time trained vp in his discipline. Neither onelie is doctrine handled, for the things that hee reckoneth vp together, doo adde no small waight, insomuch that in this sentence hee dooth paint out vnto vs the liuelie Image of a good Doctor (or teacher) to wit, such an one as informeth and instructeth his Disciples, not onelie with his speech, but openeth his breast also after a sorte vnto them, that they maye vnderstande, that the things which hee teacheth, hee teacheth them euen as he thinketh.

Here then are these two liuelie Images, the one of the false teacher, entering into houses, and corrupting them: the other of the good teacher, opposing himselfe against the false teacher. But betwixt a good teacher and false teacher of these houses; where is this Elder that is no teacher? Is there any thing either in the text, or that Caluine, or anie other god or badde interpreter alleadgeth, that makeeth for him?

As for the example, 1. Pet. 3. verse. 3. That things may bee done amisse at home: is nothing for p^{ro}ofe, that anie of these Elders, Ecclesiasticall gouernours and not teachers, or that anie their Segnorie, shoulde come into mens houses, and there take view of their wiues apparell, and controll it. Quoth Saint Peter (in giuing this sober and generall exhortation vnto women, saying: whose attire let it not bee outward in folding or breidring of their haire, in decking themselves with golde and ornature of vestiments) the w^oeth howe the graue and discreete Minister or Preacher, may giue priuate or publike exhortation, by the examples in the worde of God, when hee seeth a fault heerein. But not that he hath authoritie to goe into their houses, to ouerse with what apparell they trimme themselves withall. But whatsoeuer the Minister may doe, what is this to these Elders, that woulde bee maister controllers and rulers of euerie bodie, men and women, euen in their owne houses, but not teachers of them?

The other place, 1. Corinth. 14. 34. and 35. for the womens parte, wee haue mettelte well perused alreadie. As for gouerning Elders not teachers, to be their controllers, neither those verses, nor all the Chapter mentioneth anie. And why shoulde they not be controllers ouer the mennes faultes there mencioned, as wel as ouer the womens? But there is none such at all, that the Apostle there speaketh of, other than the ordinarie teachers not teachers chers, to whome the publike reprehension did belong. Which in the former cited Chapter, 3. Tim. 3. 16. and 4. 2. he maketh to pertaine vnto the teacher and Minister of the word of God, and not to anie gouerning Elder not teaching, who may better be called an vnpreaching Prelate, than anie of the Popish Bishops. Especiallie since Beza and the Geneva Bible giueth them the tearme of Bishoppes also, besides this of Presbyter, Priest, or Elder.

Danzus re-stimony for these Elders
out of Ia. 5.
and 14.

But Danzus hath yet one other testimonie for them, saying: But the Elders ought to watch both ouer the hoale and ouer the sicke, and afflicted by all manner of meane. For it is the office of the Elder to comfort the sicke, and to praie for them, & for other godlie also afflicted. James. 5. verse. 5. 14.

The fifth verse hath no mencion at all of anie Elders, nor medleth with anie watching ouer, either hoale or sicke. Except these Elders would be such, as of whom hee saith: Ye haue liued in pleasure on the earth, and in wantonnesse: ye haue nourished your hearts as in a daie of slaughter. I hope yet better then so, of their vnteaching Elders. But in the 14. ver. there indeed is mencion of better Elders. Where the Apostle saith: Is anie sicke among you? let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them praie for him, &c. Here the Elders of the Church are named. But whether these Elders were such, as medled not with the worde and Sacraments, but onelie with the discipline and gouernment of the Church: there is no mencion at all made by the Apostle.

these Elders
Danzus cotrarie to Caluine.

I knowe here what Caluine sayth, I comprehend generallie all those (sayth he) that were set ouer the Church to gouerne it. For not oulie the Pastors were called Elders, but those that were chosen out of the comon people, as it were censors or controllers, to defend the discipline. For euerie Church had as it were her Senate, chosen out of graue men, and of approued integritie. But because the manner was to choose chiefly them that were indued with more excellent gifts, therefore hee biddeth them call for the Elders, as in whom most of all, the force and grace of the holy Ghost shewed forth it selfe.

This is Caluines opinion for these Elders. Notwithstanding this is but his iudgement, and still consisteth all on this mere presupposall, that euerie Church had a Senate of such Elders. But wee neede no further confutation of that presupposall, than Danzus owne testimonie, that citeth this place of James for these Elders. For (as we haue heard) Danzus, on the other side of the lease sayde before: The second kinde of Elders was wont to bee ordained in euerie greater Citie onelie, in the which there was an ample and populous Church, and a great number of the saythful. Which if it were true but euen so farre soorth, then is Caluines saying not true, that euerie Church had as it were her Senate of these Elders. Albeit,
they

they both agree heerein, that Saint James meant such kinde of governing Elders as were not teachers. But howe can we make that good in Dan-nus, if euerie Church had not such Elders. And yet in euerie Church some sickned: but these Elders, by Danus testimonie were in fewe Churches: for there were but fewe such greater Cities and ample populous Churches, wherein great multitudes of the faithfull were: and therefore by Danus owne witnesse against himselfe, this rule of Saint James stretcheth not vnto these Elders, except in such few places, where hee supposeth they were: though he haue not, nor can proue it. But rules (especiallie those that be generall touching all men) are not made for few places.

Aretius
iudgement
of what Elders James speaketh.

And therefore this rule of Saint James was not for anie such Elders.
So that, much better than both these (in my simple opinion) is Aretius his iudgement vpon this place. Is there anie sicke among you? let him call for the Elders of the Church. The third place (sayth hee) is of the care of those that are sicke in the assemblie (or companie) of the faithful. But hee teacheth, that the manner of healing and comforting the sicke, ought to be made for the health of the sicke, with the fruite also of them that stande about him. Concerning the sicke partie, hee ought to call for the Elders of the Church, that is, of his companie or assemblie: at this daie wee shoulde call it, Picinia Seniores aliquos, some Seniores (or Elders) of the neighbour-hoode (or of the streete or village neere adioyning) with some Minister of the Church, among whome some Phisition may haue a roome. For neither do I here take the Seniors or Elders to be those anoynted onelie and shauen, which are sacrificers and Monkes, neither also an Ecclesiasticall Senate, quem quendam, whome of a certaine ill zeale, some goe about to represent. But I take the Seniors of the church to bee graue and godlie men in the whole assemblie. Whose godlineesse I knowe (or like of) whether they be laie men, or they bee in the Ministerie, or also they bee Phisitions, yea, or else otherwise. To conclude, I call the godlie and sound hearted the auncient men. For in these is greater experience of thinges, greater force of comforting, greater affection also, of hauing compassion, and more sounde counsailes than in young men.

The Elders
that James speaketh to be of no
one certaine
office either Ecclesiasti-
call or laie
persons.

Thus plainlie and simplie, sayth Aretius of these Elders, that S. James woulde haue the sicke partie, to send for his elderlie neighbours & friends, men of grauitie and experience, that can giue the sicke good counsaile. As so, governours of discipline, or controllers of manners, or an Ecclesiasticall Senate to be sent for, and to come to euerie mans house when he lieth sicke and in danger of death: what vse is there of them? Whereas of his acquaintance and good neighbours there may bee great vse, especiallie of the Pastorall Elders.

And therefore Hemingius sayth well, Accerses Præsbyteris tanquam eu-ma medicos, Let him send for the Elders, as for the Phisitions of the soule, to giue him some spiritual consolation out of the word of God, of the which then hee shal haue most neede, and to strengthen and confirme his faith and hope in Christ, to moue him to repentance, to patience, and to cal vpon God for the forgiveness of sinnes in his life passed, to perswade him to a ready-nesse to forsake the world and this transitorie life, and to desire (according to Gods will) to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, & to cal vpon him while his strength and vnderstanding, and memorie serueth him) to dispose of his worldlie goods, and make his wil, and with the assemblie to make the pub-like prayers to God for him: who sitter to doe all these things, than the Elders that are Ministers of the word?

Caluines
owne testi-monie, that these Elders were Ministers of a téporarie Sacrament, &
so teachers.

Besides, that Caluine maketh this anointing of him with oyle, in the name of the Lord, to haue bene a tempozarie Sacrament, saying: Verilie I graunt, that it was vsed for a Sacrament of the Disciples of Christe (for I assent not vnto them, that thinke it was a medicine) but euen as the veritie of this signe indured not but for a time, I saie, the signe was likewise tempozarie. If then this were a Sacrament seruing for that time: it seemeth so much the moze, that those Elders then were teachers, since the action of making the prayers ouer him, and of the anointing of him with oyle is attributed to those Elders. For, the publike or sollemne prayers, especially the ministracion of the Sacraments in the Church of Christ, doth principallie, and (as our Brethren themselues saie) dooth onelie belong to him, that is a teacher and Minister of the worde. And that it can bee no better than sacrilege, to separate the ministracion of preaching of the word, from the Sacraments, &c. and that a word or writing may be auailable without a seale, but neuer, a seale without a writing, page. 61. And that, where is no Preacher of the word, there ought to be no Minister of the Sacraments. Furthermore, it appertaineth to the dutie to make prayers, &c. page. 63.

With therefore these things are here ascribed to the doings of these Elders of the Church, that the sick partie is twilled to send for: is it not yet moze likelie than anie of al these opinions, that by these Elders are meant pastoral Elders? Other wise, how would not our Bre. owne wordes in this learned Discourse, beate downe Danæus, saying? Therefore in this behalfe, we haue had a great default so long time, to comit the administracion of the Sacraments to those men, who not onelie haue bene knownen to be vna-ble, but also haue ben forbidden to preach the word. page. 61. And what other were these Elders (by their discription of them) but such as medled not with preaching the word, nor it pertained at all vnto their office, but onely gouernment of discipline, & controlment of maners: And yet see now when they can finde them no where, rather than they should not bee found, they will call them to the making of the praieres ouer the sicke, and to the ministratiō of that temporarie Sacrament. Pea, our W^{te} these Learned Discourfers their selues in plaine wordes, page. 22 ascribe this saying of Iames, to the actiō and office of the Pastors. Since therfore, what kind of Elders these were (mencioned Iam. 5. 14.) the text expresse (other than by these coniectures) nameth not: nor it is agreed vpon among these learned men: What firme argumēt can be gathered hercon, for the prooofe of these gouerning & not teaching elders? If not rather (as we haue seen) far more probabilitie euerie way to the cleane contrarie, y^e they wer teaching Elders. And now, seeing y^e, as neither before in the authoritie, prooof, or place in anie of the acts or exāples of the Apostles, we find anie euident exāple, or plaine precept, or institutiō in the church of Christ, set forth in y^e holy Scriptures, of these Ecclesiasticall Elders, gouerning the discipline, & controlling the manners of the Church, but not meddling with teaching nor preaching of the word and doctrine, nor ministering of the Sacraments. Let vs now returne from them to our W^{te}. learned discourse, if they perhaps haue yet anie better prooofe after al these, for the authorizing and setting vp amongst vs, y^e Cōsistories & Segnories of these gouerning & not teaching Elders.

We haue heard how our W^{te}. haue alleaged the 14. of the Acts. ver. 23. Our brethr. vpon the which we haue seene Caluines iudgement to the contrarie, that returne for the Elders there mencioned were only pastoral Elders. We haue heard also proofe of their allegation, 1. Tim. 5. 17. and of the three things, that (they saie) wee to the for may learne thereon, & that the same testimonie inferreth none of all those mer allegation three things. And hereupon, because Caluine on the same testimonie citeth tion. Ambrose (which is cited also of Beza) I haue both examined the place in Act. 14. 23. Ambrose, and the other allegations of Beza out of Cyprian, and a number of other Fathers and histories for the search of these Elders. Which not yet finding, I haue returned to the Scripture, to search what places anie other of our W^{te} namelie Beza, Caluine, and Danzus (which chieslie write vpon this matter) haue alleaged. And not yet finding anie sufficient prooofe of the, till some other of our W^{te} shal bring better prooofe, or proue these places better, I am now come againe whers we began, to the 14. of the Acts, verse, 23. because our W^{te}. here will further yet againe reuiew the same.

And especiallie in the place before alleaged for election, there is great reason to leade vs to thinke, that the Elders for government, are as well The lear ned Dis. vnderstood, as the other for doctrine, because it is written in the same Pag. 85. place, That after they had ordained them Elders in euerie congregation by electi- & 86. on: as hauing set the Churches in perfect order, (which coulede not bee, except they had established discipline so well as doctrine) they committed them to Act. 14. 23. the Lord, in whom they beleueed.

This great reason is nothing but our W^{te} the great presuppos- Bridges. all, that except there were such Elders ordained, there were no perfectie order order set, nor discipline established in the churches. Which great reason lieth all on the great and common fallation, Pecunia principij, reasoning on that, as on a great and graunted principle, which is a greate and principall question. They might wel haue set the churches in perfect order, & haue established discipline in them, without ordaining anie Consistorie or Sennorie, of such Elders or gouernours as meddle not with teaching. For what would it haue hurt the perfection of order, & establishment of discipline in the churches, if all the Elders that they ordained, had bene teachers to (as Caluine sayth they were): Albeit Saint Luke in that place mentioneth not of anie perfection of orders, or of discipline established at all.

The text mentioneth not that the Apostles set the Churches in perfect order & established discipline.

But onelie sayth the text in this 23. verse here mencioned: And ordaining with the hands, Elders vnto them (Church) by Church, making prayers with fastings, they commended them vnto the Lord, on whome they beleueed. Did Saint Paule in all the Churches where hee went preaching (yea, though some of them were famous Churches, and in some of them he laie long, as at Corinth) set the churches in perfect order, and established discipline in them as well as doctrine? How then doth he write vnto the Corinthians of so many things, that (as it plainlie appeareth by his reproofing, teaching and ordering of them) wer not before set in such order, nor established: No, nor yet all things (as concerning the perfection of order, and establishment of discipline) were contained in his Epistles after wards written vnto them, but he saith: he would set an order of other things at his coming to them. 1. Cor. 11. 34. which we expound not (with the aduersaries of the Gospel) for matter of doctrine, but for order and discipline. And therefore it is not so great a reason, as shoulde leade our Brethren to thinke, that Paule and Barnabas tarrying so small a while in euery place, that then they went vnto, did set such perfect orders and establish discipline in those meane churches. But since our B. here doe bidge this place no further, than that there is great reason to leade vs so to thinke: and we see also some reason, to leade vs to thinke the contrarie: whether theirs or ours bee greater, yea, whether theirs bee anie great or small, and whether Caluine himselfe be not of force to ouer-rule this so slender a reason of theirs, saying, Not of some among them, but of all of them. I interprete Elders in this place, to bee those, to whome the office of teaching was inioyned: Which interpretation if it be true, then whether by anie reason they could be such Elders, as were gouernours onelie, and not teachers. I referre to the readers, yea, to our Brethrens owne) indifferent iudgement, and proceede to their second point of moderating these Elders.

The learned Dis.
Pag. 86.

The second point for moderation of the Elders authoritie, in such sort that their sentence may be the sentence of the Church, is this: that whe the Consistorie hath trauailed in examining of causes pertayning to Ecclesiasticall discipline, and agreed what iudgement ought to passe vpon the the matters, they propounde it to the whole multitude, that it maye bee confirmed by their consent.

Bridges.
This second point sheweth some what neerer to a moderation of the Elders authoritie, than the former did. But how agreeth this with the former moderation of them? For before, although they should be elected and chosen by the consent of the whole congregation: yet the whole church was to repose such confidence in them, that they commit vnto them their authoritie, not onely in hearing and examining, but also in determining of all matters, pertaining to discipline and gouernment in that congregation. If therefore these Elders shall haue authoritie to doe all this, how is it here sayd, that when the consistorie hath trauielled in examining of causes, pertaining to Ecclesiasticall discipline, and agreed what iudgement ought to passe vpon the matters: they propounde it to the whole multitude, that it may be confirmed by their consent. If the whole multitude haue before hand committed vnto them their authoritie, to determine all matters: why should they bee brought to the whole multitude backe againe, to haue that confirmed, that before was determined, and that by their owne authoritie was committed vnto these Elders to determine? And what authoritie haue they reserved and lefte vnto themselves herein, to confirme by their consent, after these committies haue determined the matter? For what if the whole multitude shall dissent? Haue they all, or some, or the greater part of them, a negative voice, to dash all that these Elders haue before determined? And how is not this then a plaine Popular state, when in all matters, none excepted, not onely pertaining to discipline, but also to gouernment, the chiefe & last authoritie consisteth in the confirmation, no not yet of the prince, but of the whole multitude. We feared before, the dominion of a few persons in this Seniorie. And therefore our Brethren to moderate & reduce them ad idem, to the gouernment of the best men, which our brethren call men of godlinesse and wisdom: they haue now so moderated the matter, that they haue brought all ad idem, to the popular regiment not onely of the common people, but of the whole multitude. And all vnder pretence, that the Bishops before did some things more than they should, separated from other by themselves, in the Ecclesiasticall discipline. And now they haue so excluded this separate gouernment of the Bishops, that withall, they haue cleane cut off the Monarchie and supreme gouernment of the Prince and all, yea, of these Seniors determination and all, and giuen all matters pertaining to the discipline and gouernment of euery particular congregation, to the assemblie of the common people, yea, to the finall consent and confirmation of the whole multitude of the congregation.

It is much, to debase the authoritie and gouernment of these matters to the popular state. But I feare verie much a worse state excommunication. state, and more horrible confused. For why may we not here again feare

I. Cor. 5. as horrible confusion in the whole multitudes dissent or consent in confirmation of that which these Seniors haue determined: as our Brethren before feared it, in hearing and determining such matters? But to put vs out of this feare, and to confirme this confirmation of the whole multitude, that the people can confirme this themselves without any horrible confusion: our brethren allage vs an example.

The lear- Whereof Saint Paule speaketh, touching the execution of excommuned disc- nication (because the fact was manifest) *When you are gathered together
pag. 86 with my spirite in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, and with the power of our Lord Iesus Christ, to deliuer such a one vnto Satan.*

I. Cor. 5. 4. Although this example is but of one matter, whereas the question is of al Bridges. matters (for so sayd our Brethren before, that there ought to be in euery Church a Consistorie or Segnorie of Elders or gouernours, which ought to haue the hearing, examination, and determiniug of al matters, pertaining to discipline and gouernment of that congregation) and so this example touching the execution of excommunication reacheth not home: yet is this example so little to the present purpose, that it is rather cleane contrarie. Which example if it should directlie proue, that which our B. affirmed (for so their wordes would seme to inferre, saying: Whereof S.
Paule speaketh touching the execution of excommunication) they should proue this: that when the Consistory hath trauailed in examining of causes pertaining to Ecclesiastical discipline, & agreed what iudgemēt ought to passe vpon the matters: they propound it to the whole multitude, that it may be confirmed by their consent. So that this example of some matter at the least, heard, examined, and determined by the Consistory, & by them propounded to the whole multitude, to be confirmed by their consent, might drawe neerer to their purpose. But can they shew vs any such example, whereof Saint Paul speaketh? As for this touching the execution of excommunication: Who did execute the same, and excommuni-cate this incestuous person? Did not S. Paule himselfe, by the power of our Lord Iesus Christ giuen vnto him? What doe they make Saint Paule an Elder not teaching? And did he it not first alone? At least wise, without any Consistorie of the church of Corinth ioyned with him? As he himselfe saith, ver. 3. For I verilie, being absent in bodie, but present in spirit, haue already iudged as present, him that hath so done this thing. In which words he plainly declareth that he had passed the sentence of excommunication vpon him, before he wrote to the therof. Neither doth it appeare that any of their Co-sistorie ioyned with him, in pronouncing that his iudgement on him. Yea, he saith, that although he was in bodie absent from them, yet because hee was in spirit as present with them, his iudgement should stand as effectual, as though he had ben bodily present, at the denouncing of his sentence.

And

S. Paule by his separate
authoritie
gaue sentence of excommunication before the Corinthians knew of his doing.

And who were these that he writeth thus unto, what he had done? Was it to a Consistorie among the Corinthians, to make relation unto them of his doing, and then they to take upon them the hearing, examining & determining of the matter, and then to propound it to the whole multitude? This had bene yet some what nearer to our Brethrens moderation. But here is no such order. Paule first both the deede, and that immediatlie, both in his absence, and unwitting to them of his proceeding. Which done, he writeth not thereof to anie Consistorie or Segnorie of Elders or Governours over them, nor in anie place of either of his Epistles to them, he maketh anie mention of inking of anie such among them, nor yet Saint Luke, that mencioneth (Act. 18. verse. 11.) how he tarried a yere and a halfe, teaching the word of God (and planting a Church) among them. But he writeth of this matter (as of the residue) to them to whom he writeth the whole Epistle indefinitely, to the Church of God beeing at Corinthus, sanctified in Christ Iesu, called Saintes, with all that call vpon the name of our Lord Iesu Christ, in all places, both their Lord and ours. 1. Cor. 1. 2. So that, hee writeth to the wholde multitude. But did he write unto them thereof, to haue his dooing so confirmed by their consent, that if they would not haue consented to this his manner of excommunicating the person before hand by himselfe alone, but that he shoulde first haue made them p'uiue thereto, or euer he proceeded so farre, that then vpon this their dissenting, though not for the person & matter, yet for the manner of his proceeding, his iudgement shoulde haue ben frustrate & reuerled? No, but his signification thereof vnto them, was rather to commaund the to obey his sentence, and to put the same in execution, as our Brethren saie well herein, touching the execution of excommunication, so when they were gathered together, as Saint Paule had, and that some Pastor or Minister among them, did before the whole multitude pronounce this sentence, which Saint Paule had giuen forth against the incestuous person: they all approued it, & so confirmed Saint Pauls former sentence of excommunication.

But our Breth. adde this parenthesis (because the fact was manifest) wherefore they adde this, they doe not shew. But the more manifest the fact was, the lesse neede had the Apostle to haue proceeded so far, if in a manifest fact, an Ecclesiasticall iudge may not p'ceede separatly his selfe to the sentence of excommunication, without the consent of a Segnory of that Congregation. But although the fact heere was manifest, yet the wickednesse of the fact was not manifest inough vnto them. At leastwise, not this manner of the punishment for it, vntill Saint Paule did thus reprove them of it, and thus p'ceede against it. What had it ben neuer so manifest, what doth that giue him authoritie to deale so farre therein separatly by himselfe, without and before anie authoritie of theirs ioyned with him, but onely to make them after ward to put that in executi-

nication.

on, that he had before overruled, & iudicially concluded vpon. Since therefore this was a good excommunication, & that all they could not reverse this sentence, as otherwise passed than it ought to have bene, because they ioyned not in the doing of it, but onelie in the obedience of putting the same in execution, as he commanded them: and withall. Since this was not written as an information to any Senate, Consistorie, or Segnorie of Seniors, or of governing Elders among them, but written as a charge to the whole multitude: What is this for the p^{ro}ofe of anie such Elders? Either else to inferre, that no excommunication in a manifest or not manifest fact, can be pronounced by a Bishop, or by a Pastor, except a Consistorie of that Congregation, shall first trauaile in examining the cause, and then determine and agree, what iudgement ought to passe vpon the matter: & then also propound it before the whole multitude, that it may bee confirmed by their consent: and last of all, the Bishop, Pastor, or Minister to denounce it. For this is the discipline that our Brethren would haue out hereon.

But who may not see, that this is to haue this example cleane contra-rie? If they would directly gather aught hereupon, they should gather, that in manifest facts and crimes the Bishop or Pastor, though in his absence, may iudge, determine, & pronounce the sentence of excommunication, and by the authoritie of our Lord Iesus Christ committed vnto him, may command the whole multitude, Church, or Congregation, or anie Con-sistorie of them, if they haue anie, to gather themselves together with his spirit, and charge them in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that they fulfill, obey, and execute his sentence, in deliuering such an excommunicated person to Sathan, that is, exclude him from the fellowship and communion of the faithfull, by separating themselves from his company, & him from theirs: but this would cleane dash all the imagined authoritie of their governing Segnorie, if they should become such executioners onelie vnto the sentence of the Bishop or Pastor, and that in his absence also. he being the iudge and determiner of the matter.

But what is this anie more than al the residue, for the p^{ro}ofe of any such Ecclesiastical Elders in the Church of Corinth, as were Gouvernours onely, and not Teachers? Of the which point (so much bzged and sought for) we haue hether to seene, not one testimonie nor example. But our B^r. will now, and God before, go to higher & more important p^{ro}oues hereof.

Verily I saie vnto you, whatsoeuer you shall binde vpon earth, shall be bound in heauen. In which saying of our Sauour Christe, this word Congregation, is not so largelie taken, as in other places for the whole multitude, but for the chosen assemblie of Elders.

Bridges

BUT Brethren heere woulde proue their Consistorie of ruling Seniors, out of Christs wordes, Math. 18. v. 17. which if they shall be able to proue, God forbid, but we shoulde bee as readie to yeeld. And if they cannot proue it, I woulde wish our Brethren to take good heede, howe they waxe so bolde, not to feare to wrythe Christs owne wordes. Which least wee also might mistake, let vs set them downe moze fullie than our Bre. doe, Math. 18. 15

But if thy brother shall sinne against thee, goe and rebuke him betweene thee and for these him alone. If he shall heare thee, thou shalt winne thy brother. But if he shall not heare thee, take yet with thee one or two, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, euery word may stande. But if he shall neglect them, tell the Church: but if so be also he shall neglect the Church, let him bee to thee as an Ethnick or a Publicane. Verely I say vnto you, whatsoeuer ye shall binde vpon earth, shall be bounde in heauen, and whatsoeuer ye shall lose vpon earth, shall be losed in heauen. Againe I say vnto you, if two of you shal consent vpon earth, of all thinge: whatsoeuer they shall aske, it shal be done vnto them of my Father which is in heauen. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.

Where first the grounde of the matter (vpon which Christ spake these wordes, that our Bretheren este) is priuate offence. And therefore, first he willet, (as our Bretheren say well therein) priuate admonition to be made. Which if it shall be neglected, then that the partie offended re-proue the offender, before the witness of one or two besides themselves. And then it followeth, if he shall not heare them, (inferring that they shoulde also admonish him) that then he shoulde tell the Church or Congregation. Where (say our Brethren) This worde Congregation is not so largely taken, as in other places, for the whole multitude, but for the chosen assemblie of Elders. This is but our Brethrens collection & sup-posall, which they can neuer be able to proue. For that Christe euer be-sed the word Church in that sense, for a chosen assemblie of Elders out of the Church: and as easie had it bene for Christe, & much more plaine for vs, if he had sayde, Tell the Elders of the Church. But his meaning is manifest, that the partie iniured shoulde reueale the offence before the assemblie of the whole multitude. For why might not the whole multitude heare it? And either severally from among them, or all of them by the Minister, or by some other appointed thereunto, giue the partie offending a publike admonition, but that it must needs be done by a Consistorie of gouerning Elders? Neither doth he say here, that if the admonition be neglected, that then the Church, or in the Churches name, a Con-sistorie of Seniors, or the publike Minister shoulde excommunicate him: but onely, let him be as an Ethnick or Publicane vnto thee. Wherein he rather seemeth to giue the partie offended leaue, to account or shunne him as an excommunicated person, than to giue any commaundement, that the Church shoulde so procede against him. And yet if it bee gathered thereon, (as it may also well be, and is collected,) because he hath despised the Churches authoritie, and seemeth remediable vnto the Church: what necessitie is there, that this censure of excommunication must be pronounced against him by a Consistorie of certaine chosen Seniors, and not by the Bishop, nor yet by the Pastorall Elder of that Congregation?

But see here the flexible interpretations of our Brethren to serve their fancies. Before, when they would prove the Pastor could do nothing without the consent of the Church, and gathering together of the servants of Christes householde; they alleadged that which immediately followeth this text here cited: If two of you consent upon earth, upon any matter, whatsoever ye shall aske, it shall be granted to you of my Father, which is in heaven. For wheresoever two or three bee gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. Where they make but three, yea but two to be the Church, and to have the Churches authoritie. Pag. 81. & 82. And applying this to their Consistorie, Where two of you consent upon earth, &c. It will fall out, that since the Bishop or Pastor can doo nothing without the consent of the Consistorie, nor the Consistorie but with the consent of the Bishop or Pastor: if the Bishop or the Pastor be one, how manie shall make up this Consistorie, when they be but two in the whole, that (as Christe saith) have consented upon any matter? Is there any more than one? But now, where two or three are reckoned up, even in the same place: here two or three is but private admonition, and the Church is but the chosen Seniors of the Church. And thus they enlarge and restraine the wordes of our Sauour Christe, rather after their owne humours and deuises, than that any necessitie or probabilitie of the place, doth so to consider them. But to confirme this their construction of Christes wordes, our Brethren procede, and say,

For our Sauour Christe, in that worde alludeth vnto the assemblie of Elders that was among the Iewes, which they called (but corruptlie) of a Greeke word Synedrion, which signifieth a Counsell or Consistorie, Synedrion, which had the hearing and determining of all difficult & weightie matters among the Iewes, the like whereof he willed to be established in his Church, for administration of government. For seeing it was first instituted by God for government of his Church in the old Lawe, as hath bene shewed before out of Num. 11. 6. although it was shamefully abused by the wicked Iewes: our Sauour Christe translateth it into his Church also in the newe Testament. And the name of Elders dooth most aptlie agree vnto them, that be Gouvernours in the Church now, even as it did to the Auncients of Israel. So that the Pastors seeme to haue borrowed the name of Elders, especiallie in respect of their government.

Still our Brethren feede themselves with their owne humours, and would feede vs also with mere winde and allusions, if not rather illusions of their owne conceites. Bearing vs in hande, that Christe alludeth to the assemblie of the Elders that was among the Iewes called the Sanedrion. What a straunge illusion is this, to imagine these allusions out of Christes wordes:

They

They say they will proue, that there ought to bee a Consistorie of Elders in euery Church for governing the same. But howe will they proue this? It is manifest by the commaundement of our Saujour Christe. Where is this manifest? Christe sayth, Tell the Congregation. But Christe meanes not there, the whole multitude, but a chosen assemblie of Elders. And is this commaundement come but to a meaning? And howe proue they that he meant such an assemblie of Elders? He alludeth to the assemblie of Elders among the Iewes, that was called the Sanedrim. And is this meaning againe come to an allusion? And howe proue they that Christ alluded to that Sanedrim? The Sanedrim had the hearing and determining of all difficult and weightie matters among the Iewes, the like whereof he willed to be established in his Church, for the administration of government. And where willed he the like to be established in his Church? For seeing it was first established in his Church in the olde Lawe, Christe translated it into his Church in the newe Testament. And where made he this translation? The name of Elders dooth most aptly agree to them that bee Governours in the Church nowe, euen as it did to the Auncients of Israel, so that the Pastours seeme to haue borrowed the name of Elders, especially in respect of their government.

And is all this in the ende come to the Pastors, and to their name onely of Elders, and that to the seeming whence they borrowed their name? Here were great matters promised, such as if they could be substantially proued, must needs ouer-rule all this question. For we are nowe come to the verie head & fountain of the matter. Our B² here pretend not so much any longer the ancient practise of the Church, nor the testimonie of the Fathers, neither yet the examples of the Apostles, but the verie originall & institution of Christe himselfe, willing & commaunding this Segniorie to be translated from the Synagogue of the Iewes, and to be perpetuallie ordeined and established in his Church, & in euery Congregation of the same. If this now can be proued; there is no further reasoning on it, we must needs yeeld; or els we should be found to resist God, and to haue no part in Iesus Christe. But if this be but onely our B² mere imagination, & that Christe neither made anye such translation; nor willed or commaunded anye such matter; nor hath anye such words, or such meaning, as may enforce anye such a thing, or anye allusion of it, or of the like vnto it, but that the thing it selfe, which they their selues woulde applie the wordes of Christe vnto, were most different and cleane contrarie from the Seniors, which vnder the name thereof they woulde erect: nor their selues could pretend (whatsoener they entend) to haue the like erected; which if they should, they could not, without the great alteration & manifest danger of all Christian Princes estates and governments, and of all their Lawes,

Policies and Common-weales: what shall we then thinke, not so much of the great overthrowing of our Brethren; as of the full stay and resolution of our selues, from all these deuices and casting thus about, to take some ground and warrant for these Seniors?

Chrysostom

And first for Christes wordes, Tell the Church. Here he plainlie speaketh of the Church, but of no Synedrion, or Sanedrion, nor any of the auncient Fathers (that I can finde) doe so expound his wordes, nor gather any such meaning of them. Chrysostome saith, Tell the Church:

Hierome.

that is to say, the Bishops and Presidents, but of Sanedrion or Consistorie he maketh no mention. Neither said he (saith Chrysostome) vnto the Bishop binde this man with bondes, but if thou shalt binde him. Hierome upon these wordes, but if he wil not heare the Church, saith: Hee giueth power vnto the Apostles, that they which are condemned of such, might knowe that the sentence of man is confirmed by the sentence of God. Hilarie indede maketh an allusion of this word, the Church, vnto

last.

the comming of Christe, but not to any Sanedrion or Senate, but rather contrarie, in ascribing the keyes to the Apostles. Theophylact expoundeth it as doth Chrysostome: and as for the Churches excommunication he thinketh Christe speaketh not of it, but onely saith: If thou, saith he, being offended, holdest him which hath done thee iniurie as a Publicane and Heathen, hee shall bee so holden also in heauen: but if thou lovest him, that is, if thou forgiuest him, it shall be also forgiven him in heauen. For not onely those thinges that the Priestres doo lose are losed: but whatsoeuer we also being iniured, shall either binde or lose, the same shall be also bound or losed. So that he applyeth this either to the Priestres action, or to the priuate partie iniured. The olde Glossie expoundeth it thus: Tell the Church: that is, the whole Church, that he may sustein the greater shame.

Vatablus.

As for the late Writers, Vatablus expoundeth these wordes, Tell the Church, that is the assemblie or publike Congregation or the multitude.

Aretius.

And so saith Aretius, The third degree hath a prouocation to the whole Church, that is vnto the assemblie of the faithfull, whereof ye are members. But the Church is the assemblie of the faithfull, wherein the word of Christ, and the Sacraments are rightlie administred. This forme afterward the Apostles followed, 1. Cor. 5. 2. Cor. 2. But neither of those Epistles, neither that matter was writtten to any chosen Consistorie, but to the whole multitude. Munsterus saith, Die Ecclesia. Let his frowardnesse be shewed to the Church. And if he shal not heare the Church being warned of manie, let him be holden of them as an Ethnicke and a Publicane. And whatsoeuer they shall so binde, shal be holden bound in heauen, that is, whome they hauing so warned shall haue cast out of their companie, they also shall bee holden cast out before the Father, and againe whom they shall lose and receiue being penitent into their promises on Companie, that shalbe ratified with the Father. Of this power of bin- Mat. 18, ding and losing, that is, of thrusting out of the Church, and receauing into the same, we haue said somewhat before ca. 16. ~~where also he sayd~~ : But for that which followeth of the keies, it hath this sence. By the kingdome of heauen, is vnderstood, the Church of Christ, and this is opened by the key of Gods word. But the kingdom of heauen is opened to the beleeuers, that is, forgiuenes of sinnes, and eternall life is promised by the word of God. And this is to forgiue sinnes, as contrariwise to them that beleue not, the key of heauen is shut by the word, that is, remission of sinnes is denounced. So that all this excomm. is referred to the denouncing of the Minister of the word : and this execution of thrusting out, to the Church. And so saith Bucer : But and if he shall contemne this, let the frowardnesse of this man sinning, and not willing to repent, be shewed to the Church, that hee may the third time be admonished of the whole companie among whom he is conuersant.

and

But Caluine expoundeth (these words, Tell the Church) farre otherwise : Quaritur quid per nomen Ecclesie intelligat, &c. It is demanded (saith he) what he meaneth by the name of the Church? For Paule commandeth it not of any chosen nuber, but of the whole assembly of the faith-full, to excommunicate the incestuous Corinthian, 1. Cor. 5. b. 6. And therefore, it may probably seeme, that the iudgement heere, is referred to the whole people. But because as yet, there was no Church which had giuen her name to Christ, nor any such manner appointed. but the L. himselfe speaketh, according to the vsuall and receaued custome : there is no doubt, but that he alludeth to the order of the olde Church. Even as also in other places, he applieth his speech, vnto the knowen custome.
 When as he commaundeth the gift which we will offer, to be left at the altare, vntill we shall be reconciled with our offended brother. Mat. 5. d.
 23. There is no doubt, but that out of the present and legall forme of the worship of God, he woulde teach vs, that wee can not orderly pray nor offer any thing vnto God, so long as wee are at discorde with our bretheren. So now therefore, he looked vpon the accustomed discipline of the Iewes : because it shoulde haue bene absurde, to haue proposed the iudgement to the Church, which as yet was no Church. Furthermore, where the power of excommunication appertained to the Iewes that were Seniors, which sustained the person of the whole Church : aptly dooth Christ say, that those which sinned, shoulde then at the length be publikely brought forth vnto the Church, if proudly they contemne the private admonitions, or that they elude them scoffingly. We knowe, that from the time the Iewes returned from their exile in Babylon, the censure or controllment of manners and of doctrine, was committed vnto a chosen Councill, which they called sinhedrim, Mat. 28. in Greeke synagoga (a Counsel, Selsion, or Assemblie of Senators or Iudges). This gouernment was lawfull and approoued of G O D, and this was a bridle to retaine in dooing their duetie the frowarde, and such as woulde not bee taught. If anie shall except that in the Age of Christe, all thinges were corrupted and peruerter, insomuch, that nothing ought lesse to haue bene accounted the iudgement of the Church, than that tyrannie: the aunswere is easie, although the manner were then corrupted and peruerter, notwithstanding Christe dooth worthelie praise the Order, such as it was in times past, de-liuered of the Fathers. But when as a little after he erected a Church, taking away the corruption, hee restored the pure vse of excom-municating. But there is no doubt, but the manner of discipline which flourished vnder the kingdome of Christe, succeeded in the place of the olde discipline: and verelie, when as the prophane Gentiles also helde a shaddowed custome of excommunication, it appeereth, this was euen of God engrafted from the beginning in the mindes of men, that if there were anie impure and defiled, they shoulde bee put backe from the sacred thinges. It hadde bene a foule thing therefore and a shamefull, for the people of G O D, to haue bene altogether voyde of that discipline, whereof some steppes remained among the Gentiles. But that which was kept vnder the Law, Christe hath passed ouer vnto vs, because the reason (or manner) is common vnto vs with the auncient Fathers. For, neither was it the counsell of Christe to sende his Disciples to the Synagogue, which when as in her bosome she gladly nourished filthie flatteries, shee excommunicated the true and simple worshippers of God: (whereof wee haue example in that man that was blinde from his natiuitie.

Iohn 9. f. 34.) But hee warned, that the order shoulde be holden in his Church, which long agoe was holilie instituted vnder the Law.
 If anie either stubbornlie refuse the former admonitions, or by going on in his former vices, doo shew himselfe to contemne them, when as with witnesses brought hee hath bene warned the seconde time: Christe commaundeth him to bee called to the iudgement of the Church, that is, vnto the Sessions of the Seniors, there to bee more greuouslie admonished, as it were by publike autho-ritie, that if hee reuerence the Church, hee may submit himselfe and obey.

Thus sayth Caluine for the prooffe of this Segniorie, to be authorized, instituted, and commaunded, in these wordes of our Saviour Christe, Tell the Church. Whose interpretation, Beza, Stephanus, in his newe Glosse alleadging also these reasons of Caluine, besides

Danzus

Danzus, and diuers other of our Brethren since, haue followed, and moze at large toged. But because Caluine beganne this interpretation (as I take it) and all their Discourses chiefly stande on these his Reasons and Assertions: therefore I haue so fullie and wholly sette him downe.

Caluine the principall interpreter of Christs words for a consistory of Elders.

And if we shall finde that this his Interpretation, and these his Reasons proue not this matter: we must crame the same pardon, that their selues yelde to Beza, and to other our Reuerend and Learned Brethren, when they also in their interpretations, dissent from Caluine, or Caluine from other godlie, ancient, and approved Fathers. Otherwise, of all the excellent Interpreters of our Age, I professe the honour of Caluine with the chiefest, bying forth proofe and reason of his Sentence. Let vs nowe therefore a while consider, howe he proueth this interpretation of the worde Church, to be here necessarilie vnderstoode, for a Consistorie of these Seours.

And first he confesseth that the former place, 1. Corinthians 5, concerning The excommunication of the incestuous Corinthian, (a place which our Brethren applies to this Consistorie,) was spoken of Saint Paule to the whole assemblie and multitude of the people, and not to anie chosen number of them. So that, that place is in this place cleere acquitted from this Consistories excommunication.

The examination of these proues of Caluine.

The incestuous person not excom. by a Consistorie of the Church.

But if Christe hadde here before (as Caluine sayeth) sette downe an order, that excommunication shoulde bee made by a Consistorie or Sesion of such Elders, as Caluine here pleadeth for: howe can wee thinke that Paule woulde haue dealt herein with the whole multitude of the people, and not with a certaine number chosen out of them, for the gouernance of such matters? And therefore this is one good steppe to proue, that here Christe sette downe no such order.

But Caluine woulde vaine this but to a probable Argument, That because Saint Paule referreth it to the whole number, and not to anie chosen number, therefore it is likeliethat Christe also heere should so referre it. But Caluine thinketh not this Argument of anie force. And whie?

Forsoothe, because then as yet there was no Church that did professe Christe, nor anie such manner ordeined. And lesse reason (as I thinke) to gather it on this place, that this name Church shoulde here signifie a Segniorie or a certaine number chosen out of the Church, when there was yet no such order in the Church. And yet, there was a Church of Christe, euen when Christe spake these things. But the Corinthians and diuerse other Churches afterwards, did both openly professe the name of Christe, and had Orders also among them. If therefore this order of Discipline for the Government of Seniors, had bene here of Christe founded and ordeyned: Saint Paule woulde neuer haue broken it, at leaste, if he had thought it necessarie. Except we shoulde excuse him by ignorance: but that hadde bene too grosse an excuse in him, if this hadde bene here ordeyned, and that so necessarie, as our Bretheren and Caluine do pretend the same to be.

Bucer writing upon these wordes, Tell the Church: alleadgeth the same reason that Caluine here doth, that There was no such order in the Church, when Christ spake these wordes. But what? Doth he gather thereupon, that Christ had an allusion to the Seniors of the Iewes? No such thing. Moreouer that (saith he) Tell the Church: let no man vnderstande it thus, as though it were of Christ commanded, to accuse him in the publike Sermon of them that come together to heare the word of God, that shall haue despised two admonitions, and then to haue him there openly reprehended of the preacher: for when Christ taught these things, there was no such face of the Church. Furthermore the power of binding and loosing is not giuen, except to them that come together in the name of Christ, and that in a certaine order, and those going before whome the holy Ghost hath ordeined in the Church, the Pastours and the Bishops. Whereupon Paule woulde namely also haue those to exercise this power, that are gathered together in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and his spirite present with them. 1. Corinthians 5. Now our meetings together are yet too impure: and truly there is a small number of them, that haue wholly giuen themselves to Christ. Neither is it lawfull, by reason of the publike peace, to expell from the assemblies of the Church those that are not tried, Wherefore in the publike assemblies of the church (as for the most part at this day the matter goeth) excommunication can not publikely bee exercised, except where the Lorde hath bestowed such grace, that the greater part of the whole people, with the Magistrate shoulde bee conuerted vnto Christe with a full heart. Where that is not graunted, it is necessarie, that they which haue receaued Christe more fully, reduce this most holy and most healthfull institution of Christe among themselves, and whosoeuer of their familiars or neighbours, or by other meanes they haue ioyned to them, which haue giuen their name to Christe, that diligentlie and frellie they admonishe them. And when anie shall proudly contemne their admonitions, they shoulde declare the contemners of the admonition vnto the Church, which they haue among themselves, either of the companie of their neighbourhoode, or otherwise of familiarity, or to conclude by reason of kindred or family. Which Church if they shall continue to contemne: shall declare the matter to the common Ministers of the whole Church, that they also in the name of the whol church, may warne the. And if they shal go on to contemne the word of the Lord, they shal also excommunicate them, or else the selfe same Church in which they are peculiarly known and familiar, shall then not admit them to the holy communion, vntill the Lord shall restore vnto vs a iust policy in the Church, and a true censure. But howsoever all thinges are yet mixed together and perturbed, notwithstanding if the Ministers of the Worde will with a good fidelity imploy themselves in their office, they shall easilie restore the mosse part of the Christian Censure, without any disturbance or cutting in sunder of the Church, which a faythfull Minister of Christe will by no meanes bring in, who knoweth that to him all power is giuen in the Church to edification, not to destruction: and that it is more appertaining to his office, from euery place to gather them together vnto the kingdome of God, yea the blinde, the deafe, the weak, than to driue them out of it. Of the true moderation of the ecclesiasticall censure, S. Augustine wrot many thinges against the Donatistes. But the cheefest place of this matter is in his thirde booke against the Epistle of Permenian. Wherein this man of God mosse prudently gaue charge, of the correction and excommunication of the euill persons that seeme to be in the Church. This place cheefelie at this time were of vs with singuler deligence to bee reade and throughly weighed.

Thus writeth also Bucer on this matter, towher he complayneth most of the lacke of this Discipline, and towher hee somewhat agreeth with Caluine, in allenging this reason, That when Christ spake those words, there was no face of a Church that professed his name. And yet both he so litle gather hereupon, this vnnecessary consequence, that Christe alluded to any Seniory among the Iewes, to be remiued among the Christians, when they shoulde haue Discipline in the Church, that hee acknowledgeth by the name of the Church nothing else, but (as the name importeth) the whole congregation. Neither yet that the whole congregation shoulde excommunicate, other wise than not to permitte the man to receiue the Communion, but the common Ministers of the church onely to denounce the excommunication. And leaste we shoulde understand thereby, any Seniorie not teaching the worde: he declareth withall, that they be the onely Ministers of the Worde, and that to them, and to their office, the exercise of the power of binding and loosing is committed, though the power in generall by the churches.

But Caluin sayth, that in the name of the Church, the Lord did speak, as though it were of the vsuall and receiued mannes.

The Ministers office and power in the church.

Bucer refers vs to Aug. for excommunication.

reasons on Math. 18
if he so did: then he spake of the present state either of the true Church, among those few that professed his name: or of the Iewes Synagogue. But Caluin saith after, that it was not the counsell of Christ to send his disciples to the Synagogue. But to allude vnto the old order of the church, and not to the present order, had not bene to speake according to the vsuall and receiued manner: why should we not therefore rather thinke that Christ spake of such order as should be after ward bled in the Church among the Christians: eyther for such states and times as the church was in, or to continue: then of such order, as eyther in the olde time had bene, or at that present was in the Synagogue among the Iewes:

The admission of this allusion, inferreth no perpetuall rule of a like Consistory.

Calu. owne example, overthrowes this perpetuity.

But now, if wee should graunt to Caluine and to our Brethren, that Christe alluded in these wordes, vnto the assembly of Elders that was among the Iewes: is this ynough also to inferre, that the Law or rule that Christe prescribeth, must stretch to the establishment and continuance of the same order, or to the creation and Institution of a like order, as that was, whereunto in these wordes, he alluded? if this be a good argument, let vs see the force of it, euen in the present example, whereof Caluin himselfe giueth an instance.

There is no doubt (saith he) but that Christe alludeth vnto the order of the church, euen as also in other places, he fitteth his speech vnto the knowne custome, when hee biddeth that the gift which we will offer, shoulde bee left at the Altar. Math. 5. d. 23. There is no doubt but that hee woulde teach vs out of the present and legall forme of the worship of God, that wee can not orderly pray nor offer any thing to God, so long as we are at strife with our Brethren. These wordes are indeede apparent, to be an allusion of these tearmes, Altar, gift and offering, to the present and legall forme, nor can be vnderstoode otherwisse, as the word church may, which is more properly bled among vs christians, than euer it was among the Iewes. Whereas the wordes Altar, gift, and offering, were more proper to the Iewes than vnto vs. But doth it followe, that because Christe in setting downe this rule of reconciliation, alludeth (for the plainer vnderstanding of the people) to such speeches of Altar, gift, and offering, as were then more vsuallly receiued and knowne among the, that therefore he ment withal, to establish and carry away in his rule, the same manner of Gods worship at an Altar, by a gift and offering as was then vsed, receiued & known among them? If it do not in this present instance, that Caluine himselfe bringeth in (as it is most clear it doth not): can Caluine then, or any of our learned Br. or at the word infer, that if Christ did allude in the term of Church to an Elderhippe or consistory among the Iewes, in prescribing his rule of Reconciliation or excommunication, that therefore, hee continued, or renewed, or constituted the same, or the like order among the Christians? Or, if he looked vpon their Discipline, that that therefore he ordeined the like to continue. for sure? did Christe esta- reasons on blish every thing that he onelis speak of, or but looked vpon? Math. 18.

But saith Caluine, It should haue bene absurd, to haue propounded the iudgement to the church, which as yet was no church.

Although this againe be not altogether so, that there was no church yet, what if ther had bin none the: had Christ in these wordes, no further respect, but to the present time: if he had not: how shall any perpetual rule be grounded hereon: And if he respected a perpetuall order of his church: why should we rather vnderstande it, of the order of the church at that time among the Iewes, which was shortly to bee dissolved: than for the state of the church that he would erect, that should be among the christians bee continued? But what noise was this order among the Iewes, that Caluin and our Brethren say, Christe alluded vnto and looked vpon?

Moreover (saith Caluine) when as the power of excommunication belonged to the Iewes that were seniors, which susteyned the person of the whole church: aptly doth Christe say, that those which haue sinned, if they shall eyther proudly contemne the first admonitions, or scoffingly exclude them, are then at length to be brought forth publicly vnto the church.

What the Seniors among the Iewes had the power of excommunication, is not in question, but what Seniors they were which had that power. Whether a chosen number out of the auncients of the people, or such as were onely of the Preestes and Leuites: I speake it, for that power of denouncing excommunication. Not, but that (I grant) they had other Elders, for other matters: But, that either, or both these Elders, represented the person of the church, being the heades and Governours of the church: I see no such aptnesse in the representation. The head representeth not the body, nor the body the head. And yet the subiects may more aptly represent by substitution the person of the governours, than the gouernours may be sayde, to represent the person of the Subiectes. And no doubt, Christes wordes were most apt and proper, for the matter that he spake of. For as Caluine sayth, of bringing forth the matter publicly to the church, if he had meant of them that were but Elders or gouernours, or admit also they were representers of the church: yet should be not haue spoken so aptly, as if he had sayde (if he had so meant) tell the Elders, or governours, or representers of the church. And not, tell the church which is a great deale more improper and vnapt speech.

We knowe (saith Caluine) that from the time that the Iewes returned out of the captiuitie of Babylon, the censure of the manners and of the doctrine was committed to a chosen counsell, which they called synhe-drin, in Greeke synedrion. This was a lawfull regiment & approved of God,

To proue that there were such a chosen councell among the Iewes, to whome the sensure or controulment of manners and of doctrine was committed. Caluine heere assigneth the time, after the returne from the captiuitie of Babylon. which councell was called sinhedrim, in Greeke συνοδον, And he sayth, God approoued it, and that it was a lawful regiment, and a good Bible against the wicked. I mervell that Caluine fetcheth these Seniors among the Iewes from so late time, as after their returne from Babilon. And yet hee nameth no time, when after their returne they were created, that we might haue turned to it, and seen what persons they were, and what office was committed to them. Danzus to make this more cleare, in his forefaide introduction, 2. part. lib. 2. cap. 10. saith: But to determine strifes and (as out of Socrates, li. 7. cap. 37. may be gathered, which example we haue before perused) to take vpon the to be Iudges and Arbitrators, I neuer read that it was the office of Elders, or part of their office. For although the presbytery or Synedrion of the Iewes (which was the same, Act. 22. vers. 5. & 30. And Math. 5. verse 22.) seeme to aunswere to our presbytery, and iudged oftentimes of certain causes: Notwithstanding, our Presbyteries do not iudge, and therefore are different from those from Iudaicall, because those partly had political, and partly Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction both at once, as appeareth Eld. 10. ver. 8. But ours haue onely ecclesiasticall.

If this which Danzus saith be true, that that Presbeytry Act. 22. be the same Presbytery with that mentioned Eldras 10. We finde it then inteste (as Caluine saith) after the returne out of the captiuitie of Babylon, But how then doe our Learned discoursing Brethren say? The like whereof he willed to be established in his Church. Will these our brethren Seniors (contrarie to that which Danzus saith) take vpon them politike and Ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction both at once? And so in dede these our Bzet. plainly say, the Synedrion had the hearing and determining of all difficult and weighty matters among the Iewes. Here is nothing left out, bee it in politike or Ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction, so it be a waighty and difficult matter. And our brethren apply it to vs saying: The like whereof, hee willed to be established in his Church, for administration of Gouernment. So that, nothing here remaineth entiere to the Prince and nobles, to the Iudges and Magistrates: for our Gouerning Seniors must haue all, or a stroke in all. But the authority of the Presbytery. Act. 22. was much abused, concerning the Politike Iurisdiction, (as we shall God willing see anon. And yet who were those Seniors in that presbytery? Actes 22. ver. 5. Paule sayth: the cheefe preest doth beare me witnesse, and all the Presbytery, of whome I receyued letters vnto the Brethren, and went to Damascus maſcus, to bring them that were there bounden, to Ieruſalem, that they might be puniſhed. And in the thirteenth verſe, ſpeaking of the captaine that kept paul ſeuerall, he ſayth: on the next day, becauſe he wold haue knowne the certainty, wherefore he was accuſed of the Iewes, he loſed him from his bonds, and commanded the high preeſtes, and all their or Councell to come together. And he brought Paule and ſet him before them.

Here are both theſe tearmes Presbytery or Eldership, or Coun- cell. Theſe were all in-ſide Controuersers of Doctrine, as Marlorate well noteth out of Brentius, commenting the equity and prudent doing of this Tribune. Who becauſe hee was ignorant of the Iewiſh religion he woulde referre the cauſe of religion to the Councell of them that were the Prelates of religion. ſo that here this councell ſignifieth to haue bene all of thoſe that were teachers of Doctrine, ſo ſuch are or ſhould be the Prelates of religion. But, did God allow of this? If it were all one with that beſore mentioned, Eſdras 10. What may well ſay with Caluine, it was a Lawfull regiment, and approoued of God. But this, Actes 22. was not a Lawfull regiment, nor approoued of God: and therefore it was not the ſame that is mentioned, Eſdras 10. But a degenerate corruption of it. Neither was that in-ſide called eyther or Sanedrin, or Synhedrin, nor any ſuch Greeke name, or any corruption of that name begun among the Iewes in Eſdras time. The Babylo- nians had no dealing with the Grecians. Neither the Iewes, till after the conqueſtes of Alexander the great, who tranſlated the Monarchie to the Grecians, and ſo withal, the ſtate of the Iewes diſperſed in Aſſyria, Media, Perſia, Aegypt, and after in Greece alſo, about the times of the Machabees and after the Bible was tranſlated into Greeke under the Aegyptian king Ptolomeus Philadelphus. And therefore, in all the Canon of the olde Teſtament, there is no mention of this Sanedrin or Synhedrin. But in the Iewes Thalmud and tradition. And yet ſee here, howe our Iſtaſian will run to theſe Jewiſh traditions, and thinke that Chriſte approueth them, and taketh theſe corruptions from the Iewes, and tranſlateth them into his Church, rather than they will ſmit to gather argument, for the Inſtituti- on of theſe Seniors, on neuer ſo light a ſhewe, or inchling or alluſion, or any thing of them. And muſt this alſo goe for good prooſe of them?

But to preuent the offence of this, Caluine ſaith: If any man except, that in the age of Chriſte all thinges, were corrupted and peruerſed, that nothing ought leſſe than that tyranny, to bee accounted the Iudgement of the Church: The anſwere is eaſy, although the manner then were adulterated and peruerſed, notwithstanding Chriſte wordly prayſeth the order, as it was in times paſt deliuered of the Fathers.

The anſwere is not ſo eaſy, as Caluine ſuppoſed, although the order were were the same, and the difference but in the corruption of the manner.

So what order was this, that Calvin both not say, was ordeined of God, no; nameth when, where, what, or by whom it was deliuered: but faith-at large, a patribus fuerat traditum, It was deliuered by tradition from the Fathers.

What shall wee haue the Fathers traditions heere approoued and praysed, without the manifest Word and Institution of God, for the ground of them? If the Papistes heare of this, they woulde triumph. And what can be gathered here on Christes wordes, that hee both prayse any such order of their Seniorie? I speake not in the displaye of any good order taken among them, for their better & more orderly Government, in times of their afflictions after their captivity: but I deny, that this can be proued out of Christes wordes, that he hath continued, doctored, translated, or erected by the same or the like order, to bee established among the Christians.

Christes
wordes impose no translation of the Iewes Sanedrins to the Christians.

These wordes intoyce no such thing. This is but Caluines meere coniecture, and theirs that follow him. And I doe yet more commend these our Brethren the Learned Discourers, that they woulde seth this order higher, from the Canon of the Scripture, rather than from the traditions of the fathers: saying: for seeing it was first instituted by god, for government of his Church in the olde Lawe, as hath beene shewed before out of Numb. 11.6. Although it was shamefully abused by the wicked Iewes, our Saniour Christe translateth it into his Church also in the newe testament. Although they speake heere of a translation, which they haue not yet proued, no; can ever bee able to proue on this place: yet if they woulde proue it, heere were somewhat for it, that we are sure was good, and had god warrant, if they coulde proue the translation of it into the newe Testament. But when we shall see what that Presbytery was, which was instituted by God for Government of his Church in the olde Lawe. Numb. 11. Although we haue somewhat seeme already, (and that out of Caluine) that it was no such Presbytery as our Brethren pre-tende, and therefore that was not translated: yet wee shall further and more fully see, both what that was, and howe farre different, and what danger consequently followeth on this point, to the state of all Christian Princes and common-wealthes, if this translation, continuance, or renewing of that seniory should take place.

Supra Pag.
233.

But (sayth Caluine) where that within a little while after, hee erected a church, he restored the vse of excommunication, the corruption being taken away.

What Christe restored that vse of excommunication, which was used before in the Lawe, is not heere proued, no; yet that there was any such

such vse of the Lawe for excommunication, as that Christe in these wordes, so much as respected or looked vpon, either the olde vse of the Lawe, or the present corruption of the Iewes, as created either for the one or the other, when he created his Church, as the vse of Excommunication in it.

And this do Caluines olde wordes sufficiently declare. For if hee had no church, when hee spake these wordes, nor referred them, if hee had a Church, to the state thereof at that present (as Caluine sayde before) but that (as he sayth heere) hee created his Church within a little while after, and that then when he so did, hee restored the pure vse of excommunication: then did hee not restore it in this place. And yet, if here he did translate it, and willed it heere to bee established: how is not this the restoring of it?

Notwithstanding (sayth Caluine,) there is no doubt, but that the manner of the Discipline which flourished vnder the kingdome of Christe, succeeded in the place of that old Discipline.

To succede in the place, we denie not. So did baptisme succede in the place of Circumcision. And the Supper of the Lorde in the place of the Passe-over. And the Ministry that wee haue, in the place of the Ministry that they had. And yet are all these farre different, from the translating, continuing, renewing, erecting, restoring, or establishing of those things.

Neither doe wee deny this argument of Caluine. That when as the verye prophane Gentiles helde a shadowishe custome of Excommunicating, it appeareth, this was instilled of GOD, euen from the beginning, into the mindes of men, that if there were any impure and defiled, they shoulde bee put backe from their holy things. It had therefore beene a foule and a shamefull matter for the people of God, to haue beene vtterly ignorant of that discipline, whereof there remayned some steppes among the Gentiles.

This is a good Argument, both from the lesser to the greater, that wee being Gods people, shoulde haue such Discipline as God hath appointed vs to haue: and a greater shame for vs, if we haue it not. But our Question lieth on this, whether GOD haue appointed vs this Discipline, and these Governours of it, which our Brethren pretende: yea, or no.

But, if this were so shamefull among the Iewes, yea, among the Gentiles too, for prophane menne to meddle with their holy things: howe quickly shoulde wee incurr the greatest shame of all, when such as coulde not meddle with the teachinge of the Holy Wordes of GOD, shoulde not onely medle with the teachers of it, and be the controllers of them, and of all their sacred actions:

but

but meddle with excommunicating and absolving, the chiefest key and fozce of the Church: it selfe not shame onely but perill. which if it should bee in euery parish, what in many Parishes both in the Country and in the Cities too, it would beate, were too shamefull, yea, too dangerous for them to punish, or for vs to suffer.

But that (saith Caluine) which was kept vnder the Lawe, Christe hath transmited or sent ouer to vs: because the reason (or manner) is commo to vs with the ancient Fathers.

Neither is this proued that Christe hath sent ouer vnto vs, that which was kept vnder the Lawe, any more in this matter, then in others which are abrogated, and not sent ouer to vs nor we to them, neither is the reason (or manner) common to vs with the auncient Fathers, vnder the lawe, but very greatly different. And though it had some generall community: yet, that inferreth not so importaunt a specialty. Neither hath Christe sent vs ouer to the auncient Fathers, any more heerein, than to the Synagogue then present, nor admonished by any wordes heere expressed or included, that that order shoulde be holden in his Church, which long ago was instituted holily vnder the Lawe. All these are but Caluins mere sayings, without any prouings, other than these aforesayde weakke and bare reasons, which we haue heard. But since Caluin professeth so much on the Lawe of Moses, for these Seniors, and our Brethren likewise expre-ly, both now and before, urge the 11. of Numbers, and other places where any mention is made of the Jewes Elders, assemblies, and Counsellors: and still beate vpon the name, that of synedrion, was called Sanedrion: Let vs therefore, to see this point euen to the full, since this is the place that must make vp all the matter, and that the Newe glosse also of Robertus Ste-phanus following Caluine, concludeth thus: Tantum illos admonerat.
Onely hee warned them, that this order must be holden vntil the ende of the worlde, that wheresouer there shoulde bee a Church, there ought perpetually to be some (he speaketh of these Seniors) that should haue the care of the Church: Let vs therefore craue patience here a while, since this Synedrion and the originall thereof is so straightly urged, to search euen to the groundes thereof, and see what these Seniors, their assemblies, Senators, and Counsellors were, and in what thinges their authority moste consisted. Which no doubt (if it shall not seeme tedious) will giue great light to the whole matter.

Bertramus
de politia Iudaica.

The 70. Elders not first ordained. No. 11.

Cornelius Bertramus that writteth of the policie of the Iewes, dedicateth the same euen to Beza: maketh (in his 3. Chapter) these 70. Elders, to haue appertained to the ciuill policy and that God did not then first ordaine them, Numb. 11. 16. (as our Learned Brethren Discourssers sayd before, page 20.) but rather continue and confirme them. And in the first Chapter: Therefore, this kinde of senate, as it consisted of the seniors

ors and Prefects that were more approued, (for they seeme to bee those that already exercised this office in Egypt, as we haue before coniectured) and were appointed to ease the charge of Moses: seemeth to haue had the vnderstanding (or hearing) of the waighy iudgementes, de Reip. summa ita statuisse, and to haue so determined of the summe (or principall state of the Common weale: that the same senate had his Prefectes also, Inmo & summum caput ipsum ad se. Yea, and his cheef (or supreme) head Moses him-selfe.

Of what number they were, & why those Elders had that number.

Some do make the precise number of these to be 71. as though 6. out enery of the 12. tribes, were described: (of whome neuerthelesse, Moses left 1. in the camp,) because the Lorde had commaunded to bring only threescore and ten. Other make it the number of 71. Perhaps, because the number of Iudges should be odde. And to this number, the Hebrues commonly subscribe, which call their Synedrion, by the name of Seventy-one. But these numbers may on this wise bee well reconciled. For, where the Lorde expressly comandeth threescore & ten to be gathered vnto him: it is likely that they were first 70. only. Vnto whome, Moses being added, to moderate the assēbly: it made vp 71. But the high preest that was to answere out of the Lawe made vp 72. &c.

And in the ninth chapter, writing againe of their ciuill policie, after their possession of the lands, from Iosues time, vntill their exile into Babilon: It is certain (saith he) that the Hebrues being now sent in-to the possession of the land of Chanaan: kept not only those things, the vse whereof they had of Moses receiued, together with the precepts: but they reuoked those also into practise, whereof they had the precepts only, but no vse, by reason of the hindrance of the wilderness. The preceptes that seeme to pertain to that policy, are conteyned Deut 16. ver. 18. 19. & 20. And in the whole 17. 18. & 19. chapt. and in certain places of Exod. and of Numb. Yea, and of Leuiticus it selfe also.

& the practice of this Seniory.

Therefore, they so draue their policy to those chapters: that every ci- ty shoulde haue her Seniors, (or her Senate) consisting of Chilliarkes, or cheefe of Thousandes, Centurions, (or cheefe of hundrethes) Quinquagenariens, (or cheefe of fifties) and Decurions or cheefe of tennes. Iosephus in his fourth booke of the Iewes antiquities, chapter 6. prescribeth the number of these Iudges to bee seuen, because, perhappes hee regarded his owne time. Certayne Thalmudistes as they deuide the inferior iudgementes into matters pecuniary, (or perteyning to pryfes) and capitall (or matters of life and death): ouer the pecuniarie, they place three Iudges, ouer capitall, three and twenty.

The Leuites with their offices.

Iosephus in the same place, ascribeth to that seuenfold number of Iudges duos Ministros, two Ministers, being Leuites, that is to say, such preestes as wee haue described.

And verily, out of those things that were done of Dauid and Iosaphat, in restoring the iudgements, it is likely, that the Leuites sat with the Iudges. But of their number it is not certaine, except out of those traditions of the Thalmudistes, we shall say that it seemeth, there were 3. Leuites, which so did first of all take notice of the pecuniary causes: or certainly, 3. Leuites, with some one of the seniors or Elders of that place or city, which so excelled among the other, that hee was called, Sen Prator, the captaine or Maior. And these afterward being ioyned to 30. seniors determined of capitall causes.

Certainely, out of the 4. chap. of the book of Ruth, ver. 3. Ther seem mo Elders than 7. When as Boas is sayde, to haue taken 10. of the Elders of the City of Bethlehem, that shold take notice of the cause of redeeming, and of the state *of the husbandes brother.

It is cleare out of controuersie, that of euery city the Iudges municipall (or men capable of offices, as the freemen or Burgessees) as they are called the Elders, they were the Chiliarkes, the Centurions, the Quinquagenariens (or Fiftinaries) and the Decurions (or Deciniers) so many as there could be in euery city, inso much, that also out of them, certain Leuites were taken, to be their Prefectes. If not, they were called for out of the next city assigned to the Leuites.

Moreouer, in the whole, and out of the whole people, there was a cheefe Senate that consisted of 70. Elders, being so elected, as the reason of the time coulde beare it. For before the carying away of the 10. Tribes, it is likely that they were chosen of the families of those 70. that came downe out of Cananie into Egypt, and of those families that were substituted in their steedes, as in his place we haue sayde. Besides these, (as the matter required) the fathers of the houses of all the Tribes came together at solemne meetings.

Thus first we see, howe Bertram beere both summarily describe, all the sortes of Seniors and Elders that were in Israell, and all their senates and assemblies. Not onely those that were inferiour in euery of the Cities & principall Families, and in all the generall Tribes among them: but also in generall of all the whole Realme and State, especially that of the Three-score and ten Elders, that were chosen out of euery Tribe as a cheefe standing senate ouer all the other, and in what matters, not onely, not so much Ecclesiasticall, as ciuill and politickall, they had to deal with all, euen from the first Institution of them, and while these senates and seniors were in their perfectest estate. Which estate of theirs, Caluyn & our Learned Bpeshen here affirme, was restored, translated, renewed, and ordeined by Christe, to be continued in his church to the worldes end end, as it was, before it was afterward corrupted by the Iewes. All which the Iewes senates and seniors, or any of them, but chiefly of all the other (which our W3. urge chiefly, & indeede it was the chiefe) if they or it were restored, or translated, or renewed among vs: how should not forthwith all the State, not only of the church, but of the whole common weal be clean altered? & so (of like consequence) all other parts of Christendom. Now to proue that these senates had this authority. Bertram proceedeth to the practice of it.

To returne therefore to the times of Iosue, Iosue seemeth (out of those things, that are written, Ios. 13. 2. & 14. 1.) to haue very well appointed the iudgements, according to the prescription of Moses Lawe.
For, there it is created on the solempne meetinges. First, all the Tribes of the Israelites, or all the Israelites, that is to say, the Fathers of the householders of all the tribes, that were enfranchised with the right of the City, or also were Citizens: are set downe. Then, the Elders, that is, the 70. afterwards, the heads of Israel, that is, of the thirteene Tribes, 13. cheefe capteynes. Last of al the Iudges and Prefects, that is, the ordinary iudges of euery city. Which consisted of the Chilliarkes, the centurions, the fistiniers, and Prefects of ech city.

After the death of Iosue, this ciuill policy seemeth to haue continued, especially during the time that those seniors or Elders did suruiue, which had seene the workes of God in the wilderness, of whose number Phinees seemeth to haue bene one, in whose age the battell was waged against the Beniamites. In his time therefore, all the Tribes of Israel are sayde to haue come together vnto Mitspa, that the cheefe ci-zens beeing before warned and assembled to the Synagoga, that is, to the army or vniuersall assembly of the citizens, concluded to giue battell to the Beniamites, and had determined the same, and had promised by a solempne othe, that they woulde not giue in marriage their Daughters to the Beniamites. All the selfe same citizens deale about the restoring of the Tribe of Benjamin.

But חזקיהו Gedab, that is, all the Chilliarches, centurions, Fistinaries, Decurions, and Prefects, decree the Warre agaynst the Iabesites, and to that viage, (or exployte) they sende 12000. souldiers. But the seniors or Elders, that is, the other חזקיהו Gedab. To witte, the seuentie, at the beginning in the battell, giue the counsell of catching the Virgines of the Siloites. But, that the seuentie Elders are signified by that assembly: It ap-peareth thereby, in that they tooke vpon them to pacify the Siloites, if at any time the Siloites shoulde before them appeach the Beniamites for that rapte (or catching of their Virgins).

This therefore seemeth to be the processe of that story, so far as serueth to our purpose. The Leuite sent the twelue peeces of his secondary

wife (or wife then permitted of the second sort, other wife, then called a concubine) into all the coastes and regions or cities of the twelve tribes. The seniors or Iudges, that is, the Chiliarkes, centurions, Fiftinarians, and decurions of euery tribe, and so of euery city, call a counsell about this matter, among their citizens and kinreds. By whose agreement an vniuersall (or generall counsell is indicted) at Mitspa, to the which all the tribes of Israell, which are there called the Angles or corners of the people, that is to say the provinces or tribes, &c. (Except the Iabesites) make apparance. The Prouinces therefore of the Israelites, which otherwise are called Tribes, are present at the חזק Caal, that is, the armie (congregation) or vniuersall Concion of Gods people, to the number of 400000. In that vniuersall concion (or calling together) the Leuite declareth the matter. The matter being hearde, the people decree a message to be sent to all the families and villages of the Beniamites, to deliuer vp the authors of that wicked fact. The Beniamites doe rather prepare themselves to battell. The Israelites take an othe of not giuing their daughters in marriage to the Beniamites, and doe thus order the battayle towards, that by lot out of ten thousande, they chose one Chiliarke (or bande of a thousandes) and out of a thousande, a hundred: and out of a hundred, tenne. To take the care of vittayling the campe. They aske counsell of God at Silo, what tribe shoulde fight first. The Lorde answereth, the tribe of Iudah shall doe this. The battayle being ended: the people come together agayne before the Lorde. They repent them of their oath. The army being mustered, it is founde that none of the Iabesites was among them in the Beniamites Warre. חזק Gnedah, that is, the assembly, to wit, the Chiliarks, centurions, &c. decreeth Warre against the Iabesites, and against them they send 12000. men: They return conquerors, and bring 400. Virgins of the Iabesites. But when they sufficed not the Beniamites: The people do more repent them of the Tribe destroyed. At the selfe same time, the seuentie (Elders) doe decree, the catching of the Siloites Virgins. For, there is no likelihoode, that the Chiliarkes, centurions, &c. of the Siloites, if they had beene present, woulde haue suffered this decree.

At the end of that history is annexed vnder it, that therefore these things hapned thus, because there was no מלך, that is, no king whome the Israelites shoulde reuerence, and to whome (being eyther priuately or publikely offered iniury) they should flee. But by the name of a King, he vnderstandeth euery such Gouvernor and Duke (or guide) as Moses was, such an one also as was Iosue: to conclide, such as were the Iudges, that were afterwarde raised vp. And it is taken in that sense, Deut. 33. 5. The scripture therefore woulde shewe, that there was at those times no guide, that should gouerne all the Hebrues, and restrayne them into order, and admonish them of their duety, as Moses and Iosue had done, and whome all the Hebrues would heare, and obey: Finally, that should so holde all the tribes in their dutifulnes, that he should execute reuenge on violence publicly committed, and punish both whoredomes and Idolatries. Whereupon it came to passe that rather every tribe, yea and every of the Cities also, and besides that, every priuate person committed every where many things that were horrible to be spoken of, which were not publicly reuenged. For that most beautifull face of the holy common weale, which shined in the times of Moses and Iosue, was for the moste part so decayed; that notwithstanding, it was not vtterly extinguished. For there remayned in every City their owne Iudges and Elders, to witte, the Chiliarkes, the Centurions, &c. As appeareth, Iudg. 9. 6. Where mention is made. קל בעלי נאם ה כל בית בלר Cal Beale Bethmillo Of all the Lordes (in French seigneurs) & as our Br. call these Elders or seniors, gouernors (or as it were Lordings) of Sichem & of the family or kindred of Millo, that is, of the Princes of the cities that gouerned the same, and of the whole assembly of the Citizens of the Sichemites: (for so I interpret בית מילו Beth Millo) and out of the tenth chap. ver. 18. where it is said, the whol people, that is, all the citizens & heads of the families of Gilead it selfe, together also with the princes of Gilead, said every one to his neighbor, &c. And in the 11. ch. v. 8. The selfe same princes are called the Seniors or Elders of Gilead. As also ch. 8. 14. The same to be called the princes of the Succothites. And these things are also better apparat out of Rut. 4. These kind of princes or Eld. did so flatter the people, that they pretermitted many things pertaining to their office, which sufficiently appeareth by the whole history of the Iudges. Whereupon is manifest, that the Lorde was so offended with the peoples Idolatries, that he often admonished the people by the prophets, & at length corrected them also by the Chananites.

The Elders
flattery of the people.

Thus writeth Bertram euen of the first state of all these gouerning seniors, and of all their senates and assemblies, immediatly after Moses and Iosues time, and in the time of Phinces that was lining, euen when that was done, which our B. yet. these Learned Discourfers cite out of Num. 11 16. for the Institution of the seniors & Sanedrin, that they would bring in to rule now ouer vs, and say: That our sauiour Christ in that word (Congregation, Dis ecclesia) alludeth, vnto the assembly of Elders that was among the Jewes which they called (but corruptly) of a Greeke worde Synedrion, which signifieth a counsell or consistory, sanhedrin, which had the hearing and determining of all weighty and difficult matters among the Jewes, the like wherof, he willed to be established in his church for administration of government. For, seeing it was first instituted by God, for government of his church in the old Law, as hath bin shewed before out of Num. 11:16. Although it was shamefully abused by the wicked Iewes, our Sauour Christe translateth it into his Church in the new Testament. Here was indeed some corruptiō in some of those officers that flattered the people: but, the orders and the offices, remaining as yet intire. This then is the state of government, that in plain & expresse terms, our Brethren would so sayne haue vs, and all the Church of Christe reduced vnto. So that vnder a name and colour, (other-where) of Eccl. Seniors we may heere moſte euidently ſee, what Deciniers, what Fiftinaries, what Centurions, what Chiliarkes, these Tetrarkes would be: yea, which is farre aboue all this, (if they would be like the Seniory of the 70. what principalitie they aspire vnto, and in what matters of weight and government, those gouernors would gouern like Princes, hauing little common-weales of their owne in euery town, city or prouince. And might not this full quickly breed as horrible factes, and soule a stirre, as was heere betwene the Beniamites and the Israelites? If they reply, it would be not so, hauing a generall Gouerneur, which the Israelites did then want: And what? would they haue Iudges also (as they had) to help this inconueniēce because Caluine and Danaus would not haue the Iurisdicions of Magistrates go by inheritance: but by election? And this Bertrame (that liketh these auncient Iudges to Dictators) after he hath shewed howe those Iudges also did degenerate, and that when the people called for a King: he sayth, that Samuell taking it grieuously referred it to the Lorde: who comforted his prophet, and bids him diswade the people from this purpose, Proposito Regis iure plane tyrannico. Laying foorth the right or Lawe of a King playne tyrannicall. Thus doth Bertram also esteeme, not of the abuse, but of the Lawe or right of a King: & all, to recommend vnto vs, that first policy and Government of the Iewes.

Nowe, whereas Bertram here mentioneth that the Prouinces & tribes came together, ad hanc, that is, to the assembly, which he calleth againe Sens Concionem vniuersale populi Dei, The Congregation or Concion vniuersall of Gods people, which was of 400000: in which generall Concion the Leuite made his complaint to the people of his injury: of this Concion let vs see also, what Carolus Sigonius writeth. Who although he be other wise an aduersarie, (& therfore not of credit or authority in our con- trouersies) yet in this matter not litigious betwē them & vs: and he both commended, and his promise of this argument expected by this Bertram: let vs at least wise see him so far forth, as he truly & clearly gathereth his collections out of the holy scriptures, or out of the testimonies of other ancient & vnsuspected authoꝛs, wherein we cannot iustly except against him. In his booke De rep. Hebraicum, li. 6. c. 2. de consiliis he saith: Counsels the I cal those assemblies, that chiefly decreed those things, which contained the

the state of the whole commonweal, as the war, the peace, the victuals, the bounds, the institutio of laws, the creatio of magistrates, & such things as are of that sort. The which is nothing else but to dispute of a singular profit, that could not be comprehended in the lawe. But these Councils, as in other commonweales, so also in that of the Iewes, were two. For either they were entred into of all in common: or seperatly of a few, and those of such as were the auncienter in yeares. If they were of all, they called it Concionem a Congregation, or calling together of the people. If they were of part, they called it a Senate. And this also seemeth Dauid to haue vnderstood in the Psalmes. For treating of the Prayses of God, that ought to be celebrated in al and of all assemblies: poetically he maketh mention, both of the concion, and of the Senate. As when he saith: I will praise thee O Lord with my whole heart, in the Councell of the righteous, and in the Congregation. And in another place, Let them extoll him in the Church (or Congregation) of the people, and prayse him in the choyce of the Elders. Again, I haue hated the Church of the asalignant, with the wicked I will not sit. For the concion, he sayde, the congregation, in Greeke ekklesia, synagogue, and church: for the senate, councell, or senatus. Senate or consistory, and chair of seniors. He would also haue adioyned a thirde, if the vse of his commonweale which he looked vpon had permitted.

The Iewes
Councels

By which it manifestly appeareth, that these two being thus distinguished, and so different the one from the other: and the name of Ecclesia church or congregation, beeing taken for the one, that is to say, for the concion or gathering together of the multitude, cleane different from the other, that is to say, from the senate or consistory of the Elders: It is moste euident, that if in these wordes of Christe, Disce Ecclesia, tell the church hee alluded eyther to the auncient or to the present state of the Iewes order: that he ment not any senate, consistory, or councell of seniors, but a concion, a congregation, or calling together of the whole multitude of the people.

Notwithstanding, though this so cleare a reason, (the distinction beeing also confirmed by Bertram) might seeme sufficient to cut off all Caluines interpretation, and those that followe him, applying the se wordes cleane contrary, not to the congregation, but to the Iewes Seniors: yet let vs proceed further with sigonius for our further vnderstanding of both these councels. Moreouer (saith he) c. 3. The concion of the people in the holy scripture: is comonly expounded by 2. terms, Synagoga & ecclesia, Synagog & church, as in the places right now alleaged, it is known. For as yet, there was not that difference betwene the synagog & the church, which hath come between the, since the gospel deliuered by Christ. But as there were 3. (as it were) common weales of the Iewes (euen as I haue declared from the beginning,) of the whole people, of euery one of the Tribes, and of

Senates. every one of the cities in euery tribe: so were there 3. Concions of the people. One, wherein all the tribes of Israel, another, whereunto all the families of one tribe, the thirde, whereunto all the men of euery citie came together. And of this last (except we shall yet restrain it narrower, to all the multitude of euery synagogue in euery citie) is this Ecclesia, Church, Concion or Congregation whereof Christe speaketh to bee understoode, if it shoulde be referred to the Jewes state and orders. Now after Sigonius hath produced this by manifold testimonies out of the scriptures, hee cometh to the fourth Chapter, concerning the Senate saying:

Three kinde
of the Iewes
Senates. Having expounded the Concion, wee haue to speake of the Senate. But this also the Hebrewes had, and that, (as the people) three-folde. One whereunto the Senators of all the people came together: another, vnto the which, they that were of euery one of the tribes: the thirde, they that were of euery one of the Cities. The Senate of the whole people was ordeyned by God, of threescore and ten men, which in age excelled others in all Israell. For so he sayde, Num. 11. Gather together to mee threescore and ten of the seniors of Israell, whome thou knowest that they bee the elders of the people, and the scribes, and thou shalt bring them vnto the doore of the Tabernacle of the couenant, and thou shalt make them stande there with thee, &c. to beare the burthen of the people and that thou onely be not burthened. The Grecians therefore called the men that were of this order, a Senate, ancients, Seniors, and Senators: the Councell they called Bulen, the Councell place Bulerium, the men Buleras, as yee woulde say, a Counsell, a councell house, and counsellors.

Our Br. will be Seniors of the highest sort. Here (Lo) is the place that our Br. in this their Learned Discourse haue now the second time moued for their Seniors: that our Sauour Christe hath translated the Senate of this senjory into his church, in the newe Testament, althogh it was shamefully abused by the wicked Iewes. This Senjory indeed of these 70. was instituted of God, for the Gouernment of his Church in the olde Law. With therefore this is the place chiefly pretended for the order and authority of the Gouernors in the newe Testament, the abuses of the Iewes being onely abolished: let vs not only looke to the Iewes corruptions and abuses, but to the institution of God, and to the good vse thereof in the olde Lawe, that our brethren say, is here passed ouer in the new Testament and translated vnto vs to be perpetually vsed in euery congregation.

And here I like better of our Br. wit. (that they would chose to be Seniors of the best and highest Senate, not of the mean or lowest) than of their wisdom: not soe seeing how this can not agree to euery Parish, except euery parish should be made a kingdom. But why not: as he said:

si ius violandum est, regni causa est violandum. They must needs be like the 70. Elders assistant to Moses, the other inferior Elders will not serue them.

But these (saith Sigonius chap. 3.) late by the chiefe Prince of the Common-weale in the Metropolitane Citie, and being of him admitted, together with the Princes of the people, they entred into the Counsels, of the summe (or chiefe state) of the affaires. Whereupon Iosephus reporteth that, out of the Lawe: Lett the King doo nothing without the sentence of the Bishop, and of the Senators. Of these Councells, there are these testimonies: in the 5. of Deut. Moses saith: All ye, the Princes of the Tribes and the Seniors came to me. And in the 27. Moses and the Seniors commaunded the people, saying: Keepe all the commaundments that I commaund you. Also Iosue, 23. Iosue called all Israel their Seniors, their Princes, their Iudges, and their Scribes. From thence, vnder the Iudges, chap. 21. the Seniors or Elders decreed, that the Beniamites shoulde catch the virgines of the siloites to be their wiues. Then vnder Salomon in the 7. chap. of the 3. booke of the Kings: All the Elders of Israel were gathered to the King Salomon in Ierusalem. And in the 1. ch. of 2. Chr. Ezekias the King entred into counsell with the Elders, concerning the stopping the heads of the foun- taines. And albeit, the kingdome being deuided, the Senate of the Iewes was chosen out of the onelic Tribe of Iuda and of Benjamin: neuerthe- lesse the number of the 70. Elders was preserued. For Ezechiel in the 8. chap. said: And the threescore and tenne men of the Elders of Israel, when notwithstanding in the Age of Ezechiel the 10. Tribes of Israel were in Assyria. And Ieremie in the 19. named the Elders of the people, Take an earthen bottell of the Elders of the people and of the Priests.

The Elders
in the time
of the kngs.

Neither onelic did this Senate flourish while the kingdome stooode: but also the kingdome being ouerthrowen, after the Iewes returne out of the captiuitie of Babylon, the same was restored. For in the 1. of E. say it is written: I will restore thy Iudges and thy Counsellours as in the auncient time. And in the 10. of Esdras (which place we haue hearde cited by Danæus,) Euerie one that shal not come within three daies, according to the counsell of the Princes and of the Elders: all his substance shal be forfeited. And the 12. of the first of the Machabees: Jonathas the high Priest of the Nation, and the Elders, and the residue of the people of the Iewes. And in the first of the 2. booke: The people that is at Ierusalem, and the Senate, and Iudas to Aristobulus the Maister of King Ptolomies, sendeth greeting. And in the 11. King Antiochus to the Senate of the Iewes, and to the other Iewes. And in the 14. To Simon the Bishop and to the Seniors, and to the whole people. And Saint Luke 22. The Seniors of the people: being called in Greeke, the Presbyterie (or Elderhippe) of the people. Iosephus also sheweth, that in last times of the Citie, Florus the Procurator of Iurie calling vnto him the the Princes of the Senatours; and the Senatours, and the Senate, he said that he woulde depart out of the Citie. And hee addeth, that with the Temple the Court also was set on fire, which Court he calleth, Bulencurion, the Counsell-house. But although this Senate for consultation sake remained alwaies: notwithstanding we haue to vnderstande, that the Kings which haue had the Common-weale in their power, were not thrall vnto the Lawes, although they made Decrees without the authoritie of the Senate, as those that were in chiefeest authoritie, not such as God had prescribed, but such as their selues wished.

Moreouer, that the Tribes had euerie one their Senatours, different from those that were the Senatours of the Common-people, it is more probable by coniecture, than certaine by authoritie: For although it be written in the 20. chap. of the 4. booke of the Kinges, All the Seniors of Iuda and Ierusalem were gathered together to the King Iosias: and in the 30. of the first booke, Dauid sent giftes of the Prayer, to the Seniors of Iuda his neighbours: and 19. of Hieremie, God said, I will destroy the Counsell of Iuda: notwithstanding it may bee, that they that were the Seniors of Iuda were all one with the Seniors of the people. But without doubt, euerie one of the Cities had gotten their Senatours, separate from those whome we haue spoken of. Whereupon are these speeches, All the Seniors of Iuda and Hierusalem, were gathered together to the King Iosias. And Iosephus lib. 2. The Seniors of Ierusalem tooke it grieuouſlie, that the brother of Iaddi the Bishop, married a straunger. And Iudges 11. the Seniors of Galaad proceeded to take Iephthe for their aide, & said vnto him; Come and bee our Prince. And in the 8. Hee tooke a childe of the men of Sucoth, and asked of him the names of the Princes and Seniors of Sucoth. And Ruth 4. Boox taking tenne men of the Seniors of the Citie of Bethleem said vnto them, &c.

Thus both Sigonius deuide the Seniors into three sortes; The Seniors of all the people, the Seniors of euerie Tribe, and the Seniors of euerie Citie. And if Christe had meant anie of these Seniors, it is farre more likelie, that he shoulde haue meant this last sort, if not some yet of lower degre than these, of euerie Synagogue of the Citie, than the highest of all, that sate with the Prince in Counsell, and had the consultation of all the summe and principall points of all the Churches & Common-weales affaires: which were the manifest endangering of her Maiesties estate, and the cleane altering of all the Common-weale.

Cap. 5.

In the next Chapter Sigonius proceedeth to their Iudgements, saying cap. 5. We haue spoken of the Counsells, in which chiefeſlie the Cities profite is disputed vpon. After which we haue to speake of the Iudgements, wherein the singular (or particular) equitie is defined, that could not not either be provided for, or prescribed by the Lawe. But these iudgements, the Greeke Interpreters of the Bible, haue now and then translated them αἰμα, now and then δίκαια, to wit, respecting the double force it selfe of Iudgements: in which condemning and acquiting is contained, which by these two wordes Iudgement and Iustice or iustification they expressed, as we haue shewed before.

Furthermore, among the Hebrues there were two Tribunall seates, of the Iudgements, the one in euerie of the Cities called synedron, the other chiefelie at Hierusalem named synedron, which the Latine Interpreter translated Iudgement and Counsell. Whereupon in S. Mathew, Christe saith; Euerie one that is angrie with his brother, shall be guiltie of Iudgement. But he that shall say Racha, shall be guiltie of a Counsell. But that the Iudgement was an other thing from the Counsell: David in the first Psalm sheweth, when hee saide: Therefore the wicked shall not arise agayne in Iudgement, neither the sinners in the counsell of the righteous.

The Synedron at Ierusalem.

And here commeth in our synedron corruptlie called Sanedrin, that Caluine and our Brethren applie Christes wordes unto. Which Synedron was the Iudiciall Consistorie of the seuentie Elders, that with the Prince as Counsellors, had the gouernment of all the policie of the Iewes. But because the other called synedron, was the Iudgement of euerie Citie: if Christe had meant to haue alluded to the Iewes orders, and to haue translated and established the same or the like in euery Congregation among the Christians: is it not more likelie of the twaine, he would haue taken that which was the Iudgement of euerie Citie: than the synedron, which was onelie in Ierusalem the head Citie, a chiefe Iudgement to ouer rule all the other.

But yet for our further resolution, let it not be tedious to heare also Sigonius testimonies at large, for both these Iudgements of these Seniors. Let vs first (saith he, chap. 6. treatise of the Iudgements of the Cities, and then of the Counsell of Ierusalem, when they were instituted and confirmed, who they were that entred into them, who were Gouvernours of them, where they came together, and to conclude, in what order they tooke notice of the causes. I say therefore, that the Iudges of the Cities with their Princes, which in Greeke were called πολιτευται, introducers, informers, or teachers of the writings, or of the Lawe written, (as we might call them Masters of the Rolles, which were after called Scribes) were instituted of Moses in the Wildernesse, first by the authoritie of Iethro his Father in lawe, and afterward by commaundement of God.

What elders the Iudges of the cities were.

For when Moses the first yeere in the Wildernesse sate to heare causes, hee was warned by Iethro his Father in lawe that he should spare that

that labour, and appoint wise men, skilfull and prudent, to iudge in his steede, and reserue to himselfe onelie the vnderstanding of matters that were of more importance. He therfore apppointed them the Princes (of whome after shall be spoken) Tribunes, Centurions, Gouernors of fiftie, Gouernors of ten, or as the Greeke setteth them out, Chiliarks, Hecatontarks, Pentecontarks, Decadarks, to bee introducers of the causes to the Iudges, or preferred them to be Grammatosagogeos, the Chancelors, or the Primitories, or the enterers in writing of the actions. Exod. 18. And choosing valiant men out of all Israel, he appointed them Princes of the people, Tribunes and Centurions, and Captaines ouer fiftie, and Captaines ouer ten, which should iudge the people at all times. Wherefore, after the 40. yeare, rehearsing to the people the actes that he had done, he al- leadgeth in the first of Deuteronomie, I said vnto you, I am not able alone to sustaine your busineses, and burden, and brawlings, giue ye out of your selues, wise men and skilfull, and whose conuersation is approued in your Tribes, that I might place them to be Princes. Then ye answered me; It is a good thing that thou wilt doe. And I tooke wise men, and noble out of your Tribes, and appointed them to be Princes, Tribunes and Centurions, and Rulers ouer fiftie, and Rulers of tenne, which should teach you all things. And I commaunded them saying: Heare ye them, and iudge ye that which is righteous, whether he be a citiZen, or bee bee a stranger, let there be no difference of persons. Ye shall as well heare the small as the great, neither shall ye accept the person of anie whosoeuer, because it is the iudgement of God. But if anie thing shall seeme difficult vnto you, referre that to me, and I will heare it. But the Græcians haue it more plaine and more apte to vnfolde the manner of these Iudgements: And I appointed them to rule ouer you Chiliarkes, (or Rulers of thousands): Hecatontarks, (or Rulers of hundreds): Pentecontarks, (Quinquagenariens or Rulers of fiftie): Duacharks, or Rulers of tenne): and Grammatosagogists, (or the enterers in writing, or inrollers of the pleas,) vnto your Iudges. For in steede of that which the latine interpreter translateth, which should teach you all things; the greeke rehearseth it, μαθητευται, to the informers in writing vnto your Iudges (the text it selfe is, and Gouernors to your tribes. Afterward the law of God came hereunto, wherein concerning these iudges it was enacted chap. 16, in these wordes, Thou shalt ordeine vnto thee, Iudges and Maisters in all thy Cities, which the Lorde God shall giue to thee, according to the Tribes. And they shall iudge the people with righteous iudgements, neither shall they wrest the iudgement, neither shall they acknowledge the person of anie, neither shall they take gifts.

And in this place for Maisters, the Greeke setteth out, Grammatosagogeos, the informers in writing (or of the Lawe written. This Law Iosephus so rehearseth, that he sheweth, the Iudges were also chosen by lot: Let those also which by lotte haue come forth to iudge, be in chiefest honor in the cities, & let no reprimands be spoken in their presence. Let the iudges haue the right of pronouncing that which they thinke, except that anie shall shew that they haue receiued rewards to iudge, or shall alleadge anie other cause of wrong iudgement.

But as Moses ordained them, so afterward king Iosaphat confirmed them in the kingdome of Iuda, as is declared in the 19. Chap. of the second booke of Chronicles, Hee ordained Iudges of the lande, in all the defended Cities throughout all places. And commaunding the Iudges, hee sayde: Take heede what yee doo, for yee exercise not the iudgement of man, but of the Lorde. And whatsoeuer you shall iudge, shall redound vpon your selues. Let the feare of the Lorde bee with you, and doo all thinges with diligence. For our Lord G O D there is no iniquitie, nor accepting of persons, nor desire of rewards.

The Elders
in the time
of Iosaphat

Afterthis, the iudgements beeing disturbed in the lande of Babylon, the Iewes when they returned into their Countrey, as they did other matters, so they restored these. Which thing that it shoulde come to passe, Esaie Chap. had forewarned, when as hee vttered these speeches of God: And I will restore thy Iudges as they were before. And after that, the king Artaxerxes commaunded that it should be so done. For so he wrote in the sixt of Esdras: Ordeine thou Iudges and Scribes, that they might iudge all the people. For he called them Scribes, whome wee haue named Grammatistsagogeos, the informers of the writings or written Lawe. Wherevpon (that they were restored) the Psalmist reioyced (as saith Saint Athanasius) which when the citie of Ierusalem was reedified, and the iudgements restored, euen as it was foretolde of the Lorde, breaking forth for ioy, he song in the Psalme. 121. I was gladd in those things that were spoken to me, wee will goe into the house of the Lorde, our feete standing in thy Courts O Hierusalem. Ierusalem which is build as a Citie, whose participation is in it selfe. For whether the Tribes ascended, The Tribes of the Lorde the testimonie of Israel, to confesse the name of the Lorde, because they set the seates therein in iudgement, or, into iudgement, as the Greeke hath it, the seates vpon the house of David. And so afterwarde euen vntill the laste times of the Iewes.

These Elderships restored after the captiuitie.

But these Iudges seeme to haue bene chosen out of the bodie of the Senators of euerie citie. Euen as from the first times also among the Romanes, the iudgements were executed of the Senators. The Lawe it selfe in many places teacheth it. Deut. 19. If the smiter shall flie into one of the foresayde Cities, the Senate of that Citie shall sende and take him out of the place of refuge. And in 21. When a corps is founde, and the slaier shall not be knowne, the Senate of the Citie shall go out and measure from that place, &c. Wherevpon Ruth 4. Boock taking ten men of the Seniors of the Citie of Bethleem, sayd vnto them: Sit yee heere and be witnesses. The people that was in the gates, and the Seniors answered, we are witnesses, and before them hee tooke the possession of Elimelech.

From whence the Syne-drian Elders wer chosen.

melech. Moreover Philo in lib. de Indice. gathereth out of the Law four conditions of good Iudges, &c. Furthermore, that the Iudgements were exercised in the gate of the Cities, that was called the gate of Iudgement: the Lawe, Deuteronomi. 21. declareth, &c. and 25. and also Iosue 8, &c. and Ruth 4, &c. Prouerbes 22. and 31. and Psalme 126. &c.

These Iudgements were made in this manner. Hee that desired to commence an action against another, resorted to one of the Princes of the Iudges, which were called Grammato-isagoge, the Scribes, or informers of the writtes or writings, and shewed forth his cause, and requested of him that hee would bring it in vnto the Iudges. But if he receined the controuersy (for hee might also reiect it) hee brought in the same at a day appoynted before the Iudges. Whereupon he receined the name (Introduktoris) of an introducer, &c. But the Thalmudistes haue shewed that the matter was handled on this wise: They that demaunded the Lawe, came to the Iudges of their Citie: who, if they heard them not, they went to them of the next Citie. But and if so bee, that neither yet they hearkened vnto them: then they went vnto the Iudges of Hierusalem, which sate in two gates. After whom, from them, if that yet they obtained not their purpose, they fledde to the Councill, the which they called Sanhedrin. Their wordes (such as are rehearsed by Petrus Galatinus, a man in time past an Hebrue) are these.

Petrus Galatinus of the proesse in the courtes of iudgment.

In the beginning there was no controuersie in Israel, but the house of the Iudgement of the threescore and tenne Iudges, sate in diuers places. For one of the houses sate in the gate of the Mount, that is, of the Temple: but another in the gate of the Porch. As for the other houses of the three and twentie Iudges, sate in euerie of the Cities of Israel. But when anie thing was to be demaunded, it was demaunded of the house of Iudgement, which was in the selfe same Citie. If they heard it, Dicbant, they declared it (or gaue sentence thereon): but if not, they came to that order that was in the next Citie. Who if they heard it: they declared it vnto them (or gaue sentence). If not, they went to that order which was in the gate of the Porche of the Lordes house, and saide, Sic exposui, & sic feci mei exposuerunt: sic docui, & sic feci mei docuerunt. Thus haue I shewed it, and thus haue my fellowes shewed it: thus haue I taught, and thus haue my fellowes taught it. Who if they heard it: they declared it vnto them. If not, then both these and those went to the Consistorie Gazith, wherein the Sanedrin sate from the morning till the euening. But in the Sabbathes and first daies they sate in the wall.

Thus

Thus farre the Thalmudistes. And thus farre also Sigonius, for the iudgements of the Seniors in euerie Citie. Whereby againe wee perceiue the authoritie that these Seniors had. The next and seventh chapter is all of all this Senat, that Caluine and our Brethren say, Christ alluded vnto, and hath translated vnto vs.

But the Consistorie Gazith (saith Sigonius) which the Græcians haue named synagoga, and Chayre, the Latines Councell, the Thalmudists Sanhedrin, was the ample (or honourable) Tribunall (or iudgement seate) of all the Iudges, both in number and in dignitie, in that Citie which the Lorde hath chosen and decreed, to be the head both of holinesse and of the Empire, that is, first in Silo, and afterward at Ierusalem, or else, first in the Tribe of Ephraim, and afterwarde in the Tribe of Iuda.

In that Councell it was established, that those things which could not bee defined of the Iudges of euerie of their Cities, varying in their sentences concerning the Lawe, or concerning the fact, shoulde in conclusion be referred heerevnto.

But now being about to treat of this Tribunall, I will first shew forth all those things, that are declared of the Thalmudists. And then I will adde, what I my selfe haue founde by reading in the holie Writers. Thus therefore haue they in diuers places.

In the time of Moses by the commaundement of God, seuentie Elders of auncient yeeres and tried in knowledge were chosen out, which shoulde bee Coadiutors of Moses himselfe, in the gouernment of the people, vnto whome it pertained both to declare all the difficulties of the Lawe, and to define them, and also in weightie matters and harde causes to giue iudgement. Of whome is written, that in the Deuteronomie: If thou shalt perceiue that a difficult and doubtfull Iudgement is before thee: arise and goe vp to the place, which the Lorde thy God shal haue chosen, and there shalt thou call vpon his name.

As for these they were called by the tearme Sanhedrin, and they sate in the Consistorie Gazith, to iudge the iudgements of the liues, and they were called Mepekim, that is, Scribes, or Lawe-makers, because that whatsoeuer they deliuered, and wrote, was holden of other as a Lawe. The College of whome represented the Scepter, giuen of the holie Ghost to the house of Iacob. And the scepter it selfe depended on the. Wherevpon not onelie they that were resiant vnder the kings and Captaines (or Dukes) exercised the power of iudging, but also while there was no king nor Duke extant among the Iews, neuerthelesse the authoritie of them endured.

But ther wer 4 maners of putting to death deliuered to them. To stone them them, to burne them, to* wound them to death, and to strangle them. Whereupon their vse was, that when they hadde destroyed anie bodies life, that is, when they had iudged anie to bee slaine : all that day they tasted nothing. Moreouer, the Iudgements concerning money or goods moouable, were made by three Iudges, the Iudgements of the liues by three and twentie. But none iudged the Scepter, or a false Prophet, or the high Priest, but the house of the 70. Iudges. Neither did they goe forth to warre, except according to the mouth (or sentence) of the house of the Iudgement of the 70. Iudges. Nec addebant Civitas, neither encreased they the citie (or indenized anie) nor the salaries (or stipends) of the Temple, except by them. Neither made they the Sanhedrioth, that is, the meetings (or Selsions) of the Iudges for the Tribes, but by them.

The great Colledge was of 71. Iudges, the lesse of 23. But the 70. Seniors were those, of whome (it is said Num. 11. Gather to me three-score and tenne Elders, and Moses one. Their lesser Sanedrion, assemblie, (or meeting) of them, could not be ordeined, but of the assemblie (or meeting) of the 70. that were the greater. For those 70. Iudges ordeined the assemblies of the other Iudges, which in other Cities & places round about gouerned the people, howbeit on this condition, that euerie Assemblie of whatsoever Region it were, shoulde bee vnder the Assemblie in Ierusalem, and in the place called Gazith. But the Indges were chosen with the imposition of handes, insomuch that fise were necessarie for the dooing of that office. But these Sanhedrins, Herode the King tooke away. Other after that were substituted, but without the power of blood, (or of life and death) whereupon they answered Pilate, It is not lawfull for vs to kill anie man. From thence forth, for their false iudging of Christe, they were expulsed out of the Consistorie Gazith, fortie yeeres before the Temple was burned by the Romanes, and they sate in Hamih. But it was not lawfull, De Capite agere, to deale with matters of life and death, except in Gazith. As it is Deut. 17. And thou shalt doe according to the words of the mouth, that they shall shewe vnto thee out of that place. And againe, Thou shalt arise and go vp to that place. At the last, al these Iudges also were againe killed of the Romanes.

The Ro-manes destruction of these Elders

And these thinges verelie haue the Thalmudists, who chalenge to themselves an assured knowledge of these thinges, whereof Petrus Galatinus is the Authour. But vnto those thinges which they haue written, haning founde them out as it were with their eyes, we adioyne these thinges, out of the holie Treasuries of the newe and olde Testament, and besides out of the Monuments of Iosephus, by the which wee shall lay forth the institution, confirmation, right and power of this Council, First of al therefore it appeareth, that this tribunal (or iudgment seate) seate) was ordeined of God, that from the iudgement of the iudges, they should come to the council of the seniors and of the preestes, as it is written. 17. Deut. For Moses speaketh there by the prescription of God vnto the people: But if so bee thou shalt perceiue a difficult and doubtful iudgement to be before thee, betweene blonde and bloud, cause and cause, Lepry and not Lepry: and thou shalt see the Iudgements of the iudges within thy gates. To vary, arise and goe vp vnto the place which the Lorde thy God shall choose, that thou mightest there call vpon his name. And thou shalt come to the priestes of the Leuiticall stocke, and to him that shalbe Iudge for that time, and thou shalt aske it of them. Who shall shewe vnto thee the trueth of the Iudgement. And thou shalt do whatsoeuer they shall say, that rule the place, which the Lord shall choose, and they shall teach thee his Lawe, and thou shalt follow their sentence. Neither shalt thou swarue from it, to the right hande nor to the left. And whatsoeuer shalbe proude, refusing to obey the Preestes commaundement, which at that time ministrereth vnto the Lorde his God: that man by the decree of the Iudge shall dye.

Gods ordinance, Deut. 17. of these Elders power in iudgement.

Out of these it appeareth, that this Iudgement was committed to the king, to the preestes, and to the Elders of the people. For they were the cheefe that ruled the place that the Lorde had chosen. Iosephus therefore doth so rehearse this lawe, that he maketh cheefe mention of the senate. For then he wrot: But if the Iudges want knowledge to pronounce of the matters brought before them: let them sende the whole cause into the holie City, and the Bishop, and the Prophet, and the Senate, shall pronounce that, that seemeth vnto them. But afterward Moses nameth the Iudges them selues, whome we haue spoken of, preests, saying in the 19. chapter. If a lying witnesse shall stande against a man, accusing him of trespass: they shall both of them stande before the Lorde, and before the preestes, and before the Iudges that shall bee in those dayes. But Iosephus citeth it of the preestes themselves, in his second booke to Appion, when as he wrote: The Preestes were ordeined of Moses the viewers of all thinges, the Iudges of the controuersies, the punishers of the condemned.

Iosephus.

Iosephus li. 2.
ad Appionem.

Moreouer Moses him-selfe, in the counsell tooke knowledge (or hearing) of his cause, that gathered stickes on the sabboth, Leuit. 15. For so saith Philo. 3. De vita Mosi. They tooke the man & brought him to the Prince, about whome in the Counsell sat the Preestes; but all the multitude was present on the sabboth day to heare them. But Moses not knowing what punishment the man deserved, asked counsel of God, who answered, that he should be stoned to death.

Philo. li. 3. de vita Mosi.

By this it appeareth that all the parties that sat in this Sanedrin, except the Kings and the Princes persons were Teachers of the Lawe and word of God. Yea, in al the other inferior Seniorities they were noble men that onely were ioyned to the Teachers. But as Moses ordeined this tribunall, so afterward Iosaphat King of Iuda ordeined, as he also confirmed the iudgements in the cities. For thus it is written in the seconde of Paral. He appointed also in Ierusalem, Levites, and Preeftes, and Patriarches, out of Israel that they should iudge the cause of the Lord to the inhabitants thereof, and commanded them saying: thus shal ye do in the feare of the Lord faithfully and with a perfect heart. Euery cause that shall come vnto you of your Brethren which dwell in their cities, betweene kindred & kindred, wheresoeuer the Question of the Lawe, of the ceremonies, of the iustification (in the Greeke translation it is, of the precept, commandement iustifications and iudgements) He declared vnto them, that they should not offend against the L. And leasse wrath should come vpon you and vpon your Brethren. Doing thus therefore ye shall not sinne. But Ananias your B. shal gouern in those things which pertain to God, Zabadias the sonne of Israel, which is Capten in the tribe of Iuda, shall bee ouer those workes which pertaine to the offices of the king. The Masters, (in Greeke the Scribes) The Levites shall be before them.

What manner of persons the Elders were in the Sacerdote.

Into this counsell therefore, as it appeareth, there entred the king, with the Princes of the people, and the 70. seniors of the people, and the Bishop with the princes of the preeftes, & the scribes, that is the doctors of the Lawe, as is easy to see out of the Gospels, where the iudgement made on Christ is treated vpon. Wherefore Ioseph of Arimathia a senator or noble decurion, the same man being a partaker of the counsell, for it is written, that he gaue not his assent with the other to the condemnation of Christ. But I call them the Princes of the Preeftes, which in 24. formes of the Preeftes, euery one of them ruled in euery one of their turnes, but the Scribes I call them, that were the doctors of the Lawe, whome Iosephus called Prophets.

The power of the preefts in the Sacerdote.

Afterward the Councell in the transmigration of Babilon being destroyed: when the Iewes being returned into their countrie, the residue of their institutions were restored, the power of Iudging in the Councel was also giuen vnto the preeftes. Which thing Ezechiel. cap. 44. did fore-warne, by the commaundement of God, saying: The Preeftes shall teach my people, what difference there is betweene holy and prophane, and they shal Iudge vnto them betweene impure, and pure, and they shall endenour themselves that they may iudge about the iudgement of bloud, and they shall iustify my iustifications, and iudge my iudgements, and they shall keepe my lawes, and my precepts in all my feast dayes, that is, they shall take notice of causes of religion, and of capitall matters (that is, of life and death) and they shall iustify men, that is, absolve them: and iudge men, that is, condemne them, euen as I haue prescribed in the Lawe to be done, where I haue declared who are worthy of pardon, and who of punishment.

But some there are that thinke this counsell to haue beene chosen out of the family of Dauid, and that they were afterward taken away of Herod the King. Which if it bee so, whether the wordes of the Psalme sung (as S. Athanasius witnesseth) in the restoring of the City of Ierusalem, lem, may be referred thereunto: because there, that is, in Ierusalem, saie the seates vnto iudgement, the seates vpon the house of Dauid, that is, the seate out of the house of Dauid. But eyther the King or the Bishop called this counsel, according as the crime brought before them eyther touched the City or Religion.

But the order of executing the matter was almoste in this manner. He that desired to put vp the name of another, for the moste part came eyther to the king, or to the Bishop, or to the Princes, and declared the guilty party. Which done they sent Ministers to take the man. And if the matter required, they added a band also, receiued from the gouernour of the Temple. And hauing brought him, they kept him for the moste part eyther in prison, or in souldiers custody, vntill iudgement passed on him. The whole Councell beeing afterward called together, they gaue them selues to the vnderstanding of the matter. As for the crime and the punishment, was of the accusant called vpon; in these wordes; The Iudgement of death is due to this man, because hee hath done this or that. But the Defendant repelled it, with these wordes. The Iudgement of death is not due to this man, because hee hath not done it, or because hee hath doone it righteously.

lants accusation.

But when the cause hath beene thoroughly pleaded vpon, then were the suffrages (or voyces) giuen of the iudges, and either hee was condemned or absolued, according to the number of the sentences. But when the matter was brought to the Romaynes: the onely condemnation was left to the Councell, but the punishment was taken away, but, permitted vnto the Roman procurator. Which hapned in the iudgement of Christe. For the Councell condemned Christe, and adiudged him to death. But the people being stirred vp of the Councell, demaunded of Pilate the Procurator, that he might be crucified, & he gaue iudgement, that it should so be done.

The forme of laying the accusation or of repelling the crime, as in the 26 of Hieremie: the preestes and the prophetes spake vnto the princes of Iuda, saying: the iudgement of death is vnto this man, because he hath prophesied against this City. And the princes sayde vnto the preestes: the iudgement of death is not vnto this man, because he hath spoken vnto vs in the name of the Lorde our God. A forme of the condemnation is in S. Math. 26. Beholde now yee haue heard blasphemie what seemeth it to you? and they answering, sayde: he is guilty of death: the which thing Marke saith: Who all of them condemned him to bee guilty of death: but these things which we haue spoken shall all be more cleare knowne, if euery one of the iudgements made after this order, whereof record is left in writing shall be shewed forth.

And here he proceedeth to the manifold testimonies and examples hereof in the Scripture, and in Iosephus, but especially in the newe testament.

By al which it appeareth for this Senate or council of the 70 Seniors, (which after the Jewes mixture with the Grecians, of ancien was corruptly called Sanedrin) what persons they were, except the King and the Princes, all of them either preestes or teachers of the Lawes of God, And how they sat but in one and the heade Citie, assistant with the King and the princes, in al matters of plea and controuersie, of Lands & goods, of warre and peace, of life and death, &c. For the King coulde rule these matters without them, and that their authority herein grewe not so much by the late corruptions: as it was rather thereby abridged in the age of Christe, by the Romaines and by Herod.

If nowe our Learned discoursing Brethren shall reiect all these so industrious collections of Sigonius (as an aduersary) what pzoofes, reasons, and authorities soener he auouch: let vs then see, howe farre forth Bertram also doth confirme it. For, besides that which wee haue alleaged out of him, for the original and the first practise thereof, befoze the government of the Kings: after the negligence of Saule speaking of Dauid, chap. 10. Page 56. he saith:

Moreouer Dauid restored the municipall iudgementes altogether into their auncient order. Howbeit, but about the last times of his reigne: because, that being hindred with warres and diuers busineses, hee was content with those Iudgementes, which for a greate part bee- ing decayed, perseuered (but litle constantly) in euery of the Cities and tribes, euen from the times of Iosue, vntill then. But yet so, that the more waighty causes (especially the appeales) were referred to him, as it appeareth out of 2. Sam. 15. 2.

The Levites were the go-uernors in the Jewes Senats.

But at the length, he also restored this part of the common weale, so that vnto the Levites reckoned vp, he established to be firm, their chan- gable and vncerteine offices, both in the holy (or Ecclesiasticall) policy, and also in the ciuill. In the ciuill policie, hee is saide to haue appointed out of the Levites, 6000. Iudges and praefectes (or Gouvernors). Out of the Levites, the Iudges and praefectes were assumed, for this reason: That first there shoulde bee certayne out of the Levites which should bee assistors or sitters together with the ordinary and municipall iudges, that were called seniors. Who some-times also De plane (ut Vulgo loquuntur) Indicarent de rebus leuioribus, shoulde Iudge after a playne sorte (as is the common saying) of the lighter matters, such as were the pecuniarie, either they alone, or taking some one vn- to them of the Seniors of the place or City. And moreover, that there should should also be some other, which should execute the matters adiudged. Or else, (that which is indeed the more likely) they that were the Assessors of the ordinarie Iudges, who also their selues tooke notice of the pecuniarie matters, & iudged them, and executed the matter it selfe that they had iudged. He ordained therefore that Chanenias and his sonnes, or his posterity should be designed for iudges and Prefects for the outward worke, that is to saie, for the outward holie offices that we necessarie for the making of sacrifices, in the house of the Lord, or Tabernacle, in Israel, that is, among the Israelites, that dwelt on this side Iordan, except the Tribes of Iuda, Benjamin, and Simeon. The number of these is not prescribed.

1. Chro. 26. 29.

He also ordained out of the Hebronites, Hasabias, and his brethren, that they should gouerne the Western coasts, side-long (or on the side) of Iordan, that is, on the hether-hand Iordan, as well in the businesse of the Lord, as in the seruice or ministerie, or obeisance of the king. In French, Pour le seruice du Roy, that is, in the businesses (or affaires appertaining to the Royall administration or ciuill policie, as shall afterward appeare. This Western coast contained the Tribe of Iuda, Benjamin, and Simeon. Which Tribes of those that are on this hand Iordan, doo lie Westward. The other which are attributed to Israel, are Northerne. Hasabias & his brethren are accounted 1700. Hee ordeined also, that out of the Hebronites, the brethren, or the next a kinne of Ierias, the Prince of all his familie, to the nuber of 1700, should gouerne the Rubenites, the Gadites, and the halfe Tribe of Manasses. For euerie matter of God, that is, Ecclesiasticall: and for the matter of the ning, that is, the ciuill. Of the same familie therefore were adhibited to gouerne the Church, and to gouerne the ciuill policie, neuerthesse, in such sort, that there was no confusion and permixture: as it appeateth out of those things that were restored of Iosaphat. It seemeth therefore, that then, and from thence vpward, euen to the times of Iosue, there were certaine Ecclesiasticall assemblies of the Leuites, at euerie one of the Synagogues of euerie one of the Cities, or verely at those cities, which were proper to the Leuites, as in the 15. chap. we shall more at large declare.

How David distributed the governments and bounds of the Leuites Seniorica.

Thus was the state againe rightly restored to the originall (as Bertram sayth) in Danids time, and that by his industrie and supreme authoritie. Wherein we see what those Seniors onely were, that here medled not onely with Ecclesiasticall, but ciuill government, to wit, all of them Leuites. And such as might teach the lawe. For the other, (which were the Elders of other Tribes) dealt onely in ciuill matters, except the Prince alone, that had the principall charge ouer both the Tables, though not to execute, yet to see executed (by the persons competent in both foundations) as wel the Ecclesiasticall as the ciuill policie. And thus as David did dispose the regi-

Solomon maintained herein Dauid's orders. giment of these Seniors, a little before his death, so no doubt, but that his sonne Salomon did all his life obserue it. After whome (sayth Bertram) concluding that Chapter: In the time of Ieroboam the iudgements began to degenerate, especiallie after the Empire was diuided.

Iosaphats restoring the Iewes Seniories.

But entering againe into a fresh restoring thereof in the 11. Chapter, he proceedeth, saying: Iosaphat hauing taken possession of the kingdome, proceeded both in restoring the Ecclesiasticall and ciuile policie. To this purpose therefore hee thought it verie expedient, if first of all he remo- ued the high places and the grones (as a little after wee shall throughlie handle it.) And then, that he should send five of his Princes, Beuchail, Abdias, Zacharias, Nathaniel, and Micheas, vnto whom he adioined two of the Priests, and nine Leuites. And he sent them throughout all the Ci- ties of the kingdome of Iuda, &c, beginning at Beer-sheba, and ending at the mount of the Tribe of Ephraim, to reclaim his people to the wor- ship of God: To confirme this, he is said to haue ordained Iudges, in all the defenced Cities, Citie by Citie, that is, in euerie of the Cities, or, for Citie and Citie & City. He placed the iudgement in the chiefeft Cities, to the which iudgements the causes of the lesser Cities, Pages, and Ilandes should be referred. These Iudges are to be taken in that manner as they were instituted at Hierusalem, to wit, Ecclesiasticall & ciuile. So that they appointed ciuil iudgements out of the Seniors of euerie Citie, and the Leuites are sayd to be adhibired, to be the gouernours vnto either of the iudgements, to wit, after the same manner, whereby Dauid hadde as- signed them to that office, as appeareth out of the ende of the Chap- ter.

a. Chro. 19.

* Ad Lirm.

The Syne- drion.

Hee also ordained Iudges at Ierusalem out of the Leuites and the Priests and heads of the Fathers of Israel, partlie for the iudgements of the Lord, that is the Ecclesiasticall, partlie also * for plea, that is, for the ciuile iudgement. In these words, the two iudgements, to wit, the Eccle- siasticall and the ciuile, are distinguished. The ciuil (as it seemeth to con- sist on the heades of the Fathers of the people) seemeth to bee the Syne- drion of the three score and ten Elders. In those heads of the Fathers, we may place the Priests and the Leuites: for the institution of the seauentie themselves had their gouernours, which were the Leuites. But those se- uentie were not now taken out of those seuentie families, of whome we spake before. But of those onelie that were vnder the dominion of Iosa- phat. Wherevpon also at the length, they were chosen out of the onelie house and familie of Dauid. As concerning those Iudges being chosen, are sayde to returne vnto Ierusalem: This may bee so vnderstoode, that leauing the allotmēt of their Tribe those Iudges came to abide at Ieru- salem, or that they vsed to meete at Ierusalem, where the iudgement was to be entered. It is likely that the Ecclesiasticall iudgement did then consist

list of the Priests and Levites onely.

These two iudgements were the chiefe and principal, whereunto the more difficult causes were referred, as the Lorde had commanded in the Lawe. For the King in his exhortation set forth vnto the same Iudges, confirmeth this sufficientlie, while hee sayth: And yee shall iudge euerie strife which shall come from your Brethren that dwell in their Cities, &c. The matter of either iudgemēt may seem to be al one, but in a diuerse respect, that is to wit, Ecclesiasticall and ciuil, according as in the same cause somewhat was Ecclesiasticall, & somewhat ciuil, as in a pawne deuided, &c. Moreouer, the high Priest was sometimes demaunded concerning the Law, that it might at length bee determined concerning the fact.

The diuers respect of Eccl. & ciuil in one and the same cause.

To conclude (as these iudgements were the highest) they had at Ierusalem their municipal iudgement, which seemeth to appertain to the king and to his officers, or rather to the Chiliarke, Centurions, &c. of that territorie. Notwithstanding so, that the whole iurisdiction should be subiect to either of those iudgements. By these things therefore, this King seemeth rather than anie other iudge or King, to haue come nere to the naturall institution of the Lawe prescribed, concerning this matter. There againe doe we see a cleere example, of that Seniory which Caluine and our Bishops doe so much vsge, drawing nearest to that verie institution of the old lawe, without the corruption that they except against.

And they (saith Bertram) that were the gouernours of the supreme ciuil iudgemēt, do seeme for the same cause to be those, which with the latter kings are called שרים, Sarim, that is, princes, & חורין Chorum, that is, Patricians (or noble Fathers.) That these Princes wer out of the heads of the Fathers, and out of the ordinarie Iudges, it appeareth out of the things aforesayde, and especiallie, out of these things that are declared in this restitution of Iosaphat, yea rather, out of the Prophets often reprehensions, beeing so conuerted and composed to these Princes, that they altogether respect their iudgements. Verilie of this so greate Empire (or principallitie) there seeme to bee extant in Ieremie most cleere examples. So that, except these Elders which our Bishopsen pleade for, (to bee renued after the example and patterne of the ancient lawes of the Iewes) would take this Princelie Empire and authoritie vpon them: their appealing to these auncient lawes & orders, make nothing for them. But yet to see their authoritie better: let Bertram procede with his examples, though some of them we haue heard before in Sigonius.

The great principality of these Elders.

The first (example) is extant, Iere. 26. Chap. where after that Ieremie was cōdemned of the Priests & Prophets (that is) of the ecclesiasticall Cōfession, or Consistorie, & of them that professed the knowledge & interpretation of the diuine letters (or of diuinitie as we terme it) as though the knowledge of doctrine pertained vnto them: wherupon they also which of Ieremie are called Prophets, of Ionathas the Paraphrast are expounded, Scribes) and also was condemned of the whole people, that is, of the ordinarie advocates of the people, the Iudges, or Seniors, to wit, the Chiliarques, Centurions, &c. Which represented the whole people, insomuch that, verse. 9. the whole people is gathered to the congregation or concio. And in the 17. verse mencioned is made לְכָל עָמָל Caal That is, of the gathering together, or of the vniuersall concion it selfe: or certainlie, the verie people their selues (that heard Ieremy) being called together to beare witnesse against him, & to subscribe to the sentence pronounced against him, and to command it to be executed, as it appeareth in the end of the Chapter: & that the same was declared to the Princes of Iuda that were assembled at the kings pallace, to wit, to the ciuil Consistorie of three score and ten Elders: these kinde of Princes came to the Temple, where they are sayd to haue sitten, at the tribunal or iudgement seate, at the new gate of the Temple, and the people being admitted thereto (according as the manner, to wit, that we haue now declared) they heard the Prophet & absolved him also, euen as though in that their iudgement they had condemned & corrected Iohakim the king himselfe, which had most ctuely murdered Vrias the Prophet.

Ieremie acquitted by those Elders

Here againe is a liuelie paterne of the great authoritie in cases of life and death for matter of religion, that the Consistorie of the Elders hadde. Which here notablie and sincerelie (by reason of some good men among them) acquitted Ieremie according to the auncient manner of Gods law. This then is the authoritie that Caluine and our Brethren pretend, Christ translated to his Church; stretching so farre, as not onely to the acquitting of the Prophets: but to the condemning and correcting euen of kings and Princes.

Bertrams 2. example of those Elders power. Ierem. 36.

The second (example) is Chap. the 36. where Baruch hauing recited before the people, the writing that he had written out after Ieremies meditating thereof: he is called to for the Kinges pallace, vnto these kind of Princes; before whom he readeth a fresh that same writing. When it was read, they laie it vp in the chamber of the Scribe (or Chauncellour, as the Geneva Bible translates it): they inquiring how it was written, doe admonish Baruch to hide himselfe together with the Prophet. The Princes goe to the king, they report to him the summe of the writing. The King himselfe commaunds the writing to be brought to him. And when hee had heard three leaues thereof, he cut out the writing with a Scribes pen knife. And when he was besought of three of them onelic, that he would not burne the booke: hee ceased not to burne it, as a matter that did not displease the residue of the Princes, who also euen for that point are noted of the Prophet, that they trembled not, nor yet, rent their garments ments, at the reading of that writing.

Beere againe, we see their great authoritie in this matter of doctrine, and how the king (at their silence or consent of the writing) presumed to cut out the leaues, and burne them in spite, as a thing that no whit displeased the greatest parte of these Consistorie Princes, although that some few among them intreated him to the contrarie.

The third example is extant, Ierem. 37. and 38. where it is sayde, that Ierusalem hauing beene besieged of the Chaldees: Ieremie was apprehended of Ierias a certaine watchmā, at the gate of Beniamin, as though he were a runne-awaie, and being brought to these kind of Princes, who were verie much chafed against the Prophet, & hauing beaten him, they cast him into a most filthie prison. Sedechias (which was the next King succeeding) secretly called for Ieremie out of that filthie prison (he so feared those Princes) and remoueth him into a more gentle custodie, where he continued dutifullie. Whereupon it commeth to passe, that those Princes goe about to wring from the king the sentence of deach against the Prophet, to wit, that the king should consent vnto his death. Pretending, that hee discouraged the peoples mindes, and that hee studied not for their benefit. The King answered that Ieremie was in their handes, neyther that the king might preuaile against them in anie thing, as though he confessed that he was farre their inferiour. Which he sheweth inough, when afterwards he saith, that he is afraide, least those Princes should inquire, what speeches hee had with the Prophet too and fro, whereupon also he faineth a lie, as though hee had beene to giue an account to them, of the thinges that hee had done. By these meanes it is brought to passe, that the order of the iudgements thus restored: endured vntill the times of the Babylonicall captiuitie.

Ier. 37. & 38.

The Elders
superiour to the king.

This was the state of that Consistorie of the Iewes, which of all other our Brethren haue picked out, and vize so earnestlie to haue it set vp amongest vs, pretending that Christe restored it, and translated it from them to his Church, and all by the vertue of these wordes, in te Eucharistia, Tell the Church, as forcible wordes in their imagination, to make this Metamorphosis of the state of all Christian Kings and kingdomes, as euer the Papistes pleaded for those wordes of Christ, Hoc est Corpus meum: they for their Transubstantiation in the Sacrament, and these for this translatiō in the Regiment. Pretending (as Bertram the wretch hereupon) that the state was not onelie Monarchicall, but chiefly Aristocraticall, the gouernment of the best men, to the which purpose he alleadgeth these examples. Although (God wot) these three last examples (in this state that he calleth restored) were of men for the most parte of them, whome he might haue lesse praised (if it had pleased him) these ruiniers of Ieremie, and too much ouer-rulers of the Prince.

And

And also it was in part Democraticall, or the government of the people. Whereto be alleadgeth 1. Samuel. 14. 38. &c. How the people deliuered Ionathas from his Fathers iudgement. And 1. Chron. 13. verse. 1. 2 & 4. How כָּהֵן יִשְׂרָאֵל Chol Caal Israel, al the cōgregation of Israel, and all the whole people gathered themselves together, and that David demaunded their sentence for the reducing of the Arke. Yea, rather than the Princes state should not be thus translated: it must be conformed to that example also, of the Israelites state of the ten Tribes. For they (as Bertram saith cap. 12.) had their Sanhedrin too.

The state of the tenne
tribes.

The policie (sayth he) of the ten Tribes, came verie neere to the ciuill policie of the kingdome of Iuda. For it had the king their head, and then חֹרִים Chorum, that is, the men which were the Patriciens or noble Fathers, which other wise we said were called סָרִיסִים Sarim, that is, Princes, which made also the Synedrin, and chiefe Consistorie of Iudges of that kingdome. Here the Consistorie sate most commonlie at the Kings palace, such as was Iesrael in the time of Achab. It had also זִקְנֵי Zechonium, Seniors (or Elders) to wit, Chiliarks, Céturiós, &c. Either of these magistrates is so called in Nehemias. That also argueth the peoples power, that the witnesses suborned against Naboth, are sayd to haue given their witness before all the people. But that policie seemeth to bee so mixt of the Regall, Aristocratical, and Democraticall power, that was altogether Tyrannicall, as appeareth by the gestes of the Kings of the tenne Tribes. True indeede, those Kings for the most part of them did degenerate into a kind of Tyrants. But this argument is but weake, that the state was mixt with the peoples government, because the witness of the Elders was giuen before the people: for what witnes in so waightie a iudgement, should not rather be giuen before the people, than in secret, or in priuate? But, may we not better finde fault with those wicked Elders, which gave that iudgement. And yet, what difference betwene these among the Israelites, and those among the Iewes, that by al meanes sought the murdering of the prophet Ieremie? And if such good Elders came in the time, while (they say) whatsoever the persons were, their state was intier, and according to the first and auncient institution, whereunto our Bzeth. would haue our state translated: might not we feare also, that when these Seniors should become such Princes, that might peraduenture bzeake out into such parts? Which least they should do: how they might be repressed (or rather prevented) wold be better thought on, before they were put in possession, especiallie of the estate, which is here so expresse by Caluine and our Bzethen chalenged, that they should be admitted vnto.

The state of
the Iewes
regiment af ter the captivity.

As for the state of the regiment following, in the time of the Iewes captiuitie, & after ward vntill Christs coming, was more disturbed. And yet, Bertram telleth cap. 13. that first Darius Artaxerxes Longimanus permitted

ted to the Jewes some part of their former power, whereby Esdras did so againe let in order the civil policy, that in the place of a king, it had מִשְׁכָּן Pechah, that is, a presidēt provincially, that governed Iurie vnder the direction of the Persian Monarke, and of him he was sent thether. As appeareth out of the storie & occasion of sending Zerubbabel Ezr. 3. & 4. & out of Nehe. 5. 14. In the second place they had שָׂרִים Sarim, that is, Princes, which are oftē שָׂרֵי חֲוֵי Chorim, that is, Patritiās. And sometimes also שָׂרֵי אֲבִיִּים ari aueth, that is, the Princes of the Fathers, or of the families: and these made the Synedrion of the 70. Thirdly, it had their ordinary Iudges, the Chiliarks, Centurions, &c. which were not onely called יְקֹנִיִּים Ieko-nim, that is, Seniors (or Elders) &c. In the 4. place it had the assembly and iudgement of al the Citizens, this kind of assemblee is called קְהֵלָה גְּדוֹלָה Kaalah Gedolah, that is, the great company or great gathering together.
 Thus were all these orders retained so wel as that troubled and tributary State would permit it. Duer whom, in all their assemblies & iudgements stil were (& much more thā before) the Levites, the prefects & gouernours of the. Of which State (saith Bertram in the same Chap. pag 69.) To conclude, if euer that Policie of Magistrates and Iudges, which our Thalmudistes doo recorde, had place: verelie, it is to be referred to the processe of this time. For they tell, that the chiefe Senate of the Hebrues, to wit, of the 70. the power which they had of the sword or putting to death, which they had in the greater causes (such as were of the Tribe, of the high Priest, of a false Prophet, and of Treason:) they communicated the same to three & twentie headmen, &c. Whereby it appear-eth what great authoritie, they still retained, or had then moſte of all, hauing no thing among them. And in the next page, he saith: The Presidents provincially excelled in greatest authoritie, insomuch, that they had the chiefe gouernment, as it appeareth by those things which Nehemias did. To proue Nehemias had chiefe auth. that last fact of his dooth argue, wherein he reioyceth, that he had banished a certaine man of the posteritie of Ioiada, the sonne of Eliazib the chiefe Priest, because he had married the daughter of Sanballat the Horonite: & to proue also that he had the cheefest gouernment, in that he had rebuked, he had commanded to be excommunicated, to be beaten with rodde, and to be made bald, (in token of greatest reproch) the residue of the Jewes that had married women strangers. Iosephus chap. 11. in the 7. booke of the Jewes antiquities, doth so touch the foresaid story: that he saith the elders of Ieru-salem, that is the chiefe Magistrates and the synedrion it selfe, decreed & commaunded Manasses the brother of the high Priest Iaddi, to sende away and put from him his wife an alien borne, that is, a Samaritan the daughter of Samballat &c. Such auth. had this synedrion (albeit not so called among them) vnder Nehemias Iaddi, the high Priest, but Barr. saith in the page following, of the state declining after Nehemias. Neuerthelesse it might be that Iaddus and the other Guides of the Iewes, didde choose one of the Tribe of Iuda, that shoulde beare the principalltie in the chiefe Synedrion; howbeit, rather for name-sake than indeed, when as all things depended on the high Bishops.

And on this sort continued the state, till the time of the Macchabees: in whose time saith Bertram, pa. 79. Yea Ionathas (that he might the better reteine safe and sound αὐτονομίας, & ἀνεξαρτησίας, the vse of their own lawes, and state of their owne power): he sent Ambassadors to Rome and to Lacædemonia, which should renue the league with the Romanes and the Lacædemonians. But, that their auncient policie was restored, ap-peareth in this, that the Ambassadors expresselie signified to the Ro-manes, that they were sent of Ionathas the high Priest, and of the Nation of the Iewes: & also by the verie superscription of the letters, which by the same Ambassadors he sent vnto Lacædemonia, which was endi-ted in these wordes. Ἰωνᾶθαν Ἀρχιερεὺς καὶ οἱ γερουσιᾶ τοῦ Ἰουδαίου καὶ οἱ ἱερεῖς καὶ ἡ λαοὶ τῆς φυλῆς

Ἰωνᾶθαν, Ionathas the high Priest, and the Senate (or Eldership) of the Nation, and the other people of the Iewes, send greeting to the Spartanes their brethren.

The mixt estate of the Iewes common weale.

And in Iosephus Ant. isq. Ind. 13. c. 9. Ἀρχιερεὺς &c. Ionathas the high Priest of the Nation of the Iewes, and the Eldership and the Comminaltie of the Iewes, &c. These things doo manifestlie argue, what was then the forme of the Iewes Common-weale, & how they were returned to that former mix Policie. For first, Ionathas is set downe, as the Prince: then the Senate, which terme comprehendeth the superior and inferior Iudges: last of all, the people it selfe. And that (in these tearmes) it is apparant, they did it not to the Romanes and Lacædemonians, to make a shewe: it is said 1. Macchab. 12. 35. that Ἰωνᾶθαν καλεῖται τὸν λαόν, that is, the Elders of the people, to treat of building the Fortresses in Iurier, &c. But those whome the author of the booke booke of the Machabees, calleth the Elders of the people: Iosephus calleth λαὸν ἅπαντα, the whole people. So that either in their names, come all the Citizens, which is properlie called the people; or γερονται, that is, the Senate, to wit, that superiour Senate, which (when it representeth the people) is called the people it selfe.

This sense of the Senate, especiallie of the superiour Seniors, is here verie violentlie by Bertram wrested (as I vnder correction take it) for the People. Being the Gouernours of the people, and so clærelie distinguished from them, betwene the Prince and the People. But his conclusion is this: Heere certainlie it seemeth, that this former time of the Machabees, had somewhat more of the popular state, and of the best mens go-uernment, than of a kingdome. For when all is done, both Bertram, Caluine,

Caluine, Beza, Dancus, and these our Learned Discourfing Brethren, en-line moſte to this eſtate that moſte declineth from a kingdome, And ſo we ſhould quickly come to a good eſtate of Regiment: the Prince being overruled by the Senate, and the Senate repreſenting but the people: and ſo, all comes to the ſtate popular, as it was among the Græcians and the Gabinus erecting of mo Synec-

Romaynes. Which in ſhort time, would bring England and all Chriſten-dome, into a proper ſtate. And of this eſtate he alleageth further many mo inſtances, 1. Mat. 13. 36. 14. 20. 27. 41. 42. &c. Beſides ſtill his confirmations out of Iofephus. And ſo, leſſe or more, the authority of the Synedrion continued: ſo, by this time, (after the Gretian Monarchie, it had gotten that corrupt Sanhedrin of Synedrion) til Gabinus ſubdued the Iews vnder the Romanes. Who (reſtoring Hyrcanus to the high preſthood) distinguished (ſaith Bertram. pag. 84. The nation of the Iewes, into five Courts (or ſeſſion places of theſe Elders) and to euery court assigned his Synedrion And here (ſee) began the corruption of the ſtate by making many Synedrions, as our Bz. now would do. The Synedrions of Ieruſalem miniſtred the Lawe in the territory of Ieruſalem, Gadarens in Ga-derene territory, &c. So that (ſaith Bertram) now their affayres might be lawfully adminiſtred, not by the gouernment of one: but by the decree of the cheefe perſons.

But now, when in this goodly eſtate, Iulius Caſar had made Antipater the Father of Herode, to be Hyrcanus procurator, and that theſe Elders and cheefe perſons complayned to Hyrcanus, of Antipaters & his ſons affectation of tyranny: eſpecially (ſaith Bert. pag. 85) taking occaſion hereupon, that Herod had committed many things in Galile, againſt the country lawes of the Hebrues, and right of the Synedrion, and that for the ſame, he was a little afterwarde cited vnto the cheefe Synedrion at Ieruſalem: moreouer (ſaith he) Iofephus treating of theſe matters, teacheth, that in thoſe times the right of that cheefe Synedrion endured, which ſate at Ieruſalem, and that the dignity thereof, together with the principality of the nation, was plainly reſtored vnder Hyrcanus: &c. The Synec-

When it was thus in the cheefeſt eſtate, Antonie ſetting vp Herod to be a Tetrarch, & Auguſtus after ward making him a King: all this ſtate and cheefe power of the Synedrion was ouerthrowen. For (ſaith Bertram, pag.
86.) Herod provided, that all the Iudges of the cheefe Synedrion except one or two, were ſlaine, and all other that excelled in any authority or obtained the degree of any dignity, ſo that, hee placed in their ſteedes, whome he pleaſed.

After which Herods death, when Auguſtus diuided all that ſtate into four gouernments: there followed of neceſſity this diſtracting (ſaith Bertram, pag. 87) of the Iewes kingdom into Tetrarchies, a new diſtinction of Synedrions, euery Tetrach (no doubt) vpholding ſeparately his own Juriſdiction. Which occaſion, we ſee, that Pilate greedily ſnatched, while he ſent Chriſte as a Galilean (in which dooing, hee verilye pleaſed the Iewes nothing at all) vnto Herod the Tetrarch of Galilæa, whome notwithstanding, Luke calleth King. Thus haue wee ſeene, all the ſtate of the Iewes, Seniors in the Sanhedrin, ſo much pretended and urged by our Bzethren) from the time that their ſelues fetch it, Numb. 11. And beſoꝛe, deſcending downe euen vntill Chriſtes time, who gaue this precept Math. 18. Dic Eccleſia, Tell the Church. In which wordes (they ſay) Chriſte translated the Iewes Synedrion (as it was ordeined of God, but not, as it was then in Chriſtes times altered) to bee reſtored, renewed, and continued in his Church. If this be true: howe muſt not all the ſtate of the Realme, and all realmes Chriſtian bee quite altered? Yea, if this bee true: howe did not Chriſte translate withall, reſtore, renewe, and continue the Iudiciall ciuill and politike Lawe of Moſes? Our Bzethren pretend at the ſuperficiall view nothing but the reſtoꝛing of the Eccl. regiment and Discipline but when wee come thus to the ſounding of the matter: we finde it is indeed, the alteration of all the whole ſtate. Yea, it is little oꝛ leaſte of all, Eccleſiaſticall Regiment, Discipline or policie.

Our Br. preſent vnder
the name of eccl. regiment driue
at the ciuill
regiment,

I graunt the Iewes had alſo their Eccleſiaſticall Regiment, Discipline, and policie, whereof Bertram treateth at large afterwarde. But what was that to the Sanedrion or Synedrion of the Iewes, either corrupted, oꝛ in the beſt eſtate? Eccleſiaſticall perſons alſo did deale therein, but was not their authoritie moſt in the cheefeſt matters of eſtate: if our Bzethren meane, but the ſtate Eccleſiaſticall: why doe they urge ſo peremptorily that Synedrion and thoſe Elders (beſoꝛe it had that name) of the 70 ordeined of God, Numb. 11.

All theſe theſe, duelic and thus at large conſidered: to ſay nothe, that Chriſte alluded to this order of the Iewes ſenate, to this Sanedrion or Synedrion among them, to this conſiſtory and counsell of ſeniors, not ſo much corrupted by their vices, as inſtituted & approued of God, & that Chriſt translated this into the Church in the new Teſtament, and that to continue while the world endure, to be eſtabliſhed now in euery Church or congregation, either the ſame, or the like to this for the admiuiſtration of gouernment, and to haue the hearing of all difficult & waighty matters amog vs, as the Sanedrion had among the Iewes if this be (as our Bzethren in the title of this their Learned Diſcourſe do ſay) a breefe, & plain declaration of the deſires of al thoſe faithful Miniſters, that haue, & do ſeek for the diſcipline & reformation of the Church of England: If our Bz. aſke to mary this Abiſag: her Maieſty then in deede may quickly ſay, as Solomon did, Let them aſke the kingdom too. For what is here left in tempoꝛal, politike and woꝛldly matters, oꝛ in the gouernment and ſtate of the kingdom, wherein theſe Seniors will not haue a ſtroke, yea, and a negative voice: and that in every parish, which is cleane different from the Sanhedrin. For both their lesse kind of Sanedrin, & their greater (as they after ward denided it) was only in one place for all the realm. As first at Sylo, and then at Ierusalem the head citie, untill these last alterations came, where as our 152. would haue the like (if not the same) to be erected in euery congregation, which is the playne ouerthrowe of a kingdom, & to make euery congregatio a kingdō in it self. For if it be not such a Senate as was their Sanedrin, then is it not the same, nor like the same that Christ (they say) did heere allude vnto. And if it be not, then do they plainly delude vs, and twist Christes wordes, in gathering such allusions, and building on them, and inforcing on vs, this their Seniory by force hereof. And say that here Christe also translated the same into his church in the newe Testament And yet when all is done, they must needs confesse, that it is cleane different. For in both these consistories of the Sanedrin, the greater of the 70. and the lesse of the 23. They were all eyther Preestes or Doctors of the Lawe and teachers, the King and the Princes, or noble peeres, onlie excepted. So that, except they wil be Kings Princes or noble Peeres, all these Seniors must not bee gouernors not teaching, but Interpreters, Doctors, & teachers of the Law of God, or else they be neither the same nor the like, no; fitte at all, to be any Seniors in this Senate.

When all is done, our Br. Elders that are gouernors and noneachers are here also excluded except they will bee Princes.

And whereas Beza saith in his Christian Confession, cap. 5. artic. 32. but we must know, that this Iurisdiction (hee speaketh of these Seniors) doth not appertaine to earthly and transitory matters, and is altogether different from the ciuile, as witnesseth Christe, and after Christe Paul: although eyther of them particularly comprehendeth all the faithfull without exception: for al are also thral to the ciuil Magistrate whose power also in respect is edifying, an edifying or building power, so farre forth as it ought to procure peace, & good order, good order or discipline, especially in those things that respect the first table. And on the other side ther is none which should not be subiect to the word of God, & so of cōsequēce vnto the eccl. discipline. Howbeit (I confesse) the apostle willeth, that for the cause of auoiding offence, Christians should iudge their cōtrouerisies priuaty, without the ciuil magistrate. But it appeareth sufficiently, that Paul which followed the steps of Christ, and of all the saintes, would not therefore withdraw any thing from the ciuil iurisdiction, nor confound those things that the Lord hath distinguished, but only haue consideration of the time, in the which it could not be, that the saythfull should contend before infidel Iudges, but that they should bee thral to diuerse slaunders. For the which cause hee admonisbeth the Corinethians, that all such kinde of controuerisies should rather be eyther once taken away, or taken vp, by domesticall debating of them.

Beza in confession. Christi. cap. 5. Art. 32 of the Synedrion. This admonition therefore of Paule, doth nothing fauour the furious and giddi-brayned Anabaptistes, which leaue no place to the Ciuill Magistrate in a Christian Church. To returnetherefore to the matter, there is a certaine ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction, but vtterly distinguished from the ciuill.

This

Thus writeth Beza of the Iurisdiction of these Seniors to be mere Ecclesiasticall and cleane different from the ciuill Iurisdiction, Pea Danæus also concludeth as is foresaide in the 10. chapter, saying: For although the Presbytery or Synedrion of the Iewes (which was the same, Ad. 22. verse 5. & 30. & in Math. 5. ver. 23.) seemeth to aunswere to our presbytery, iudged often of certaine causes: notwithstanding our Presbyteries doe not iudge, and thereupon are different from those of the Iewes. Because they had partly politicall, partly Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction both together, as appeareth, Esd. 10. verse. v. But our presbyteries haue only Ecclesiasticall: it pertaineth indeede to their office and function to reclaim, if they can, to peace and concorde the faithfull pleading or about to plead. Verily they ought to exhort them to mutuall charity, Cor. 6. verse 1. Mat. 5. 25, But to sit Iudges in their pleases, they ought not, for this is the office of the ciuill magistrate. Yea neither the whole presbytery, neither any part of the presbytery, ought so much as to be chosen arbytrators, but onely as priuate men, if any of the presbytery be taken to be arbytrators. If this be true, than is all this deuise of translating the Sanedrion of the Iewes into the newe testament and Church of Christe, or of willing the like thereof to be established in his Church, for administation of gouernment, quite ouerthrowen. For what the Iewes elder ship was, we haue seene at large already. And yet there were then also Ciuill Magistrates as well as now. And therefore if Christ had translated their Sanedrion vnto vs, ours might haue like authority, as theirs had, notwithstanding our ciuill Magistrates.

But besides this in generall that Danæus here confesseth, that the presbyteries of the Iewes Iudged often in some causes, and mixed together the temporall and Ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction, which our brethren mislike in the Bishops and ministers: Chytreus also vpon the 17. of Deut. Tit. de Iudiciis, doth confirme the mosse of that, which we haue shewed at large out of Bertram & Sigonius, for the Iewes Iudgements and Sanhedrin: saying.

Three kindes of iudgements are written to haue beene distinguished among the Iewes, vnto whome it is agreeable that Christ alluderh, Math. 5, in the declaration of the ten commaundements, setting down the degrees and differences of sinnes, repugnant to the Lawe, thou shalt not kill. And that he woulde declare the same out of the forme of the ciuill iudgements accustomed to the people.

Iewes.

Where he speaketh of Christs more proper alluding to the lower orders, in those things. But such he gather thereupon, that the same civile iudgements, were either translated, or the like to them established amongst vs? 100

The first was Triumvirall, over the which were Governours in civill Cittie, three men. In the which, money matters, and the lighter trespas-ses, of beatings, of private injuries, of theft, &c. wer decided: They suppose that Christe signified that Mary, in the name of judgement.

Another was called, the Little Synedrion, consisting of 12. Iudges, wherein the greater and the capitall causes were heard. It is thought that Christe Mat. 5. named this synagoga, as that riches his brother, Raaba, seller guiltie of a Canfall, or of the Synedrion.

The third was the great Synedrion, or Senate of 70. Seniors, ordeyned of Moses; Num. 11. ouer which sat the high B. and the Elders excelling in wisdom, vertue, learning and authoritie, chosen out of the Priests and Levites, and of euerie Tribe, were the assistants, (or sitters with him.) Vato whom afterward by the ordinance of David, the chief of the Royall stocke, which were called chifrim, that is, the Kings brothers, & seanethrim, that is, endowed with the right of succession, were adjoyned, as the highest Counsell of the whole Common-weale, & chief Senate of the Kingdome. To whom belonged the power of iudging the most weightie causes, pertaining to the summe of the Cōmon-weale and of Religion, of the King and the Kingdome, of warre and peace, of answering and pronouncing of the most difficult controversies of opinions, & of other businesses. To conclude, of what manner the forme and iurisdiction of this most high Senate was, to the which they appealed from the other inferiour Iudgements, & In whose sentence and decree they must hold themselves contented without anie gainsaying, may for the most part cleerely be gathered, out of the reformation of the Iudgements made by King Iosaphat. For these are the words of the storie, 2. Paral: 19. In Ierusalem also Iosaphat appointed Priests, &c. But as in highest Senate of the Iewish people, the Priests and Princes of the Families, governed together the Counsels of the Common-weale, & the two the ecclesiasticall businesses, and the Kinges Cousin which governed the businesses Politicall: euen so almost to the like forme in the chiefe Se-

5. 19 our Sa-vours.

Thus more gravellie (in my simple iudgement) doth Chytrous allude, not on these words, Disce aile, to the Sanedrion of the Jewes, to have the same or the like, translated, and established in euerie or in anie Congregation, of the Church of Christe: for that were cleane to overthrowe all the States in Christendom. But that in those places whiche he mencioneth, Mat. 5. he alluded to the order of their lowest Senate, of 9. Elders, whiche was in euerie Citie, and of their lesser Sanedrion, that was of 23. in Ieru-salem. not of the 70. whiche was the highest, & instituted by God, Num.
11. But not, that Christe translated anie of all these Senates into his Church, as established anie lawe thereon, for administration of government in his Church. Although he say, almost the like form is in the highest Senate of the Kingdome of Germanie. But not simple that it is the like, and much lesse the same, and least of all, that it was grounded on the Iewes forme, otherwile than that all Estates and Kingdomes take their generall grounds from Gods lawe: but lawes are not then to this as the forme, of Senate and Iudiciall of the Jewes. But to have we also our chiefest Senate of Parliament, and other Senates, Sessions, or Assemblies, both of the Clergie, and of the Temporalitie: and Councels and Iudge-ments, (in some respects) not much unlike to the Jewes Assemblies, Senates, Councels, and Iudgements. And they would never a great deale to the vncorrupted orders of the Jewes, and are more fit, requisite, and beneficiall for the State and comission of our Realme, than these Conistories or Senates would be of these Seniors; that our Brethren call for, and thus hale the words of Christe to presse them upon us, to be established in eue-rie Congregation, for the administration of government, in the hearing and determining of all difficult and weightie matters amongst us, and so to continue for euer, as long as the Church continueth in this world, to the great bondage of our Christian libertie, by reducing us to these Iudi-cials of the Jewes, and to the quite overthrowe of ours and of all King-domes, by reducing this Senate of the 70. Elders into all Congregations throughout Christendom.

Having nowe thus farre considered (as I take it) the verie grounds whereon Caluine, and all our Brethren following him, would lay the foundation of this Conistorie, & Senate of Elders in euerie Congregation, to wit, upon this construction of these words of Christ, Disce aile, Tell the Church, that is to say, Tel the Segniorie, Senate or Conistorie: Let us now returne to the proceesse, of our Be-learned vntouris baron.

And the name of Elders dooth most aptlie agree vnto them that bee Gouernors in the Church now, even as it did to the Ancients of Israel:

et: so that the Pastors seeme to have borrowed the name of Elders, specially in respect of their government. The name of this Consistorie also in the new Testament, we finde to be agreeable with that of the Jewes, whereof our Saviour Christe speaketh when he saith, Tell the Congregation or assemblie. S. Paul 1. Tim. 4. 14. Despise not the gift which was given thee, through Prophets, with imposition of hands of the Eldership. Where the Greek word is synagoge, the assemblie or Consistorie of the Elders. Which word was vsed also by S. Luke in his Gospel, speaking of the Consistorie of the Jewish Elders, Luke 22. 66. As soon as it was day the whole Eldership or Assemblie of Elders came together both chiefe Priests and Scribes, and brought him into their Councell. In which saying, their Councell synagoge is called. Also S. Paul Act. 20. 5, that he had bene a periee of christians taketh witnes, of the high Priest and of the whole Consistorie of Elders, vsing the same word synagoge. By which it is euident that our Saviour Christe by this word synagoge in that place meaneth a Consistorie or assemblie of Elders, whose authoritie, &c.

This is but descent on the name, and we would rather heare of the matter. The name of Elders seemeth to more, then to those of the Segnorie which were of the Sanedrin or Synedrión. And we grant it most apply agreeth to them that be Governours in the Church now, and those Ecclesiasticall Governours too, and was but borrowed as well in respect of the government, as of the Pastors, and the Ecclesiasticall are as propriety and aptly called Elders, as were the ciuile Governours. But this communicating of the name, doth not proue the same or the like office any more than the name of Gods Minister, doth proue that the ciuile Princes and the ecclesiasticall Pastors offices, are the same or like, because they are both of them called Gods Ministers Rom. 13. 4. and 1. Cor. 4. 1.

But here to proue that in this place Mat. 18. Christe meaneth by the word Church, a Consistorie, Senat or Presbyterie, our Brethren alleadge these testimonies, 1. Tim. 4. 14. Luc. 22. 66. and Act. 20. 5. wherein the name of Presbyterie is mencioned. But do they finde the name of this Consistorie also in the new Testament, to be agreeable with that of the Jewes, whereof our Saviour Christe speaketh when he saith Tell the Congregation, or Assemblie? For if (as they say) Christe alluded there to the Sanedrin or Synedrión, will they finde this Consistorie that they would haue to be stated in the new Testament, to be agreeable unto that Consistorie? I think our Brethren will not find it. If they say, they mean not that this Consistorie is called in the new Testament, by that name Sanedrin or Synedrión, but by the name synagoge, and that that name is also agreeable to this Consistorie: they shall be before, that Christe alluded to that Consistorie among the Jewes, that was named the Sanedrin, of the Greeke word Synedrión, & would they now bring this Consistorie to the name Presbyterie?

some will say that the word synagoge is not used in the new Testament

The use of the name Elder, in the new Testament

Christe alluded not to the Jewes Sanedrin or Presbyterie, mentioned in the new Testament.

The elders in the new Testament.

They say, that in the 22. of Luke, ver. 66. their Counsell Synedrion is called Presbyterion. And what of that? We graunt that the Sanedrion was called a Presbyterie. But was every Presbyterie called a Sanedrion? They should prove this, that wheresoever the name Presbyterie is, there was such a Senate, Presbyterie or Eldership, as was agreeable to that which was named the Sanedrion. For we denie not, but that there were Assemblies of Elders, and those aptlie also called Presbyteries, among the Christians in the newe Testament. But that they were so aptlie called Sanedrins or Synedrions, that I denie: and much more, I denie the matter & office of them among the Christians to be found any where in the newe Testament. And here in saying this, our Wretched still runne on in their wonted presupposall of this former cited place, Math. 18. Tell the Church, (Congregation or Assemblée,) that Christe speaketh of the Presbyterie of the Jewes, called the Synedrion or the Sanedrion. But we haue seen sufficientlie, that the very name of Church, Congregation or Assemblée, which Christe bleth, was in the use of the Jewes, Asseblum diuidens, and opposite to the name of Senate, Counsell, Consistorie, Segniorie, Presbyterie, Eldership, Sanedrion or Synedrion. So that in naming the Church, he so little meaneth a Consistorie or Senate of Elders: that he rather seemeth to oppose himselfe herein against those, that would restrain his speech unto a Consistorie or a Senate. The words of St. Paule 1. Tim. 4. 14. do mention indeed a Presbyterie or Eldership. But they are so little to be tyed to this interpretation, which Caluine maketh of Christes words, Math. 18. that Caluine himselfe (as we haue heard before) in this obseruation on these words, 1. Tim. 4. 14. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was giue thee by prophesie, with the imposition of hands of the Presbyterie (or Eldership) saith they that think Presbyterie (or Eldership) here to be named a nown collective, put for a colledge of the Eld. think wel in my iudgement: howbeit all things being weighed, I grant that the sense different therfro, that it shuld be a name of office, doth not disagree thereunto. He putteth the ceremonie for the act of the ordination, so that the sense is, that Timothie when by the voyce of the Prophets, hee was called into the Ministerie, and then by a solemne rite or ceremonie was ordeined: he was withal furnished with the grace of the holy Ghost to execute his function.

By the name Church is not meant Senate.

Caluine in 1. Tim. 4. 14.

Bezaes testimony that by those elders were meant only the Ministers of the word.

So that this place imposeth no necessitie of understanding the Presbyterie, more for the assemblée of the Elders, than for the function of the Eldership. Nevertheless if our W. will needs haue it understood, for the assemblée of the Elders: yet such Beza also open this word Presbyterij, that is, of the order of the Elders, by the which name it is probable, that the assemblée of all those that laboured in the worde, in the Church of the Ephesians, is signified, as Actes 20. d. 17. and f. 28.

For now and then these names are generall, of Bishops, of Elders, yea & that also of Deacons. See Philip. 1. a. 1. A certaine fellowe translateth it Senate, as other where for the Church, he saide, the Common-weale.

Thus hath Beza ripped (and well too) the name of Senate, in this of Presbyterie. And yet, all this drift of our Bishops is, to bye a Senate on this word. But Senate or Eldership, with be maketh here the Elders thereof, to be Labourers in the word, and to be those that St. Paule speaks unto Act. 20. This then is all for Pastors and Ministers of the word, and nothing for a Consistorie, Senate, Seniorie or Eldership of such Elders, as are altogether Gouernors and not teachers.

Bezaes rip of Castali- on for the terme Se- nate.

The Pres- byteries of the Iewes. Luc. 22. Act. 20.

As for the other places cited, Luc. 22. and Act. 20. were (I graunt) that Presbyterie which was called the Sanedrin or Synedrin. Which, except such Elders of the people, which were such Princes (as we haue heard) in the government of all temporall matters of life and death only by He- rode and the Romanes taken from them (so wel as ecclesiastical matters, were all of them Teachers and Doctors of the Lawe of God. For that we heard was the Scribes office. So that except our Bishops, would set up Consistories of Princes and Magistrates, to gouerne all temporall mat- ters so well as ecclesiastical: how can these testimonies fit their Segniorie? Are these Presbyteries of the Iewes, that sate in counsell against Christe, and gaue license to St. Paule to make hauocke in Christes Con- gregation, and example, or warrant, or approbation in the newe Testa- ment, of such Segniorie or Consistorie among the Christians? But what are either of these to proue the words of Christ, Math. 18. As he inter- preted of a Presbyterie? What our Bishops should so roundly hereupon, (or rather so softly) make this conclusion, saying: By which it is euident, that our Sauour Christe by this worde Ecclesia in that place, meaneth a Consistorie or Assemblie of Elders. By what thing here alleadged, is this euident? or rather, is it not euident to the cleane contrarie? If our Bishops haue no better euidence than this, to proue their Elders, first, all is giuen to a bare name, howbeit here is neither so much named as the bare name, but a name that hath a cleane contrarie sense. And yet forasmuch we must imagine, Christ meant it: for our Bishops can not say, Christe said it. Although in a matter so much byged, and of such importance, this had bene requisite, that we had heard Christes words, & not their gathering only of Christes meaning, for our euidence. And yet if we should admit this meaning and all, we are neuer the nearer, for such Consistorie, Senate, or Segniorie of Elders, as our Bishops pretend. Well might we set up (if not rather, ill might we set up) a Iewish Sanedrin, and Presbyterie of Princes & Priests in euery parish, to rule the whole estate thereof, as a little kingdome in it selfe, to the alteration and ouerthrowe of the whole state of the Realme:

But our Bishops conceauing, that they haue now at least twome thus much, that our Sauour Christe by this word Ecclesia, meaneth a Consistorie or assemblie of Elders: they cherefullie procede to their authoritie, & say: Whose authoritie he doth ratifie with such power, that whatsoever is bound or loosed by them on earth, in the feare of God, and with hartie praier, the Lord will bring it to passe, yea he himselfe wil be in the midst of them, as president of their Councell, to direct their consultations to the glorie of God, and to the profite of his owne Church.

Bridges. Concerning that which our Bishops adde here, out of the 19. & 20. verses of Mat. 18. the consent of two or three, gathered together in praier or counsell, to haue their petitions graunted, and Christe himselfe to be in the midst of them as President of their counsell, so farre as they do it in the feare of God, and in the name of Christ: this is so little to be restrained to a Consistorie of Elders, that it stretcheth not onelie to all Prouinciall and generall Councels so assembled, but to al Congregations gathered to publike praier, or to the hearing of Gods word, yea, to any particular household or persons, though they be no greater number than there is mentioned, to encourage and confirme them in their faith to God, and in their mutuall loue and vnitie one to another.

not to be restrained to a Consistorie.

As for the authoritie that Christe ratifieth with such power, that whatsoever is bounde or loosed by them on earth, &c. (meaning this Consistorie of the church) the Lord wil bring it to passe we cōfesse, (concerning the Church, of the which before he spake) that Christe there gaue such power vnto his Church: but our question now, is not whether the power be giuen to the Church, as to whom the exercise of this power is committed, whether to the whole Churches assemblie or Congregation, or to a Segniorie of the Church, gouerning discipline, and yet not meddling with teaching the word of God, or to those to whom the Ministerie of the worde is committed. And albeit that neither the Magistrate nor the Senate of Gouernors (if there be any) nor yet the whole assemblie of the Congregation, are debarred from all kinde of excommunicating: yet to speake of excommunication, in his proper sense, it is the act of him that is a Minister of the word.

Brentius writing at large on this place, not onelie acknowledgeth a kinde of excommunication made by the Magistrate, but also affirmeth this speech of Christe, Tell the Church, to be indeede a good rule, but not necessarie for euer, and for all Churches.

Hac Regula, &c. (saith hee) This Rule which Christe in this place deliuereth, being rightlie vnderstoode and vsed, is healthfull to the Church,

Church, and bringeth much profite: but beeing ill vnderstoode and naughtilie vsed, hath brought much hurt to the Common-weale, hath diuers times troubled the gouernment of the Church, and of the Policie. When as the Bishops of Rome with their vnreasonable and naugh-tie excommunications, haue nowe and then stirred vp the children against the parents, haue cast out Emperors and Kings out of their Empires, and in these dayes also, because the Anabaptistes see not in our Churches, the like gouernment according to the letter, as is heere described: they thinke that the true Church is not among vs. Wherefore we must doo our diligence, that wee may vnderstande this rule aright, and vse the same lawfully, according to the manner thereof. First, wher-as Christe saith in this Rule, Tell the Church, hee speaketh not of such an assemblie of Christians, which consisteth of a great multitude of people, and of a ciuile Magistracie, and wherein the ciuile Magistrate is not onelie a member of the Church, but also the Gouvernour and Orderer of the Ecclesiasticall matters. For in such an assemblie, it can not bee brought to passe, that that which is said, Tell the Church, can be kept according to the letter, without confusion. For what a confusion and per-turbation of things were that, if a man publikelie in the Ecclesiasticall assemblie, wherein now and then some thousands of men doo come together, should make an out-crie of iniurie offered him of his neighbor, and desire that after his neighbour hauing bene twice warned, would not repent him, witnesse may be heard, and if he will not obey the voices of the whole assemblie, that he should be excommunicated? What place would there be in so diuerse willes of men, in such a companie of the multitude, either vnto honest Councells, or vnto right Iudgementes? and what either measure or ende would there be of braw-lings? But God (as S. Paule saith) is not the Authour of confusion, but of peace.

Here Brentius sheweth nere to our Bretheren also in this poynt, that it is not meant of euerie great assemblie of the people. But what now, doth he conclude hereupon, that it was spoken of an Ecclesiastical Senate or Consistorie in their names? It followeth: Moreouer when in the Ecclesiasticall assemblie there is a ciuile Magistrate, the office of this ciuile Magistrate is to punish wicked deedes according to their Lawes, & that by the seueritie of his administration, hee remooue offences out of the way. Such as sometimes was the administration of the Kinges in the Church of Israel, of Dauid, Salomon, Iosaphat, Ezechias, and of other godly Kings.

That therefore Christe saith, Tell the Church, is not bee vnder-stoode of a great assemblie of the Church, wherein there is a ciuile Magistrate, and one that for his vocation, laboureth to defend the publike

publike honestie of life, but is to bee vnderstoode of a small assemblie, whereof the Magistrate is not a member, & wherein the Magistrate either hath no function, or else is holden, as though he were a priuate person: such an assemblie as was the companie of Christe. For fewe accompanied Christe in his Ministry among the Iewes, and among these fewe, there was no publike Magistrate. Among such therefore being fewe, the rule may be holden, according to the letter. For it appeareth, that Christ was moued to the prescribing of this rule, on that occasiō, that although they were fewe that followed Christ, yet now & then there arose euen among them, so great brawles for matter of most small importance, that one of them odiously accused another before the ciuill, either Iewish or Ethnicke Magistrate, to the great offence of the Gospell. As also it happened afterward among the Corinthians, of whome Paule writeth, saying: Dooth anie of you hauing busines with another, susteine to be iudged vnder the vnrighteous, and not rather vnder the Saints?

Christe therefore reprocueth his contentious companions, and prescribeth vnto them such a rule, which may bee kept onelie in priuate assemblies, and among priuate men. That is to wit, that thou shouldest not by & by accuse him that hath sinned against thee, before the Magistrate, especiallie the Magistrate being a straunger of thy religion, but thou shouldest first of all admonish him priuatelie. Then, if being so admonished, he proceede to doo thee iniurie: thou shouldest take vnto thee 2. or 3. friends, that they may admonish him of his iniurie, and exhort him to repentance: last of all, if he will not yet so leaue of his dooing iniurie: thou shouldest tel it vnto the whole assemblie, and desire that the assemblie, would interpose their authoritie.

That this rule of Chr.
serueth on-lie among priuate mē.

It is manifest therefore, that Christe in this rule, maketh not a generall lawe for the Church of all times, and for that assemblie which also consisteth of a great multitude of men, and whereof the ciuill Magistrate is a part, and the Gouvernor: but onely for the little Church of his owne time, and for the assemblie of a fewe men, and those priuate. For otherwise also hee gaue some preceptes, that were temporarie and not perpetuall, such as those are, Goe ye not into the high waies of the Gentiles, & enter ye not into the Citie of the Samaritanes. And, Possesse ye not golde nor silver, &c.

This sentence cannot be vnderstood
of hainous sinnes.

Moreover whē this rule is said, If thy brother shal offende against thee, &c. it is not to be vnderstood of euery kind of sinne: for it can not be vnderstood of grosse and hainous mischiefes, such as are these, homicide, adulterie, and other of that kinde. For in these, a threefolde admonition hath not place: but it is necessarie that these mischeuous deeds, for publike example sake, according to the calling of euerie assemblie, so soone as euer they are found out, should be punished.

Neither

Neither should space of sinning be giuen to the wicked doer, vntill a triple admonition may be made. For what discipline were that, if that any shoulde haue slayne a man, that he shoulde not be punished before with excommunication, till that after the first admonition, he had killed another? And another after the second, and another after the thirde. And so mought an Homicide kill 4. men, or euer he shoulde be holden for an Echnicke or a publicane. Neither did saint Paul him selfe admonish the Corinthian whore-monger, but commaunded him streightway, so soone as euer it was knowne, to be cast out of the company of the faythfull. This rule therefore is not to bee vnderstoode of euery kinde of sinne, but only of ciuil controuersies, which priuate men haue among themselues.

The Incestuous Corinthian.

What then doth this rule pertaine nothing at all to the present assembly of the Christians, which consisteth as well of a publike magistrate, as of priuate subiects: verily it pertaineth much vnto vs. But for the manner thereof, and for the condition of these times. For if thou haste against another a ciuill action or controuersy, it is an vncourteous and hard part that thou shouldest straightwayes hale him into the publike Iudgements: but charity requireth that if the cause be such, that thou mayest not pardon thy neighbour without Iudgement: first of all admonish him thou thy selfe, or else some other friend in thy name, of the iniury, that hee goe not still on to doe the same, but that after his measure he make amendes for it. But if so bee nothing bee obteyned, thou shouldest take vnto thee two or three freendes, whereby thou mightest seeke all meanes, that he may leane off from dooing thee iniury. Last of all, if so be thou shalt not yet profite anything: what ought to be done? Is the cause to bee brought to the whole Church of that place? Heere certesse, the letter can not be obserued, which is spoken in this place, Tell the Church. For what a confusion and disturbaunce of the orders were this? but the cause is to be deferred vnto those certain Iudges, which out of the whole body of the Church are lawfully chosen into the Magistracy, whose sentence also is to be expected. So that there is no necessity, that wee shoulde constitute a newe Eccl. Senate, but vse that which before was appoynted in the policy.

The last remedy is to tell the ordinary magistrate and not to constitute an Eccl. Senate

But what, of the wicked deedes that are more hainous? In these, the order of this rule can not bee obserued, whether the church bee onely priuate men, or haue a Magistrate. But that so soone as euer they shall be set downe, and found out: they must bee punished eyther with Excommunication, or casting out of the city or congregation, or else with some other punishment according to their ordinary Lawes. For this altogether is sought for, that offences might bee taken out of the way. But with what penalty or with what punishment they shoulde bee bee taken away, that must bee iudged by the publike Lawes and ordinances.

Thou wilt say therefore, sith that there is in these times a politike Magistrate in the Church, is there nowe no place of Excommunication? verily there is, as well of publike as of priuate. For the publike excommunication is that penalty of the Magistrate, wherewith the wicked person is openly defaced in the mouthes of men; and is cast out of the City, or is cast into the prison, and for some space of time is fed with Breade and Water.

And such an Excommnnication also may bee done in the Church, when as, if any by publike and lawfull iudgement, is condemned of a wicked fact, and at the Magistrates commaundement is cast out of the Church, and is forbidden that he shall haunt any publike banquets, neither that he be admitted to honest or worshipfull offices, &c. It is priuate, when the Minister of the Church doth priuately admonish the sinner, that he receiue not the Lordes supper, except he repent, &c.

A priuate & Ecclesiasticall excommunication

Thus grauely, and with great iudgement and waighty reasons, wisteth Brentius of these wordes. Neither making this rule to bee generall or perpetuall, other wise then in these sences and cases, and in the matters of worldly and ciuill contentions, & to be iudged and punished (if no priuate meanes will serue) not by constituting any Ecclesiasticall senate of Seniors in euery congregation, but by the ordinary ciuill Magistrate. As for the Censure of Excommunication (though in such a sort, the punishments of the Princes may be called an excommunication) yet if it be an exclusion from the Sacramentes, it is properly the Act of the Minister, and that good, not onely though it be publike, but priuate also. As he sayth further on these wordes, Verily I say vnto you, whatsoeuer yee shall binde vpon earth shall bee bounde in Heauen, and whatsoeuer yee shall loose, &c. In this sentence Christ strengtheneth first the Iudgements of priuate men, if the Church shall not haue a publike magistrate. For when men are wont to bee stubborne, it may come to passe, that hee that sayleth in his cause, before the Church of priuate men, and is iudged an Ethnike and publicane, may contemne this iudgement, and thinke him-selfe neuertheles to be an inheritor of the kingdome of Heauen, although hee bee cast out of the assembly of these (as hee thinketh them) vile or base persons.

To whome the proper & Eccl. exc. doth pertaine.

But Christe strengtheneth their authority, and affirmeth that their sentence is approoued also in Heauen. Furthermore hee strengthneth also in this saying, the publike iudgementes of them, that are in lawfull Magistracy, that we may manifestly knowe, that their Iudgementes are not of men, but are the Iudgementes of God. According to that of

Paul:

Paule: hee that resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God. And verily, Christe in other places with the like sentences in Math. 16. and Iohn, 20. chapter confirmeth the authority of the Ministry of preaching the Gospell. But in this place, hee confirmeth the iudgements of priuate men, or of Magistrates, against the contemners, that the same shoulde bee ratified before God in Heauen. Peers lo, is the ratifying whereof our brethren speake, but heereupon hee concludeth thus:

But all these things are to be vnderstoode of a right and lawfull iudgement, and of that sentence which is giuen in the ministry of the church according to the Worde of the Gospell, and in causes forinsecall, according to the publike and ordinary Lawes. For if the sentences of the Iudges, or Ministers, striue with these, it is none before God, howe greatly soeuer thou shalt be condemned before men. So that here he concludeth with these two excommunications, a ciuill and an Ecclesiastical. The ciuill, eyther in these priuate mens small assemblies, or in the publike Magistrate. But the Ecclesiasticall, to pertaine onely to the Minister, and to be in the Ministry of the worde of God, such as was mentioned before Math. 16. And afterward againe. Iohn. 20.

*Two kinds
and Eccl.*

And verily, if we shall search the ground of this Eccl. Exc. (what abuses soeuer be or haue beene, or may be by the Ministers or by any other not Ministers, committed therein (which I take not vpon me to defende, and may easily bee helped without the supply of this Seniors, and good prouisions there are in that behalfe): yet that the act of the proper Ecclesiasticall Excommunication, shoulde be executed by such Ecclesiasticall gouernors, as are not Ministers nor teachers of the Worde: I can not yet see, howe it may be sufficiently warranted, or howe it may stand with the nature of this spirituall and Ecclesiasticall censure. For if this power of binding and loosing, be the same that is called the power of opening and shutting, called also the power of the keyes: then it cheefely consisteth in the Ministry of the Worde. For what is the key, but Gods Worde? Yea, if it bee the same that consisteth in remitting and retaining of sinnes towarde God, what other power hath the Church thereof, than by the pronouncing of Gods Worde? So that, our Brethren must eyther make these Seniors to bee Ministers of Gods Worde: or else they must graunt, that in this place Christe meaneth not such a Seniors of Gouerning Elders, as are not Ministers of the Word.

But here saith Caluine. Hic locus non omnino. &c. This place is not altogether like that place which is aboue written, Chapter 16. c. 19. But it is to bee vnderstoode in part a little different. But wee make them not so diuers, that they haue not muche affinity betweene themselves.

This

mmunicatio. This first of all on both parts is alike, that eyther of them is a generall sentence, and the power of binding and loosing is always the same, that is to witte; by the word of God, the same commaundement, the same promise. But they differ heerein, that the former place is peculiarie of the preaching which the Ministers of the word of God do exercise. Here it pertayneth to the Discipline of excommunication, which is permitted to the church. There, Christe woulde anouch the authority of the Doctrine: Here, hee constituted Discipline, which is an appendant vnto doctrine. There, hee sayde that the preaching of the Gospell shoulde not be frustrate, but that it shoulde bee a quickning or a killing fauour; here he affirmeth that although the wicked doe scorne the iudgement of the church, notwithstanding it shoulde not bee vayne. This distinction is to be holden, because, there, it is simply treated vpon the word preached: & here, vpon the publike censures and Discipline.

The ministry of the powre of the worde pertaineth to the Minister in the expounding the worde.

Although I doe not altogether deny this difference in respect of the object matter, wherein the subiect person hath diuers times, on diuers occasions, and diuers vnto to deale: yet since Caluine heere him-selfe maketh the power of binding and loosing, the promise also, and the commaundement, to be all one: and the same to consist all onely by the ministry of the word: although the occasion or purpose of Christe in the former place, 16. he moze so ratifying the Doctrine of the worde, when it is taught or preached, than so ratifying the publike censures and Discipline, beeing onely the appendants to the Doctrine: Yet this letteth not, but rather proueth so much moze, that he to whome the execution of both, or eyther of these actions, (being both of them powers of the worde, and ministeriall pronouncings of the same word) both appertaine, ought to be his selfe a Minister of the worde. And thus both Caluine himselfe asserterwarde also confesse, saying: For neither doth Christe anouch authority of (or vnto) his church, whereby he shoulde diminish his, or his Fathers right: but rather whereby hee may establish the maiesty of his Worde. For euen as before, hee woulde not confusedly establish euery Doctrine whatsoever, but that which proceeded out of his mouth, chap. 16. c. 19: So neither sayth he in this place, that euery Iudgement whatsoever shall be stable, and ratified, but that wherein he himselfe is president (or gouerneth). Neyther that onely by the spirite, but also by the Worde. Whereupon it followeth that men bring no preiudice vnto (or hinder not) God, while they pronounce nothing but out of his mouth, and stooode onely to execute faithfully, that which he hath commanded. For although Christe bee the onely iudge of the worlde: yet would hee haue in the meane season, ministers to be the publishers of his Worde. and then he woulde haue his iudgement to be of his Church set foorth. So, that commeth to passe, that it derogate nothing from him, that the

Cal. in Mat. 18.

The Ministers are publishers of Gods word and setters foorth of his iudgements.

the ministry of men commeth betwene, but that he onely loofeth and bindeth.

And here Marlorate contendeth out of Bucer: Hereupon it appereth, how proposterously or rather how naughtily some gather out of this place, that the Church can doe any thing, but chiefly can make lawes of religion, which whofo despiseth shall despise Gods Lawes. Whereas Christs disputeth here nothing of the power of making Lawes: but of brotherly admonition, of exhortation, reprehension, correction, and of taking away offences, and of the iudgement of the church, which in all thinges thought to followe the worde of God, that it bee not so much an humane as a diuine iudgement. And againe Marlorate noteth out of Calvin, saying: Whereupon wee see, howe the spirituall iurisdiction of the church, which punisheth sinnes out of the worde of God, is the best helpe of health, and foundation of order, and bonde of vnty. And concluding the ratification of their sentences, he saith: For they haue the word of God, wherewith they condemne the frowarde, they haue the worde wherewith they receiue into fauour the repentant. But erre they cannot, neither dissent from the iudgement of God, because they Iudge not but out of the Lawe of God, which is not an vncertain nor earthly opinion, but the holy will of God, and an heauenly Oracle. With therefore all this iurisdiction of the censure and discipline of the Church, consisteth in the Ministry of the worde of God, and besides the sentence pronounced, comprehendeth admonition, exhortation, reprehension, and all out of the word of God: And these persons are publike officers, and their doinges publike doings: howe are not these the publike ministers of the worde, & medle with the publike teaching of the same.

But this more playnely appereth by Chresses owne wordes. For when Christs had sayde, Tell the Church (howsoeuer they vnderstand there the name of church) when he commeth afterwarde to set downe the manner, howe Excommunication shoulde be vsed: hee straight turneth his speech to his Apostles, saying: Verily I say vnto you, whatsoever thinges you shall binde vpon earth, they shall bee bounde also in Heauen, and whatsoever you shall loose vpon earth, shall be loosed in Heauen also. So that this place directly is turned to the Apostles, both in Math. 16. And here the 18. and Joh. 20 and so, the power and promise thereof continuing, continueth directly in those onely, that are the successors of the Apostles. What is to say, that are such, as of whome St. Paul saith, 1 Cor. 4. 1. Let a man so esteeme vs, as Ministers of Christs, and dispensers of the mysteries of God. And of such onely is Excommunication (being taken as this spirituall Censure of the Church) to be pronounced, and of none other kinde of Elders.

For prooffe nothe of the continuall practise and approbation hereof: let vs see, both howe the Church of God vsed it among the Iewes before Christs Excommunicatio. Christ came, and before in Christs time, & in the primitive Church, & after ward in the time of the auncient and holy Fathers, and also now lastly in this light of the Gospel, what are the iudgements of the best learned of our brethren hereupon.

And first (as wee have shewed before out of Brentius) there is one and is a diuers acceptation of this name Excommunicating. Whereupon Aretius among other diuisions of Excommunications, good and bad, greater and lesser, outward and inward, hath this diuision. Let vs therefore deuide it from the head after this manner. There is one Excommunication ciuile, another Ecclesiasticall. The ciuile is that that is exercised in politike matters against offenders. &c. And on the Hebrew names thereof, and the Greeke name among the Iewes, in and before the time of Christs, he saith in Ioh. chap. 9. 12. & 16. He that was excluded, is sayde excommunicatus, that is, to bee made an Alien from the publike assembly. Such were abhominable and odious to the residue of the Iewes, vntill they were reconciled. In the ninth chapter hee saith, that it was ordeyned of the Iewes, that if any man confessed him to be Christs: excommunicatus, that is, he should be cast out of the synagog. In the 11. chap. that many of the Princes beleueed, but they confessed him not, least they should be made excommunicatus. And in the 16. chap. They shall make you excommunicatus, that is, out lawes and vnworthy of their assemblies. Heereupon excommunication may be called excommunicatus. In the old Testament it is (called) cherem, a shutting: for hee that was of Moses shut out, was bound as it were with many Lawes.

Besides that, hee which was bounde with any certayne fault, was holden vnder the penalty to the which hee was bounden: you haue the example Num. 12. where Miriam the sister of Moses for the crime of rebellion, is excluded by the commaundement of God 7. dayes out of the campe. Let her be shut out seuen dayes abroad, cherem among the Hebrewes is anathema. That is, a penaltie inflicted of God, as Mal. 4.
Least I come and strike the land, cherem, that is, anathema (with a curse suspension, or separation). The same word signifieth a thing consecrated to God, and sequestred from the publike vse, as it is sayd of the spoyle of Ierico, that Achan receaued cherem Minha-cherem, that is, of the spoyle condemned of the Lorde by a curse, of setting apart, or suspending.

Wigandus and Mathews Index in their treatise called Syntagma, or corpus doctrine, on the title de clauibus in veteri testamento, of the keyes in the old Testament, do say: First, that there are such keyes: Although in the new Testament Christ institute the keyes by a solempne manner, Matth. 16. 18. and Ioh. 20. notwithstanding in the old Testament also, there was a power of the keyes pertaining to the church, and to the Ministers thereof, as appeareth by the things following. What were the kinds: That there were two keyes, the one binding, the other loosing, appeareth out of Esa. 22. I will geue (or laye) vpon his shoulder, to wit, Eliachim, the key of the house of David, and he shall open, and there shall be none that can shut, and he shall shut, and there shall be none that can open. And examples to the Propheticall writings do witnesse. For Caine in the 3. of Gen. is excommunicated. But David is absolved of Nathan, and the types or figures of thrusting out of the camps the lepers and polluted, and receauing of the healed and purged by sacrifice, Num. 4. Leuit. 13. concerning the binding key, or Excommunication: what are the names thereof? The binding key in the Propheticall writings, is called Anathema. Num. 21. Deut. 7. &c. Malediction and detestation: Num. 13. Deut. 27. crying out wth Hosee 17. casting out of the land: Gen. 4. taking away out of the midst: Deut. 19. The definition is this. The key bynding is a power ordeyned of God, committed to the church and to the Priestes, of denouncing the wrath of God to notorious and polluted sinners, and of shutting them out of the societie of Gods people, and of forbidding other their societie and companie, vntill either by the Magistrate they be taken out of the way, or els by repentance, or by the prescribed sacrifices, they shall be purged and receaued &c.

The definition of the Eccl. binding.

And afterward, coming to the spiniffers, he saith: the Ministers of excommunication were the Priestes, and the church approving it Deut. 27, the Leuites shall pronounce and say vnto all the men of Israel with a high voyce, accursed is the man that maketh a graven and a molten Image, the abomination of the Lorde, the worke of the artificers, and setteth it in a secret place. And all the people shall answer Amen. In the seconde booke of Esdras, chap. 13. Elias the preest separateth the straungers from Israel.

And likewise for the other Key of loosing: The key absolving is a power ordeyned of God and committed to the Priestes and Prophetes, of pronouncing to sinners, being penitent, the remission of finnes, for the Womans and Abrahams seede and the sonne of David, that is for the Messias &c.

The definition of the Eccl. absolving.

The author and the Ministers are these: Eyther God him self immediately hath denounced the forgiveness of finnes, as Genesis 3. When hee setteth foorth the promise of the VVomans seede, hee doth nothing else, but hee hath brought absolute Adam and Eve from their sinne, &c. Or else by the Patriarches, so Genesis 30. God sayth to Abimelech of Abraham &c. Or else, by the Prophetes. The seconde of Kings 12. Nathan said to David, the Lord hath translated thy sinne, &c. or else, by the Priestes, which offering sacrifices expiatory, for the people, prayed, ed for their sinnes, & afterward blessed them, which what was it else then a denunciation of the forgiveness of their sinnes? Leui. 4. 5. 6. & 9. Leuit. 19. And the Priest shall pray for him and for his sinne, and it shall bee forgiven him, and his sinne remitted, and Num. 6. Speake to Aaron & to his sonnes; thus shall ye blesse the children of Israel, & say vnto them, the Lord blesse thee and keepe thee, the Lord shew his face vnto thee, and haue mercie vpon thee. This was the state of Excommunication and absolution in the old Testament, denominated by the mouth of the Minister of the worde. For to whom the Absolving belonged, the Excommunicating belonged also. The steps whereof (sayth Aretius) are in the newe Testament, Ioh. 9. 12. & 16. For although that Discipline was administered then of wicked men, notwithstanding it is for an argument of the antiquitie. And in the olde time the Institution was honest and profitable. This corruption Christe corrected, when he drewe backe this Discipline to his Church. Math. 16. 18. Ioh. 10. The Apostles also used it laudably, as it is, 1. Cor. 5. 1. 1. Tim. 5. Whereby also it appeareth, that notwithstanding the wickednes of the Church, Christe reducing into his church, the olde Institution of God for Excommunicating and absolving, he committed this spirituall censure to such onely as were spirituall Ministers of the Worde. Notwithstanding the other that were not Ministers, did allowe and approoue the same. And this sentence. 1. Cor. 16. Being neuer ruled by the other before 1. Cor. 16. and 1. Tim. 5. coming after, and put in practise by these examples. 1. Cor. 5. And 1. Tim. 5. Where St. Paul being a Minister of the Worde, pronounced the sentence and the Judgement: If the use of the other Apostles be to be leuelled by these examples, it is cleare, that in the Apostles times (though the Church suffered thereunto) the action was done by such onely as were Ministers of the Worde of God.

The censure of Excommunication renewed by Christ. Mat. 16. Iohn. 20.

What the practise was of Excommunication in the Primitive Church succeeding the Apostles, partly appeareth by that we haue cited out of Tertullian, saying: There are also exhortations, chastisements and the Diuine censure. For iudgement is there given with great weight, as among those which are certayne that God beholdeth them. And it is the cheefe fore-iudgement of the iudgement to come, if any shall so offend. If any be banished from the communicating of prayer and of the meeting together, and of all the holy partaking, euery of the approoued Elders haue the Government.

Here is Excommunication mentioned, and the Government is aspertayned to euery of the approoued Elders. But in adding thereto the publique prayers and Exhortations, that he annexeth to the government of these Elders, it is apparent, that he meant none other, but such as were Ministers of the Worde. Which we haue also shewed yet more plainly, in his booke De Curia militis, where after he hath spoken of Baptisme recei-ued Sub antrifit is, vnder the Bishops and Prelates: speaking of the Lordes supper, he sayth: Nec de aliorum manu quam Presidentium sumimus, Neyther receiue we it at the handes of any other, than of the gouernors. So that he maketh these Seniors and Gouernours, to bee all one with the prelates and Ministers of the Worde and sacraments.

Eusebius lib. 5. cap. 24. telleth howe Victor Bishop of Rome Excommunicated the Churches of the East, for keeping their manner of celebrating Easter day. Wherein although he greatly abused this power of binding: yet if he had rightly with discretion vsed it within his boundes, Irenæus nor any other did reprove him but only for his rash over-reaching himselfe in the same. For, (sayth Eusebius) Irenæus also writing with the other Bishops of Fraunce ouer whome hee had the gouernment (for he was Archbishop of Lions, Anno Domini 169.) doth in-deede con-firme it, that the Mystery of the Lordes resurrection shoulde bee celebrated on the Sunday: Notwithstanding hee reprooueth Victor, that hee did not well, to cut off from the Vnity of the body, so many and so great Churches of God, that kept the custome deliuered to them of the auncient time.

Wherein Victors exe-was repro-ued.

And to shew this better, that when he vsed this power better, he was not misliked for the vse thereof: Eusebius sayth afterward in the last chap. of the first booke. But howe can they lay a slander vnto Victor concerning this, sith they knewe, that Victor expelled from the communion of the Church, Theodorus the tanner, which was the prince & Father of this their impiety, which durst first at Rome auouche, that Christ was but onely a man. For if Victor (as they say) did so beleue: how did he cast out of the Church Theodorus the inuentor of this blasphemy? So that Eusebius approueth this doing of Victor for his Excommunication of this heretike.

What Exe-
by Victor was allowed.

I haue passe ouer all the Canons and decrees mentioned in the coun-celles, in the names of the Apostles and of diuers auncient Bishops, because their credite may be called in question, though diuers of them mentioning the Excommunications, (made onelie by Bishops and sacerdo-tall preestes) be no doubt of great antiquity. Onely I note that, which Eusebius receiveth of the Emperor Philip. Of this man (saith he) It is reported vnto vs, that he was a Christian. And on Easter day, to wit, euen in the Vigilles, when he woulde haue beene present amongst them, and communicated in the mysteries, hee was of the Bishop of the place not suffered, before he had confessed his finnes, and stode among the penitent persons. Neither by any meanes coulde hee haue leaue to receiue the mysteries, except that before he had by repentance purged himselfe of those manifold fautes, that were reported of him. It is of Excom. sayde therefore that hee gladly receiued that which was appoynted to them by the Proestos (or Bishoppe), approouing that hee had a godly feare, and a Fayth of Religion, moſte full of workes.

The like wee reade of the moſte Noble Emperour Theodosius, in the Ecclesiasticall Hiſtoꝛie of Theodoretus Lib. 5. Cap. 17. Where hauing declared in the former Chapter, howe Theodosius had in his fury caused his Souldiers to make a Massacre of 7000. people in the City of Thessalonica, for the reuenge of an insurrection there made, wherein some of the Emperours Iustices were stoned to death: hee theweth, how the Emperour after warde beeing come to Millaine, when hee would haue entred into the Church after his wonted manner, Ambrose forbade him, laying the heighnousnesse of his fault before him, and willing him to depart, and submit him-selfe to this bonde of Excommunication that hee inflicted on him. With these wordes (sayth Theodoretus) the Emperour being moued, (who being brought vp in the holy doctrine, knewe what were the offices of the Sacerdotall preestes, what were the offices of the Emperours,) hee returned with sighes and teares into the Court, &c.

Theodore
rus li. 5. cap.
27.

For the which fact (although perhappes somewhat more rough than needed, vnto so penitent a Prince) not onely Ambrose, but also Theodosius, is of all writers highly commended.

Generally, whatsoeuer Heretikes or other malefactors in any of the generall or prouinciall Councilles bee condemned, by the Censure of Excommunication, It was done by such Bishops, Preestes, or Elders, as were Ministers of the Worde of God. Neither doe any of the Fathers ascribe the denuntiation of this spirituall Censure (in the proper sense thereof) to any other, than to a Bishop or to a minister of the Worde. We haue seene in Cyprian, howe, although hee promised that hee would doe nothing, (in receiuing those that were fallen from the sayth into the laps of Idolatry, and so became abstenti, that is, Excommunicated, to bee admitted on their repentance to the communion and peace of the church) without the consent of his College of Elders, which as withall wee haue founde were all ministers of the Word and Sacraments, (which Iunius him-selfe in his Booke called Ecclesiasticus, Capitulo 3, treating on these Seniors: confesseth to be Corpus & Collegium sacerdotum, A body or corporation and College of Sacerdotall Preestes. Yea in that case, although hee promisseth not to receiue them, without the consent also of the Deacons and of the people: yet the action of Excommunication and absolving of them, hee still maketh it proper to him selfe, being the Bishop, and to such onely as were ministers of the Worde.

Hierom:
in Math. 16.

Hierome vpon that saying of Christe to Peter, Math. 16. I will giue the thee the Keyes of the kingdome of Heauen, and whatsoeuer &c. This ^{excom.} place (sayth hee) the Bishops and the Preestes not vnderstanding, take vpon them some-what of the Pharisees pride, to thinke that eyther they may condemne the innocent, or loose the offenders. When as with God, not the sentence of the sacerdotall Preestes, but the life of the guilty is sought out. Wee reade in Leuiticus of the Lepers, where they are bidden to shewe them selues to the Preestes. And if they haue the Leprie, then of the sacerdotall Preestes they are made vncleane. Not that the sacerdotall preestes make them Lepers and vncleane; but that they haue the knowledge of him that is a Leper, and of him that is not a Leper. And that they may discerne who is cleane, or who is vncleane. In such sorte therefore as the sacerdotall Preeste maketh the Leper clean or vncleane: so here also eyther the Bishop and the preeste or Elder bindeth or looseth, not those that are eyther innocent or offenders: but according to his office, when hee shall haue hearde the dinersties of the sinnes, he knoweth who is to bee bound, or who is to be loosed.

Saint Augustine being complained vnto, that Auxilius being a young Bishop had made such a rash Excommunication, as Hierome here spake of: writeth vnto him in this manner, Augustine to his moste dearly beloved Lorde, and worshipfull or reuerend brother, and fellow sacerdotall Preeste, Auxilius. Our renowned Sonne Classicianus hath grieuously by Letters complayned vnto mee, that he hath susteined of your holinesse the iniury of accursing. Declaring that he came to the church, accompanied with the appearaunce of a fewe persons conuenient for his power, and dealt with you, that you shoulde not against his health (or safety) fauour them, who by periuring themselues on the Gospell, sought ayde for violating of their fayth, euen in the house of fayth. Whome notwithstanding, considering what ill they had done, he saith that they were not taken thence by violence, but went out of their owne accorde. And heereupon your honour is so offended with him, that by the making of your Ecclesiasticall actes, hee with all his house, is stricken with the sentence of the Curse. Which Letters I hauing read, beeing not a little mooued with thoughtes, tossing me with great vexation of heart, I coulde not hide it from your louingnesse, that if you haue your opinion of this matter tried out by sure reasons or testimonies of the Scriptures: you woulde vouchsafe also to teach vs, how the childe may rightly be accursed, for the Fathers sinne, or the wife for the Husbantes, or the seruauant for the Lordes, or anie in the house also not yet borne, if it shoulde be borne in the same time, that the whole house is bound with the curse, so that it coulde not in the danger of death be helped by the washing of regeneration.

Math. 16.
Exech. 18.

For this is not a corporall punishment, wherewith we reade that some dispisers of God were slayne, together with all theirs, which were not partakers of the same vngodlineffe. Then in-deede to the terror of the liuing, the mortall bodies were slayne, which at sometime verily should haue died. But the spirituall punishment, whereby that is done which is written, Whatsoeuer thinges thou shalt binde in earth shall bee bound also in Heauen, bindeth the soules. Of whome it is written, The soule of the Father is mine, and the soule of the Sonne is mine. The soule that shall sinne the same shall dye.

You haue peraduenture hearde that some sacerdotall preestes of greate name, haue accursed some body with their house. But if perhaps they were demaunded, they might bee found not able to render a reason of the same. As for me, If any body should demaund of me, whether it were well done? I finde not what I shold answere him. I neuer durst do this thing, when I haue bin mooued most greenously, about the wicked deedes of some, mozte cruelly committed against the Church. But if the Lord haue reuealed to you, how it may iustly be done: I despise neuer a whit your yong age, & rudimets (or but yong beginnings) of the Eccl. honor. Beholde I am at hand, I an old man, of my yong fellow B. a B. of so many years, of my Colleague not yet of one year, am ready to learn, how we may render a iust account eyther to God or to men, if we punish with spiritual punishment the innocent soules, for the offence of another, of whome they take not, as of Adam (in whome all haue sinned) originall sinne. For if the sonne of Clafficianus haue taken from his Father the sinne of the first man, that is to bee washed away in the fountayne of baptisme. Notwithstanding, after hee begat him, whatsoever sinne his father committed, wherein he himselfe was not partaker, who doubteth, that it pertaineth not to him? and what then of so many soules in the whole housholde? whereupon, if one soule by this seuerity, whereby this whole house is accursed, should perish in departing out of the body without baptisme, the death of the bodies of innumerable men, if they bee taken out of the church and killed is not comparable to this losse. If therefore you can render a reason of this matter, woulde to God you woulde also by writing againe yeeld it, that we also might be able to do it. But if you can not, why shoulde you doe that by any vnaduised passion of your minde, whereof (if you shoulde be demaunded) you can not finde a right reason?

S. Aug. er-
sor in the Infants dying without

I haue sayde these thinges, yea, although our sonne Clafficianus hath committed ought, that may seeme to you to bee mozte iustly punished with accursing. Howbeit, if hee hath written true letters vnto me, neither ought so much as hee alone in his house, to haue beene punished punished with this sentence. But hereon I meddle nothing with your holines. But only request that you woulde forgieue him asking pardon, if that hee shall acknowledge a fault. But if you shall wisely acknowledge, that hee hath not offended, because hee is in the house of faith, hath more iustly required that sayth ought to bee kept, least it shoulde bee broken there, where it is taught: doe that which an holy man ought to doe, that if that haue happened to you, as to a man, which thing verily the man of God speaketh of in the Psalme: Mine eye was troubled for wrath: you shoulde crye out to God: Haue mercy on mee O Lorde, because I am weake, that he may reache out his right hande and repress your wrath, and canlme your minde, to see and to doe righteousnessse. For as it is written, The wrath of Man worketh not the righteousnessse of God. But let vs rather thinke, that because wee are men, wee liue molte daungerously among the snares of tentations. Take away therefore the Ecclesiasticall actes that you haue done, beeing done peraduenture more on perturbation. And let that charity come agayne betweene you, which you had with him, while you were yet Catechumenus, a scholler, or Learner of the Catechism. Remoue the strife, and reuoke peace, Leaste both the man that is your freende perish to you, and the Deull that is your foe reioyce ouer you. But the mercy of our God is mighty, who also graunt to here mee praying, leaste my heauinesse ouer you bee increased. But rather, that that which is already sprung vp may be healed, and that he woulde erect me by his grace, and reioyse your youth, not contemning mine olde age.

What S. Aug. disalloweth in this B. Exc.

I haue set downe this whole Epistle, as well for the reuerende stile thereof, one Bishop thus writing to another about this matter of Excommunication: as cheefely that wee may the moze fully perceyue, what Saint Augustine disalloweth and alloweth in this matter. For although hee finde fault with this young Bishoppes over-hasty Excommunicating of this Gentleman, and namely of his whole houthoulde, condemning other for that, which hee misse-concepued was his fault: yet doth hee not disallowe his Censure, for that hee beeing the Bishop did it him selfe, and not others ioyned with him.

But hee alloweth thereof, so it had beene done deservedly, and with mature deliberation, and gone no further than to the offending party. Yea, being done as yll as it was, hee entreateth him to vndoee this Ecclesiasticall act, and to release the Censure of his Curse, ascribing the binding and the losing to the Bishop. Although therefore Saint Augustine doe often affirme, the power of the keyes for opening and shutting, binding and losing, to bee giuen to the Church: yet hee maketh the execution of the same, to appertayne onely, to the Bishops and Ministers of the word.

Chrysoftome like wise in the east, where he ascribeth this power unto the Church, Homilia 2. De Dauid & Saule, speaking against them that went to the stage-playes from the sermon, hee sayth: Verily I thinke that many of those which forsooke vs yesterday, and went away to the spectacles of iniquity, are this day present. But I wish, that I might openly knowe who these are, that I might driue them from the sacred porches. Not that they should perpetually tarry without, but that being corrected, they should return agayn. Sith that the Fathers also driue out of the doores and from the table, their sonnes that oftentimes offend, not that they shoulde bee alwayes banished from thence, but that being made better by this chastisement, they may returne to their Fathers households company, with due commendation, Truly, the same thing doe the Pastors also, while as they separate the scabbed sheep from the whole. That they being eased of their wretched disease, may returne agayne safe vnto the sound. Rather than that the sicke shoulde fill the whole flocke with that their disease. For this cause wee desired also to knowe these. But although we bee not able to discerne them with our eyes, the word notwithstanding, that is, the sonne of God will knowe them, and will easily perswade them by reproouing their conscience, that they shoulde returne of their owne voluntary, and willingly, teaching that he onely is within, which can giue a mind worthy of this exercise. As on the contrary, hee that lining corruptly is partaker of this congregation, although he stande here present in body, hee is cast out and is remooued hence, more truely than those that are so shut out of the doores, that they may not be partakers of the holy Table. For they being expulsed according to the Lawes of God, and tarrying without, are yet of good hope, if so bee they will amende their faultes. They are cast out by the Church, that they may returne againe with a pure conscience. &c.

Where where hee sayth they are cast out by the Church, yet hee wisheth that hee might openly knowe them, to the ende, that he might denounce the sentence of Excommunication against them, and doe as the Father with his disobedient Child, and as the Shepheard with his infected Sheepe. So that this Censure by these comparisons, doth properly belong to the Spirituall Father and Pastor of the people. But for the better and more full consideration heereof: Let vs see what Chrysoftome saith in his seuenthy Homily, against the custome then of hiring Women mourners for the deade, which Homilie he also inserteth into his Homilies on the Epistle to the Hebrewes, Homilia quarta ex Capite secundo Where hee also mentioneth Presidentes, and after that hee had wished them all not to bee taken away by vntimely death, he sayth: God graunt this, and this I wish for, and I beseeche the Presidentes and you you thoſe wretched women (that is to ſay, we charge you not to ſuffer them, or, to tell them of this our prohibition) that they neuer be preſent at the deathes of the faythfull, nor at the bearing forth of them. For feare we compell them to bewaile in verie deede their owne euils. And leaſte wee teache them not to doe theſe things in other folkes, but to lament their owne calamities. For whereas alſo, a Godly Father hath a prodigall ſonne, hee not onely admoniſheth him that he ioyne not himſelf vnto wicked men: but alſo he terrifieth him. Loe therefore I both charge you, and them by you, that yee neyther call ſuch together, neither that they come vnto you. And God graunt that this word may doe ſome further good, and that theſe threatens may preuaile. But if ſo bee (which God forbid) wee ſhall be contemned; we ſhall at length be compelled to bring our thretninges into dooins, chaſtiſing you with the Eccleſiaſticall Lawes, and them with ſuch correction as ſhall be fitte for them.

But if any beeing arrogant ſhall contemne let him heare Chriſte euen now ſaying: If any ſhall offende againſt thee, goe thy wayes and reprove him betwene thee and him alone. But if he ſhall not heare thee, take vnto thee one or two. And if ſo alſo hee ſhall reſiſt thee; tell the Church. And if hee ſhall alſo diſpyſe the Church, let him be to thee an Ethnicke and Publican.

If therefore hee commaunde mee ſo to ſhunne him, that hath ſinned againſt mee, when hee will not heare: Iudge you, howe I ought to account him, that ſhall ſinne againſt himſelfe, and againſt God. For you woulde not contemne vs, if wee proceede ſo mildlie agaynſt you. But if any man ſhall contemne theſe our bindings that we make, Chriſte againe ſhall correct him, ſaying:

Whatſoeuer yee ſhall binde vpon earth ſhall bee alſo bounde in Heauen: and whatſoeuer yee ſhall looſe vpon earth, ſhall bee looſed in Heauen. For if wee alſo bee wretched, and of no regarde, and worthie of contempt (as in verie deede worthy wee are) notwithstanding wee reuenge not our ſelues, nor wrecke our anger. But thinke of your ſaluation. Bee yee aſhamed, I beſeeche you, and bluſh. For if a man beare with his friend that contendeth with him more earneſtlye than is meete, conſidering his meaning, that hee doth it of good will, and not of inſolencie: Howe much more ſhoulde hee beare with his Teacher when hee reproveth him, nor ſpeaketh theſe things of a tyrannicall authority, nor as though hee were appointed in place of a Prince, but as ſuſtaining the care of a Father. For wee ſpeake not theſe things as though wee woulde bragge of our power. For howe can wee ſpeake theſe things, with this mind, that deſire not to come to the experience of the things we ſpeake of, but with greefe and mourning?

Pardon

Pardon me, and let not anie man despise the ecclesiasticall band. For he that bindeth, is not man but Christe, which hath committed this power to vs, and hath made men the Lords of so great honor. For wee verelie would be willing to vse this power onlie to losing, yea, rather we would that we neither had anie necessitie of that: for we desire that we might binde none. We are not so miserable and wretched, (although wee bee verie vile) but if we be compelled, pardon vs. For neither of our owne accorde or willinglie, but rather mourning more for you, wee lay the bonds vpon you. And, If anie man contemne them, the time of Iudgement is at hand. The residue I wil not vtter, least I should beate your mindes down right. For this is the thing that we chieflie desire, that we might not be drawn into this necessitie. But if we shall come to it, we will fulfill our office, and cast the bonds vpon you. And if anie shal breake them, I shal doo that is my dutie, and then am I cleere, and thou shalt giue an account to him that commaunded me to binde.

But tell thou me, if the King sitting in presence, one of the Sergeants standing by, be commaunded to binde one of those that stande in the rowe, and to lay fetters on him, but he not onelie thrust him backe, but also breake the bonds: is it the Sergeant that hath susteined the iniurie, or is it not much more the King, that did commaund it? For if when anie thing is done against the faithful, he account the same done against himselfe: how much more, when he which is appointed to teach susteineth iniurie, will he be mooued, as though he himselfe had susteined the contumelie? But God forbid that anie of them that are in this Church should come into the necessitie of these bondes. For as it is a goodlie thing not to offend, so is it profitable to beare the rebuke thereof. Lett vs therefore beare the reprehension, and let vs endeuor neuer to offend: but if we shall haue offended, let vs susteine the reproouing. For, as it is good not to be stricken, (which notwithstanding if it shall happen, it is necessarieto lay a medicine to the wound): euen so it is beere. But God graunt that we neuer need anie such medicines, for of you we hope better things, and such as appertaine vnto saluation, although wee speake thus. We haue spoken perhaps more vehementlie, but to your greater taking heede. For it is better, that I should be accounted of you bold, cruell, and insolent: than that you should doo those thinges that please not God. But we trust in God, that this our admonition shal not be vnprofitable. But that you shall be so changed, that these speeches shall bee turned into your praises and commendations.

When the late Trident Conuenticle had falsly burdened the Protestant Churches, that we gaue this power of the keyes to all Christians indifferently: Kernitius answereth, in his Examination of the first chapter saying: This Chapter hath two partes, the first disputeth of the Minister of absolution, to whome appertaineth the ordinary ministry of the keyes. The other part treateth what absolution is. So farre as pertaineth to the first part, the matter may bee dispatched in fewe wordes. For in the Examination of the tenth Canon of the Sacraments in generall, those thinges that pertaine heereunto are expounded. For although the keyes be deliuered vnto the Church, as the auncient Fathers doe well set foorth: notwithstanding we thinke, that by no meanes euery Christian ought or may indifferently, without a lawfull calling, vsurpe or exercise the Ministry of the word and sacramentes. But as in case of necessity the olde Fathers say, that euery lay man may minister the sacrament of baptisme: so also Luther sayde of absolution, in the case of necessity where a preeste is not present.

Melancthon in his common places, Tis. De Regno Christi. Moreouer saith he) we must also consider this, that the pastors haue the commandement of Excommunicating with the Worde, without bodily force, those that are guilty of manifest crimes. And in his annotations on his common places, he saith: But after that we haue known the true church by those signes that he haue spoken of: that power whereof Christe speaketh Mat. 16. & 18. and also Iohn, 20. is to be applied to this onely church. For neither hath Christ giuen that power to his enemies, whom he commaundeth to bee excluded out of the kingdome of heauen, according to that saying: he that beleeueth not shall bee condemned: but vnto this onely assembly that hath not onely his worde, but also interpreteth it rightly, and according to the proportion of the faith, not overthrowing the foundation which the Apostles haue layde, and before them the Prophets. For neither said he to Peter, as to the son of Iohn, I giue to thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: but because he had sayd thou art Christ the son of the liuing God. Therefore the B. of Rome claimeth to himself in vain the keis of Peter, sith that he is most vnlike to Peter, & not a minister of Christ, but of Antichrist. Of who it is writte, that about the last time, he shalbe reprobued with the spirit of Gods mouth.

Neither

Neither did Peter vsurp the power of binding & loſing to himſelf alone any more to himſelfe than to other, but iudged the ſame to bee common to him with all the apoſtles, and the whol church which profeſſeth the ſame word. Saue that for order ſake, hee committeth the publike adminiſtration of the keies to certain, & to ſit perſons, that they ſhould either abſolue me, or not abſolue the, with this choiſe that Chriſt him ſelf hath ordeined, & that he ſhould rightly diſtribute the word of God &c.

Thus doth Melancthon graunt that this power is committed to the church: but the diſpenſation of the power, is committed to the right diſtribution of the miniſters. And not onely hee ſpeaketh of the power mencioned Math. 16. and Iohn. 20. but alſo Math. 18. To which purpose hee proceedeth, ſaying: But it is vſuall to deuide the power of the church, into the power of order, & into the power of iuriſdiction.

The Churches power of order &
iuriſdiction

The power of order they cal the right of teaching, & of adminiſtring the ſacraments: which the prophets and apoſtles immediatly receiued of God: the other doctores or teachers (receiued it) by men. To this power we muſt hearken ſimply, euen as to the voice of the goſpel, according to the commandement of God: Hear him. Howbeit, the good doctores or teachers haue liberty of ordeining times, & of Inſtituting certain traditions for good order ſake. VVhich to obey, it is the duty of a godly mind.

The power
of order.

To which mind nothing is more ioiſful, than in all things to agree with the true church, without offence of conſcience. The power of iuriſdiction is, when as thoſe which are defiled with maniſeſt wickedneſſes, & being admoniſhed, do not deſiſt, are excommunicated from the ſociety of the Church, not onely the inward and ſpirituall ſociety. Which excom. is made by the general voice of the goſpel: he that ſhal not beleue ſhal be co-dened: but alſo fro the externall communion of the church, by a ſpirituall ſentence, to the intent, the honor of God may be leſſe blemiſhed, & the ſociety of men alſo leſſe ill reported. This other power in the primitiue church was more neceſſary, when the Ethnike magiſtrates gouerned the cities. For there, when by the ciuil iudgement, puniſhment ſhould haue bin giuen vpon the blaſphemers, & on others openly violating the com-mandements of God: the church neceſſarily executed iudgment on the corrupted members, without ſeditio, that is, without bodily force. Excluding the wicked with the only word, & yet receiuing them again, if they were conuerted. But now after that they alſo which are the magiſtrates, haue embraced the name of Chriſt, it is better & more meet for the common profit, to bring them vnder the ciuil puniſhment, that maniſeſtly lead a wicked life. Eſpecially when as the magiſtrate by name is charged that he taketh away the authors of offences, to ſhew that the name of god be leſſe il ſpoke of. Thus alſo the offices remain diſtinct, that by the churches power, ſecret & maniſeſt ſins be reprobued, by the only word of God, but they that ſuffer not theſelues to be ruled by the doctrine, may be be punished by the ciuile iurisdiction. Verelie this were a most beautifull harmonie of the two powers, if it were kept: but in this extreame confusion of all things, and heedlesnesse of Princes, there is not so much as hope of ordeining this harmonie. This onelie thing remaineth, that the King of Kinges come, and purge his Church for euer from all offences.

Thus complaineth Melancthon, and distinguisheth of these powers. But he would so little haue the Ecclesiasticke iurisdiction of excommunication, to be vsed by gouerning Seniors that were not teachers: that he would either haue them teachers, or else their iurisdiction to be but ciuile, and the meere punishment of the Christian Magistrate.

Aretius in locis com. parte 2. de excomm.

The definition of excommunication.

The Minister is the excommunicator, and the Church consenteth.

Aretius in his Common place thereon, saith: Excommunication is an exclusion of some bodie that professeth our Religion, out of the companie of the faithfull in holie and prophane matters, beeing made in the name and power of Christe, by the ordinarie Ministers of the Church, the residue of the Church consenting, and being made for the cause of amending the sinner, and of deliuering the Church from the contagion of the sinne. And afterwarde prouing the parts of this definition, coming to the 5. part, By whom it ought to be administred? he saith; We aunswere out of the definition: By the ordinarie Ministers, the residue of the Church consenting. We would haue the Ministers ordinarie, because except their vocation bee lawfull, the discipline of the manners shall be frustrate. For Christe hath deliuered the same to the Apostles, and for that cause to their lawfull successors, and therefore they labour heere in vaine, whom the lawfull succession doth remooue. And furthermore, that the discipline be administred of the Ministers, as Ministers, that is, that they vse the same by Ministerie or seruice, not by Empire or rule. In which matter, how greatlie in Poperie they offended, is not here to the purpose to declare. We adde, The residue of the Church consenting: least the Minister would exercise dominion of his own wil. Christe Mat. 18. biddeth, Tell the Church, not the Ministerie onelie. And Paule would not the incestuous man to be excluded by his authoritie alone, but the Church of Corinth being gathered together 1. Cor. 5. Cyprian declareth it to the people, if anie were to be receaued, doing the same (no doubt) in those that were to be excommunicated. Epist. 16. li. 3. You being present and iudging, all shall be excommunicated. So in another place, for those that were false, hee entreateth the people that the peace might be given them. Tertul. Apolog. cap. 39. saith; Euerie of the approoued Seniors doo gouerne, hauing gotten a iust honour, not with money, but with testimonie, for no matter of God consisteth on price, &c.

Here Aretius maketh excommunication to bee necessarilie made by the

the ordinarie Ministers. And that we might knowe who these are, he addeth, that Christe deliuered it to the Apostles, and to the successors of the Apostles. And therefore those that labour heere, to haue other Ministers than Teachers, labour in vaine, because they are remooued from the lawfull succession, and their discipline is all frustrate. This being set set downe for the Minister, where he addeth, the residue of the Churches consent; and thereto applieth this testimonie of Christe Mat. 18. Tell the Church, not the Minister onelic: he maketh no especiall Senate of ecclesiast. Seniors, but putteth altogether in this general name, the residue of the church. Neither giueth he them herein a ioynt Ministerie with the Ministers, that the excommunication should be made by all the residue: but that it should be done by their consent. So that if our Bishops, fearing confusion in the peoples consent, would haue a Segniorie to represent them, and to whom their consent should be compromitted: yet beyonde consent they haue nothing to do, more than the residue of the Church and people haue, whom (as they say) they represent: except they will be Communiſters of the word, and successors of the Apostles. And this doth the vertie example 1. Cor. 5. (hiers also alleadged) excellentlie well declare. Whether Paul was the Minister and the Iudg, and the People gaue their consent to his Iudgement. Doubteit, if they had not consented, that had not defeated the vertue and power of S. Pauls Censure, as we haue already at large sene.

And likewise the dealing of Cyprian, in receauing of them that were excommunicated. The words of Cyprian in this alleadged 16. epist. li. 3. writing to the people in his absence from them, are these. That you doo mourne & bewaile the falls of our brethren; of my selfe withall I know it, and doo bewaile it, and I suffer and feele that, which the blessed Apostle saith: Who is weakened, (saith he) and I am not weakened? who is offended, and I am not burned? And againe, he put in his Epistle, saying; If one member suffer, the other members also suffer with it: and if one member reioyce, the other members also reioyce with it. I haue compassion therefore, & mourne together with our brethren that haue falne, and ouerthrowen themselves in the trouble of persecution, and trayling with them part of our bowels, they haue with their wounds brought vnto vs sharp grief. To whom God by his diuine mercy, is able to giue remedy. While notwithstanding they should not think that any should be done hastily, vnadvisedly, & out of hand, least if the peace should be vsurped rashly, the offence of Gods indignation should more greuously be prouoked. The blessed martyrs haue written letters to vs concerning some, beseeching that their desires may be examined, when as we shal begin to retorne to the church, peace beeing before of the Lorde giuen to vs all. All their desires were examined, you being present and Iudges.

Thus

How farthe people had to deale for their consēt of restoring to the Churche in Cy-prius time

Thus writeth Cyprian, not that the persons were Excommunicated, they being the Iudges of their Excommunication: but as they were ipso facto Excommunicated by their greivous apostacy: so the fault being so heighnous and offensive to the people, no marvell if Cyprian would not permit, that they shoulde be received into the Church, before the offended people their-selues were content. And for this cause they had made before their requestes, unto the people, that they might on their repentaunce be received. And the people examined and Iudged their requestes to be reasonable. But because it lay not in them to admit them: both they and other that had beene constant in their persecutions, whom Cyprian calleth Martyrs, wrote unto him being their Bishop, that hee at his returne unto them, would receive them. Which although Cyprian of himselfe were willing to doe, yet hee maketh this his conclusion: I pray them that they would patiently heare our Counsayle. Let them expect our returne, and when as by the mercy of God, wee shall come vnto you, calling together more of our fellowe-Bishops, according to the Discipline of the Lorde, and the presence of the blessed Martyrs, we may examin the Letters and the requestes. And to the confessors I haue writtē Letters, which I haue comāded to be read to you.

So that Cyprian writeth not to the people for them, as though the people had had the cheefe authority or anie power heerein: but contrariwise, the people had writtē to him, that whereas, neither they, nor the Martyrs among them, nor yet the Preestes without him, could receive them, hee (having the cheefe power heereof) would vouchsafe to doe it. Whereupon, hee writeth this Epistle, to stay their desire heerein, till it might be done more orderly at his coming to them.

This therefore being no ordinary matter, wherein so many Bishops shoulde appeare, to the more solemne receiuing of these so greivous lapsed persons: whereas diuerse of the Preestes or Elders of Carthage had already receiued these offenders, and administred the Sacramentes vnto them: Hee complayneth heereof, saying: I heare notwithstanding that certaine of the Elders, neither mindfull of the Gospell, neither thinking what the Martyrs haue written to vs, neither keeping to the Bishop the honour of his sacerdotall preesthoode, and of the Chaire: haue begunne already to communicate to them that are false, and to offer for them, (to witte, the publike prayers) and to giue them the sacrament of thanksgiving. When as they ought to haue come by order to these thinges. Whereby it appeareth that these Elders were Ministers of the Worde and Sacraments, and yet distinct from those which after he calleth Bishops, that shoulde all be ioyned with him, in the receiuing of these so great offenders.

As for that Aretius addeth of the seniors mentioned in Tertullian: He aske no better witnesse than Aretius himselfe, euen the lease before, what they were. Where he saith, (after the example of St. Paul, Excommunicating Alexander and Hymenezus) Postea vbi sunt illa p[er] Episcopi, v[bi] videre est apud Tertullianum, Apolog. cap. 39. Afterwards the Godly Bishops vsed it, (to wit, Excommunication) as is to see in Tertullian, &c.

Beza himselfe that referreth Christes wordes to a translation of the Synedron from the Israelites to the Christian Church, in his Confession, Cap. 5. De Ecclesia, Artic. 43. saith: Secondlie, wee must knowe, that this power resteth not vpon mans ordinaunce, but vpon the expresse worde of God. For this is part of the iurisdiction of the Keyes deliuered to the Apostles, and to all true preestes (or Elders) in the person of the Apostles. Which Paul himselfe exercised at Corinth & in other places. So that if these Presbyters, preestes or Elders, be not such as vse the keies deliuered to the Apostles, and doe it not in the person of the Apostles, as their Successors: it is not the true Ecclesiasticall Excommunication by Beza his owne Confession. But they bee not the Apostles successors, if they be not teachers of the word & ministers of the sacraments as Paul saith: 1. Cor. 4. 1. Let a man so esteeme vs as Ministers of Christ & Stewards of secrete Mysteries of God. And therefore, of good consequence it both followe, that the sentences of Excommunication made by such Seniors, as are not teachers, nor Ministers of the word and sacramentes, is no lawfull Excommunication, nor is the power of the keyes that Christe deliuered. Gellius Snercanus de Disciplina ecclesiast. 1. methodi parte fol. 437. saith; Thirdly, by the Institution and promise of Christe, Math. 18. ver. 18. VVhatsoeuer yee shall bind, &c. is as wel added to this Discipline, as to the Ministry of the word. Math. 16. ver. 19. VVe may call it the binding and the loosing key of the kingdome of heauen, in respect that it is a part of the Ecclesiasticall Gouernment. For by the Figure of the keye, is signified the administration of the Church, as appeareth by conference of places. Esay. 22. ver. 22. I will giue, or I will lay the keye of the house of David vpon his shoulder. And Math. 16. ver. 19. & cap. 18. verse 19. Hereupon we learn, that this Discipline is not to be administred according to our priuate affections, but according to the vse in the scripture prescribed, of the keyes of the kingdome of Heauen. For Christe ratifieth onely those thinges, that are bounde and loosed with his keyes of the Ministerie of the Gospell. VVe may amplifie the same more largelie, by the figure of the keies, and of their signification. Math. 16. ver. 19. Marke. 16. ver. 15. Preach yee the Gospell, &c. And Iohn 20. ver. 21. &c. Fro the example of Peter vnto the citizens of Ierusalem, &c.

Beza in conf. Christ. cap. 5. artic. 43.

Gellius Snercanus de disc. eccl. 2. methodi parte fol. 437

Whereby it is plaine, that this key consisting in the Ministerie of the worde, is committed to those only, that are the Ministers of the same word. This do his examples proue & he alleageth, for proof, why this gouernment of

of the presbytery is called spirituall. Whereby (saith he) sinnes are punished not by bodily force, but by the Ministry of the worde. The testimonies which he adioyneth Rom. 12. 1. Cor. 12. 1. Tim. 4. & 5. These haue sufficiently considered, that they enforce nothing for any other Elders, that medled not in teaching and ministring the Worde. The examples which hee allegeth, to proue that this Spirituall Discipline may be exercised, without the offence of the politike Magistrate, doe all of them proue, that the Ministers of the Spirituall Discipline, shoulde bee Ministers of the Worde.

The examples in Sacaus.

First, from the example (saith he) of the distinct function of Moses and Aaron : and of all the Godly kings, that neuer mingled themselves with the Sacerdotal offices. Yea Moses respecting the ordinaunce of God, by the counsell of Iethro his Father in Lawe, ordeyned seuerally by themselves, ciuill iudgements. Exod. 18. ver. 25. Describing in other places, what were the proper offices and Iudgements of the Preestes, in spirituall causes, distinct from bodily causes, Deut. 17. ver. 9. As also the Scripture, 1. Paral. 9. ver. 22. & Ezech. 44.

This two-folde order the godly King Iosaphat obserueth also distinctly, who expressly 2. Chron. 19. ver. 5. &c. Commaunded all the iudgements or questions of the Lawe, of the commandement, of the ceremonies, &c. to be referred to the Leuites and Preestes. Leaste any might except that Moses constitution dealt on sacrifices, not on iudgements. Secondly, from the punishment of King Saule, sacrificing against the commaundement of God. 1. Sam. 15. And of king Ozias stricken with leproy, because hee vsurped the preestes office. 2. Paral. 26. verse 16, &c. The extraordinary examples of Melchisedech, Samuel, and Heli, are not to be drawne into vse, contrary to the Lawe. Thirdly, from the office & vse of the Preestes and Leuites, denouncing the blessings to the keepers of Gods commaundementes, and the cursings to the not keepers. Deut. 27, & 28. Fourthly, from the speciall power and ministry of binding and loosing, which Christe committed not to the ciuill Magistrate, but to the Ministers of the worde in the newe Testament, Math. 16. Who also commaunded significantly, that they that are not obedient, shoulde be shewed to the Church, that is, to the Presbytery, not to the Magistrate, Math. 18. So that, euen here where he expoundeth the Church for a Presbytery. Yet he maketh this Presbytery to be onely of those, that are the Ministers of the Word.

The Presbytery are the Ministers of the Worde.

Fiftly, out of Paule 1. Cor. 5. ver. 4, & 12. Which (so farre as pertaineth to the present businesse) of all other moste euidently teacheth by two arguments, that the presbytery was different from the iudgement of thinges that pertaine to the vse of this life. First, from the order of the time, For that the vse of comming together and of iudging, was receyued ged in the Corinthian Church, before the Epistle of Pable was written, it is apparant out of his owne words: You being gathered together in the name of the Lord. Againe: Do ye not iudge of these things that are within. But speaking afterward, chap. 6. of priuate controuerfies, hee saith: Appoint you arbiters. Not, ye haue appointed, in the preterperfect tense. Moreouer, of the diuerfite of the spiritual things, and ciuile controuerfies: for when he forbiddeth them to go to the Magistrate, in those things that pertain to this life: how would he haue granted it in spiritual things? That assemblie was a singular ornament of the Church: but this iudgement of corporal things, is turned to a reproch vnto the Corinthians. Inſomuch that he adiudgeth each one of the baſest, to be meere inough thereunto. Besides that, 2. Cor. 10. refelling the ſlanders of the aduerſaries, for the ſeueritie of his former Epistle, & for his rebuking the fornicator: he diſtinguiſheth the Miniſterie of the word, and the reuengement with carnall weapons againſt the diſobedient.

Thus doth he ſtil continue in prouing this Segniorie to be meere ſpiritual, & their authoritie wholie to conſiſt in the Miniſterie of the worde.

Sixtie, out of 1. Tim. 5. 19. & 20. whereupon it manifeſtly appeereth, that euen then there was an order already appointed at Ephesus, ouer which Timothie was the Gouvernor. But that theſe 2. ver. the 19. and the 20. Against an Elder receaue no accuſation, except in the mouth of 2. or 3. witneſſes: and them that ſinne reprove openly, that the other may feare, are ſpoken of ſuch Elders, as are paſtorall Elders, we haue at large before proued, eue by the confeſſion of Calvin & Beza: therfore this place, not onlie maketh nothing for not teaching Elders, but alſo proueth a manifeſt ſtanding & appointed ſuperioritie, in the Apoſtles times, among the paſtorall Elders, as we haue ſene.

Seuenthie, vnto theſe approacheth the vſe of the Apoſtolicall Church, which continued many yeres found without the help of Kings & Princes. Yea in the more purer Primitiue Church, vnder the Chriſtiā Emperors, the vſe of the keyes remained appertaining to the Miniſters of the word and Elders of the Church, diſtinct from the ciuile Magiſtrate.

Here Snecanus telleth not howe the Church flouriſhed without the helpe of Chriſtian Princes, which he ſheweth before was one of the Anabaptiſts chiefe arguments: but that the vſe of the keyes was not helped by them, but pertained onlie to the Miniſters of the word, not to Elders, not teachers.

To conclude, the thinges aforeſaid are confirmed, by the diſtinct properties of either gouernmēt. For the ciuile Magiſtrate puniſheth crimes with external puniſhmēt onlie, as with fines of monie, imprifonmēt, &c. Inſomuch that oftentimes it puniſheth alſo the verie penitent, by reaſon of their ciuile tranſgreſſions, not correcting in the mean while, the impenitent, which do not publickly disturb the peace. It stoppeth indeed now and then an euil, that it creepe not further abroad: but the euil lurking within, it helpeth not. But the discipline eccl. executeth her power against sinners, by the word of God alone, and by the instrument of the voice: and acknowledgeth none among the citizens and members of Christ, but those that repent them. And is so farre off from compelling anie against their will, that it accepteth the repentance of none, vnlesse it be voluntarie. And indeuoreth chieflie in this, that offences might be removed, & the repentance of minde performed before God, and those that are fallen, to be reconciled vnto their neighbor, & to the Church. Finallie, that the holie things may not be polluted, being cast to dogs & swine. This double limitation is reciprocally to be obserued: for as it is not lawfull for them that attend on the Church in spirituall things, to arrogate any thing to themselues of the ciuil power: so also is it not lawfull for the ciuil Magistrate to passe his bounds. The Magistrate is indeed the keeper of either table, and ordeined of God the chiefeft member of Christ. Howbeit the administration of things in those matters that directly respect the conscience, do not therefore pertaine vnto him. For it belongeth to God to prescribe in the church, how the consciences should conuert themselues by repentance, it belongeth not to the Magistrate: to who it belongeth to teach & to administer the sacraments, it is their parts also to take notice and to iudge by the word, of them that are the despisers of the doctrine and of the sacrament, so farre as pertaineth to the cotronerie of the law (or right), although the execution of the fact in politike matters, do appertaine to the ciuil Magistrate. What can be plainer spoken than this, to proue that these Seniors either must not deal with this spiritual discipline of excom. or they must be such Presbyters, Priests or Elders, as be Ministers of the word and sacraments.

Danæus in his Christian Introduction, 3. part, in his treatise, De potestate Ecclesie, cap. 48. concerning the author of the power of the keyes, saith on this wise. Moreover this thing it self, is able to establish & ratifie this power of the Church, against the slanders of al men, as though this power were a certeine tyrannie, besides the word of God, vsurped of the Pastors of the Church. In which words, he plainlie maketh this power, to belong, by the institution of God, to the Pastors of the Church. Thirdlie (saith he) this is to be objected against the bitings and scoffes, & rebellions of obstinate persons, to wit, that it is giuen to the Church of Christ himselfe, being God, and not of men, neither yet hath this power bene vsurped of the Church. Here therefore is this saying in force, He that despiseth you, despiseth me, Mat. 10. For it is not mā that bindeth, but Christ. Chrysost. in the Epist. to the Hebr. (whose sayings thereon we haue seene at large already). & it is in the Canon, Nemo contemnat. 11. quest. 3. Moreover, oner, the charter of this power & iurisdiction, which pertaineth to the church, remaineth in writing in 2. Euangelists, as two publike Notaries, & Secretaries of the highest King, to wit, Mathewe & Iohn. Math. 18. v. 18. Io. 20. v. 23. To whom agreeth that, which is in Ier. chap. 1. ver. 18.

Where Danæus ioyneth vnto Mat. 18. all these testimonies Luc. 10. Ioh. 20. & Ier. 1. which are all spoken of the Ministers of the word. That in Luc. 10. (to the which matter also, that in Mat. 10. agreeth.) was spoken to the comfort of the disciples, being sent out to preach. Concerning that of the keyes giue to the disciples, Ioh. 20. Calvin himself saith: After that Christ hath appoynted, & ordeined Legates to be sent into the world, he nowe more significantlie & expresse describeth the office or ministry of the, & in few words cōprehendeth the summe of the Gospel. For this power of remitting sinnes, is not to be separated frō the office of teaching, and is annexed to it in one cōtext. And as for that of Ier. 1. v. 18, Behold thou day haue I made thee a defended Citie, & an iron pillar, & walls of brasse, against the whole land, against the kings of Iudah, & against the princes thereof, against the priests therof, & against the people of the land. As this was onlie spoken to the prophet, so Tremelius expounds these words, wherein they should be vnder- stood, Behold I set thee, that is, I cōfirme thee in this thy functiō, that thou shouldest stand firme against the obstinacie of these mē, & shouldest cō- tinue vnbroke & immouable. And the verie note in the Geneva Bible, obserueth on this word, an iron pillar: signifieng on the one part, that the more Sathā & the world rageth against Gods ministers, the more preser wil he be to help the. And this both the text it self, enē in þ ver. next going before, declare, where God saith: Thou therefore gird vp thy loynes, & arising vp speake vnto the, all the things that I cōmand thee. Be not afraid at the sight of the, least I strike thee before their faces. So that this encouragemēt of God, was onlie for the Ministerie of his word. And very wel noteth Bullinger thereon: He declareth to the Prophet what should be his office, that thou shouldest (I say) speake vnto them. He constituteth him therefore a Prophet, that is, a Preacher, whose office should be to speak vnto the people. And what now he should speak, he expressely signifieth, All things that I cōmand thee. All things (I say) not only some things. Neither shalt thou dissemble any thing, neither shalt thou bring the things that seeme good to thee, but that that I command thee. Marke, the things saith he that I command thee, not that other cōmand thee, or that seeme good to other. These things agree with this cōmandemēt of the L. which the L. Iesus himself hath pre- scribed, & in the last chap. of Mat. sayd, Teaching the to keep al things that I haue cōmanded you, &c. And on this cōfort to him, he saith: For howsoeuer tyrants would seeme to set the preachers at nought, yet themselues wit- nes, that they are afraid of the seruats of god, who they haue cōtemned, Herode feared Iohn, & Achab Elias, &c. If now these testimonies of Da- naus, be fit for those to who this power of the keyes belongeth, who saith

pars. cap. 50.

In the 50. cha. Danzus commeth directly to the partie to whō the keyes are giuen. But (saith he) this power or iurisdiction of the keyes is giuen vnto the whole Church, & therefore to all & singular the Apostles & true Pastors of the Church, and that indeed equallie: but not onlie to Peter alone and to his successors, or to himself principallie or chieftie, as some say, but vnto other by a communicating made from Peter. It is giue therefore vnto the whole Church her self, howbeit the same is exercised by the B. & Prelates of the Church, in her name, consent, & conscience. Aug. in 50. Homil. homil. 50. Whereupon (to confute the Bapists error, that wold make all this power to be giuen principallie to Peter, & to be deriued from him) he saith: The first reason is the authoritie of the scripture. For Christ speaking to all his Apostles, not onlie to Peter alone, saith in the plurall number, What sinnes soeuer ye shall binde vpon earth, &c. Math. 18. v. 18. The same Christ after his resurrection, Omnibus hanc eandem potestatem confirmauit quoque, confirmed also vnto all of them this self same power, not onlie to Peter alone: for vpon whom he breathed the holie Ghost, to them he said; Whose sinnes soeuer ye shall remit, &c. Iohn 20. ve. 23. If now the power giuen Mat. 18. be the self same power that giuen Ioh. 22. & the power giuen Ioh. 20. is the power of teaching and preaching the word of God, & as Caluine saith, is not to be separated from the office of teaching: how foloweth it not, that whosoever haue this power giuen them Mat. 18. must be all Teachers of the word of God? And how then do our B. giue this power to such a Senate of Elders, as are not Teachers?

Excom. exercised by the B and Prelates.

The power of the keyes not giue to Peter onlie, but to all the Apostles.

The power giuen Mat. 18. is giuen onelie to Teachers.

The 2. reason (saith Danzus) is drawn frō the things that are necessarie annexed. Thus, wheresoeuer is the true Church of God, there the gates of hell doo not preuaile, there is remission of sinnes, there is the fountaine of grace open, and also equallie appeareth out of the word of God. Therefore wheresoeuer the church is, the other equally accord thereto, that are the Churches gistes, & follow the same. Zach. 13 v. 1. Among the which chieftie is this power of the keyes: for by it, the remission & retention of sinnes is denounced. Christ said of the Church vniuersallie, The gates of hel shall not preuaile against it. Whereupon it is rightly gathered, that this power of the keyes pertaineth to her, and that indeed vniuersallie. Math. 16. v. 18. For the meane whereby the gates of hell doo not preuaile against the Church, is the selfe same power. If this also be the selfe same power mentioned Math. 16. which Caluine also ascribeth to the Ministerie of the word, saying: Heere Christ beginneth to treat of the publike office, that is, of the Apostleship, whose dignitie is adorned with a double commendation, For Christ saith, that the Ministers of the Gospel, are (as it were) the porters of the Kingdome of heauen, because they beare the keyes thereof.

The power mentioned Math. 18. is the same mentioned Mat. 16.

Secondlie,

Secondlie he addeth, that they are indued with a power of binding and loosing that is effectually in heaven. The similitude of the keyes, is aptly fitted vnto the office of teaching. This againe manifestly proueth, that the exercise of this power belongeth onelie to those that are Teachers of the word.

To conclude (saith Danus) Paule himselfe that vsed this power both in binding and also in loosing, 1. Cor. 5. & 2. Cor. 2. 1. Tim. 1. vers. 20. vsed the same by his owne right, in respect hee was an Apostle, not by a right graunted him from Peter, or by delegation of this power made to him of Peter, Gal. 3. vers. 8. Therefore it appertained to Paule, as much as to Peter. But if as much to Paule, then as much to other Apostles also, yea and vnto their successors, that is, vnto euerie of the Churches, & to the Pastors of them, sith that Paule calleth himselfe the least among the Apostles, 1. Cor. 15. vers. 8. & 9. Wherefore we must doubt no whir, but that this power was giuen of God vnto the Church, and not vnto Peter alone, and also that it was equallie giuen to euerie of the Pastors & Churches, that they may haue & keep sound & obedient to the word of God, the flocke of the Lord committed vnto them. This reason is againe a good argument, that the exercise of this power belongeth onelie to the Ministers of the worde, not onelie from the example of Paule in the places here cited, and of the other Apostles, but also of their right and interest therein, and that in respect they were Apostles; and to the successors of the Apostles, in respect of their succeeding therein, in teaching the doctrine that they planted. But those that are no teachers, are no successors of the Apostles: therefore the exercise of this power belongs not to them. And if Paule so well as Peter, and euerie one of the Apostles had this power in their owne rights, and Pastors likewise in their owne rights: and their rightes and offices be seuered from those in the Churches that be not Pastors nor Teachers: then had Paule and Peter and euerie of the Apostles, and in succession from them, euerie Pastour and Teacher, a power and right herein by him selfe, separate from all other in the Churches.

And to this accordeth the testimonie of S. August. which Danus here citeth: Exagatorum non posuit Dominus, &c. God hath set me to be a layer forth, not an exactor, notwithstanding where we may, where place is giuen, I cease not: where we know, we reprehend, we rebuke, we accurse, we excommunicate, and notwithstanding we amende them not. Why so? Because he that planteth, nor he that watereth is any thing, but God that giveth the increase. Who is this, that he ascribeth this accursing and excommunicating onto? Is it to aise that are not Teachers? Is it not to them, that he saith, doe also reprehend, and rebuke, and plant, and water? And is not that by preaching or teaching the word?

The power of binding and loosing pertaineth to Pastors.

The power of the keyes is severall to the Apostles, and to Pastors.

Aug. sermon de tempore 164. Aug. attributeth not exco. to aise Elders not teaching.

for the Elders exco.

And if Danrus had set downe the sentence more full, the words that go before, would haue declared it: Behold (saith Aug.) I say vnto you, behold I crie vnto you, I cleere my selfe. God hath set me to be a layer forth, &c. And the words also following immediatlie after: I that now speake, that now admonish, what need is there, but that God heare me for you, that is, in your hearts? Brieflie I say, and I commend it vnto you, and I terrifie the faithfull, and I edifie you. Thus doth he still ioyne teaching and preaching with his accursing and excommunicating. And even there, he so threatneth them that kept concubines besides their wiues, that he maketh the sinner to say, O holie Bishop, thou hast made my concubine an harlot. Did I say so (saith Augustine) the Apostle crieth it out, & I haue incurred the blame, &c. Thus doth S. Augustine threaten them with his excommunicating: but he teacheth and reproofeth them withall. As for such as are not, as he was a Teacher, & open reprehender of sinns, he ascribeth not the action of excommunication to them.

Moreover, in 52. chap. saith Danrus: Therefore as the King being sick obeyeth as he is a man, the Phisitians, although they be his subiects: & as he that saileth obeieth the Mariners, because he hath not the gouernment ouer the Sea, nor ouer the diseases: so dooth he also obey the Pastors, because the highest Magistrate Politike, hath not anie law ouer the heauens. Wherefore in this power to be exercised, the Pastors and Prelates of the Church, haue also ouer the chiefe Magistrate a right & power, in respect that they are the faithful Ministers of God, & Dispensors & Pastors of the whole Church. Hic. 1. v. 10. What can be plainer spoken than this, that this right and power to excommunicate, belongeth to none that be no Teachers? The examples that he alleadgeth, of Nathan reproouing Dauid: Iohn Baptist reproouing Herode: Fabian repelling Philip: Ambrose excommunicating Theodosius: we haue either seene before, or they are apparant, that they all confirme the Censure of the Minister onelie of Gods word.

And in the 53. chap. Fourthlie (saith Danrus) it is the office of the Bishops and Prelates of the Church, to intend vnto the worde of God, to remooue the offences of the Church, to seeke the lost sheepe, to gather the dispearsed. For thus doo Ezech. 34. 37. and Zach. 11. ver. 16, describe the office of Pastors. In the 54. cha. he treateth again of purpose, By who this power of the keyes in the Church ought to be exercised. And he mooueth the question, whether by all the People; or by the whole Colledge of the Presbyterie. And after he hath set down their opinions, that would haue it exercised of all the people, he saith: But we say & teach thus out of the worde of God, and the discipline of the auncient Church: first, that in euerie Church there ought to be chosen an Ecclesiastical Senate, which is named by the consent of all the people.

Danrus assertions for the eccl. Senate.

This,

This, (by the way) agreeth not with that, which Danzus affirmed be-^{for the Se-} fore, in the 10. chap. that, the second kind of Presbyters, Priests or Elders, was wont to be ordained in euerie greater Citie onlie, wherein there was a large and populous Church, and a great number of the faithfull. And here he speaketh of euerie Church. Except we shal reconcile Danzus thus: ^{Danzus iar-} that there, he speaketh of Elders, not Teachers: and here, of such as are al-^{ring and re-} Teachers of the word. ^{conciling.}

But that Senate (saith Danzus) ought chiefly to consist of Pastors or Bishops, and Presbyters, or those that we call Super-vigilants, as before also we haue declared. This Senate Paule calleth ^{1. Tim. 4. ver.} 14. We before haue called it the College of the Presbyterie, or the Cōsist. ^{The Pres-} ^{byterie.}

This also haue we shewed euen by Caluine. that it necessarilie infer-reth no such Colledge, but may be well vnderstood, for the office or function of the Presbyterie, Priesthood or Elderhip.

But Danzus so calleth it, Because (saith he) it cōsisteth chiefly of those persons, to wit Presbyters, Priests, or Elders, that is, they that are in the Church called Presbyters, Priestes, or Elders. For it may also consist of Deacons, if the Church so think it good, or if the number of Presbyters in that place be small. ^{Danzus as-} ^{sertion that} ^{the Senate}
^{may consist} ^{of Deacons.}

Here againe Danzus calleth to our Brethren a fresh bone to gnaw vpon. For if none of these offices in this Tetrarchie that our Bp. would erect, may be ioyned together in one person: how shall it be lawfull for a Church, to haue the Deacons to be the governing Elders, yea the whole Consistorie of these governing Elders, (if they so thinke good) to consist of Deacons? And why not then the same to be Teachers and Pastors?
And so all to be resolued into one, if they shall thinke it good? at least, if the Church shall think it good, (as our Church doth) there is no necessitie of these governing and not teaching Elders.

We say therefore (saith Danzus) that vnto this Senate Ecclesiasticall, ^{Cap. 54.} or Colledge of the Presbyterie, the moderation, the administration, the adiudging, and the exercise of this power of the keyes doth apperteine, and of consequence, this power ought to be exercised by the Pastors & Presbyters, Priestes, or Elders of the Church, as by men aduanced therevnto of God, by the consent and suffrage of the people, that is, of his Church, &c. The administration, and dispensation therefore of this power of it selfe, & in cōsideratiō of the exercise therof, pertaineth not to e-uerie one of the people, but to the Presbyterie, that is, to the Pastors, and Priestess or Elders of the Church howbeit the right & authoritie thereof pertaineth to the whole Church, because that that is done by them, is done by the whole Church.

This is Danzus iudgemēt for this power. Which being thus set down, to the publike Aduocates and Proctors of the Church. Therefore they are euerie where called, Gouernours or Guides, in the Epistle to the Hebrues chap. 13. & chap. 1, vers. 24. They are first saluted of Paule to the Philippians. Paule directeth to them the Epistle that hee writeth to the whole Church. And Paule layeth downe the almes among them, 1. Tit. 1. Therefore to them the care, the medling, and the administration of the right and matters of the Church dooth appertaine. But this power, and the medling and exercise thereof, is a part of the Eccl. regiment: therefore the same also pertaineth to them.

This Argument grounded on these 4. testimonies, doth not onely admit well inough, that these Presbyters, Priests or Elders, may be also Ministers of the word: but each one of the expresse proueth, & such they were. As first, that which is here cited, Hebr. 13. Remember (saith the Apostle) your Gouernours or Guides, which haue declared vnto you the words of God. Here are no other Gouernours or Guides named, than such as are the Teachers of the word. And what letteth, but that after also, using the same terme in his salutations, Salute all your Guides and Gouernours: he meaneth still such Guides and Gouernours, as in the 7. verse before, he had them obey, that is, the Teachers of the word.

Phil. 1.
The B. were Teachers.

As for those that S. Paule saluteth first, in his Epistle to the Philippians, he plainlie calleth them Bishops. And what Caluine understandeth by the name of Bishops, to wit, the Ministers of the word: we haue heard sufficientlie already. And to take our Bishops owne confession in this their learned discourse, pag. 23. & 24. where treating of Pastors to be at one with Bishops, they say, The same thing is to be obserued in the name of Bishops, vsed by S. Paule, Philip. 1. 1. where he and Timothie send salutations vnto the Bishops and Deacons of the Church, which was in the Citie of Philippi: which Bishops were the Elders or Pastors. So that by our Bishops owne testimonie, this proueth nothing for anie not Pastorall Elders.

1. Tim. 1.
The Elders
were Teachers.

As for the next testimonie 1. Tim. 1. mencioneth no Elders: or any Eccl.
Gouernours, that were not Teachers. Timothie himself to whom he wrote the Ep. was a teaching Gouernor. And all the other were Teachers good or bad, that there he speaketh of. As I besought thee (saith S. Paule) to abide still in Ephesus, when I departed into Macedonia, so doe, that thou maist command some, that they teach none other doctrine. And vet. 7. They would be Doctors of the Law, & yet vnderstand not what they speake. So that, whatsoeuer these were, yet they took not vpon the anie eccl. government without teaching, nor anie other there mencioned, except peradventure Hymenezus and Alexander,

Alexander, whom S. Paul excommunicated, did take vpon them to be eccle. reasons for Gouernors, and not Teachers. But were they Teachers or no, it appea- the Senate, reth they were blasphemers.

The Elders that S. Paule mencioneth, Tit. 1. what they were, our B². also in this their learned disc. pag. 24. do say: Likewise vnto Titus 1. 5. he callet them Elders, and immediatlie after, describing the qualities of such as were meete to be ordeined Elders, he calleth them Bishops, &c.
And againe, pag. 35. Hee requireth that he be such a one, as holdeth fast the faithfull word according to doctrine, and that he also may be able to exhort with wholesome doctrine, & improoue them that gainesay it. Here our B². applie these testimonies to Bishops & Pastors. And Daneus by getteth them in to proue the Elders of the Consistorie. How can we reconcile our B². and Daneus, but that the Elders of the Consistorie, must be al pastorall Elders at the least, and Teachers of the word? But our B². require a Consistorie of eccle. Gouernors that are not Teachers: and therfore, all these testimonies do cleane confute th^e. But let Daneus proceed.

For why are they called the Bishops of the Church, why the Prelates, or those that are preferred, but that we should vnderstande, that the go-uernment of the Church pertaineth to them, and is of them to be administrated? Act. 20. ver. 17. And therefore they their selues, not euerie one of the people are called together, if the Church bee to bee warned of anie matter, or if anie thing be to be deliberated vpon in the Church, they by reason of their office come together, and deliberate, as it appeareth, Act.
20. ver. 17. and 21. ver. 18: 15. ver. 22. to them also it is to be defended, if anie thing be to be done, or to be treated vpon in the Church. Act. 15.
ver. 22.

Of what function these Elders were in the places here cited, we haue alreadie saide at large. That they were Ministers and Teachers of the word. As for them mentioned Act. 20. it is both in the text apparant, and (besides Caluine & all other Interpreters,) our B². in this their learned *Discourse beare us witnesse: in all which places, they applie the name of Elders still to Pastors. The 15. & 21. of the Act. do mention also (as we haue saide, both by the text it selfe, and by Calu. gathering thesam) that such Elders, as were Teachers of the word. As for those mentioned Act. 11. being the same that are spoken of Act. 15. and 21. the consequent is euident what they were. So that here yet, no Elders appeare that are no Teachers.

The second reason is (saith Daneus): To the Pastors and Prelates of the Church appertaineth the cure, the vewe, the knowledge and the iudge-ment, concerning the manners of euerie of the faithfull. And this iurisdiction is a part and appendant of that vewe and care: therefore this care and watchfulnesse is proper also vnto them. Whereupon it followeth, that vnto them this administration dooth properlie belong. For why are they called watchmen? Ezech. 3. vers. 7. Why are they bidden to haue the care of the Church? 1. Pet. 5. ver. 2. Hebr. 13. 17. Why are they called ἐπισκοποι, as I said before? For these titles are not giuen of the holie Ghost in vaine vnto them.

These titles (we graunt) are not giuen them in vaine, altho therfore they are all titles belonging to Teachers and Ministers of the word, more properlie in the Ecclesiastical functions, than vnto those that are not Ministers nor teachers of the word. It is more likelie, that in these places (where these titles be giuen) are meant Teachers and Ministers of the word.

Ezechiel ver. 17. is cleere for a Teacher. Thou Sonne of man, I haue made thee a watchman vnto the house of Israel, therefore beare my worde at my mouth, and giue warning from me, &c. The testimonie of 1. Pet. 5. ver. 2. besides all other Interpreters, the verie Geneva translation hath this marginal note: By Elders he vnderstandeth all them which preach, teach, or minister in the Church. And least we should vnderstand it of other Ministers than of the word, our Brethren themselves in this their learned Discourse, pag. 22. 25. & 32. do still applie the same to pastorall Elders. As for the testimonie Hebr. 13. 17. we saw how it was to be expounded, by the 7. verse, for those Guides that are Teachers of the word. And the name fitteth verie well, for so by ἐπίσκοπος Luke also ἐπίσκοπος Paule is called, Act. 14. ἐπίσκοπος τῆς ἐκκλησίας, the guider of the word.

Danew 3.
reason for the Presby-

Gods word

The 3. reason is (saith Danew) it apperteineth to them to iudge out of the word of God, the fates & life of men, and to weigh the manners of men, and to marke the fruite of the Gospel: to whome the explication and treatie of the same word of God, and of the Gospel by the comendement of God, doth appertaine: but they are those that are contained in the name of the Presbyterie, & Prepositors & Prelates of the Church: whereupon it is manifest, that vnto them therefore belongeth this power properlie and chieflie, whereby this iudgement is made. 1. reason for the Presby-

1. Cor. 5.

What can be plainer spoken than this, that these Elders of the Presbyterie ought to be Teachers and Ministers of the worde? And these testimonies also doe as expressely proue it. The first of Tim. 4. ver. 11. Declare these things and teach them. And 1. Tim. 6. 2. Teach and exhort these things.

The 4. reason is, (saith Danew). The vse it selfe of things, and the examples of the Apostles, and of the Primitiue Church doo confirme it. For Paule while he vseth the power of the keyes, against the incestuous Corinthian, he asketh not euerie one of the people their sentence (or opinion): but onelie denounceth to the Church of Corinth, and to the assemblie, that hee which deserued, was excommunicated. 1. Cor. 5. ver. 4. 2. Cor. 2. ver. 10. And declareth the same to other to whome that care pertained. Paule in deed dooth communicate to the people, & denounce his judgement, that either the Church shoulde assent or dissent. But hee himselfe with the Seniors pronounceth of the matter, and claimeth the first and chiefest parts, in the exercise of these keles vnto himselfe, and to the other Pastors.

Although here Danzus adde this, more than the text hath, or giveth, that he himselfe with the Seniors did pronounce of the matter: for the text is plaine, that he himselfe, and by himselfe, without anie Seniors of theirs, did pronounce, and denounce it to the Corinthians; not, that he was to be excommunicated, but that he was excommunicated (as Danzus saith well therein) chose they, whether they would assent or dissent. Their dissent could not reuoke the excommunication already denounced. But admit, that Paule did it with anie other Elders ioyned with him:

yet neither wer they among the Corinthians, nor Elders of that Church. But whosoever they were, if ther were anie, wil he maketh them no other than pastoral Elders. Whereuppon (saith Danzus) it cometh to passe, that we must conclude, that the administration, exercise & power of the keyes, which is both in binding & loosing, is properlie & first of all to be referred to the Colledge of the Presbyterie, or Prelats of the Church: notwithstanding the same is had of the Church, which they ought in the Church, to exercise with the consent, notice & approbation of the Church. Hereunto I referre that which Aug. writeth, Serm. 18. de verbis Apostoli: If anie man suffred a slander of his brother, that is of a christia, he ran to the B. to the end he might cleere himself of the slander. All this againe maketh the more, that the dealing herein appertained to those Elders onelie that were Teachers & Ministers of the word. But (saith Danzus) that the power & arbitramēt of the eccl. Censure pertained not to anie one: appeareth enē of that, that the eccl. regiment should the be transformed into a meere tyrannie, or into a politike Kingdome. Therefore neither the B. neither one Eld ought, or can alone, exercise that power, but together at the length with his eccl. Cōsistorie, as appeareth out of the old discipline. Siricius in his 2. Epist. he liued in the Age of Ambrose. In the 2. Council of Carthage the 2. chap. And in the 4. the 22. & 23. chap. Cyr. in his 12. Ep. In the first Council of Antioch, chap. 23. this selfe same thing is confirmed.

This is another question, Whether anie one Bishop or Minister may excommunicate, or no: The question is now betweene our Brethren & vs, whether (one or mo) there ought anie other to exercise this Censure of the Church, than such Elders as are Ministers of the word. But, to consider this conclusion of Danzus, we denie not, nor mislike of the Bishops ioyning with manie, where the weightines of the matter so requireth, & where manie of these ministeriall Elders may conveniently assemble, and adioyne themselves vnto him, or wher any such Colledge or Cōsistorie of the were. can exercise this power alone, but that either the Eccl regiment shoulde be transformed into a meere tyrannie, or into a politike kingdome: Danzus sheweth here no cause or reason of this saying. And we haue great reason to thinke contrarie, so that S. Paule denounced the excommunication against the incestuous person. Though Danzus, saith he ioynd with him Elders: yet the text mencioneth none. Yea, it is cleane contrary. Paule speaketh of his owne action in the singular number: I haue iudged him. And the like he saith of Alexander and Hymenezus: I haue deliuered them to Satan. 1 Tim. 1. 20. And yet S. Paule can not be said herein to haue transformed the Eccl. regiment into a more tyrannie, or into a Politike kingdome. These therefore are ouer-hard speeches, if there be no other default in the excommunication, but onlie in the number of the denouncers of it, or iudging of it, so that in the matter it selfe, it be not clene errant, a wrong key, or in a wrong locke, or the key wriched and wrested, but ordered aduisedlie as it ought to be. Neither is this anie thing like the Popes tyrannical claime, but cleane against it, if euerie B. haue this power as much, and as primarilie, and plenarilie as he: and where one ruleth, & ruleth rightlie, it is no tyrannie. Neither if it wer tyrannie in one, would the number helpe it in manie. For so it might come to 30. or to 10. tyrants so one tyrant, as it did in Athens and in Rome. But all lyes in the parties vsing or abusing of this power. And if anie dzaw nere, is not to a Politike kingdome herein, but rather to a Politike government of manie: they might rather be suspected that woulde dzawe it from the Ministers of the word of God, to so manie Politike men that are not Ministers of Gods word: and dzaw the discipline also to so manie Politike matters, that it might be feared, in stead of doubting a Politike kingdome, we shoulde fall into a farre worse estate, and ouerthrowe both Church and Kingdome too.

But here I wonder what Danzus meaneth, to alledge for prooffe of the auncient discipline, this Epistle (whether true or counterfet) of Pope Siriti-ritius. Will our B. allow of those Epistles? Then not onlie these Presbyteri are more often called Sacerdotes: but neither may they, nor Deacons, marrie: nor, if they were married before, might companie anie longer with their wiues, after their entrie into the Clergie: nor could be admitted at all into the Clergie, if they had before married a widow: nor no: anie might be ordained into the Ministerie, without the witting and consent of the B. of Rome. What a tyrannie woulde this bring in, so directlie to bring in credit and authoritie these suspected Epistles? And wherfore in the ende must all this be done? Forsooth, because Danzus findeth in one of his (if his) Epistles, these words. Factus ergo Presbyterio, &c. the Presbyterie therefore being made, it is euident, that it is contrarie to the Lawe of our (that is of the Christian) doctrine doctrine. Whereupon wee following the Apostollicall precept, because they declared it in another sort, than that which we receaued; it is manifest, that this is the onelie sentence made of all, as well the Priests, or Elders and Deacons; as also of the whole Clergie: that Ioninian, Auxentius, Genilis, Geminator, Felix, Plotinus, Martianus, Ianuarius & Ingeniosus, who are found to be the kindlers of new heresie, and blasphemie, that beeing condemned for euer by the sentence of God and our iudgement, they shoulde remaine out of the Church. Which thing not doubting but that your holinesse will keepe, I haue directed vnto you these writings, by my Brethren and fellow Elders, Crescent, & Leopard, and Alexander, which by their feruent spirit, can fulfill the religious dutie of the faith.

Here is an excommunication made by a Presbyterie; but what that Presbyterie was, and of what Presbyters, Preefts, or Elders it consisted: both the words doe declare, where he calleth these men, Compresbyteros, his fellow Elders; and a little before, speaking of the same writing, whiche here he condemneth in the Heretikes, he saith: It was detected, Iudicio Sacerdotali, by the iudgement of the Sacerdotal priests. For although he ioyne all in the consent of the iudiciall sentence: yet were not the Deacons, and all the Clergie anie of that Presbyterie. But by the Presbyterie he meaneth Compresbyteros, such Priests as himselfe was. Neither is it maruell, if all these were assembled to the excommunication of them, whome they call blasphemous Heretikes: for this excommunication was of the highest degree, being a condemnation for euer, as Siricius saith: whiche Danzus after ward calleth Anathema maranatha. And therefore it followeth not thereupon, that although this was not made by the B. himself: that therefore there was no excommunication made by the B. or by any Priest himselfe at all?

But to proue this excommunication of the Bishops ioyned with the Presbyters, to be euer so vfed, Danzus adioyneth to this Popes Epistle, the decree of the 2. Council holden at Carthage about this Pope Siricius time, where chap. 2. are these wordes: Aurelius the Bishop saide, when in the Council past before, it was treated of the moderation of continencie & chastitie, these 3. degrees were by consecrations annexed in a certeine writing vnto chastitie, I say, Bishops, Priests or Elders, and Deacons: it so pleased them (as it is meete) that the holie Bishops, and the Priests of God, & also the Leuites, or those that attend vpon the diuine sacraments, should in all things be continent: that they may simplie obtaine of God, the things they pray for, that that which the Apostles haue taught, and the Antiquitie hath obserued, we also should keepe. It was said of all the Bishops; it pleased al, that the Bishops, the priests or Elders, & the Deacons, or those that handle the sacraments, being keepers of chastetie:

Our Br.
great overshooting to proue their presbyterie.

Here is a godlie Decree, that Daneus citeth, to proue that no excommunication should be made without a Presbyterie. It is a world to see, how our B^s are so bent to erect this Presbyterie, that they can scarce find any sentence mentioning Presbyters, Presbyters, Priests, or Elders, though it make cleane against them, and against God & all: yet forsooth, this berie name is so catched vp, to make a shew of Antiquitie for these Elders, that it seemeth, if euer our B^s haue over-shot themselves, it is in this their humo^r for this Presbyterie. What is here (for so excellent and godly learned men, to haue alleged this tyrannical Decree, or rather this very doctrine of Diuels, in this superstitious Council, against the law of God, against the lawfulnessse of Bishops, Elders, and Deacons mariage, & against the berie Antiquitie of the Church, which they pretend: And yet what is there in this Decree, to inferre that this power, and Censure of excommunication, appertaineth onelie, and alwaies to a Presbyterie ioyned with the Bishops?

This counsell alleged by Daneus, maketh cleane against him.

But since Daneus hath alleged this Council: let vs see how this Council directlie (even in this matter of excommunication) maketh cleane against him. For in the 8. chap. following, it is sayd: Alipius the B. of the Church of Tagasta, the Legate of the Prouince of Numidia, did say: Neither must that be pretermitted, that if perhaps any Priest or Elder, which is corrected, or excommunicated of his B. being puffed vp with swelling or pride, shall thinke that Sacrifices are separatelie to be offered vnto God, or shall beleue that any other altare should be erected, contrarie to the eccl. faith and discipline: let him not go unpunished. Valentinus of the first seate of the Prouince of Numidia, said: The thinges that our brother Alipius hath prosecuted, are necessarilie agreeable to the eccl. discipline and faith. Declare ye therefore what thereupon seemeth good vnto your louingnesse. Whether if any Priest or Elder shall make a scisme against his B. he should be accursed? It was said of all the Bishops: If any Priest or Elder shall be excommunicated, or corrected of his Prelate, he ought to complaine to the Bishops adioyning, that his cause may be heard of them, and by them he may be reconciled to his B.

The Presby-
ters ministred the Sacraments.
The B himself excom.
the Priests.

Here both we see what these Presbyters, Priests, or Elders were, to wit, such as celebrated the L. supper: & also, that vpon iust occasion, the B. himselfe might excom. eue these Priests or Elders. And if we may gather any argument, of absolving or recociling to the Church, which is equiualent to excommunicating, we might haue seene before in the 4. chap. that not onlie a Bishop by himselfe, but also any particular Priest or Elder, in some cases, might do it: Aurelius the B. (that propounded the decree against Bishops,

shops, Priests & Deacons wiues, which Danzus citeth) said: If any man shalbe in danger, & shal desire to be reconciled to Gods altars, if the B. shalbe absent: the Priest or Elder ought to take counsell of the B. & so at his comandement to recõcile the partie that is in danger. If the Priest or Elder can absolue the repẽtant partie, at the comandement of the B. being absent: is it not likeliẽ the B. could doe it himselfe being present? And if the B. or anie one Priest could thus absolue: coulde neither Priest nor B. by theselues, not haue excomunicated the said partie, being a manifest & notorious offender? So þ by examining this counsil further, it maketh more against Danzus in this point, thã for him. The like Decree vnto this, for a Priests absoluing & restoring a penitent in the absence of the B. is also in the 3. Council of Carth. cap. 32. These Councils being about the time of Siricius, which Siricius was in the time of Ambrose (as Danzus cõfesseth, & Ambrose himself without any Presbyterie ioyned with him, excomunicating the Emperour Theodosius: how is it not apparant, that in those daies a B. by himself might excomunicate, & his excomunicatiõ holdẽ for good & lawfull? But Danzus to cõfirme it better, that a B. might not excom. by himself, addeth the 4. Council of Carth. chap. 22. & 23. where it is said: that a B. shal not ordeine Clerks without the Council of his Clerkes, & so that he seeke the assent, the sufferance, and the testimonie of the Citizens. Againẽ, that the Bishop heare the cause of none, without the presence of his Clerkes: otherwise the Bishoppes sentence shal be frustrate, except it bee confirmed by the presence of his Clerkes. What is here that the Bishop may not by himselfe excommunicate? The former chap. is onlie of ordeining Clerks: & yet, it doth not take the power of ordeining from them, but it manifestly giueth the power thereof vnto him. Though in ordeining a Priest, the Council say, that all the Priests present should lay their hands also on the head of him that is ordeined. But the B. hand onelie on a Deacon, &c. chap. 3. & 4. &c. As for this Decree chap. 22. is but of the Clerkes counsel to the B. And though they say also, hee should seeke the assent, sufferance, & testimonie of the Citizens: yet in the action of ordeining, they haue no power. As for the 23. cha. requireth onelie the presence of the Bishops Clerkes, in the processe of his iudicial sentences. But this proueth not, that they ioine with him in the authoritie of the Iudiciall proceeding and giuing the sentence. There is no Iudge can iudicially heare and determine anie causes tempozal, but he must haue his Clerkes and Registers about him, to witnesse and recorde the same: but neither their presence, nor yet their inrolling of the acts, giueth them anie authoritie in the Iudgement. He is Dominus Iudex for all their presence. And that both the 28. beclare, saying: The vniust condemnation of the bishops is voyde, & therefore to be retracted of a Synode. But what is this to excommunication, it is said euen in the next Decree to that Danus here citeth chap. 24. that the sacerdotall priest making speech or preaching in the Church, he that shall depart out of the audience, shalbe excommunicated. Might neither the priest nor the Bishop, if they saw anie person to vse this doing, & obstinatelie mainteine the same, pronounce this sentence of excommunication on him? But that the Bishop might so do in this and in other greuous crimes, we may well conclude by the 55. chap. of that Council: that a Bishop shal excommunicate those that are the accusers of their Brethren: & if they shall amend their fault he may receaue them to the Communion, not to the Clergie. Here is, is the excommunication and absolution made by the Bishop, without anie ioyned with him in these actions, were they present at the doings neuer so much. And that this was allowable by the ancient custome of the Church, the Council of Eliberis, holden almost an 100. yeres before anie of these Councils, approueth the excommunicating made by a Bishop himselfe, saying, chap. 53. It pleased them all, that euerie one should receiue the Comunion of that Bishop, of whom being in anie fault hee was Absentius, that is, put backe, separated or excommunicated. But if so be anie Bishop shall presume to admit him, he being not yet willing or consenting, of whom he was depriued of the communion: let him knowe that he shall aunswere these causes among the Brethren, with the danger of his estate.

Concerning Cyprians Epistles, we haue perused them already mentle well, to examine what the presbyters were which Cyprian mentioneth and we haue still found them, Ministers of the worde and Sacraments, in none of his bookes of Epistles anie 12. Epistle fourtheth this matter. I graunt, that in reconciling of Heretikes and those that were false to Ido-latrie, he vsed to take the aduise of his priests, of his Deacons, of his Clergie, and of all the people. But this proueth not that he neuer restored anie other wise. When he confesseth, that not onelie a priest, but a Deacon also may in necessitie, restore the baptised penitēt to the churches peace.
But whomsoever Cyprian adioyned to him in anie solempne reconciliation: he reserueth the power and authoritie of loosing to himselfe.

As for the first Council of Antioch, which was elder than those of Carthage before cited, in the 23. chapter it is thus decreed: It is not lawfull for a Bishop to make vnto himselfe another successor, although death ap-proch vpon him. But if anie such thing should be done, the same constitution to be voyde. But let the Ecclesiasticall lawe bee kept, which is on this wise, that a Bishop ought not to be made otherwise, than with a Synode and Iudgement of Bishops, who after the death of him that is departed, haue power to promote him that shall be worthie. What is here to abridge the authoritie of a Bishop, that he cannot excommunicate any offender, without the consent and ioynt action with him, of a Segniorie?

where

Where if Danæus had but looked to the twelfth chapter: he should have found another manner of matter, where the Council saith in the wordes following, concerning the authoritie of him that is made Bishop: Those things that pertain vnto the Church, must be kept with all carefulnes, and with a good conscience, and faith, that is in God, who considereth and iudgeth all thinges. Which are also to bee dispensed by the iudgement and power of the Bishop, to whom the people is committed, and the soules that are gathered together in the Church. But to come nearer to the present purpose, for excommunication. The 4. chapter saith: If anie Bishop being condemned of a Synode, or a Priest, or Deacon of his owne B. shall presume to meddle in anie thing concerning Priesthood, or the holie Ministerie: it shall not be lawfull for him anie more, to haue hope of restitution, neither anie place of satisfaction, but al that communicate with him, to be thrust out of the Church: especiallie, if they obstinatelie communicate with him, after they haue knowen the sentence pronounced against him. What can bee plainer spoken than this, that the Bishop himselfe may excommunicate.

*ledg. the

And in the 5. chapter: If anie Priest or Deacon contemning his B. shall separate himselfe from the Church, and priuatelie by himself gathering the people together, shall dare to erect an Altare, (or Communion Table) And albeit his B. exhorting him, and once and twice reuoking him, he shall remaine disobedient: let this man by all meanes bee condemned, nor let him hope at anie time to obtaine helpe, or to receaue his owne honour. And if so bee hee shall persist to disturbe and sollicite the Church: let him bee repressed by the outwarde powers, as a seditious person.

Cap. 6.

And in the 12. chapter. If anie Elder, or Deacon of his owne Bishop, or if anie Bishop of a Synode, shall perhaps be condemned, &c. Thus both this Council also (which Danæus citeth) proue, that vpon iust occasions, a Bishop himselfe may excommunicate, not onelie such among the people, but also among the Pastorall Elders, as bee notorious offenders.

Nowe, when Danæus hath thus farre proceeded, on the parties that should exercise this power of the keyes giuen to the Church: he cometh at length, chap. 33. to this sentence of Christ, Mat. 18. v. 17. Tel the Church. Where travelling to comfort them that hold this word Church, to be simple meant, for the People: he pleadeth that it is meant, for the Prelates of the Church. And at length he cometh to this conclusion, with this saying of Ambrose, in libro de dignitate Sacerdotali. cap. 3.

That which pertaineth vnto all, ought to bee done of all. True it is, howbeit, according to the diuerse vocation of euery one in the Church of God. By reason whereof, the people are not equall to the ecclesiasticall Prelates.

The power
of the keyes is giuen to the Church
in such manner as the Sacraments
are giuen.

So also Chrysostome lib. 3. de sacerdot. beyonde the middest of the booke: Baptisme is giuen vnto the Church. I aske therefore, to whom pertaineth the administration thereof, and to haue the power of baptizing? Dooth it pertaine to euerie one of the people? No: but to the Pastors alone. And yet this gift is giuen to the whole Church, as also is the power of the keyes. But euen as when Baptisme and the holie Supper of the Lord, is administred in the Church, the force of Baptisme & of the Supper is expounded to the people, who all of them seeing it, the seale is added to the healthfull promises of God: and so the people is confirmed in their faith, and each one of the people is taught and edified.

To conclude, when these things are done, the Church out of the holie Supper, and out of Baptisme, feeleth & receaueth the fruite, which it ought to receaue: euen so, when hypocrites, and wicked ones are cast out of the Church, or when that the poenitent are receaued, the same is done, the whole people, and each one of them withall, perceiuing it, & consenting to it: the authoritie of Gods word is ratified, the reformation of manners in the Church established, and the puritie of doctrine is conserued. Which when it is done, the Church, and euerie one of the Church, receaueth the fruite that they ought to receaue, out of that power of the keyes that is graunted to the Church. By this reason therefore, these things, the Supper of the Lord and Baptisme, and the power of the keyes, are of God giuen to the whole Church: the administration whereof notwithstanding appertaineth not vnto euerie one, but vnto them onelie, that are lawfullie called in the Church to doo these things.

Thus haue we seene at large the iudgements and reasons, pro & contra, of all these excellent men, for these Elders, and for their authoritie in this ecclesiasticall Censure. Let vs now returne vnto the learned Discourse of our Brethren.

Therefore in euerie Church there ought to bee a Consistorie of Elders, or Gouernors, which with the Pastor may take charge of ecclesiasticall discipline, and good order to be obserued in the Church, to the punishment of vice, and the aduancement of true vertue. These, if they gouerne wel, as Saint Paule doth testifie, are worthie of double honor, both that honour that is due to godlie men, and that which is due to good Gouernors.

The premisses that our Brethren haue sette downe, inferre no such conclu-conclusion. Yea, had the wordes of Christe alluded (as our Brethren would threape kinnesse on vs that they doo) to the olde Sanedrin of the Jewes: yet could they not presse this conclusion so farre, by anie proportion, that there ought to be a Consistorie of Elders, or Gouvernors in euerie Church.

For the Jewes had not such a Sanedrin in euerie Synagogue, nor yet in euerie Tribe, but one throughout the whole Realme for all. Neither yet had they in euerie Synagogue such Senates nor Assemblies, as are here by our Brethren mentioned, Luc. 22. & Act. 20. although they were nothing comparable to that Consistorie of the 70. Elders, appointed by the Lord, Numb. 11.

But whie doo our Brethren here say, that this Consistorie maye take charge of Ecclesiasticall Discipline? For if they ought to be such, they ought to doo it. But sith they onelie conclude, that they maye doo it: whie conclude they not also, that there may bee such a Consistorie of them, and there may not bee? As for some to take the charge of Ecclesiasticall discipline, it is verie necessarie, and it ought indeede so to bee.

But our question is, what is meant by ecclesiasticall discipline, and what manner of Elders they ought to be, that ought to take the charge thereof. As for good order to be obserued in the Church, to the punishment of vice, and the aduancement of true vertue: this we graunt must of dutie be done. But as our Brethren conclude, it may be done by this Consistorie in euerie Church: so I conclude, it may then be done by other.

Yea, if we shall examine the state of euerie Church, or Parish better, howe it may be done by such a Consistorie in euerie parish Church: neither I, nor I thinke our Brethren can denie it, without the alteration of the whole State, and of the Princes supream Government, and of all the Magistrates authorities whatsoever throughout the whole Realme. And therefore I would thus rather conclude, it may better be done (all thinges considered) by anie other meanes, than by erecting Consistories in euerie Church, of these governing but not teaching Elders, or Gouvernours.

Whether Saint Paule meant of anie such Gouvernours, we haue already heard howe it is in question. Neither can those our Brethren that so thinke, and fauour that Interpretation most, inforce a necessity of such governing Elders, that altogether were not Teachers.

of S. Paule, 1. Tim. 5. concludeth thus: Erant ergo alij quidam, &c. There were certaine other therefore in the ecclesiasticall office, who although they did not teach continuallie, as did the Bishops, notwithstanding in all their businesses, they were present with those that did teach, so that, he excludeth them not from teaching, but from continuall teaching.

And as for the double honor that S. Paule speaketh of, I take it not as our Brethren doe, to be of 2. kindes of honor in these 2. respects: the one, that which is due to godlie men; the other, that which is due to good Governours. True it is, there is an ordinarie distinction betwene bonus vir, & bonus ciuis, a good man and a good citizen: but not so aptlie, betwene bonus vir, & bonus Magistratus: a good, or godly man, and a good Magistrate or Governour. But the relation is rather, bonus subditiu, & bonus Magistratus: a good Subject, and a good Governour. Wherbeit I thinke (as I haue shewed before) S. Paule meant simplie, that he which toke greater paines in the word, which he calleth, laboring in the word, was worthie double; that is, the greater honor.

How necessarie it is that Discipline should be in the Church, to keepe men in awe from offending, and to bring offenders to repentance, to auoide the infection of sinne, within the Church, and the reproch that groweth by neglecting the punishment of sinne, among them that are without the Church: we thinke needlesse to stande long in proouing, the matter it selfe is so apparant, and hath such plentifull testimonies in the Scripture.

Wherein I am of our Brethrens opinion: onelie wishing this plaine dealing in them, that speaking of the necessitie, vse, and end of discipline, they had set downe some definition or description thereof, that we might certainlie haue knownen, what they ment thereby. And especiallie, let the reasons of S. Paule 1. Cor. 5. & 2. Cor. 2. where he purposelie entreateth of eccl. discipline, be weighed. A little leauen soweth a whole lump of dowe. For infection: Ye are puffed vp, where ye should be sad & ashamed. For ignominie: We deliuer him to Satan, to the destruction of his flesh, that his spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord. The 3. rea-words.

It should seeme by the collections of these reasons, which they would haue to be weighed, that our Brethren here by the name of discipline, meane most especiallie, the order about excommunication. Which though we haue more than once already both said and weighed sufficientlie: yet let vs once more weigh again with them, the reasons that in these places S. Paul allegeth. It is no doubt, but S. Paule had manie & weightie reasons, mouing him to excom. that incestuous person among the Corinth, and to haue them obey his sentence of that offenders excommunication. And if we should weigh his reasons on this fashion, as our Brethren would haue vs: we might weigh manie more, which there also be vseth, and in better order (as I suppose) than our Brethren verie slightlie and pzeposterouslie (setting aside their learned Discourse) do weigh them. For, the reason that our Brethren make, for ignominie, (as they tearme it) is both set by S. Paule before that, which they tearme, for infection: neither are the words in that sort set downe by S. Paule: if we must needs go to weighing of them.

S. Paule entring into this matter, first beginneth with those reasons that might lay before them, the heinousnesse of the fact, and horroz of the sinne, saying; There is also together heard of among you fornication, and such fornication, as is not among the Gentiles named, insomuch, that it is for one to haue the wife of his father. Which words being weighed, conteine manie weightie reasons. From the nature of the sinne, that it is, fornication. From the publike shame thereof; that it is also together heard of: that is to say, a great & constant shame, and not a muttering rumoz, of an unknowen, or but suspected fact. From the persons, among whom this fact was done, & the same binulged; among you, that are the Church of God, and are called Saintes in Christ. From the degree and greatnes of this fornication; that it was such, and is not so much, as named or allowed among the verie Heathen. From exaggerating the crime, & mouing them to abhorre the same, by specification and laying forth of the fact, the manner and circumstances of it; insomuch, that one should haue his fathers wife, &c. And then cometh in that, which our Brethren would haue vs to weigh, for their second reason, saying: Ye are puffed vp, wh-re ye should be sad & ashamed. Although by weighing these words better, we find them to be other thā are the Apostles words, which are these; And ye are puffed vp, & haue not rather had mourning, that he which hath done this worke, might be remooued from among you: perswading them to the detestation of this fact, not onelie with the reason of ignominie; but with the consideration of their owne grievous sinne also, in being puffed vp, either boasting in sinne, as doo the wicked: or in foolish confidence, thinking themselues safe, and not considering the horrible sinne unpunished, but rather mainteined amongst them. And also from the nature or concomitances of true repentance, reproouing them that they mour-weighed 1. ned not, for such a sinne committed in their Church.

Cor. 5.

Now, when Saint Paule had used all these reasons, which likewise in-ferre manie other: then he sheweth, what he himselfe had done in this matter. I verelie beeing absent in bodie, but present in spirite, haue already, as present, adiudged (or coudemned) him that thus hath done.

S. Paule as-cribeth the action of ex-
com. to him
selfe.

And here now, since our Brethren will needs haue vs fall a weighing the reasons of Saint Paule: let vs weigh also his wordes, and reasons of his doing. in the chastizing of this offender. First, that he saith, he himselfe, and none of their Church with him, nor of anie other that we reade of, take vpon him the remedie and co'recting of this matter.
And he uttereth this word Ego, I. verie emphaticallie, as with great and singular authoritie.

How farre
S. Paule w^{er} alone without them in this excom,

Secondlie, how farre did he thus alone procede herein? To the onely considering, m^{is}liking, and mourning for it, or reprehending of this vice or vicious person? Nay, he goeth further, euen to the verie pitche and pithe of the matter. for he saith, that he iudged or condemned him.
And the word importeth, as solemne a Iudiciall sentence pronounced against him, as was requisite in so weightie a matter. Neither saith he, that he woulde stay from this Iudiciall sentence, till they had assembled themselves together, and examined the matter, and found him guiltie, and then giuen their consent or license to the Apostle, to procede to iudge-ment against him: no, saith S. Paule, I, euen I haue of my selfe done it already, yea, both without your leaue, consent, or witting of my doing: and also beeing absent both from you too, for anie bodilie presence, and yet shall my Iudiciall sentence, bee as effectuell, as if I my selfe, hadde bene present with you, or, as if the offender hadde bene present here before me.

Howe farre forth Saint Paule chargeth the Corinth. to proceed after his doings.

Howbeit, because it stode them vpon, to take notice both of this mans offence, and of their owne fault, and also of Saint Pauls doing: to obey this Censure of the Apostle, to amende their default, and to execute the punishment that Saint Paule had indicated vpon this sinner, Saint Paule proceedeth further, telling them what now he woulde haue them to doe herein, and saith vnto them: In the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, you bee-ing gathered together, and my spirite, with the power of the Lord Iesus, re deli-uer that manner of man vnto Sathan, to the destruction of the flesh, that the spi-rite may be safe, in the day of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Our Br. 3.
reason.

These wordes our Brethren make the thirde reason, which they call (as I take it) for repentance. I say, I take it, because, if we would follow the Writers pointing of the reasons that they alledge, it should in-deede haue (as they say) neither rime nor reason. But ascribing that vnto the Writer, not to our Brethren: yet, their altering againe of the Apostles.

Apostles wordes, is not the Writers, but their owne fault. Not onely to say, In the day of the Lord: whereas the wordes are, In the day of our Lord Iesus Christe: which though it be not to the matter now in question, yet, to say, we deliuer him to Sathan, as though they toynd with the Apostle, in pronouncing the sentence of the excommunication, that is here no light fault in our Bishops, and materiall to the present purpose, if we should exactly weigh the same. Albeit, in some respect of the execution, I allowe these wordes, we deliuer him to Sathan: because, though Paule himselfe had alone pronounced the sentence without them; neuertheless, the same was executed by them, assembled in the name of our Lord Iesus Christe, as he commaunded them, and with the power of the Lord Iesus, his spirit was present with them at the dooing.

Now when St. Paule had thus prescribed vnto them what they should doo, then he goeth againe vnto his reasons, and for that they had not dealt anie thing at all against this offender, but rather boasted, either of his fact, or of their securitie: St. Paule reproveth them, saying; Your boasting is not good. And here at length, he commeth in with that, which our Bishops make the first reason, for infection: A little leaven soweth a whole lump of dough. Although the Apostle also, uttereth the same in an other manner, than here our Bishops doo, to wit, by way of question: Know ye not, that a little leaven soweth the whole lump? And so he proceedeth to a number of other reasons: saying, Purge therefore the olde leaven, that ye may be a newe sprinkling, as ye are unleavened. For Christe our Paschall Lambe, is offered &c.

Thus, if we should fall to weighing the Apostles wordes, and reasons; we should finde, that our Bishops which will them to bee weighed, did not their selues weigh the payse of them so deliberatlie, either as they might, or as they ought to haue done. For then shoulde they haue found, that the onlie Censure of the Apostle, would haue weighed downe all their light reasons, which they conceale, of a Consistorie among the Corinthians of ruling and not teaching Seniors, that were toynd with St. Paule in the authoritie of examining & excommunicating this offender. Which Seniors had so little anie especiall authoritie in this matter, or in anie other, among so manie matters mencioned in that whole Epistle, or in the other Epistle, written to these Corinthians: that in weighing withall, to whom these wordes, & both the whole Epistles were written: it is inough to proue (for anie expresse word we can finde in them, or anie necessarie argument we can gather on them) that the discipline of excommunication which St. Paul vsed, or willed the Corinthians to vse, may be vsed well inough in our Churches, without anie such Consistorie of Seniors, to be toynd in authoritie with the Pastors.

As for which our Bishops, that, publike reprehension of many, which excomm. being godlie refuse to eate with such a one, is profitable both to drive him selfe to repentance, and to keepe other in order, for feare of like punishment.

Publike re-prehension may bee without this Cōsist.

I grant this is true. But, that S. Paule ment those manie, to be the Elders of a Consistorie, and withall, such Elders, as were ecclesiasticall governors and reprehenders, but not teachers: and that this publike re-prehension of manie, if it were not of the whole Church, might well ynough be made by the publike Minister, befoze them al, or in their name, and so be a publike reprehension of manie, to drive him to repentance, and terrifie other: and that refusing to eate with such an one, might not, yea, ought not, to be of all and euerie one, but of such a manie, meaning such a Consistorie of Elders, that I vtterlie denie.

And therefore, that which followeth: Where this discipline is not, no maruell if all wickednesse ouerflowe, to the dishonor of God, and of his Gospel, to the destruction of manie and corruption of more, to the grieve of the godlie, offence of the weake, incouragement of the wicked, and reioycing of the aduersarie,

Our discipl.
of excomm. is neerer to S.
Paules, than is our Br.
discipline.

With the discipline of this Segniorie that our Bzethzen would bring in, is so clean different (as we haue seene) from the discipline that the Apostle vsed herein, among the Corinthians: we haue great cause to take good heede, least these daungers might happen to vs, not by the want, but rather by the admission, of this their gouerning and not teaching Seniors discipline. And if we permit those, which in the Ministerie of the worde succeede the Apostles, when anie such notorious sinners, as this person was among the Corinthians, shall offend, to proceed against them, as S. Paule did against him, and the Minister to notifie his proceeding to the whole Church: and they with all obedience, to put in execution those sentences of excommunication, and to shunne such offenders company, and not to eate with them, but rather publikelie to reprehende them: this discipline is not to be misliked. And our order of excommunication, (if it be not accidentally abused by anie particular person or occasion) is in lawe, and effect, the verie same.

The manifold dangers by this Seniorie.

As for this deuise of a gouerning Segniorie of not teaching, but of dumbe Presbyters, Priestes, or Elders, to be raised vp in euerie Church or Parish, to haue the power and authoritie of this ecclesiasticall discipline, as it is nothing like the Apostles practise: so our Bzethzens vnnecessarie sturres for it, hath bredde manie troublesome euents: and it is to be feared, would soone bryde more and greater, to the manifest daunger both of her Maiesties Soueraignitie, and so. of her sacred person: to the altering and innouating of the whole State, to the disquieting of the orders established in all the Realme, and in euerie Church: and then what followeth, but as our Bz. here conclude? To the dishonor of God,
and

and of his Gospell, to the destruction of many, and corrupting of more, to the greefe of the godly, offence of the weake, incouragement of the wicked, and reioysing of the aduersary: and therefore (in my opinion)

this Seniors were a great deale better suppressed, then created. Now upon these promises our brethren thus conclude: Let vs therefore proceede, in setting forth the authority of the Pastor with the Elders, which is, first to punish offenders, and bring them to repentance, or else to cut them cleane from the Church, as rotten and infected members.

This conclusion, inferring the authority of the Pastor with the Elders aforesaid (these Elders being not yet sufficiently proued, to haue any such authority, or to be any such Elders at all) is a weake conclusion: the Bishop or Pastor may do all this well ynough without them, except our brethren shall haue better proues to inferre them, then as yet we haue heard any. But now, as though they had already clearly proued these Seniors, and their authoritie, they procede from their persons, and from this their authority, to the offences wherefores this authority should be put in practise.

But heere (say they) we haue to enquire, for what offences the Church may proceede to so sharp a punishment: for God forbid, that the sword of excommunication should be drawne out, to cut off the members of our body for every small disease that is in them, but onely where the disease is deadly, and the members rotten thereby: for we ought as hardly to be brought to excommunicate any of our brethren, as we would haue a legge or an arme cut off from our bodie.

God forbid (as our brethren say very well therein) we should proceede to so sharp a punishment, that the spirituall sword of excommunication should be drawne out, to cut off the members of our mysticall body in Christ, for every small disease that is in them. Yea rather, now and then in some principall members of the naturall body, though the disease be deadly, and the members rotted thereby, yet to cut them straight way off, were to hasten the present destruction of all the body.

We graunt therefore, that we ought to be brought very hardly to excommunicate any of our brethren, especially such principall parts among them, as may endanger their whole estate. Notwithstanding, this resemblance herein, of cutting off a legge or arme from the mysticall bodie, and from the naturall, is very different, euen from the principall point of that excommunication, that we speake of, and that is in vse among vs.

For if we cut off a legge or arme from the naturall body, it is done, both for vtter despair that it can neuer be healed, and we are assured, that being cut off, it can by no naturall or artificiall meanes, except miraculous, be euer againe ioyned to the body, but is vtterly without all life, and so euer in this world destroyed, till the resurrection of the body in the life to come. come. But it is not so in enery Excommunication, except onely in the highest and extreamest degre, called Anathematization, which is sel- dome, or not at all in vse amongst vs. Whereas, in the ordinarie Excom- munication, it is not an absolute spiritual cutting off the mysticall mem- ber: but such a conditionall cutting off, onely from these, and those re- spects: that it is done not only with hope, but also euen to the end and pur- pose of amendment, and of restoring. Although therefore the separation be of more importance and daunger, in respect of the more excellent obiect, and subiect matter: notwithstanding so; the foresaid respects of hope and purpose, it can be hardly iustified, that we ought as hardly to be brought to Excommunicate any of our Brethren, as we would haue a leg, or an arme cut off from our body. But herein we yeld vnto our Brethren, that though this spirituall cutting off may easilier be done, then the natu- rall, in the foresaid respects: notwithstanding we ought most hardly to be drawne vnto it, and in some principall persons (all things duly pon- dered) not to cut them off at all. Whereupon, our Brethren conclude fur- ther: Therefore the Popish tyrannie is detestable, which thundreth out their pretended Excommunication for euery trifle, yea such as are no sinnes, as non payment of a little money, where it is not deteyned of fraude: non apparance, where men otherwise haue necessary impedi- ments, as though it were but a small matter to put men out of the protection of Christ, and to deliuer them to the tyrannie of Sathan, and to deprive them of eternall saluation, and to cast them into euer- lasting damnation.

*The Popish

We detest the Popish detestable tyrannie, and errors in their Ex- communications, so well as do the most zealous of our brethren. Howbe- it, it is meete our zeale herein be tempered with discretion. I graunt there were great abuses among them, in abusing so great a censure in so trifling matters: notwithstanding their detestable tyrannie in Excom- munication, is not so much so; proceeding so farre in their light causes, as so; their erring in the most weighty, and so; Excommunicating the true professors of the Gospell (as the Pharisees did Christ and his A- postles) while they themselves mainteine most grosse errors, and playne heresies, besides most horrible, and notozious vices, and so are altogether vnfit to Excommunicate any at all, but rather to be themselves Excom- municated: and not so much as knowing what this power is, and how farre sworth man is the minister thereof, they not only presume to Excom- municate those that offend not, but whole Realmes, and all Princes, ouer whome they haue no charge nor iurisdiction. But the best is, that we haue no cause to feare the thundering of their Excommunications, but rather to reioyce the more, feeling how gratioously (blessed be he therfore) the Lord turneth still their curtings into blessings, saue that we pittie (so farre as standeth) standeth with Gods will) this their mad spite, and furious blindnesse against the Gospell of Christ, and the true professors of it. Least therefore (say they) we should vse such vnreasonable rigor, the spirit of God teacheth vs, what manner of finnes deserue Excommunication. 1. Cor. 5.

11. If any that is called a brother, be an whoremonger, or a couetous person, or an Idilator, or a sclanderer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one see that yee eate nor. These offences therefore and such like, are to be punished by Excommunication. And also an obstinate Heretike, that will not repent by admonition, is worthy of this punishment. Tit. 3. 10. 2. Tim. 2. 16. 1. Tim. 1. 20. 2. John 10, and 11.

Whether Saint Pauls words must needs in that place be understood also for Excommunication, (though diuers do so take them) might be called in question, sith men might shunne such an offenders conuersation, and not eate with him, although the person were not yet so proceeded against, as by the censure of Excommunication, to make him vnderstand, how much they abhorred his wickednesse, as we haue seene in Brentius, Bucer, and other Protestants iudgements. But if these be the vices that our Brethren will alwayes haue to be prosecuted by Excommunication, how many shall runne in daunger of these Seniors censure, especially vnder the generall name of conetousnesse: notwithstanding these sinners, (namely, obstinate Hereticks) that will not repent by admonition, we graunt, are well worthy of this punishment; though the Apostle also name it not, in that place to Titus. As for S. Pauls testimony 2. Tim. 2. 16. where he saith to Timothy, but prophane voyces of vanity passe ouer them, is neither spoken, nor meant of Excommunication. The next place here cited, 1. Tim. 1. 20. is apparantly inough spoken of Excommunication, of whome, is Hymeneus and Alexander, whome I haue deliuered vnto Sathan, that they may learne not to blaspheme. But here is no Seniors mentioned, but only Saint Pauls owne acte, without the authority of any Consistory toynd with him. And as concerning the 3. Epistle of John, verse 10. and 11. If there come any vnto you, and bring not this learning, him receiue not to house, neyther bid him godspeede, for he that biddeth him godspeede, is partaker of his ill deedes. Whether both yet this sentence inferre any necessitie of Excommunication: for although all those persons be Excommunicable, and they finnes deserue Excommunication, and they may be sayde also, to be desoyse God, or ipso facto, Excommunicated, yet are they not so accompted to the Church, till the sentence be published against them. Howbeit, I will not stand with our Brethren vpon this point.

tumacy and contempt of the Churches admonition, become worthy of the same castigation. Therefore saith our Saniour Christ of priuate offences, Math. 18. 15. 16. &c. If thy brother sinne against thee, goe and reprove him betweene thee and him alone: if he heere thee, thou hast won thy brother, but if he heere thee not, take with thee one or two, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, euery word may stand: if he disobey them, then tell the Church: if he disobey the Church, then let him be to thee as an heathen or publicane. The Apostle S. Paule likewise 2. Thess. 3. 6. &c. concerning those that were idle, and walked disorderly, will haue all gentle meanes vsed to bring them to labour and good order, but if they would not be reformed for any admonition, he commaundeth them to be separated by excommunication.

Where our brethren themselves come downe to lesser crimes, yea even to the priuate offences betweene brother and brother. Where they not afraid, least they should returne their owne words on their owne selues, that it were popish and detestable tyrannie, to arise to so high a censure, for so meane offences: as though it were but a small matter, to put men out of the protection of Christ, and to deliuer them vnto the tyrannie of Satan: to deprive them of eternall saluation, and to cast them into euerlasting condemnation? Did they not feare that this also might be accounted vnreasonable rigor? no (say they) because these lesser crimes are encreased with contumacie and contempt of the Churches admonition, and therefore become worthy of the same castigation: and may contumacie then and contempt so increase the crime? And were not our brethren here againe afraine of iumping with the Papists: for what other thing do the verie Papists alleadge, for the most part of their excommunications, more then contumacie and contempt? Yea, but (say our brethren) this contumacie, and contempt is of the Churches admonition. In deede, so sayth Christ in the place here cited, Math. 18. 17. If he heere not the Church. But can our brethren here vnderstand by the name of Church, some few persons, chosen by the Church, and may not the Papists do so to: haue not they also their Consistories, and that, many of them, of no persons then one? yea, if the Church chose one man, (as for example, their Bishop or Pastor,) before whome those matters should be heard, debated & decided, doth not the contumacy, and contempt against that one man, encrease the sinne, as well as the contumacie and contempt against any other persons, that the Church may chose to this purpose. I speake not in defence of the Popish excommunications, not acknowledging them (as they stand now in open resisting of the truth reuealed) to be the true Church: so that they being now neither of, (nor properly in) the true Church, can not rightly expell others out of the true Church, in, and of which their selues haue no part, for all their clanking of the the bare name, and therefore their Excommunications are of no force. But if in deede they were (as would God, if it pleased him they were) of, and in the true Church, (as by the grace of God, his name be blessed for it, we are) and in lesser crimes the contempt, and contumacie of the Churches admonition, given by a few persons chosen by the Church thereunto, be worthy excommunication: then, where the Church hath chosen but one, that is to wit, a Bishop, to execute her authority in those matters: the contumacy and contempt against his iust and lawfull admonitions, is not so much against that one man, as against the Churches, and so, is worthy of the same castigation.

This testimonie here rehearsed Matth. 18. 15. 16. 17. I trust we haue already sufficiently shewed, how it maketh nothing at all for any such Seniors as our brethren before alleaged it for, and much lesse for any they: authority of excommunicating, nor prescribeth any certaine order, in what manner, or by what persons anie Excommunication should be made, against the offenders, which there it speaketh of, as we haue heard thereon the diuers iudgements, not only of the aunient Fathers, but of our best brethren.

As for the 2. Thess. 3. 6. &c. the Apostle hath these words: We commaund you brethren in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, that ye withdraw your selues from euery brother that walketh inordinately, and not after the institution that he receyued of vs: And in the 11. verse. For we heare that there are some among you walking inordinately, working not at all, but be busie bodies. But so such we denounce, and beseech in our Lord Iesus Christ, that laboring with silence, they eat their bread. And in the 14. verse, But if any obey not our word, note him by an Epistle, and haue no companie with him, that he may be ashamed. What kind of persons he lieth here to note, and what fault he findeth in them, I ouerpasse. True it is, he would haue them first induced by all gentle meanes, but if thereby they will not be reformed, he yet commaundeth them not here to be seperated by Excommunication, though they haue well deserued it. Neither yet in this solemne denouncing, doth he Excommunicate any, but would haue them write vnto him of such inordinate persons, insinuating that he himselfe would Excommunicate them, as he had done with the incestuous person at Corinthus, and with Hymeneus Alexander and Philetus. But now our brethren foresaying, that this is nothing to the fortifying of their Seniory, they returne to that point to answer the obiections made against it.

But it may be objected (say they) that hitherto appeareth not so great vse of this Consistory, why it should be thought necessary for Excommunication: neither doth S. Paule make mention of it in all places, where he speaketh of Excommunication.

In good time be it spoken, not onely it may be objected, but it is objected, obiected, that hitherto appeereth not so great vse of this Consistorie, why it should be thought necessarie for Excommunication, or for any thing else: hauing bene so little, or not in vse at all, for any necessary p^{ro}ofe, or vse thereof, and the Church of Christ, hauing continued some nie hundred yeres vtterly without it. As for all these examples of Excommunicating the incestuous person, Hymeneus, Philetus, Alexander, &c. or any other testimonie of Saint Paule here mentioned. What is here eyther necessarie, or likely that may be referred to a Consistorie? Neyther will we so much object this, that Saint Paule maketh no mention of it, in all places where he speaketh of Excommunication, but that he maketh no mention of it in any place where he speaketh of Excommunication. And heere let vs marke our Brethrens confession, for if this may be objected that hitherto appeareth not so great vse of this Consistory, that it should be thought necessary for Excom. then all that hitherto is alleaged, may be thought vnnecessary to inferre this, and this appearing, that it may be so thought, of all that hitherto hath been alleaged: let our Brethren take better to that, that is so coue, to alleage such p^{ro}oues, as whereby it should be thought more necessary. But to these obiections, say our brethren, we aunswere, that although the simple institution of Christ, and approbation of the holy Ghost, should suffice vs to thinke it necessary: yet there are many necessary vses thereof to be alleaged.

Our Brethrens answer to our obiection.

And to this aunswere we reply: if this place can be shewed and p^{ro}oued so to be, where this simple institution of Christ, and approbation of the holy Ghost was made. (speaking of the state of the new testament, and since the time of Christes incarnation) it shall suffice vs forthwith, simply to thinke it necessary. But if this be rather supposed and threaped vpon vs, then shewed and p^{ro}oued vnto vs, our Brethren haue to pardon vs, if we thinke it not so necessary, or rather to aske pardon of God, that dare thus without plaine, and manifest p^{ro}ofe, pretend the simple institution of Christ, and the holy Ghostes approbation of it. But to our further satisfaction, to p^{ro}oue this, they tell vs, that there are many necessarie vses thereof to be alleaged: let vs therefore heare also these so many, and so necessary vses.

For whereas our Saujour Christ (say they) commaundeth in private offences, the matter to be brought before the congregation, except you vnderstand thereby, the congregation or assemblie of Elders, there shall follow horrible discord and confusion thereby. For admit a man might accuse his brother vnto the whole multitude, yet how should the whole multitude admonish him, and exhort hym to repentance?

Our

Our Brethren here take upon them, to proue many necessary vses of this Consistory, besides Christes simple institution thereof: and do they now for these vses, begin with that, which they make his simple institution? and what haue they alleaged for Christes institution, simple or compound, but onely that saying of Christ, Math. 18. 17. tell the Church? which though it be but a simple argument of theirs, to proue any institution at all of this Consistorie: yet what dealing shall we call this, simple or double? to tell vs, they will shew the vses of it, besides the institution: and when they come to shew them, they alleage that which they pretended before, to be the very institution. But now comming to these words of Christ, what reason inforceth, that we must vnderstand by the Church or Congregation, the Congregation or assemblie of Elders in the Church? both any horrible confusion and disorder, or any other inconuenience follow, by vnderstanding here the Church or Congregation, in the playne and simple sense thereof? Our Brethren do admit, that a man might accuse his brother vnto the whole multitude. Yea, there is no neede to put the case thereon, and say, admit a man might do it: for why may he not do it well enough? and in admitting this, they admit withall, that these words, Tell the Church, may be well vnderstood of the whole multitude, without any disorder or confusion, for one may speake to a whole multitude, and every one may well vnderstand him.

But say our Brethren yet, (where Christ goeth further: If hee will not heare the Church) how should the whole multitude admonish him, and exhort him to repentance? verie well (say I) without any necessitie of this Consistory. For both their Pastor can do it in their name, or any publike Officer, or the Church may do it, without any horrible confusion or disorder, at severall times, and by severall persons, eyther all, or the most of them, or by some one person appointed thereunto, which may well be called the Churches admonition, although they haue no such Consistorie of Elders among them.

Agayne, of these notorious offences that are worthie of Excommunication, some are openly knowne, so that they neede no trial, as the adulterie of that Corinthian. 1. Corinth. 5. some are in controuersie, and are to be examined, concerning which, Saint Paule warneth Timothy, that he admit not any accusation against an Elder, but vnder two or three witnesses, and chargeth him before God, and the Lord Iesus Christ, and his elect Angels, that he do nothing through rash, or over-hastie indgement, and that he do all things without partiality, or affectio vnto parties. 1. We see heere manifestly, a necessary vse of the Elderſhip: for how is it poſſible for the whole Church, to examine and diſcuſſe ſuch difficult controuerſies? therefore it behoueth the Church to haue ſuch ordinarie delegates, as may and ought to apply their diligence vnto ſuch matters.

Bridges.

This diuiſion of offences both againe both implic a contradiction to it ſelfe, in ſaying: of theſe notorious offences that are worthy of excommunication, ſome are openly knowne, ſo that they neede no tryall; ſome are in controuerſie, and are to be examined: for if they be not openly knowne, how are they notorious? if they be notorious, how be they not openly knowne? And alſo this diuiſion both cleane overthrowe the neceſſitie of our brethrens Conſiſtorie. For where they ſay, ſome are openly knowne, ſo that they neede no tryall, as the adulterie of the Corinthian, 1. Cor. 5. it ſolloweth, that theſe notorious offences are out of the examining and diſcuſſing of ſuch difficult controuerſies, ſo that the Church hath no neede of ſuch Delegates, to apply their diligence to ſuch matters. And if the ſaying of Chriſt, Matth. 18. be not of ſuch open offences, till they be opened by complaint, then are not Chriſts words to be vnto ſuch matters; but are rather to be referred vnto thoſe ſome, that they ſay are in controuerſie, and to be examined: concerning which, S. Paule warneth Timothy, that he admit not an accusation againſt an Elder, &c. and that he do nothing through raſh, or ouerhaſtie iudgment; and that he do all things without partialitie, &c. but in all theſe warnings, Saint Paule adioyneth no Conſiſtorie of governing Elders vnto Timothy in the admitting and iudging of theſe things, but giueth him, as this great charge, ſo the doing, and accompliſhment of the ſame.

Our Brethrens euill diuiſion of offences.

No neceſſary vse of this Seniors.

Therefore, we ſee heere manifestly, (quite contrarie to that which our brethren conclude thereon) no neceſſarie vse of the Elderſhip, or that, it behoueth the Church to haue any ſuch ordinarie Delegates, as may, and ought to apply their diligence vnto ſuch matters, when the Biſhop or Paſtor (as here Timothy was) is willed to do, and (no doubt, ſin, as he was willed) may examine, and diſcuſſe ſuch difficult controuerſies, and may, and ought to applye his diligence vnto ſuch matters. Having thus answered to the former part of this obiection, that there is not so great vse of this consistorie, why it shoulde bee thought necessary to Excommunication: they now proceed to the second part of the obiection: which they propounded, that S. Paule doth make no mention of the Eldership or Consistory of Elders in all places, where he speaketh of Excommunication: they answere, that it is not necessary hee shoulde so do. And their reason is this. For whereas our sauour Christe hath prescribed a forme thereof, that hee which obeyeth not shoulde be Excommunicated, and that in other places, hee maketh sufficient mention, both of the Elders and of the assemblie, wee ought to vnderstand that his purpose is to obserue that forme to the vttermoste.

The answer to the second part of the obiection.

Whereunto I reply, first that this part of the obiection, is of their owne framing, and therefore, they may aunswere it, as they please. Then about it thus, that Saint Paule doth not make mention of this Eldership or Consistory of Elders, in any place where hee speaketh of Excommunication: therefore, (by any thing that we can gather out of Saint Paul) it is not necessarie, that they shoulde haue authority with the Pastor to Excommunicate. If they now can shewe it (not in all places) but in any one place, which is a greates deale the larger offer of vs vnto them: they shoulde easilier overthrow our obiection. Which since they can not do:

It is the greater overthrow of their assertion: But now to take the obiection as they object it, not for any, but for all places: why might it not bee well sayde, that if in all places, where Saint Paule speaketh of Excommunication, hee not onely maketh no mention of this Eldershippe or Consistory of Elders, but also maketh such mention of the Bishoppe or Pastor, that it may bee fully doone by him: Doth it

But they adde a reason, why It is not necessarie, that S. Paule shoulde in all places make mention of this consistory of Elders. For (say they) whereas our Sauour Christe hath prescribed a forme thereof, that he which obeyeth not the Congregation shoulde bee Excommunicated: What is this to authorize this consistory of Elders? But they will harp on their former broken string, of the allusion of Christes wordes, that by the Congregation, is not meant simply the Congregation: but the Congregation of the Eldership, or Consistory of Elders in the Congregation. But sith not onely no necessity (as wee haue seene) toucheth these plaine wordes of our Sauour Christe, Tell the Church or Congregation, to this allusion: Yea, we haue seene how hardly they can be wrounthereto, sith the wordes Congregation and Senate, are (as membra diui- dentia) wordes deuided, and opposite the one to the other: both shall, Christ neither setteth downe any forme at all of Excommunication, eyther who shoulde be the doer, or in what order it shoulde be done: what necessarie argument can our B. gather hereupon: that Saint Pauls wordes where he mentioneth Excommunication, ought alwaies to be vnder-standed, that his purpose was to obserue that forme to the vttermoste, that our Sauour Christe prescribed? And yet good reason, that no wordes of S. Paule shoulde be vnderstaded, to breake any forme that Christ prescribed. But if those wordes of Christe, prescribe no forme, and wordes of other matters than S. Pauls wordes now and then bee, who's bee maketh mention of Excommunication: how shall we vnderstand Christes wordes, except we would twist them and mis-understand his wordes of purpose? As so) S. Paul, wee graunt, hee maketh mention both of Elders, and of the assembly of Elders in other places: but what is this, either to this present purpose of Excommunication: or of such Elders, or such assembly or Consistory of Elders, Gouverning and not meddling with the word, and yet meddling with Excommunication in abolition, one of the cheefest parts of the worde? Cannot S. Paule speake of Elders, any of assemblies in any place, but it must needs be vnderstood by such Elders, and such Consistories of them? Yea, can he not speake of Excommunication in any place, but because he speaketh of Elders, and assemblies in other places, that therfore we ought to vnderstand that his purpose was, that those Elders and assemblies doe alwaies Excommunicate? and that his purpose is to obserue that forme to the vttermost? For B. can proue that either Christ, or S. Paul, who had the spirit of Christe, set down any necessary forme and perpetuall rule thereof: then we graunt, what although he alwaies make no expresse mention thereof, yet must we not

Our Br. o-

wordes of S.
Pauls desire

In the first to the Corinthians the fift verse, it is manifest, that albeit, he desired nothing more, than that the incestuous adulterer should be Excommunicated, and therefore determined of him for his owne part, as absent in body but present in spirite: yet hee acknowledgeth that he coule not bee excommunicated, without the consent of the Congregation, being gathered together in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ. 1. Cor. 5. 4. Likewise when he shoulde be receiued again, hee was to bee pardoned, not onely by him, but by them also. 2. Cor. 1. 10.

Although I dare not say as our B^d. here (we thinke) ouer boldly do, that S. Paule desired nothing more, than that the incestuous adulterer shoulde be Excommunicated: For, howe he was thereof with anguish and teares, it appeareth, 2. Cor. 2. verse 4. and many other things there were, (which we may well thinke) hee desired much more, than the giuing of that incestuous adulterer vnto Sathan; which he was rather desirous to be, than that he had any great desire to do it: neuerthelesse, (to set aside the desire of S. Paule thereunto) how can our B^d. iustify this, which here they conclude: saying: and therefore determined of him for his owne part, as absent in body, but present in spirite: yet hee acknowledgeth that he coule not be Excommunicated, without the consent of the congregation, being gathered together in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ. 1. Cor. 5. 4.

Had not S. Paule pronounced the sentence of that iudgement on him before, verse. 3? and this hee had done so farre forth without their consent: that it was also done without their knowledge, being absent in body from them, though in spirite present with them, that is (as I take it) wishing him-selfe among them. And this his Iudgement, being absent, he accounted as auailable (for the effect of the matter) as if hee had bene present with them. The wordes are plaine: I verily absent in body, but present in spirite, haue already iudged him that thus hath done, euen as if I were present.

So that their pardoning of this man, and S. Pauls pardoning of him, were not concurrent in one respect, nor after one manner, nor of one matter in the pardon. They had not this Ministeriall office of bind-ding and loosing, nor the keyes of shutting and opening, in the person of Christ, which S. Paul had, to denounce in Christes name, the sinne to be forgiven him, and the man to be reconciled to Gods favour: this pardon, in the person of Christ, S. Paule gave, and not they. They forgave onely the scandale and offence towards them. And this is that S. Paule desired them to pardon him. For it lay in them to doe it, both to receive and comfort him, they being members of the body. Whereof hee was re-united to the head. And in this sense, I holde well with our Brethren saying, that when he should be received againe, he was to be pardoned not onely by him, but by them also. But what doe they now conclude hereon?

But why should we not thinke, that S. Paule did it by his owne authority? For as for these captious wordes, his private private authority, I reckon not on them; for he did it in the person of God and by his apostolicall and Ministeriall authority, which was publike and not private, notwithstanding proper to him selfe, and to such as were of the Apostleship, and ministers of the worde, as hee was. Doth S. Paule make mention any where else, of the Churches consent in these mens Excommunication, taking consent of the Church, (as our Brethren herein doe,) that he could not doe it at all, except they had consented, and given their suffrages before hande, that he should doe it? For otherwise, wee deny not, but that they consented. Howbeit, their consent came after the thing was done, or at the worst, it was not the authorising of his doing, but an allowing of it, because it was their duty so to do, seeing that hee abused not his authority, nor erred in the exercise of the same. had done, then might they iustlie haue disobeyed his doing. As they might also refuse the doctrine of him that preached any other Gospel. And yet, it followeth not thereupon, that in preaching the pure and sincere gospel, the Church had ioint authority with the Preacher, to preach the same.

But why would our Brethren haue us thus to thinke?

If so high an Apostle could not by his private authority excommunicate that Corinthian: We must not think, that by his private authority, but by consent of the Church of Ephesus, hee Excommunicated Hymenæus and Alexander, although he doe not make expresse mention of the consent of the Church in that place.

Our Br. conclusions on their owne assumptions.

Our Br. referring the other Excommunication to this, 1 Cor. 1 do yet more confute themselves.

This conclusion runneth vpon their former assumptions, that S. Paul could not by him selfe Excommunicate that Corinthian. Whereas that place mencioneth not at all, what he could do; he could not do in that matter, but onely what he did, and would haue them to do. And if the other place, 1. Tim. 2. 20. concerning the Excommunication of Hymenæus and Alexander, be to be measured by this place, 1. Cor. 4. Then as we haue seene, betwixt both he him selfe could, and did Excommunicate that Corinthian, both in their Churches absence, & they being not made part of his doing, till he had done it, and written to them thereof, willing them to solemnize and denounce the public execution of the same: which if they would not haue done, had no whit impaired the vertue of his censure, but aggravated an other offence in them. And therefore in measuring the Excommunication at Ephesus, by that at Corinthus: our expresse instance of S. Pauls Excommunicating by him selfe, in the absence of the congregation, and the congregations dutie of obedience afterwards, in approouing, obeying and consenting to the same, is a good instance, that neither the whole Congregation, nor any Seniors among them, had any necessary ioint authority with S. Paule in the inflicting of this censure.

The learned disc. pag. 98. 1. Tim. 2. 20

So likewise where hee speaketh to Timothie in the singular number, concerning the hearing and determining of matters pertaining to Discipline, we ought to acknowledge that hee teacheth in Timothies person the duty of Elders, and neuer ment to giue to Timothie, an absolute or singular authority, to bee Iudge in those matters, without consent of the Eldership, whereof hee maketh mention but a little before.

To conclude therefore, the Pastor with the aduice and consent of the Elders, hath authoritie to heare and examine matters, pertaining to Ecclesiasticall Discipline, and as the case requireth to Excommunicate offenders, and yppon their repentaunce and amendment, to receyue them agayne into the bosome of the Church, approoued by the word of God.

These testimonies likewise where Saint Paule speaketh to Timothie in the singular number, giue vnto Timothie, though no absolute, yet a singular authoritie, not singular (I graunt) as though hee should single out him-selfe to doe all thinges alone: but singular in preeminence aboue all, which preeminence was allonely in Ephesus, singular and proper vnto Timothie. And this hath Beza himselfe, when where he speaketh against the usurpation of the Popish Bishops & Pastors, confessed, saying, and we haue also heard before, on these wordes of the Apostle: against an Elder receiue no accusation, &c. Moreouer we must note, out of this place, Timothie in the Ephesine eldership to haue then bene the ~~word~~, that is, the Bishop, as Iustine calleth it, not that hee did all thinges as he list: but, which according to his godlinesse and prudence, moderated all thinges, that all thinges might be well done and in order in the assemblie.

Neither is this any hindrance hereunto, that St. Paule teacheth in Timothies person the duetie of Elders: but rather confuteth our ~~the~~ the same spilt, in saying, that Timothie had a prerogative as an Euangelist, and proueth that such Elders as Timothie was, (that is to say with Beza and Iustine, such Bishops) notwithstanding his prerogative of Euangelist, haue a like singular authoritie as Timothie had, concerning the hearing and determining of matters pertaining to Discipline.

And if (as heere they say) Saint Paule in Timothies person, taught the duetie of Elders: then should these Elders, whose duetie is heere taught in the person of Timothie, bee such as should bee answerable to the person of Timothie, and not such Governing Elders, as are no Teachers. And so saith Caluine on these wordes, 1. Timoth. 3, verse 2. I testify before the Lorde. &c.

This protestation was interposed of Paule, not onely as in a matter moste waightie, but also for the greate difficultie thereof. For there is nothing more harde, than to exercise Iudgementes with such equity, that neyther thou art moued at any time with fauour, nor giuest entry vnto suspition, nor art moued with tales, nor yet art ouerstraight in rigour, nor lookest on anie other thing in all causes, than the cause it selfe.

For from thence (shall spring) an equall right, when the cies are shut vnto the persons. But we must remember, that vnder the person of Timothie, all Pastors are admonished. So that this admonition comprehending the dignity, and the duetie of an ecclesiasticall Iudge, the same is here made vnto Timothy, and in his person, only vnto such governing Elders, as are Pastorall elders. In whome their teaching, though it be done publickly, is notwithstanding their singular authority; as Saint Paul also gave unto Timothy singular precepts thereof, and yet in Timothies person, he gave those precepts, to all Bishops and Pastors, whereas no other kinde of Elders, ordinarily nor the congregation, doe looke with the Bishops or Pastors in the authority of teaching, though in obedience and consent of hearing. And so in these matters, concerning the hearing and determining of Ecclesiasticall Discipline, and iudicial causes, he giueth Timothy, and (in Timothies person) other Bishops and such superior pastors as he was, the charge and authority of a righteous Judge. But the Judges authority is singular to the Judge, and not communicated with other, no, though they sit on the Bench with him as his assistants, but such onely as are of his function, Judges as hee is, and loyned in the same commission with him; therefore S. Paul giueth to Timothy, and (in his person) to Bishops, and such Pastors, a singular authority, in hearing and determining of such matters. Not singular (I graunt) as though none might heare them but hee alone, or that hee might aske no counsell or consent of any other: for such singularity were rather a debarre, than a graunt of authority, or were an insolent abuse thereof. Neither so doth any Iudge, if any assistants be on the bench with him. But the Iudge onely hath the cheefe authority, and that is, his singular authority, though not absolute.

How this authority was, & was not singular

As for the Eldership whereof Saint Paul maketh mention a little before: We haue heard also Caluines opinion thereon, that it may be as well vnderstoode in that place, for the office of the Eldership, as for any consistoyle or company of the Elders. And therefore vpon the vncertainty of that Word, they can builde little certaintie for their consistoyle Elders.

The conclusion which heere they make, depending all vpon the premisses, is no further to be graunted, than the premisses do inferre.

¶ 99.

In steede of which, Antichriste hath set vp a tyrannicall Iurisdiction of one Bishop to bee iudge of Excommunication, which is practized neither for causes sufficient, nor by sufficient authority, insomuch as it hath bene already testified by the Scripture, that the power of Excommunication is in no one man, no not in an Apostle, but is common to the whole Church, and ought to be executed by lawfull delegates of the Church also.

Bridges.

The tyrannicall Iurisdiction that Antichriste hath set vp, we no more acknowledge, than our Bethzen. But, that all Iurisdiction of one B. to be Iudge of Excommunication, which is practized for causes sufficient, not onely to want sufficient authority, but to be called tyrannical, and set vp by Antichriste: Is not truly spoken nor Christian-like. Except they will make S. Paul Antichriste. As for that which they haue already testified by the Scripture, doth manifestly confirme, that one man (as the Apostle, postle,

posse, and Timothy, and in his person, Bishops and pastors in like manner may execute the power of excommunication. For although this ecclesiasticall power be giuen to the Church, as likewise the ciuill power is giuen to the assemblies and congregations of men: yet is neither of them common to the whole Church (as our 15. 24. 1081 beere say) but is proper to those persons, in, or of the Church, and of the assemblies of men, which persons are of God or man lawfully called therunto. Neither are the persons that haue the practise and executing of the power of excommunication, to be so properly called the Churches delegates, as Gods delegates or Ministers in the same, and represent God therein, not the Church. But, admitting it be common to the whole church, and yet ought onely to be executed by lawfull delegates of the church: if that whole particular church, do make him that is their onely Lawfull Bishop, to be also their onely Lawfull delegate, in executing the power of Excommunication, and doe not delegate a number of more with him: then, by their own confession, some one man, and that the Bishop may alone execute the authority and power of excommunication.

How the power of Excommunication is giuen to the Church.

The Excommunicator is more properly Gods delegate than the Churches.

But so much that vsurped authoritie presumeth, that the Bishoppe as an absolute owner thereof, committeth it ouer to his Chauncellor or Archdeacon, and the Archdeacon to his Officiall, and he to his register, and hee agayne to his substitute, and his substitute to his seruants man or boy as it hapneth, in so much that a learned Prescher, may be excommunicated by a foolish boy. If this matter seeme not to require speedy reformation, God hath blinded our eyes, that wee can not see the cleare light of the Sonne shining in our faces.

The learned discourse. Pag 99.

These terms of vsurpation, presumption, and to be as an owner, and as an absolute owner of this authority: are speeches (considering the untrusth, and reprochfulness of them) little becoming learned preachers. And much lesse, the other, of committing this authority to Registers, and to substitutes, and to the Substitutes seruantes, man or boy. I verily beleue, that our 15. 24. 1081, (if they were well apposed) could not procure any such Excommunication to be made. Which in deede if it were done, is no Excommunication at all, if it be not rather their bare sarmeise. But perchance, at the fourth or fift hand, they heard of such a thing, and they by and by (for the good liking and opinion they haue of Bishops, their chauncellers, Archdeacons, and Officials, Charitas non est suspicax;) did beleue it. For the tale caried greates credit. Some boy tolde them, that some seruant tolde him, that some Substitute tolde him, that he had heard it tolde of some Register. But who the Register, Substitute, Seruant, man or boy was or is, that we must go looke, as the boy sayth to his dog, seeke out. It is prooue enough for our 15. 24. 1081, that some boy tolde told them, that he heard say so. And therefore, as a matter now out of all doubt, it must in all part to the presse, and be confirmed in print with this exclamation: In so much that a learned preacher may be excommunicated by a foolish boy,

If a foolish boy had written this, it had bene the more tollerable. But should such Learned Preachers, in the name of all the faythful Ministers, that haue and doe seeke for the reformation of the Church of England, in this their Learned Discourse of Ecclesiasticall Gouernment, thus solemnly alleage such boyish slanders? or if there should be corruption haue hapned any such like thing, should they thus heighnously burthen or chalenge the state and authority of the Bishops, for such an abuse, or obbe scape Colleen out: which our Bishops doe no lesse detest, than do our Brethren their selues, and would punish and reform, if they can name the parties, and proue the offence? but that (I thinke before hand) they can not do. Nay, there is no likelihood of any such matter. We suffer not either Officiall, or Archdeacon, or Chancellor, to excommunicate any, without a Minister of the word loyned with him, to denounce the sentence of Excommunication. And can then a Register, or the Registers substitute, and the Substitutes man, or the mans boy, Excommunicate (I will not say, Preacher, learned or vnlarned,) but any one man or women in all England?

I deny not, a boy may write the sentence and forme of words, and counterfeit, or clap to the right seals also of the office, and may pack with the summoner to carry it forth, and so there might happen by such ill dealing, a shewe and terror of Excommunication. But, as this is not any Excommunication indubitate (and therefore our Brethren say not truly, that the authority is thus committed from one to another, that a learned preacher may be excommunicated by a foolish boy) so when it should come to answering in the court, it would soone be found out, to be a meere false and (saining your reverence) knauish forgery. But if they may discredit lawfull authorities for such abuses: they may endanger the power and authority of all courtes and offices, when any false varlets practise such corruptions: and if there be any such abuses of this high power of excommunication: It is our brethrens dutie to make the offenders knowe, and not to impugne or discredit the authority, by picking such quarrels, or if such speeches may be thus freely cast forth abroad, on bare surmises, or rather, on mere slanders, till they bring forth the persons: if this slaundering seeme not vnto them to require, as speedy reformation, as any such facts, if any such were committed: what? that I return their words on their own selues, & God hath blinded their eyes, that they can not see the cleare light of the Sunne shining in their face: verily, affection hath so dazzled at the least these our Brethrens eyes, that they they doe not (I will not say, they will not) see the difference of the Lawful authority, & of the accidentall abuses of the same, being as plaine (set affection aside) as the cleare Sunne shining in their faces. speeches.

For if we looke to bannish the tyranny of the Pope out of all mens heartes, wee must utterly remoue all his detestable enormities out of the realme, as it was wont to be said in the comon prayers of the church, in the time of K. Henrie and Edward, whereas now by reteining still, all the detestable enormities of his prerogative and faculties, and whol course of his Canon law, the papacy is not so much banished in name, as translated in-deede from the sea of Rome, to the sea of Canterbury, ynder the shadowe of the Princes Supremacy, with as heighnous iniu-rie and contumelie, of the lawfull authority and Godly Supremacie of the Prince, as ioyned with the greates dishonor of God, and the miserable disorder of the Church. But wee meane not in this place to prosecute our iust complaints, nor to inueigh against the abuse of these thinges, with such vehemency of wordes as the worthinesse of the matters deserueth: but onely in setting forth the plaine trueth, to giue a glimpse by the way of the contrary falshood.

Are these our W. glimpses? what should we looke for, if they would (as they say) wish vehemencie prosecute their complaints? that when they giue but a glimpse by the way, burthen all the state of the Church and Realme of England, to retaine still all the detestable enormities of the Popes prerogative and faculties, and the whole course of his Canon Law. And that the papacie is not so much banished in name, as translated in-deede from the Sea of Rome, to the sea of Canterburie. Bridges.

With what conscience can our W. affirm these thinges, is not the Popes Supremacie a prerogative of his detestable enormities? which being banished out of the Realme and Church of England, how can it be sayde, that all the detestable enormities of his prerogative, are still reteined? and whereas, to retaine the prerogative of the Popes Supremacie, is high treason: what is this any other, then to accuse all the Church and Realm of Eng. besides theselues, to be high traitors against her Palat.

And what a like slander is this, that we retain his faculties, yea, the whole curse of his Canon Law? If this be true: then both the Realme and Church of England, as much acknowledge the Supremacie of the Pope, as ever it did. Which if it do not, then is this a most vntrue and shamefull slander. The verie Papistes their selues are able to controule them, and all the world may see the cleane contrary. Yea, how agreeeth this with that which their selues haue confessed, and professed in the W. face of this their Learned Discourse, for our acquaintance against this sander that the substance of religion, hath in diuers assemblies abroad and at home, bin dispatched & resolved, & now publikely maintained, for our true and holy fayth. If the whole course of the Canon Law be still mayntayned, which hath many errors, superstitious, Idolatries, and open blasphemies: how maintaine we the true and holy faith? and if papacy be but banished in name and not in deede: how do our Brethren and we agree in the substance of Religion? Do they accuse them selves herein also?

Our Br. too vndutifull slander of her Maiesty.

Pea, howe do they not accuse withall most unnaturally, the Queenes moste excellent Maiesty. For, if papacy be but translated from Rome to Canterbury, it is not gone very farre from the Court. And who translated it thither? could this translation be made without her Maies- ties authoritie? or did that most renowned prince King Henry the eight, or that moste vertuous Prince his sonne King Edward the sixt, both of them Kings of moste worthie memoie, (whome these our Learned Dis- coursters, so briefly here in their haste, snap vp, by the tearmes onely of King Henry and Edward) make this translation of the papacy from Rome to Canterbury, and her Maies ties approue onely and confirme this translation?

Translation of Papacy to Canterbury.

But they say, it is translated thither, vnder the shadow of Princes the supremacie. What mean they by this? hath the Prince translated it to the Sea of Canterburie for a shadowe? or both the prince maintain or re- teyne it? or both the Princes supremacie shadowe Papacie? Whose spe- ches are so dangerous, so reprochfull, so spitefull; so vndutifull and not subiect-like, so manifest vnttrue without all shadows, but not without as heighnous iniury and contumely of the lawfull authority and Godly supremacy of the Prince: as ioyned with great dishonour of God, and the miserable disorder, of moste slanderous speeches cast forth on the Prince, on the Peeres, on the Iudges, on the people, on the whole Church and Realme of England: that I much maruaile that they would euer let them escape their lippes, or conceale them in their hearts: and much more penne them in waiting, and publish them in print, and com- mende them to the world, with the title of a Learned Discourse. Surely this a verie vnlearned, vnabused, vngodlie, and disloyall part. Whatso- euer they had in the gale of their yeale poured forth on vs, would God, they had neuer attempted, so vntreuly to deface, both their and our so gra- cious, godlie, louing and most blessed Soueraigne.

Our Br. mde
kery of her

supremacy.

Do they thinke to shadowe them selves and to salve vp all againe, in saying this is done with as heighnous iniury and contumely of the law- full authority and godly supremacy of the Prince?

In deeds this is more subiect-like, to bee offended that any iniury or contumely should be offered, to the Lawfull authority and godly supre- macy of the Prince. But when they say withall, that all the detestable enormities of the Popes prerogatiue and faculties, and whole course of his

Canon Lawe, is nowe still retained: and that, the Papacie is not so much banished in name, as translated in deede, from the sea of Rome, to the sea of Canterbury: and that, all this is done vnder the shadow of the Prince's Supremacie: what lawfull authoritie, or godlie Supremacie of the Prince make they this to be? And is not this dooing and saying then of theirs, a more mockerie and contradiction, with an heighnous iniurie and contumelie of the lawfull authoritie and godlie Supremacie of the Prince? Yes verie, and ioyned with great dishonour of God, and miserable disorder of the Church, that such such disordered speeches should be suffered.

But we may soone gesse, whether for these parts of the Papacie, (to wit, soule-mouthed slanders, not sparing to offer iniuries and contumelies to their naturall and Soueraigne Prince,) for making and imposing another Canon Lawe, and a new kinde of Supremacie of pastors and Seniors, should be translated: not from Rome to Canterbury: though neither, we nor they can well tell from whence, but whether: euen to euery seuerall Parish and Congregation. For, what could all the papistes, or the Pope himselfe haue said more, or worse against the Prince, the Church, and the Realme of England, than these our learned Discourser Brethren haue comprehended in these distempred speeches?

And now, when they haue thus disgorged all this choller, for verie anger that they can not haue their gouerning Presbyters and not not preaching Priests, to exercise this power of the keyes, and discipline of the Church: they conclude, as it were, singing away in a chafe, from further treatise of their Gouvernors, saying.

But we minde not in this place to prosecute our iust complaints, nor to inueigh against the abuse of these thinges, with such vehemencie of words, as the worthinesse of the matters deserueth: but onelie in setting forth the plaine truth, to giue a glimpse by the way of the contrarie falshood.

All that our Brethren say, must be plaine truth & iust complaints: & all our sayings, and doings, are with them contrarie falshoods & abuses, and yet these & all their other so soule speeches, are (sooth) but their glimpses by the way. What will these fellows doe (trow we) when they come directly vpon vs, with such vehemencie of words, as (they say, the worthinesse of the matters deserueth)? But since they threaten vs, & as it were, bidde vs expect in some other place, where belike they minde to prosecute these complaints & inuectiues with greater vehemencie: we may yet thanks them for this curtisie, that they giue vs before hande so faire a warning. Prouisa lenius feriant mala. We that is full warned, is halfe armed. We shall make our selues ready for the push of their vehemencie, so well as God shall giue vs grace thereto.

We may well see, by these speeches whether for diuerse pointes the papacy would be translated

All these soul speeches are but our Br. glimpses by the way.

Our Br. for warning & greater inuectiues.

And

And thus with this foule blast and threatening sting, they knit by this their Learned Discourse, of their third Terrarke, these Gouvernors, Presbyters, Preebtes or Elders, that are all in ruling and not teaching.

And since they are not hether to able, to alleage better pwoofes for their Consistory of these Elders: neyther yet Caluine, Beza, nor Danus, (as for other, I account not of them more than these) I hope wee shall neede to feare the lesse our Bishops threatnes, of a my greater vehemencie to come, that shall be materiall to the controversy.

The argument of the 13 Books.

THE 13. Booke is of the last tetrark, called the Deacons, with a Preface, exhorting to releene the poore: in what sort the Deacons office is perpetuall: of the first occasion of ordeyning Deacons for the distribution of temporall goods: of the occasion ceassing, how that part of the office is changeable: how the office had another part remayning to be imployed in the attendants on the ministerie of the Word and Sacraments: of the examples heereof in the first seauen Deacons, namely, Stephen and Philip, with the iudgements of Gualter, Aretius, and the Magdeburgenses heereupon: how the part pertaining to distribution of goodes, was altered and ioyned with other functions, and not any peculiar office in many well ordered Churches after the ordeyning of Deacons at Ierusalem: of our Brethrens deniding the office of Deacons in diuers partes, and whether the distributors, showers of mercie and helpers, mentioned Rom. 12. 1. Cor. 12. were severall and distinct offices, with the interpretations of Ambrose, Bullinger, Beza, Caluine, and Aretius on the same: of the good politike lawes for the poores reliefe, and the cause that they take not so good effect of the multitude of disordinate walkers and practisers against the State: and whether these denises of Deacons would repressse them, or increase them: of the election of Deacons, and of tyrannie and confusion: whether the Deacons trayning vp to the Ministerie, be a prophaning of the office, and making the Deacons to be idolles, of the diuers names and offices of the auncient and holie Churches that Danaus mentioneth, for the attendance on the poore: of the Collectors for the poore amongst vs: of their qualities and difference from Deacons: of the exception of Philips

WE must therefore returne to the authoritie of the Pastor, which he hath ioyned with the Elders of the Church whereof he is Pastor. The Church hath alwayes had great care of pro-uision for the poore, by which compassion they shewed, that they were liuely members of the bodie of Christ, and auoyded great reproch of them that were without. For what shame is it, for them that professe, to be all Sonnes of one Father, and therefore all brethren: yea, they that be members of one body, to suffer theyr brethren and fellow members to lacke necessaries to susteyne theyr temporall life: as though they that communicated in all spirituall graces and blessings, were not woorthie to take part of these worldlie bene-fytes, at least-wise so farre-forth as to supplie theyr necessities.
 Therefore our Sauour Christ, alwayes commendeth brotherly loue among his Disciples, to teach vs how readie we ought to be to distribute vnto the necessities of our brethren, which is a true testimonie of our loue, declared by his owne example. For although he were so poore, that hee lyued of the almes and liberalitie of other men: yet of that which was more than serued hya owne necessitie, hee vsed to bestowe vpon the poore, as Iohn. 13.
 29. to teach them whome he hath blessed with temporall riches, which he refused, to enrich vs with heavenly treasures, that they of their superfluitie would be content to giue to the reliefe of theyr poore brethren, which he did not neglect in his extreame pouertie: to teach also them that haue but meane substance, that they ought not to be excused, but somewhat to contribute vnto the necessitie of theyr poore brethren, when he that had nothing at all, but that which was giuen, euen of that bestowed part.

Mat 13. 12.

out

¶ We are now entering into the last office of this our learned brethrens Ecclesiasticall Tetrarchie, that is to wit, of they Deacons, with the Discourse of whome, beginning to proceede, they first make an exhortatorie preamble, and with milder words, than they left off the treatise of their Gouvernors, more charitably falling to persuation, to tender and releue the poore, to the which we may the rather be moued by them, with of all this that is here set downe, there is nothing betwene vs litigious, that might stay vs, except we should (by the way) inquire, what Elders here they meane, ioyning in authoritie with the Pastor, both in the name of Elder, as we haue seene, especially by Hyperius and Beza, besides Ambrose among the auncient Fathers, and also ioyning in assistance (as needs an occasion requireth) with the Pastors.

Bridges.

Our Brethrens exhortation to releue the poore.

What Elders here our Brethren meane.

As for these governing Ecclesiasticall Elders, that are neither teachers nor Deacons, our Brethren haue not yet, (in the former discourse of them) sufficiently proued them, as I take it. But if they meane such Elders, as they terme Gouvernors, It makes me somewhat muse at the order of this their Learned Discourse, that beginning to enter into the treatise of the Deacons, they promise to returne to the authoritie of the Pastor, which he hath ioyned with the Elders of the Church whereof he is a Pastor. Which returne being here thus promised, notwithstanding they suddenly make a stoppe, and leauing that matter, they turne another way. And (the more to stirre vp mens charitie and compassion to releue the poore) they shew what great care the Church hath alwayes had for their prouision, with very good perswasions, arguments, and examples, which I greatly commend in them, and wish of vs and all men to be accordingly considered, and such as are goodly, are so affected to they poore Brethren, and to their habilitie to so releue them: and there are also verie good exhortations and prouisions by the lawes already prouided for this purpose. Whereto, the example (I graunt) of Christ, ought most especially to moue vs, although I dare not say (as here they do) he had nothing at all but that was given, and, that he liued of the almes and liberalitie of other men, but vpon that I will moue no controuersie. Wherevpon, they now descend to the originall institution of the Deacons.

The order of our Brethrens learned Discourse.

Therefore the Apostles in the Primitiue Church, thought it to be expedient, for the better prouiding of the poore, that certayne men should be appoynted of approued godlinesse and diligence, which should take the special charge of the distribution vnto the poore, Acts 6.

The learned discourse.

These

These men were called Deacons or Ministers, bycause they did minister and serue the poore in their necessities, and bycause the occasion of the ordinance continueth alwayes (as our Saviour Christ hath saide) we should alwayes haue the poore amongst vs, Iohn. 12.8. whereby, God would exercise our charitie. The office of Deacons also is perpetuall, therefore the Apostle S. Paule prescribeth what kinde of men are meete for that office, 1. Tim. 3.8. and in euery well constituted Church, they were ordeyned accordingly, as Philip. 1.1.

Bridges.

True it is, that the Apostles in the Primitive Church thought it to be expedient, for the better providing of the poore, that such approved men should be appointed, to take the spirituall charge of the distribution vnto them, and that these men for this kinde of ministerie, were thereupon called Deacons. All this gladly I confesse: but when they conclude hereon, that bycause the occasion of this order continueth alwayes (as our Saviour Christ said) we should alwayes haue the poore amongst vs, whereby God would exercise our charitie, that therefore, the office of the Deacons is perpetuall, meaning this office, to distribute vnto the poore, in such manner as the Apostles appointed those Deacons to do: that argument of Danzus, (from whence I thinke they haue it) followeth not, bycause the hauing of the poore alwayes, nor the exercise of our charitie towards them, was not the only, nor the chiefe occasion, of the originall institution of those Deacons. But the chiefe occasion was this, that whereas the Christians then at Ierusalem, in that time of the Primitive Church, hauing all, or the most of them sold their lands or houses, and giuen them in common to be distributed proportionably, for the greater reliefe of the poore and nable among them, bycause the Apostles (at whose feete they layd downe the prices of them) could not so well attend to the equall distribution, being so exercised in the ministerie of the word, to teach and confirme the people that daily more and more increased, whereby, the widdowes of the Grecians murmured, that they were neglected in the dayly ministering: vpon this occasion, saith S. Luke Act. 6.1. the twelue called the multitude of the Disciples together, and said; it is not meete that we should leaue the word of God, to minister vnto the tables: wherefore (Brethren) looke yee out among you seven men of honest report, and full of the holy Ghost, and of wisdom, which we may appoint to this businesse, and we will giue our selues continually to prayer, and to the ministration of the word. So that, this occasion perpetually continuing, this office also of the Deacons is perpetuall: but this occasion continuing not, the Christians afterwards reteyning the property of their lands and houses, and the poore being by other godly meanes provided for, this office of Deaconship, signifying a Ministerie (especially as they were then in practise) may be imployed other wise, both for attendance on the Pastors in the Ministerie of the word and Sacraments, and also to prepare themselves to become fit Pastors afterwards : whereupon, now and then, (as needeth as occasion hath served, and they found to be meete thereto) the Ministerie also of the word and Sacraments, hath bene permitted vnto them, in the auncient, yea, in the Primitiue Church, and at the very time of their institution, as immediatly after, as appeareth both by Stephen and Philip, by whome, we may iudge the like of all the residue : for Stephen, so soon as euer he was chosen Deacon, was set vpon with diuers aduersaries in matter of doctrine, who disputed with Stephen, but they were not able to resist the wisdom, and the spirit by the which he spake, Actes. 6. 10. Whereupon, saith Gualter, Et quamuis de publicis concionibus, &c. And although nothing be spoken of his publike Sermons, notwithstanding it is euident by the context of the hystorie, that he had these both often, and effectually, and very serious. Wherefore, by the way and as it were by digression, we may heere see, that the Deacons of the Primitiue Church were not altogether estranged from the ministerie of the word : but although they were chiefelie occupied about the dispensation of the Churches goodes, neuerthelesse, they imployed their labour also so farre as they might, in the other ministeries of the Church, that by this meanes, according to the sentence of S. Paule, they might get vnto themselves a good degree. 1. Tim. 3. What a notable Sermon he made, and what a rare and singular gift of the spirit of God in his preaching he had, the 7. Chapter at large witnesseth.

Also, Full of wisdom, that is, that they be prouident and warie, least they cast pearles to any dogs or swine, but teach them that are to be taught, but chiefly, prudence was necessary for the Ecclesiasticall dispensation, whereunto they are to be called.

And on the 5. verse, of Stephens disputation with his aduersaries, which (saith he) was of the Christian doctrine, he saith : Stephen (no doubt) did execute faithfully and constantly the office of a Deacon, no lesse then Lawrence did afterward vnder Sextus, and Vincentius vnder Valerius, who bestowed the treasures of the Church vpon the poore. But vnto these do come new vertues : first, he is full of faith, that is, of seruencie in teaching that faith, &c. whome Aretius calleth the Doctor of the Samaritanes: secondly (sayth he) heereunto pertaineth a singuler example of Philip, who happily instructed the Samaritanes. First, heere may be considered who that Philip was, for there haue beene that haue thought him to be the Apostle, but two strong arguments are against them in the context: first, that the Apostles were not dispersed, but abode at Ierusalem, but Philip was among those that were dispersed, therefore it was not Philip the Apostle. Moreouer, the Apostles onely could giue the holy Ghost, but Philip could not do it. And heereupon, Iohn & Peter are sent to the Samaritanes, wherefore it can not be Philip the Apostle; it is therefore the Deacon, of whome we spake before, Chap. 6.

And Gualter affirming also the same, addeth further. First, he teacheth whose ministry God vsed in conuerting Samaria, it was that Philip, not he that was the Apostle, but he that before was reckoned vp among the Deacons, as the auncient writers of the Church do testify with one consent, chiefly Epiphanius, writing of Simon and of the Simoniacks: for although the parts of the Deacons were to beare the care of the common goodes of the Church, and of the poore, notwithstanding it was withall permitted vnto them, to take on them the preaching of the Gospell, if at any time necessity so required, the which we haue hitherto seene in Stephens example. And perhaps, there was not so great vse of Deacons at Ierusalem, when the Church was dispersed with the tempest of persecution, and therefore they which before dispensed the publike goods of the Church, gaue themselues wholly to the ministry of the word. Yea, and Paule admonished afterward, that the Deacons by ministering well, should get vnto themselues a degree vnto a greater function. 1. Tim. 3.

And as the ministration of the Sacraments followeth the preaching of the word, so Philip baptized those whome he had by his preaching conuerted. Neither is it noted, that they did these things by reason of any other office annexed vnto them; but as Gualter noteth verie well, that in generally, as they had gifts competent, and occasion convenient, it was not impertinent to their office of Deaconship, so to imploy themselves.

Whereupon also, the Magdeburgenses note, Centuria 1. lib. 2. cap. 7. pag. 508. saying: Other were Deacons. The office of these was to minister to the Table at Ierusalem, so long as the community of goods was there, Acts 6. but neuertheless, that they also taught and shewed forth signes, appeareth out of Stephen, Acts 6. and Philip, Acts 8. 21. and euery where in other Churches, it was the office of the Deacons to teach and to minister. And the same Magdeburgenses in the title, De ratione ac forma gubernationis, pag. 510. do say: These were the works in common of the Apostles, and Prophetes, Pastors, Doctors, Priestes, Deacons.

Deacons. They taught the Church purely and sincerely concerning enery of the head points of the christian doctrine, &c. and that Deacons also taught, appeareth out of the 6. and 8. of the Actes, they interpreted the holy Scriptures, &c. they deliuered the Catechisme, &c. they did cut the word of truth rightly into the Law and the Gospell, &c. they vsed the forme of sound words in teaching, &c. they vsed also in teaching a simple kind of speech, &c. they studied to keepe the puritie of doctrine, &c. they opposed themselues sharply against false teachers and Hereticks, and confuted their false opinions. For Stephen, Act. 6. confu-ted them that were in the synagog of the Libertines, &c. they preached repentance, that is, they reprobued and blamed sinners, for the Apostles, Act. 2. 3. and 4. did openly object vnto the Iewes this sinne, and for the same reprove them, that they had killed Iesus of Nazareth the iust and holy one, the sonne of God, and the Messias, and Stephen Actes. 7. calleth them murtherers, and betrayers of the Messias, &c. And so they preached.

 Lord, &c.

 The Deacons order

Whereby it manifestly appeareth, that notwithstanding the foresaid occasion of ordeyning the Deacons, to ease the Apostles in the distributio of the Church goodes, and attendance on the poore: yet did their office stretch further, and as occasion serued, they did also these things, which at that time were proper to the Apostles, & to the Bishops and Pastors that they ordeined. And if there had bene no other vse at all of Deacons, then that aforesaid, vpon occasion whereof they were first chosen, except that order of the goodes given in common to the Church, to be distributed to every person proportionably, and namely to the poore, had continued, which it did not, that part of the Deacons office might haue then ceased, as Gualter noteth well, how in the time of the persecution immediately succeeding, it did cease, at what time, they that had the gift therto, gaue themselues to the preaching of the word, & ministring the Sacraments, where Bishops and Pastors wanted; and therefore, where Bishops and Pastors were, it is the more likely, that they ministred in the attendaunces on them in doing these things: and I see not, but that they may still so do, except our Brethren can perswade the people to such an order for their distribution of their goodes in common with themselves vnto the poore, as was then vsed in the Apostles times. And yet euen then also, as occasion and fitnesse of the Deacons may benefite the Church, they may preach and baptise, as Stephen and Philip did: which ministeries, our Brethren make proper onely to such, as at the least were Pastors. But in the Apostles tymes, we see that these ministeries were not so precisely distinguished, but that one sometimes might well deale, without note of confusion, euen in the function & ministery, that more properly pertained to another.

Neyther is any thing to the contrarie, in the testimonies here cited 1.Tim.3.8. Likewise Deacons must be honest, not double tongued, nor giuen to much wine, neyther to fylthie lucre. In which words is no thing to this purpose. But if they had gone but to the very next words in the verse following, they should haue found matter sufficient, that Deacons had to do further, then to minister the distribution to the poore, euen by Beza his owne testimonie, as we shall see (God willing) afterward.

1.Tim.5.17.

As for the salutation of S.Paule, Phil.1.1. to the Bishops and Deacons at Philippos, proueth not that Deacons in euery well ordered Church were ordeined accordingly. For as in Ierusalem it selfe, the chiefe and mother Church, there were for a while (vntill this occasion fell out) no such officers, and yet we can not well say, it was not a well ordered Church during that time: so Act.14. vers.23. it is said of Paule and Barnabas, when they had ordeyned with the hand, Elders vnto them according to the Church, and had prayed with fastings, they commended them to the Lord, on whome they beleueed. Here is no mention at all made of Deacons, except we shall vnderstand the word Elders (as Beza would haue it) for Pastors, Deacons, and other Gouernors of the Church, saying only for praise hereof, for heere, as often otherwhere, the name of Presbyter, Priest, or Elder, is generally taken.

Neyther do we denie, but that it is so taken, and moze generally also, in diuers places, which sheweth, that their vnderstanding of that place of S.Paule, 1.Tim.5.17. the Elders that gouerne well, are woorthy of double honor, especially those that labour in the word and doctrine, which words, if they will needes vnderstand, of two kinds of Elders, distinct in function and office, why may it not be as well there vnderstood for such Deacons, as were ministers of the word and sacraments, as for their imagined gouerning Elders, that are altogether no teachers:

And so doth Hyperius out of Ambrose, (as we haue seene before) expound that place, Qui bene præsunt presbyteri. In this place, the tearme of Presbyter, Priest, or Elder, includeth the reason of office, not of age. But they are called Presbyters, Priests, or Elders, by a generall and common name, all they that minister in the Church, the which thing also we haue giuen warning of before. For the Bishop also himselfe is called a Presbyter, Priest, or Elder, as Ambrose witnesseth. Howbeit, euery Presbyter, Priest, or Elder is not a Bishop, of all these therefore his speech is heere, that are inferior to the Bishop, whome Ambrose reckneth vp in euery City, two Deacons which administer the word and sacraments, and 7. Deacons that minister to the tables, distributing the goods of the Church. Whereby we see all their groundworke faileth, consisting on the expounding that place, for such Gouerning Elders, that they make to be another

another distinct and middle function, betwene Pastors and Deacons, and that these Elders may be well enough understood for Deacons. And also that some Deacons, such as were sit thereunto, were admitted to the Ministerie of the worde and sacraments: the other were attendants on the Bishop and on the Ministers. Both of whom here Hyperius saith, that S. Ambrose also calleth Deacons. But Elders or Deacons they were all in their sortes attendant chieflie on the Ministerie of the worde: as their selues (as in the ende we shall see) the verie Ministers and Pastors of it. Now, although in this sense, we may admit here also, A.C. 14. Bezaces interpretation for Elder, to comprehend also those that properly are called Deacons: yet in this place, I allow rather the iudgement of Caluine, which we haue seene before, that by Elders there are onelie ment such as were pastorall Elders.

Also after the ordeining of the 7. Deacons, this office was deuided into diuers parts, as necessitie shewed diuers occasions. For some were appointed for the collection and distribution of almes, as Rom. 12.8. And some for attending vpon the sicke & impotent among the poore, as in the same place, Let him that distributeth, do it with simplicitie; and let him that sheweth mercie, do it with cheerefulness. Which kind of deacons, 1. Co. 12.28. are called Helpers: and for the seruice of this office were appointed diuers poore olde widdowes, who as they were maintained by the Church, so they serued the Church, attending vpon the other poore, who being sicke and impotent, had neede not onelie of things necessarie, but also of seruice and attending. 1. Tim. 5.5.

As diuision of the office of Deacons, appeareth not in any of the places as here alledged. Our Brethren cited before, pag. 3. 17. 33. and 84. this testimonie Rom. 12.8. for the diuersities of diuers offices of the Ministerie. And throughout this their learned Discourse, they treat vpon them generallie, diuiding Doctors from Pastors, Pastors from Governors, Governors from Deacons: and so made by their full Tetrarchie, by these 4. distinct offices. And still they giue one part of this testimonie, Rom. 12.8. to euery office. To the Doctors, Let him that is a Teacher, attend on his teaching: To the Pastors, Let him that exhorteth, be diligent in his exhortation: To the Governors, Let him that ruleth, do it with diligence. And doo they now, when they come to the latter part of the sentence, hinde by these two parts of the sentence remaining, together into one generall function of the Deaconship, and make them to be two diuers and diuided parts of one office: Let him that distributeth, do it with simplicitie: & let him that sheweth mercie, do it with cheerefulness?

Diuers Interpreters doo expound these words generallie. He that giueth, in simplicitie: He speaketh it (saith Ambrose) vnto him that giueth with a good minde, that he shall euer haue helpes at hande, the spirite

So that vnto him that giueth simplie, there shall bee no want: as Salomon saith; He that giueth to the poore, shall not want. Hee therefore giueth simplie, which dooth it not in faining, that men may giue him praise: but that by the same he may obtaine to be accepted of God. He that governeth in carefulnesse: Hee speaketh of him that taketh the care to rule the Brethren, according to his fidelitie, to take watchfulnesse and authoritie, that hee maye doo them good in the matter wherein he is carefull, hauing fruite in them whome hee ruleth. He that hath mercie, in cheerefulnesse: Hee saith also, that hee which according to his vnderstanding, sheweth mercie with a cheerefull minde, not as though it were wroong from him against his will, is grounded and strengthened of G O D, so that in this matter hee suffereth no weaknesse, knowing that it is sayde of Salomon, Doo good while thou hast occasion, &c. And in this sorte doo all the auncient Fathers vnderstand it generallie.

Bullinger in Rom. 12.

In like manner, plainlie and simplie doth Bullinger expounde these wordes: He now that is set ouer the works of the poore, or he to whom haue hapned notable riches, let him doo his businesse simplie, that is to say, with greatest diligence & faith without fraude; or els, le him giue to them that haue neede, not for glorie, or for subtiltie, with hope of obtaining better things: but simplie, and without all euill deceite. Furthermore if anie, rule or exercise anie other ecclesiasticall office, or excell in Magistracie: let them administer all thinges industriously with greatest diligence. Of which thing also, Iosaphat in the 2. of Parallip. 19. Moses also Exod. 18. & Dauid in his Psalmes. But if anie be indued with the giste of mercie and pitifulnesse: let him remember, that a cheerefull giuer is approoued of God. Hereto accordeth the prouerb, Enim si robur; aequa. That is, But yet of all giftes, the minde is the best. Againe, that excellent saying of Seneca, in his second book De benefic. That is an vnthankfull good turne, that sticketh long fast between the hands of the giuer. Thus saith Bullinger, according with the auncient Fathers. Wherein not onely he and they make these 2. to wit, the distribution, & the shewing mercie, to generall giftes, not distinct offices, & much lesse, onelie ecclesiasticall: but also the gift of gouerning, to be a generall dutie, required of all ciuil, as well as ecclesiasticall Gouernors. And not anie such eccl Gouernors, as our Brethren make the third persons in this their Hierarchicall Tetrarchie.

Beza in Ro. 12.

A graunt that Beza thinketh other wise, saying on these wordes, He that hath mercie: This verilie seemeth to stretch more largelie: but when as Paule treateth of ecclesiasticall functions, this cannot fitlie inough bee taken for the mercie, that al they which haue giue their name to Christ, are bound to performe. Furthermore, when as he distinguisheth this mā from méers supposall, and assent to these or those Interpreters, as he best fan-cieth, in so indifferent an Interpretation, of different opinions.

As for his reason, it is but weake. For though Saint Paule spake before of some diuers functions or offices, or rather of diuersities of gifts: The weake-clestiasticall. Notwithstanding, this is cleane contrarie to these our learned Discourfers, that one office had diuers parts of this distribution. Albeit for my part. I like better of these our Discourfers opinion, than of Bezaes, that one ecclesiasticall office, might haue diuers partes thereof.

 But, that these wordes are to be onelie vnderstode of the office of Deacons, and the parts thereof, moze than of the other offices: in that point, as these our Wretchen agree not with other excellent Writers; so is it a gaine as free for vs to dissent here from them. Caluine saith on these wordes, He that giueth, in simplicitie: Out of these latter members we cleerlie be- Caluin. in giftes. By those that distribute, of whom he speaketh heere. He vnderstandeth not them that giue of their owne, but Deacons, which are ouer the publike goods of the Church to be dispensed. But by those that haue mercie; the Widowes and other Ministers, that were sette to the ouersight of tending the sick. For they are 2. diuers functions to lay forth things necessary to the poore, and to employ their labor in the handling of them. Peter Martyr saith on these wordes, He that hath mercie, in cheere- fulnesse: This seemeth to be the office of Widowes, & of old men, which were nourished in the Church, to the vse, that they might take the care of strangers, and of sicke persons. Gualter, calling them Almoners, saith the same: I thinke that the Apostle speaketh of them, that were peculi-arlie designed, to exercise the offices of Christian mercie: such were the Widowes & the olde men, which were nourished in the Church, chiefly to the end, that they might enterteine needy strangers, that they might serue the sicke, and be present to anie, that had more neede of mercie & of others help, than other had. Which place at this day they obtaine, that are set ouer Hospitalls, and that serue in them.

Oleuian also saith on these wordes: Hee that hath mercie: It was an other office in the Church distinct from them that administred the Dea-conshippe of the poore, which were appoynted to serue the poore, the aged and the sicke, such as for the most parte were the Widdowes 1.

Deacons.

The Author of the fruitful Ser. vp-on Rom. 12
pag. 34.

All this, as they herein dissent from the aunient Fathers exposition of these wordes, and from diuers of our late no lesse excellent Writers: so these our learned Brethren herein dissent from them, which make these takers of mercie, to be an other distinct office from the Deacons, and not to be the same office that the Deacons is, being distinguished onelie in the parts thereof, Yea, that Brother of ours, which made, (as he tearmeth it) the fruitfull Sermon, vpon this verie text, dooth thus distinguish the: Officers occupied about their other necessary duties, deuided into Deacons, rulers, attenders on the poore. And pag. 34. These members are either Doctors to teach, Pastors to exhort, Elders to rule, Deacons to distribute, attenders vpon the poore people and the sicke: or els, the People and Saints which are taught, exhorted, ruled, and receaue almes and releefe. These are all, no more, no fewer. These are verie resolute speeches: and yet, as clarelie as the Author of that Sermon would carrie alway the matter, hee can not resolutelie set downe, what office these shewers of mercie had: but onelie, that either they were attenders vpon the poore people, and the sicke; or els, the People and Saints which are taught, exhorted, ruled, and receaue almes and releefe.

The eccl. discipline of wome Deacons need sarie & perpetuall by
our Brethr.

What certaine office, or officers, are heere distinguished: when all the people and Saints which are taught, &c. are comprehended? So that while there is such varietie in the iudgements, both of the olde and newe Writers hereupon, & all or the most of them, that our Brethren esteeme most, are in this poynt so cleane contrarie to this our Brethrens learned Discourse: we may the better be bozne withal, if we admit not this their diuision of the Deacons office, into these parts. For then, must we not onelie haue men, but women also to be ordinarie and necessarie eccl. officers, that is to say, Deaconesses, or Deacons. Which terme in Greeke though Saint Paule vse of a woman, Rom. 16. 1, saying: I commend vnto you Phoebe our Sister, ὑποδιάκονος, which is a Minister of the Church of Cenchres: yet doth he so litle meane that she was a Deacon in that signification, wherein the word Deacon is appropriated to an ecclesiasticall office in the Church: that the Geneva translation dare not English it a Deacon, no nor yet a Minister, but a Seruant, such as the Widowes were, that Saint Paule speaketh of 1. Tim. 5. ver. 9. & 10. But these he calleth Widowes not Deacons. And he giueth such general rules to Deacons, as are not competible to Women, and are flatte forbidden to those Widowes. Let the Deacons (saith he) be the husbands of one wife, and such as can rule their children well, and their owne householdes. 1. Tim. 3. 12. But of the Widowes he saith: But refuse the yonger widdowes, for when they haue begun to waxe wanton against Christ, they will marrie. 1. Tim. 5. 11. To auoyde which thing, he sayd before, ver. 9. Let not a Widdowe be taken into the number, vnder 60. yeere olde. But the Deacons haue no prescription of their age.

age. Yea, if a young man (as Timothie was) might be an Elder of the word; much more might a Deacon be a young man. The poore and impotent therefore, may be attended vpon wel inough by other men, as by Almoners, and Masters of Hospitalls, and other Widowes, and officers, as it is yet in Hospitalls and Almes-houses, although those officers be no ecclesiasticall officers, and much lesse Deacons, in the proper acceptation of the name. But if now this office of Deacon, as here they say, was deuided into diuers partes, as necessitie shewed diuers occasions: then, the poore, sicke & impotent, beeing other wise charitablie provided for: why may not, (as necessitie of occasion likewise serueth) the Deacons bee imployed vnto other partes, as the verie firste Deacons were imployed?

And as vncerteine as we see the exposition is, what giste, or office, or what action, or part of giste or office, is certeinlie meant by these that helpe What is meant by hel pers 1. Cor. 12. 28. Arctius in 1. Cor. 12. aid merite, in the 12. of the Romanes: so is the other testimonie, here likelisse by our Wethren cited, 1. Cor. 12. ver. 28. as Arctius noteth on the word asthetes, Helpers: Some interpret it of them that sayled with him, and the losse is onelie of the shippe. But other interpret it of the Church, such as is of Deacons, Widowes and Seniors, which either lay out the almes to the poore, or take the care of strangers, & attend on the sick, and the like officers, that take the charge of Hospitals. And as vncerteinlie saith Bullinger: Hee said Helpers and Deacons, to wit, he vnderstood the stewards of the poore, or els all those that helpe Bulling. in 1. Cor. 12. in ecclesiasticall busineses.

These offices being instituted by the spirite of God, for the necessarie The lear ned dis- course. Pa 104 et 105 vse of the Church, which vse still continueth, ought also to be reteined among vs. For we see, for want of these offices, what great inconueniencies are among vs, concerning the poore. For although there be verie good politike lawes made for the prouision of the poore, yet small reliefe commeth thereby to the poore indeede: at least wise manie abuse the reliefe which they receaue, which commeth of this, that there bee not in euerie Church or Congregation, such Deacons as ti. holie Ghost hath appointed, which shoulde take a speciall care, and employ a great diligence, for the prouision of the poore: not onelie some to gather & distribute, but also to see it well imployed on the poore, and to imploy the poore, that liue of the almes of the Church, to the reliefe of their fellowe poore, which are more impotent than they, as it was vsed in the Primitiue Church. And aboue all things to beware of them that walke disorderlie, and labour not, if they be able. Of which kinde of people, when there is so great multitude in this land, that they doo euen ouerflowe the Countries, and haue bene knownen to bee practisers of great matters against the State: it is maruell, that neither by Politike, nor by Ecclesiastilawes for

Bridges.

Howe some part of the Deacons office ceaseth.

I denie not the reteining still among vs the office of Deacons, nor denie that the office was instituted by the spirite of God, for the necessarie vse of the Church; either restraining the vse to that present state of the Church then, or vnderstanding necessarie, for expedient and conuenient. But I denie, that that necessarie vse which then was the occasion thereof, dooth in all his parts still continue. Which if it doo not, (as we haue seene the prooffe,) or continue but in part: then may this office, if not cease, yet continue but in parte. And that vse which was necessarie then, ceasing after ward, and so not necessarie: some part of the office may cease also.

The incon-
ueniences concerning the poore.

As for the inconueniences among vs concerning the poore, they arise not of this, that the Deacons are not imployed to the care of them: but on other occasions, which woulde still fall out, howsoeuer the Deacons were imployed, except there be other helpes for it, than the Deacons are able to supplie.

The good Politike
Lawes for the prouision
of the poore.

They confesse, there be verie good Politike Lawes made for the prouision of the poore. If these Politike lawes be verie good: then is there no such necessarie vse, to imploy the Deacons therunto. Neither do these verie good Politike lawes, commit the disposing of the poores prouision vnto the Deacons. And how then can they be verie good lawes, if it were necessarie by Gods lawe, that the Deacons should alwayes dispose the prouisions for the poore? They must therefore either eate this worde, and say, the Lawes are not verie good: or els, that this prouision for the poore, dooth not so necessarielie appertaine vnto the Deacons.

Whie the laws for the poores pro-uision being good, the poore are smallie releued by them.

Yet (say they) small releefe commeth thereby to the poore indeede, at least wise manie abuse the releefe which they receaue. And I am of the same opinion. But againe, whereof commeth this? Which (say they) commeth of this, that there be not in euerie Church or Congregation, such Deacons as the holic Ghost hath appoynted, which should take a speciall care, & imploy a great diligence for the prouision of the poore. It is verie true, that where such Deacons are, as the holic Ghost hath appoynted, and that they be imployed to this care: they would for their parts, vse great diligence, and doo all that they can to remedie these inconueniences. Neuerthelesse, sith it hath pleased the holic Ghost also, to giue vs Christian Princes, vnder whom we neede no such ioyning of our goods in communitie, as then they did, but euerie one enioye his owne in propriety: and, by whose authoritie, verie good lawes and prouisions for the poore, (as is here confessed) be already, or may be made, and officers appoynted in that behalfe: as the inconueniences arise and are espied, asped, they may still by the same authoritie bee reformed, as well, or better than now by the Deacons, in this alteration of the occasion, to the making of the. For so that the poore be well provided for, if the Deacons be imploied to the attendance on more principal things: what hurt is this?

And if the good Lawes, be well executed, the Deacons attendance shall not need: if they be not well executed, the Deacons attendance can not helpe. Let the good provision haue good execution, and the Deacons may be better employed: els lay not the fault on the employing the Deacons, but on the not executing of the good Lawes. Other wise, though the Deacons were imploied onelie to the attendance on the poore: yet might these great inconueniences, and greater arise, and increase among vs. Neither were al the Deacons very good, among those that were first chosen at Iernsalē. Yea, though the Deacons to be chosen, were euery one of the neuer so good: yet must these inconueniences be holpen, not onely by the officers that should distribute the almes, but as much by the persons that should giue the almes, especiallie by them that are in authoritie to make good lawes and provisions for the matter.

If the good laws be well executed, the Deacons attendance shall not need. And if they be not executed, the Deacons attendance wil not help it.

And let this be provided, that with the verie good Politike Lawes, which either be made, or may be made, the people also may be made willing, readie and liberall to contribute; and then, for appointing of fit officers, to be Collectors and Distributers of the contributions, it will not be so great a matter.

But where they say, It was vsed in the Primitiue Church, to imploy not onelie the almes on the poore: but also imploy the poore, that line of the almes of the Church, to the reliefe of their fellow poore, which are more impotent than they: these speeches woulde haue bene made more plaine, and some pprooffe alledged.

The verie maintenance of these deacons, would take vp a great part of the poors reliefe.

In the meane season, were it not better to haue these officers, that should take such a speciall care, & imploy so great diligence for the provision of the poore, to be such, as should not be chargeable to the Church themselves: than such, as must make the collecting and distributing, to be their tohole and onelie function, and so must also their selues, (as good reason is) for their labour and reward, be altogether maintained on the charges or almes of the Church: whereby the lesse remaineth, to be imploied on the poores reliefe.

But they (not so much regarding this) giue a straight charge vnto these their Deacons, aboue all thinges to beware of them that walke disorderlie, and labour not if they able: and withall, they complaine of so great multitudes of such kinde of people in this lande, that they do euen ouer-flowe the Countreyes, and haue bene knowen to be practisers of great matters against the State.

wee grant the multitude is too great, and yet they haue bene, and are metelic well waded out. But, for the Deacons to beware that they be slowe not the Churches almes on them; would be a soerie helpe vnto the matter, except the Deacons might also haue the Lawe in their handes to punish them. But the gouerning Elders permit not this vnto the Deacons, but retaine it to themselves, as a matter pertaining to gouernment and discipline.

Well, yet whosoever shall be the punishers: great reason it is, that such idle beggers, & loytering roges should be repressed, especiallie such as shall be found to bee practisers against the State, either of great or little matters. But doe these our learned discoursing Brethren finde fault with the poore roges, for practising great matters against the State? How can they condemne them of this crime, and their selues blush not? Is not the gouernment of Ecclesiasticall matters, matter of State, and great matter too? And are not they Practisers and Discourfers against the Bishops and Prelates, against the Ecclesiasticall lawes established, against the Common booke, yea, against the supreme gouernment of her Maiestie in the authorizing of these things? And can they for verie shame open their mouthes against the poore sinners, those loytering beggers, their selues being practisers of so great matters, and so direct against the State? Doe they thinke they may practise these great matters, better than the other; because the other are poorer, and they are greater and richer? I thinke the more daunger to the State, the greater and the richer that they be?

And I thinke, if these Elderships and Deaconries in euerie Congregation were set vp: for one loyterer that we are now pestered withall, or for one poore man that we now haue, or for one practiser against the State: we might feare the breeding of greater multitudes in this lande. For State matters we may gesse by these Discourfers; as for the loytering poore, that forsake the labour of their vocations, while they haue busied themselves ouer-much in these State matters, a great manie already haue felt the experience, of whom my selfe knowe diuers, that poore zealous soules, haue brought a shilling not to nine pence (as they say) but to no pence, and would be full glad now, in place of gouerning Seniors, to be made Deacons, that they might become Collectors, and distribute some share to themselves of the Church goods, hauing spent their owne in idleness, if not on other as ill vnto christinne.

It is maruell (they say) that neither by Politike nor Ecclesiasticall law they are brought into order, and set to labor. And is it not as much maruell, that they should thinke to bring them into order by a newe deuise, without all Politike & Ecclesiasticall Law? Yea, it is as much marvell, that neither by Politike nor by Ecclesiasticall Lawe, these learned Discourfers, neither bying themselves, nor are brought into order, to refraine these their most dangerous practises against the State, and against ^{such per-} all Politike and Ecclesiasticall lawe and order: ^{sons to or-} Herelle (as Saint Paule ^{der.} prescribeth) that those lofterers ^{Our Br. mar} should not cate, ^{uell that} untill they be willing to la- ^{such persons} der. ^{can by no} ber, 2. But especiallie concerning this matter, of the distribution vnto the poore, we read, that when the Church of Antiochia, was so well dispo- ^{Act. 11.30.} sed, as to make a Collection to bee sent vnto the poore Brethren, that dwelt in Iurie, they sent vnto the Elders, by the hands of Barnabas and Saule, Act. 11. 30. For it is agreeable to reason, that he that should doo anie seruice in the name of all, shoulde bee chosen and approoued by the consent of all. For the regiment of the Church, as it ought to be farthest off from all tyrannie: so ought it to bee as farre from confusion and disorder. Tyrannie is auoyded, when no one man (contrarie to the ordinance of Christe) shall presume to doo anie thing in the Church, without the aduise and consent of others, that be god- ^{Act. 11.30.} lie and wise, and authorized by the consent of the Church: confusion is preuented, by the graue counsell and orderlie assemblie of Elders, vn- ^{Act. 11.30.} to whom the Church hath committed her authoritie.

Concerning the forme of choosng Deacons, we finde no rule, and but this one example, at the first institution of them, Act. 6. I grant, that those 7. first Deacons, (on the occasion cited in the text) were chosen, not ^{Bridges.} onely by the motion of the Apostles, but by the looking out and choosng, ^{The forme} not by the consent onelie of the whole multitude. Howbeit, that none ^{of choosng} should after ward be chosen, except in that forme, to wit, for the Bishops ^{Deacons.} or pastorall Elders succeding the Apostles, to propound the matter to the ^{The forme} whole multitude, and then the whole multitude to looke out among ^{that our Br.} them ^{prescribe} ^{differet frs} ^{the forme} ^{that was} ^{first vfed} ^{Act. 6.} themselves fit persons, and so to choose them to be Deacons: neither the text hath any such prescription of that forme, nor it seemeth that our Brethren would haue them to be so chosen, but onelie by the Pastors & Consistors of their governing Elders. And what reason moueth them hereunto? Forsooth, because we may not thinke, there was anie confusion in that blessed companie.

Is not this rather a reason to the contrarie, that because the companie was so blessed, and that there was no confusion among them: therefore that companie euen of the whole multitude (as the text plainlie saith) might the better looke about them, and so choose them?

Wee may with as good reason varie from our B. form as our Br. varie from the plaine scripture.

So that there is no necessitie, that we must needs confesse that (which here they say) hath bene before declared, but hath neuer yet by them bene proued, that there were euen in that assemblie, and first Church at Ierusalem, certaine Elders appoynted, which in the name and by the consent of the rest, had the disposition of such matters. Although we deny not, but that there were euen in that assemblie certaine Elders among them. Yet for this matter, the text is so plaine, that they also must needs confesse (except needlesse they will wrispe the text) that the whole multitude themselves, (not certaine Elders in the name and by the consent of the rest, did choose those 7. first Deacons. With therefore, this election of Deacons to be made by such Seniors as our Brethren vige, is not according to this first example, and they alledge none other for this matter: we are so much the easilier acquitted, that if it be lawfull for them to varie from this onelie example of the whole multitudes election: then may we also varie from the election of such governing and not reaching Elders, of which we haue no example at all in the Scripture, for Deacons elections.

The examples that our Br. alledge are nothing for them.

As for the example that here they alledge, Act. 15. besides that we haue proued out of Caluine, that it is all for Elders meddling with the worde: it is nothing for the election of Deacons. Neither yet that example of the collection for the poore at Ierusalem made in Antiochia. and sent vnto the Elders, by the hands of Barnabas and Saule. Act. 11. ver. 20. Both Barnabas and Saule were Elders of the Church, and (as we haue shewed out of Caluine) so were the Elders at Ierusalem also. Those (saith hee) are called Elders, in whose hands the government of the Church was, among whome, the Apostles were chiefe. Which Elders, that they dealt with the controuersies of doctrine, & therein were examples vnto all good Pastors, we haue seene at large, on this verie example that our Brethren here alledge, Act. 15. And this, collection for the poore, Act. 11. is so little tied to the Deacons necessarie distribution, euen where these 7 Deacons were first appoynted: that the Elders also might distribute it, to whome it was sent. For, it appeareth not hereby (of anie necessitie) that the

the Elders were to rebe liner it to the Deacons to be distributed vnto the Congregation. Yea, it appeareth so litle, that Beza is faine here to drine the name of Elders, to Deacons. So that if here the Elders and the Deacons are all one, then doe not our Brethren trulie say, that the Elders had the disposition and appointing of such, as should distribute it vnto the Congregation, which were the Deacons.

As concerning the reason that they alledge; For, it is agreeable to reason, that he that should doo anie seruice in the name of all, shoulde be chosen and approoued by the consent of all: I holde well with it, that it is agreeable to reason, but not alwayes. and in enerie publike office, necessarie, especiallie that he should not be chosen otherwise, but by the consent of all, in whose name he should doo anie seruice. For although the Deacon, in collecting and distributing, or attending on the poore, or on the spiniter, or spiniterie of the Word and Sacraments, doo not seruice in the name of all, and so is to be acquitted of this reason: yet, imagine he do his seruice in the name of all, comprehending by all, not the Seniors onelie, but ioyntlie or severallie enerie one: if it be agreeable to reason, that he that should doo anie seruice in the name of all, shoulde be chosen & approoued by the consent of all: and why then should he be chosen and approoued by the consent of a fewe Seniors, whereas he should be chosen by the consent of all? If they say, by all, they meane not enery one, but the greater or better part, and that the greater or better part must giue their consent vnto the Seniors: although this be agreeable to reason, that where election is to be made, the partis eligible may be elected by the greater and better part, though it bee so farre from the consent of all, that within one, the one halfe dissent from his election, and yet it may be called the consent of all, because the greater and better part do ioyne the other: neuertheles, why may not all, or the greatest part, so, the avoiding of factions in elections, commit their consents vnto some one approoued man among them, as well as vnto some few men among the, to make these officers in their names, as we see the like is done in manie other offices in the Common-wealth. But as an exception against this, they say: For, the regiment of the Church, as it ought to be farthest from all tyrannie, so it ought to be as farre from confusion and disorder.

This againe I grant them. But do they make this to be tyrannie, if a nie one man being a lawfull publike officer & Gouvernor, doo anie thing himselfe by vertue of his office, wherein he ioyne the other in the name of all, in ioynt authoritie of that action with him? If they count this tyrannie, they will make all the Apostles tyrants. But they say it is tyrannie, when one man contrarie to the ordinance of Christe, shal presume to doo anie thing in the Church, without the aduise of others that be godly & wise, & authorized by the consent of the Church. If he doo it contrarie to the ordinance of Christe, they say somewhat to the purpose.

But where p^roue they this ordinance of Christe, that a Bishop or a Pastor, that a Prince or a Magistrate (for these wordes of theirs stretch generallie, to the dooing of anie thing in the Church by anie one man, though it be not Church matters, nor be an Ecclesiasticall person, yet if he do it not onelie without the aduise, but though with the aduise, yet without the consent, or though with the consent, yet without the authorizing of the Church, that then it is tyrannie:) they haue not yet shewed anie such ordinance of Christe.

As for the wordes of Christe that they haue alledged, Math. 18. implie no such ordinance, (as we haue seene) and should be much wrested from the matters that he there speaketh of, to all things that should be done in the Church. This therefore is too lauishly cast forth, and would not onelie ouerthrow in Ecclesiasticall matters all elections and constitutions: but the verie preaching and administration of the Sacraments, besides the power and authoritie of all Christian Princes, in dooing manie other ciuill actions, done in the Church, though not Church matters, that if anie one man shall presume to doo anie thing in the Church, if they were not authorized by the people, or did the same without the aduise, yea, not authorized by the consent of the Church (vnderstanding by the Church, an assemblie of Seniors in the peoples name) they were all but tyrants, and all their dooings were mere tyrannie. Were not all Christian Princes, by these rash wordes, brought to as hard streights, as the poore Bishops?

The ouer-throw not onely of the B but of the Princes state

Preuention of confusion.

As for confusion on the other side, is preuented (they say) by the graue counsell and orderlie assemblies of Elders, vnto whome the Church hath committed her authoritie. And may it not be preuented as well, & perhaps much better in some estates, parts, and cases of the Church, if the Church (which withall she may as easilie doo) committed her authoritie in these things, to some one graue and godlie person, as to some few or manie persons: as when a whole Realme chooseth one to doo manie actions for them, is this tyrannie? And may not dissension and confusion arise among an assemblie of Elders also? Yea, may not confusion arise in the Church about the committing of this authoritie vnto this assemblie, and about the choosing of them? yea, and tyrannie also when they are chosen. For tyrannie is not alwaies the misgouernment of one: but now and then of moe, and of an assemblie also. As the 30 Tyrants in Athens, and the 10 at Rome, declared the experience. And the Regiment called oligarchia even the gouernment of a fewe, though in name distinguished from Tyrannie, yet in effect may be all one, if not farre the worse the more Tyrants there be: but the peoples confusion worst of all.

And

And verelie, we may as wel feare a tyrannie in these Seniors governing and not teaching, or a confusion among them, & a readie way to great confusion and division betwene themselves, or betwene them and the people, or among the people for them: than we neede feare anie tyrannie in a godlie and wise, either Prince or Bishop, or anie confusion or disorder in the people, that are obedient to their wise and godlie Government.

By this it may easilie appeare, what great defaulte there is in our Church, where those that are said to be ordeined Deacons, neuer purpose in their life to execute anie part of a Deacons office: neither are chosen for that ende: but onlie that within a short time after, they may be made Priests or Ministers, nothing in the worlde differing from the superstition of Poperie: where the office of Deacons, was conferred onelie as a steppe vnto Priesthood. As though it were necessarie, that euerie one which is ordeined an Elder, should first be a Deacon, and yet when he is made a Deacon, he is but an Idoll, yea scarce an Idoll of a Deacon, hauing no resemblance at all vnto a Deacon indeede, but that he is a man. This prophaning of Gods institution, God will not alwayes suffer vnpunished, especiallie when it is not maintained of ignorance or infirmitie, but defended agaynst knowledge, and vpon wilfulnesse.

Our Brethren complaining of the great default in our Church for Deacons, should not their selues commit so great a fault, as to burden the all in generall, with so apparant an vntruth; that those that are saide to be ordeined Deacons, neuer purpose in their life to execute anie part of a Deacons office. neither are chosen for that ende. For, although there be not now such vse of this office, concerning the distribution of goods to the poore, and attendance on the tables, as was then in vse: yet, seeing that Stephen can not be said to haue gone beyond the bounds of his office in preaching the word, being but a Deacon, (for, other publike Ecclesiasticall function, we read of none that he had, either before or after:) if he then that is now made a Deacon, haue the purpose (as manie haue) by the grace of God, to become after ward a Preacher or Minister of the word, and in the meane time, purpose withall for a while, to giue his attendance on the Ministers, that they may the better imploy themselves in the Ministerie of the word, and their selues learne to become the readier to be made Pastors: can it be trulie said of these, that they neuer purposed in their life to execute anie part of a Deacons office, neither are chosen for that ende?

But they say, this differeth nothing in the worlde from the superstition of Poperie, where the office of Deacons was conferred onelie as a steppe vnto Priesthood.

And becaufe (saith he) the Apostles did afterwarde, take out of the that which Paule faith, 1. Tim. 3. Let them be first tried, and fo minifter. And again, *They that in the Deaconfhip haue miniftred well, fhall get vnto thefelues

Thus notablie saith Kemnitius euen in confuting the Poperie y^e was wordes of paffion, which the apparance of the truth, yea, the contradiction in the wordes themfelues, doo fufficientlie confute. For, if he be made a Deacon, then he is a Deacon, or elfe he is not made a Deacon. And how is he become an Idoll ? Is there anie Idolatrie committed vnto him ? No, whereof is he an Idoll ? They fay, he is fcarce an Idoll of a Deacon. Do they meane, by fcarce an Idoll, that he is not an Idoll ? For, *quod vix fit,

*Gods infitution of Deacons
not prophane-
d.*

But as though there were herein a great prophaning of Gods Infitution : they tell vs, how God will not fuffer it vn timerly, efpecially when it is not mainteined of ignorance or infirmity, but defended againft knowledge, and vpon wilfulneffe. They fhould haue firft pzoued, that we prophane Gods institution of the Deacons office, & then bro-therlie

therlie admonish vs of these threates. God be praised, considering the ^{stirring} state and times of the Church now, our vse of this office is not prophane, ^{not prophane} but holie. If anie prophane it, it is a personall, not a reall prophanation. So did Iudas prophane the Apostleship, and Nicholas the Deacons-ship. We bring it no worse, than to the ende and purpose, to make it a triall and preparatiue, or as they terme it, a steppe vnto the Priesthood, or Eldership of the Word: for anie thing that they alledge to the contrary, wee neede so litle feare their threates of Gods punishment in this behalfe, that we rather hope in God, to continue it with his fauour & blessing.

Nevertheless, if any error can be shewed and proued; for my part, I may erre of ignorance and infirmitie, but by Gods grace, I will defend none against knowledge & vpon wilfulness, so it be clarelie proued out of the worde of God, not of men, be they neuer so famous. For if they bring men, as Caluine, Beza, Danæus, &c. Whome I confesse, in all thankfulness, to be in manie and great thinges, most singular instruments of Gods glorie, in this our age: yet (as we haue seene) wee may well oppose them to their owne selues, or as easilie reject them, as admit them, alledging not the scripture it selfe, but their onelie interpretation of it, except they firmelie proue their interpretation. Now on these slender premisses, our W^{orshipful}. berie w^{orshipful}. conclude, saying:

Therefore, the Collectors are more like to Deacons a great deale, The learned disc. than those that the Bishops make Deacons. For, first they haue after a Pa. 108 sort, election of the Church, whereas the other haue but the approbation of one man. And secondlie, they gather and distribute the common 109. almes vnto the poore, which the other neuer thinke of. But yet we may 110. not allowe them for lawfull Deacons indeede, because they are not alwayes indued with such qualities, as the Apostle requireth 1. Tim. 2. 1. Tim. 2. For they ought to be men of good estimation in the Church, full of the holie Ghost, and of wisdom that should be chosen. Act. 6. For, as it is an office of good credite, so ought the person to be of good reputation. Therefore saith Saint Paule, that those Deacons that Minister well, doe 1. Tim. 3. 13. get vnto themselves a good degree, and great libertie in the faith, which is in Christ Iesus.

Insomuch, that Saint Paule himselfe dooth salute in speciall wordes the Deacons, next to the Bishops or ouerseers in the Church of Philippi. We read also what worthie men were chosen to be the first Deacons: as Stephen the first Martyr, and Philip which afterward was an Euange- Philip. 1. 1. list, when the Church was disperfed through the persecution rayfed about Stephen. So that euerie ignorant contemptible person, is not to be allowed vnto this office: but as godly, wise, and worshipfull, as may conveniently be found in the congregation, may not thinke themselves too good to minister vnto Christe, in his members, and in the name of the Church.

Act. 6.

The electiō also of our Collectors, is too profane for so holy an office. We may read in the Historie of the Actes, Act. 6. with what grauitie, reuerence, and religiousnesse, the Apostles ordeyned Deacons, with prayer and imposition of handes. For these and such like causes, although the ordinarie Collectors haue some resemblance, with the Deaconship of the Church: yet we can not in all poynts allow them for Deacons: whose office trulic consisteth onelie in ministratiō to the poore, as wee haue shewed, in that they be Deacons.

Bridges.

The likening the collectors to the Doctors

If the Collectors bee more like to Deacons, and that a great deale, than those that the Bishoppes make Deacons: then haue our Brethren lesse cause to find fault, that not onelie they want Deacons, but they want those also, that are anie thing like, but haue no resemblance at all vnto them. And yet, let them take heede of that they said right now, of Gods punishing the prohaning of his Institution, resembling it thus to a prophane office. I speake in comparisō of Deacons, though we haue no other partes thereof, but these befoze mencioned. And if that parte of the Deacons office, so great and good considerations, according as the state of things are now vnder Christian Princes, & mens disposition in giuing almes, be comitted to those whom vsually we terme Collectors & Church wardens: what offence is this? So that, the poore may be the better provided for: and the Ministerie, and those that shoulde be tried and prepared thereunto, be lesse troubled and hindred with such collections and distributions: and if we reteine the name of Deacons, for those that exercise themselves in the one part, of this attendaunce, triall, and preparatiō, to the Ministerie of the Worde and Sacraments, and vse not the name of Deacon in these Collectors, or the like Officers: is this suche a matter?

Daneus in Christ. 1. sag. part. lib. 2. cap. 11.

Daneus in his Christian Introduction, wryting of Deacons, telleth how those that were first called Deacons: were afterwarde called Proctors of the poore. So Rom. lib. 8. cap. 12. and Stewards. Chalcedon. Concil. cap. 25. and 26. But afterwarde there were diuers sorts of these, according to the diuers manner of things, and of the poore, to whome they were deputed. Some therefore were called Nofotrophi, the nourishers of the sicke: other, Orphanotrophi, the nourishers of the fatherlesse: other, Gerontotrophi, the nourishers of the aged: other were called, Oeconomis, Stewards or Bayliffes, as appeareth, Ex titulo de sacrosancto Ecclesijs, & de Episcopis & Clericis lib. 1. codicis Iustiniani.

The office of Deacons altered by the holie auncient Church.

If therefore, the holie Churches, Bishoppes, and Clerkes, did in those dayes, conuert these Deacons into those offices, and leauing the name of Deacons, gaue them these peculiar names, according to their peculiar charges charges and offices: what great matter is it now, if these matters for ^{an of Dea-}collecting and distributing the almes for the poore, and the attendants ^{cons.} also on the poore, which (as Danæus saith) were called Parabolani, which were chosen to cure the diseased body of the poore weak ones, be appointed in stead of the Deacons, to such and to the like officers?

As for the election of the Deacons, whether it be done by all, many, few, or one, it is not of the substance of the office. Notwithstanding, though our Brethren thinke herein, these Collectors to be more like the first Deacons, yet they allow them not for lawfull Deacons in deede. No more do we, although some part of the office and business that was then, the Deacons be now by the foresaid Canons of the holy Churches, the Bishops, and the Clergy, and by the Imperiall sanctions, and also by the lawes and lawefull customes of this our Realme, committed to such persons and officers as we call Collectors, or by other names. But what reason alleage our Brethren, for their disallowing of them? because (say they) they are not alwayes indued with such qualities as the Apostle requireth, 1. Tim. 3. This reason is not sufficient from the qualities of the gifts and habites of the mind, to the qualities of the offices, and functions of the persons. For though the Apostle require, and they their selues ought to be indued with all such qualities of the minde, as are requisite to the qualitie of the office: yet, if any be an hypocrite, and deceiue them that chose him, rather on hope or apparence, then on knowledge, as the Apostles, and all the Christians were deceiued in Nicholas (as it is constantly reported) yet was he (being not so indued) as much a Deacon and officer in the nature of the office, as was Stephen, and Philip, and the rest, that were so indued. Yea, Iudas was a very Apostle, whome Christ knew to be a Diuell, and yet he chose and made him an Apostle: and if such horrible vices be no p[re]iudice of the offence of these offices, till they be as actually depriued, as they were first interest[er]d: much lesse may we say, that a man is not a lawfull officer, if he be not alwayes indued with such qualities, as the Apostle requireth: for, the Apostle requireth those qualities, not so much in respect of the essence of the office, as the duty of the officer.

serued, they might dispense the same. But our Brethren alleage this against the Collectors for the poore, as though they were vnwise and contemptible persons, eyther of none, or of no good estimation, and therefore no Deacons. Though we allow not such persons to be Deacons, nor so much to be Collectors for the poore, yet can we no more allow of these contemptible speeches to be thus generally bestowed on the office of the poore Collectors, if they were not of good credite in the Church, the Church would not, or should not credite them to receive the Collections, neither can we allow of their argument. If ye haue iudgements saith Saint Paule in matters perteyning to this life, appoynt them that are contemptible persons in the Church, and if contemptible persons may be appoynted iudges in matters perteyning to this life, when our Brethren limit the Deacons office only to the Collection and distribution of the goodes and almes for the poore, and attendance on the sicke and impotent persons, which are all matters perteyning to this life, why may not a poore contemptible man, if of honest conuerlation, though of small reputation or estimation in respect of worshipfull calling or wealth, for S. Paule meaneth not by contemptible, a man for unworthinesse deserving to be contemned, be as well a Deacon, that is, a minister or seruant to collect and distribute these things, as to be a iudge of them?

1. Tim. 3. 13.

And here our Brethren alleage that very sentence, 1. Tim. 3. 13. which we haue seene out of so many Protestant interpreters, how it serueth to proue that the office of Deacons was not only for collection and distribution of almes, or attendance on the poore, but also a triall and preparatiue to the higher calling of the Pastorship, as God willing, we shall yet further see anone.

The other testimony here cited, Phil. 1. vers. 1. insomuch that S. Paule himselfe doth salute in speciall words the Deacons, next to the Bishops or ouerseers in the Church of Philippi, is nothing against vs, but much against themselves. Haue not they alleaged this testimony, pag. 24. for Pastorall Elders? and how chance then that they place their gouerning Elders, next these Pastorall Elders, that they call Bishops, and not rather the Deacons before them, confessing themselves, that S. Paule doth salute them in speciall words next to the Bishops? had they rather follow the order of Danzus in placing the Deacons, then the order of Beza? if they had, how chance they preferre in their Tetrarchie, the Gouernors before them, and place not the Deacons also next the Bishops? what? and will they now recant, and with Beza make their gouernors Bishops? what constancie, and what order is in these things?

The examples also of Stephen and Philip, are both against them, whome we confesse to be worthy men, and that none but worthy men are are worthy to be chosen Deacons, if it fall out otherwise, it is in that of Euangelists, defect, wherein, if very Apostles themselves were deceyued (as it is sayd of Nicholas the conuert, and afterward a peruert) much more may other be deceyued, being nothing comparable to the Apostles, and hypocrites being more cunning now, then Nicholas then was, to nicholl and consin euen the most watchfull persons.

But (as we haue shewed) Stephen the first Martyr was a preacher of the word, and Philip ministred the sacrament of Baptisme. But they except against Philip, that he was afterward an Euangelist. And why do they not except if as well for Stephen, as for Philip? I am sure, if they could alleage but the like testimony for Stephen, as here they snatch at for Philip, we should be sure to heare of it. But they can not proue that euer Stephen was an Euangelist, vnderstanding the word, for a distinct function or office. But if Stephen might preach, and of consequence, minister the Sacraments, why might not all the residue of the Deacons preach as latofully as Stephen, though we should except Philip as an Euangelist? and yet it was no more debarre in him, then in Stephen, or in the other. For if Stephen might preach, being no Euangelist, but only a Deacon, why might not Philip too, were he Euangelist, or not. So that to make an exception, by reason of his being an Euangelist, were but a sophisticall euasion.

Stephen and Philip preachers and ministers of the Sacraments. Exception of Stephens Euangelistship.

And yet, if we shall examine the matter better, I thinke it will be ouer-hard for them to iustifie these wordes: Philip, which afterward was an Euangelist, when the Church was disperfed, through the persecution rayfed about Stephen. Can they proue that he was an Euangelist then? In deede it appeareth, Actes 21. verse 8. that he was an Euangelist, and entring (sayth Luke) into the house of Philip the Euangelist, which was one of the seauen, we abode with hym, but thys was many yeres after that tyme, when the Church was disperfed through the persecution rayfed about Stephen: but thys Philips preaching and baptizing, was immediately after that persecution, for so saith Luke, Actes 8. verse 1. &c.

Whether Philip were an Euangelist when he first preached and baptized.

And at that day, there was a great persecution rayfed against the Church, Actes 8. which was at Ierusalem, therefore they were all scattered abroad throughout all the Regions of Iudaa and Samaria, except the Apostles, and religious men dressed Stephen together, and they mourned sore for him: but Saule made hawke of the Church, and entring into houses, and drawing thence men and women, he cast them into prison; and they being disperfed, went about preaching the word of God, and when Philip came into the City of Samaria, hee preached Christ vnto them. Whereby it is manifest, that vpon that Persecution, Philip was one of them that being so disperfed, presently fell to Preaching.

And

Euangelist.

Caluine on

Act. 8.

And hereupon sayth Caluine, verse 5. Luke said, that they all preached the word of God, now he maketh mention of Philip alone, both by cause his preaching was more fruitfull & effectual, than the preaching of the rest, &c. ~~With~~ the rest were, (that Luke saith, were all scattered abroad, and being dispersed, went about preaching, except the Apostles :) Luke telleth not, but the name all, comprehendeth (no doubt) besides other that were Elders of the word, the other Deacons also that were Philips fellowes.

Caluine on
Act. 8.Philip promoted from a Deacon to be an E-
uangelist.

As for Philips Euangelistship, the text, Acts 21. 8. doth not inferre any necessitie, that he was Deacon and Euangelist both together at one time, which being admitted, notwithstanding is not materiall, except to confute our Brethren further, that these offices are not so distinct, but that they may be both at once in one man, without confusion. Howbeit, understanding it as Caluine noteth thereon: by this we may easily gather (saith he) that that Deaconship was an office which continued but for a time, by cause otherwise it had not bene lawfull for Philip to forsake Ierusalem, and to go to Cesarea: and in this place he is sent before vs, not as a voluntarie forsaker of his office, but as one to whome a greater and more excellent charge was committed. The Euangelists in my iudgement, were in the midst betweene Apostles and Doctors, for it was a function next to the Apostles, to preach the Gospell in all places, and not to haue any certaine place of abode, onely the degree of honor was inferior. For when Paule describeth the order of the Church, he doth so put them after the Apostles, that he sheweth that they haue more roomth giuen them where they may teach, than the pastors, who are tied to certaine places: therefore Philip did for a certaine time exercise the office of a Deacon at Ierusalem, whome the Church thought afterward to be a meete man, to whome the treasure of the Gospell should be committed.

By which testimonie of Caluine it should appeare, that Philip was not Euangelist while he was Deacon, but that his Deaconship ceased, when he was promoted to be an Euangelist, after his effectual preaching was tried, in that extraordinary occasion of his dispersion, being but yet new made a Deacon, and so (as S. Paule saith, in the testimony that our Brethren before cited, of those Deacons that minister well) he gave himselfe a good degree, and great libertie in the faith which is in Christ Iesus.

The qualities of Deacons.

The consequence that they gather hereupon, for the former part thereof, saying: so that euery ignorant contemptible person, is not to be allowed vnto this office, is for the truth of the matter, a good part of a good conclusion, but no whit for any part of the matter in question. For, we defend not that euery, or any ignorant contemptible person (understanding contemptible, as they here do, farre opposite to men of good estimation, mation, good credite, and good reputation, in vertue of life, or that want worshipful. all, or any of these qualities, ought to be allowed vnto this office. As for the other part of this consequence, but as godly, wise, and worshipfull, as may conueniently be found in the congregation, may not thinke themselves too good, to minister vnto Christ in his members, and in the name of the Church. This is too farre concluded: not, but that they should be godly, and wise, but, that it is neyther necessarie nor expedient, that as worshipfull as may conueniently be found, should be made Deacons: neyther Saint Peter, Actes 6. nor Saint Paule, 1. Tim. 3. among all the qualities of Deacons that they mention, reckon vp worshipfull.

I demie not, but that there are many worshipfull, and (as we tearme them) right worshipfull to, both wise and godly, yet were it not fit they should be made Deacons. For, although they say, as godly, wise, and worshipfull, as may conueniently be found, yet there is no conueniencie in it, to seke out persons of such worship for this Ecclesiasticall office. And what meane they hereby, to haue as worshipfull persons, as conueniently may be found, to be made their Deacons? would they promote our Gentlemen, Esquiers, and Knights (for these we call worshipfull) vnto this office? But as worshipfull men as they would haue to be made Deacons, they must be vnder those presbyters priests, or Elders, that they call gouernors. And what persons should these gouerning priests, or Elders be, that are no teachers, but onely gouernors? what should they be, as godly, wise, and honorable, as may conueniently be found, when those that must be made the Deacons vnder them, must be so worshipfull. But our Bzethzen sayd not so much of these gouerning Elders: but pag. 84. where they described what persons they ought to be, they said: First, that the Elders be elected and chosen by consent of the whole congregation, men of godlynes, and wisdom, in whome the whole Church reposeseth, &c. Here for these gouernors qualities, is but godlines and wisdom mentioned. But they will heere haue the Deacons to be both godly, wise, and worshipfull, and in deede, in most congregations, there are some worshipfull: so that, for worshipfull, in most congregations, we neede not want Deacons. But of honorable there is not such store among vs, and yet say they in the same pag. 84. There ought to be in enery Church a Consistorie or Seniorie of Elders or gouernors, which ought to haue the hearing, examining, and determining of all matters, pertaining to discipline and government of that congregation. So that those Seniors in the congregation, being perhaps neither honorable nor worshipfull, yet must they be the gouernors, and the worshipful being made the Deacons, must be gouerned vnder them. But in conclusion, be they worshipfull, or be they honorable,

It is not necessary that the Deacons should be as worshipfull men, as may conueniently be found. Gentlemen, Knights, & Esquiers, made Deacons. What manner persons the gouernors should be aboue these Deacons.

The promotion of these worshipfull Deacons.

Deacons,

Deacons, gouernors and all, must be vnder the Pastors, and the Pastors must be all equall with the Bishops, and euery one of them a Bishop too, and this should be the promotion of the worshipfull Deacons to be made their gouerning Seniors, and thinke themselves well promoted too. And why not? should they thinke themselves to be too good, to minister vnto Christ in his members, and in the name of the Church? No in deede, there ought not any to thinke themselves too good, to minister vnto Christ, were it in a meane officer: were it but (as Dauid said) to be a doorekeeper in the house of the Lord. Notwith, considering, that God hath vouchsafed to call them either to a higher, or to an other ciuill Ministerie vnder Christ, or to such vocations, as that withall they can not, or it is not so fitt they should intend, to the attendance of such contributions and distributions of money, their calling and worshipfull estate is not to be embased hereunto. Albeit peraduenture some would the gladlyer dispense a while with their worship, to be come with all their hearts such Deacons, as to haue the collecting, distributing, and dispensing of the Church goods in their fingerling. Of which worshipfull Deacons, I am affrayd, that there be already, some somewhere too many, and somewhat too busie in these deuises.

The Collectors office to pro-phane.

The election also of our Collectors, they say, is too prophane for so holy an office. And why then do they so prophanely liken it therunto? only because in this part thereof, concerning collecting and distributing money, there is some likenes: not considering the difference in the other parts, but making them no parts at all of this office, as to be trials and preparatiues vnto the Pastorship, which S. Paule requireth, euen in the testimony that they cite, 1. Tim. 3. 13. is id est maior dignitas, for they that haue ministered (or Deaconed it) well, get vnto themselves a good degree: which (as we haue seene) is also vnderstood for the degree of the pastorall Elder, though Caluine expound it, only for greater honor. As for the grauitie, reuerence, and religiousnesse, wherewith the Deacons were ordeyned of the Apostles, was god and godly. Vnto also the prayer, and imposition of hands at the ordeyning of them, with grauity, reuerence, and religiousnesse, which religiousnesse and imposition of hands, argueth more, (and more holy) vnto of this office, tending to religion it selfe, than the only collecting or distributing of worldly goods reacheth vnto. And therefore, we conclude thus farre, with these our Brethren, that for these and such like causes, although the ordinary Collectors haue some resemblance, with the Deaconship of the Church, yet we can not in all poynts allow them for Deacons. Thus farre we agree, saue that in this resemblance, they presume too farre, to enter comparison with our Deacons. But in that which followeth, we flatly dissent, when as they say, whose office truly consisteth only in the ministration vnto the poore, as we haue have shewed, in that they be Deacons. This indeede they haue sayde (in effect) before, but shewed it they haue not by any one necessary prooff, to wit of a Deacons office. Simonis, or example thereof, and thereon, I put me againe to the indifferent readers verduict. Neither must they thinke here to carry away the matter thus by auouching it (so) the more perswasive credits of the reader) with this asseueration truly: so, it is not truly sayd of them, but veris vntuly (be it spoken with their reuerence) that the Deacons office consisteth only in ministration vnto the poore, in that they be Deacons, so; besides the manifest examples not only of Philip, in whome they finde a shift, that he preached not, in that he was a Deacon, but in that he was an Euangelist, which shift serueth them not in Stephen, and besides all the most cleare testimonies before cited: yet because our Bishops stand more perhaps on the testimonies of Beza, let vs see also what Beza saith hereto, who vpon 1. Tim. 3. verse 8. & 9. sayth thus: Deacons, these are they that haue the care of the poore, of whome we haue spoken, Philip. 1. and oftentimes in other places, holding the mysterie of the faith, that is, the Euangelicall doctrine, which truly is indeede called mysterium, a mystery (or secret) bycause flesh and bloud reuealeth it not. For some of the Deacons partes were also in teaching, so often as it was necessarie, as appeareth out of Stephen and Philip. If this be true, that Beza heere, (with the like asseueration, truly, that our Bishops vse) doth thus expressly auouch, that there consisted, or were, nonnulla etiam partes diaconorum in docendo, some parts also of the Deacons in teaching: and that such teaching, as these examples of Stephen and Philip do inferre, which is playne preaching: then is it not truly heere said by these our learned discoursing Bishops, that the Deacons office consisteth only in the ministration vnto the poore. Nayther doth it any whit auaille, to come in with this cautele, saying, in that they be Deacons, as though they might do it in some other respect, but not in respect, that they were Deacons, so; Beza cutteth off that quirk also, and flatly saith, that some of the Deacons partes consisted or were in teaching. And although Caluine vpon this place, ver. 9. say, that they haue not the office of teaching (which words are not, vnderstanding it so) the ordinary office of teaching, as is the Pastors) neuerthelesse (saith he) it were too absurd, that they should stayne a publike person in the Church, and be rude in the Christian faith, especially whē as there hapneth oftentimes a necessity of giuing warning, & of comforting: nisi paucibus suis deesse velint, except they will sayle to do theyr partes, so that, by Caluine also, although they be not ordinary teachers by their office of Deaconship, yet it pertaineth to the parts of their office, to giue the selus also to the study of teaching, & knowledge of the mystery of the faith in doctrine, & of publike admonishing & comfortung, which are principal points & partes in euery preacher, that as often of Deacons. often as there is neede, and that (he saith) hapneth oftentimes, so oftentimes may the Deacons teach or preach: yea, if they should not, or could not do it, they should faile of their parts: and how then, is not this a part also of the Deacons office?

*Aretius in 1.Tim.3.9.
The Deacons office vnder the Bishop.*

Aretius likewise writing on this place, saith: He giueth precepts of Deacons, in whome he requireth those vertues which he attributeth to a Bishop, and therein certaine vertues specially. Moreouer, I vnderstand Deacons after the Bishop, that is, a chief inferior minister of the Church, which is put to the Bishop in teaching and administring the Sacraments, in writing also, and in caring for other things, as to visit the sicke, to attend on the almes for the poore, &c.

1.Tim.3.11.*

Heere, if he should meane a Pastor, then he maketh a Pastor not to be equall, but to be inferior to a Bishop, if he meane not a Pastor, but simply (as he saith) a Deacon: then he attributeth threes other parts, and that principall parts, teaching, ministring the Sacraments, and writing to the office of a Deacon: besides, visiting the sicke, and attendance on the almes for the poore. And on the 12. verse, he saith: In the first place, he speaketh of another kind of Deacons, that is to wit, which administred the Church goodes: these were first ordeyned of the Apostles, Actes 6. Heereupon it seemeth, that euery where in other Churches it was obserued, that certaine Deacons, chosen out of the Elders, should attend on the Ministers, vnto whome, the treasure of the Church was committed: these had the care of the poore, of the straungers, of the widowes, of the fatherlesse, of the sicke, and distributed vnto them according to the proportion of the goodes, and the counsell of the Elders. Heereupon, Ambrose thinketh, that in euery City there ought to be one Bishop, two Deacons of the first kinde, which withall should sometimes teach, and 7. of the second order, which should procure or haue the care of the Church goodes. We haue Ministers, and two also of the first kind of Deacons, but of the second kind none, bycause that part is made ciuill, & administred of the policike magistrate, thus saith Aretius.

*Bullingerus
1.Tim.3.13.
Ambrose.

Bullinger also vpon the same place, 1. Tim. 3. 13. writeth thus: Deacons, which also Ambrose thinketh are the Ministers of the Bishops, and as it were a member and spring of the Bishops: these verely are found in the Scripture to be two kyndes or functions: for some beeing gouernors of the Churches treasure, beare the care of the poore, as is to see Actes, Chap. 6. of whome also this place in all points may be expounded. But other, studie learning, honest disciplines, and the holy Scripture, and therefore are continually exercised in holy thinges. So that sometimes beeing preferred to the Ecclesiasticall Offices of the Church of God, they do verie much profite: for, of these, some are chosen the Bishoppes, or the Priestes, Ministers of the of the Churches. It was also receiued in the time of the Prophetes, to nourish vp yong men vnto the holy mysteries. The historie of Samuel is knowne. It is deliuered also that there were schooles both in Ierico which Helizaeus gouerned, and also in Ramoth Galaad. The Schollers of these Schooles were called both Nazarei, and the Sonnes of the Prophets. Euery where in the Prophetes there come to hand, notable shewes of these thinges. And verily, we shoulde not well prouide for Religion and studie of Godlines, without discipline and such kind of Schooles. Foorthwith therefore, from the infancy of the Christian faith, the Apostles being the Masters and the authors, excellent wittes began to be nourished, and men to be brought vp, of whome there was hope that being planted of our suncestors, they would in time with doctrine and life adorne the Church vnto a ripe fruite.

To the same effect, though somewhat differing, and more at large, writeth Hyperius, alleaging likewise St. Ambrose for these two kindes of Deacons: as we haue already seene. But (be it spoken in all our reuerence of so notable men) if they somewhat (me thinkes) mistake St. Ambrose in this matter, whose wordes are these. Hee that commaundeth Deacons to be chosen with so great care, whome it is apparant to bee the Ministers of the sacred Preestes: what woulde he haue the Bishops to be? but (as he saith himselfe) vnreprouable, not hauing publike trafike, filthie or vile gaines. For he knoweth, that men do therefore trafike, that they might get gaines. But he saith, that these gaines are filthy, if vnder the Godly profession, they studie for gaines. For when he maketh shewe of him-selfe to be pure, he is founde out to be filthy.

But after a Bishop, he setteth vnder him the ordination of a Deacon. Wherefore nisi quia episcopi & Presbyteri vna ordinati sunt, vterque enim sacerdos. But because, the ordination of the Bishop, and of the Presbyter, (Preeste or Elder) is one, for eyther of them is a sacerdotall (or sacred) Preeste. But the Bishop is the first, that euery Bishop might be a Presbyter (Preeste or Elder) but not euery presbyter (Preeste or Elder) a Bishop. For he is the Bishop, which is the first (or cheefe) among the Presbyters, (Preestes or Elders. To conclude, hee signifieth that Timothy was ordeyned a Presbyter, (Preeste or Elder): But because hee had no other before him, he was a Bishop. Whereupon he sheweth also, in what manner he shoulde ordeyne a Bishop for it was not right or lawfull, that the inferior might ordeyne the greater. For no man giueth that that he hath not receyued, &c. And anone after, he saith: Let the Deacons bee the husbandes of one wife, gouerning well their children and their owne houses. For they that haue ministred well, get vnto them selues a good degree, and great confidence in the sayth which is in Christe Iesu.

Those things that he spake of lesse, in the ordeining of the deacon-ship, hee hath nowe set them vnder, and also sheweth that they ought their selues to bee the Husbendes of one Wife, to the ende that they may bee chosen to the Ministerie of God, that haue not gone beyonde the constitution of God. For God decreed one Wife vnto a man with which wife hee shoulde be blessed. For none is blessed with the second. Who if they gouerne their children well and their houses, that is, their seruantes and domesticalles, they may be made worthy of the sacred preesthood.

I set not downe these wordes of Saint Ambrose, that I allowe of his opinion against the second mariage, or prohibition from the vse of the first, in those that are Deacons. But I allenge him, to shewe howe hee is here misse-vnderstoode, to make two kindes of Deacons: Whereas in very deede heere hee properly rather acknowledgeth but one kinde of Deacon, which hee calleth the Minister or attendant on the Preeste or Elder. Yes sayth in-deede: But nowe there ought to bee seuen Deacons, and some fewe Presbyters (Preestes or Elders,) that throughout the Churches there may bee twayne, and but one Bishop in a City. And that, he maketh heere but two distinct kindes of Ecclesiasticall ordeynings: the one of the Presbyters, (Preestes or Elders): the other of the Deacons.

As for the Bishops, hee maketh them to bee of the same ordeyning, that are the Presbyters, Preestes or Elders, but the difference to bee in the dignitie of them. What the Bishop is the first or cheefe aboue all the rest, and but one Bishop in a Citie: whereas the Elders are moe, and all in dignitie inferiour to the Bishop. And these Elders not to bee Gouvernours not medling with teaching, but sacred or sacerdotall Elders, both teaching and ministring the Sacramentes. As for the Deacons, hee maketh them all, and alwayes so attendant on the Ministerie of the Bishops and Sacerdotal Elders, and so continually giuen to Prayers: that he woulde haue, though to be married, yet altogether to abstaine from their wiues. Which though it were a greates overshooting in so holy a father, and direct contrary to the State of matrimonie, and to the lawe of God, and to the examples of all the holie auncient Preestes, Prophets and Apostles, and of the Bishops and Pastoral Elders (as wee haue seene): yet it clearly sheweth, howe these Deacons were employed, not onely in the ministracion vnto the poore: but also in the attendance on the Bishop and on the Pastoral Elders in the deuine seruice, and vpon necessitie or occasion, to exercise the same their selues also.

In so much that Hyperius calleth the Pastoral Elders, and all vnder the the Bishops by the name of Deacons, though hee distinguished Deacons the Deacons into two kinds. office.

All which Testimonies, both of this ancient Father, and other so notable late writers, duly considered: it appeareth, that this heere is not truely sayde of our Brethren, that, truely the Deacons office con-sisteth onely in ministracion vnto the poore, in that they be Deacons.

There ariseth oftentimes in the Church diuers controuersies, which cannot bee otherwise expressed, pertaining to the state of the whole Church, then by a generall assemblie of the pastors of that Church, which is called a synode, or Generall counsell.

*The lear-

That diuerse controuersies oftentimes, and to oftentimes, arise in the Church: with heartie grieues therent, and with present experience, we cannot but confesse it and lament it. And if licence be permitted thus, to preach and print what euerie one please, in Discourssing vpon the Ecclesiasticall Government: when will controuersies cease, if not, increase daile more and more? but what meane they by this? can not these controuersies bee repressed, nor yet expressed otherwise, than by a general assemblie of the pastors of that church, which is called a synode or generall counsaile? Can they not be so much as expressed without a synode, nor without a Generall counsaile? Howe could they haue arisen into controuersy if they had not bene before expressed? Yea, the light and truth of them, by other meanes also then by a synode, and that a generall Counsaile, maye both be expressed, and the controuerof them repressed too, as many haue bin oftentimes, by the Learned Discourfers writings of the Fathers.

And what means they againe, by these wordes: There ariseth oftentimes in the Church diuerse controuersies, which cannot be otherwise expressed, pertaining to the state of the whole Church, than by a generall assembly of all the Pastors of that Church, which is called a Synode or generall Councell?

Our Br. intricate speeches.

If those controuersies pertain to the state of the whole Church, why say they, that they can not bee otherwise expressed than by a generall assemblie of all the Pastors of that Church? Are all the Pastors of that Church, where the controuersies pertaining to the whole Church doe arise, the whole Church? or doe they meane, that a generall assemblie of all the pastors of that Church, which Church is called a Synode or Councell, is the whole Church? and are they also the Pastors of the Synode; or rather Pastors of their particular and seuerall Churches: as they sayde better, before, but members onely of the Synode or holy assembly? and so do they say, this is a Synode or generall Councell? Every generall Councell may be called a Synode: but every Synode cannot be called a generall Councell. These things, (me thinks, best spoken vnder their correction) might haue bene, if not more Learnedly Discoursed: yet more clearly expressed, that wee might haue better understood their meaning, and so wee might giue them (if neede bee) further answer.

The seuerall Churches driuen to pray for ayd of the Synode.

Disagreements of Synods.

Also there bee diuerse cases, wherein seuerall Churches are driuen to pray the ayde of the Synode, where matters can not bee determined among them-selues. For this cause the holy Ghoste hath ordeyned these holy assembles, with promise that they beeing gathered together, in the name of Christe, hee him-selue will bee among them.

In case this our Brethrens platfome were in place: wee shoulde then haue more than good store of these diuerse cases, in every seuerall Church, and might soone bee brought into such a doubtfull and pitifull case, that wee shoulde bee driuen to pray the ayde not of the Synode so much, as of any body, if any but God allonely, in so diuers cases coulde relieue vs. But now we put case, that in diuers cases, the seuerall Churches are driuen to pray the ayde of the Synode, where matters can not be determined among them-selues: will the seuerall Churches be all of them content, with whatsoever that Synode shall determine, of whome they pray ayde?

And what if the Synode can not agree among them-selues: and some determine this way, and some that way? or one Synode determine the cleane contrarie to another? when shall the cases bee fully determined among them? and hath it not bene so? I speake not against Synodes

in the Church, for determining of diuers cases and controuersies, very needfull, and very excellent vse and remedie. *The suspicious euils

Nazianzene sayde, that hee neuer sawe good effect in any. But I speake onely of the state of them, as our Bishops would haue them ordered, and for that, when euery seuerall Church had set vp this Ecclesiasticall Gouernment and tetrarchie, that that they haue here in this Learned Discourse prescribed, when wee should haue diuers cases, & diuers controuersies, diuers wayes still arising: It is not their Synodes that could determine, appease or stoppe them, if they made them not more diuers and contentious then before, or raised not diuers controuersies and cases more among them.

The holy Ghoste (I graunt,) ordeyned holy assemblies. And the promise, that they beeing gathered together in the name of Christe, *The promise of scendeth to

hee him-selfe will bee among them: stretcheth also vnto the holy assemblies of Godly Synodes and Councelles. But did not our Bishops here apply this sentence of our Sauour Christ, Mat. 18. Pag. 81.
vnto the seuerall assemblies & consistories of the Gouerning Elders?

Yea, that place descendeth downe euen to two or three, and that also wheresoever. And yet may two or three, yea their consistorie in their seuerall Churches or assemblies, by this their owne confession, haue diuers cases among them, that (I perceiue) all they may bee so cum-bred withall, that they may bee driven to pray the ayde of the Synode, and may not a Synode, yea, a generall counsell disagree, or agree, and not conclude in diuerse cases: and graunt they bee gathered together in the name of Christe, and that hee is among them too: Howebeit, according to such measure of his grace and knowledge, that perhaps they may not haue all cases reuealed vnto them, or not agree vpon them.
And yet are Synodes and Counsellors a verie excellent good meanes, if they be gathered together in his name indeede, and that it please God to open also those cases vnto them. But now we to let vs vnderstande further, of whome this Synode shall consist, and who shall determine these cases and gouerne the same: they proceede and say.

With the Synode, the Pastor hath authoritie to determine, concerning the regiment of the Church. Wherefore wee haue to inquire, of *The learned disc.

& 113.*
what persons a Synode doth consist: for which intent we finde in the historic of Actes. 15. 6. That when a greate controuersie arose concerning the ceremonies of the Lawe, whether they were to bee vsed, by those Christians that were conuerted of the Gentiles: the Apostles and Elders came together to consider of this matter: and that the people was not excluded, appeareth by the twelfth verse, the whole multitude, beeing perswaded by the argumentes alleaged by Peter, held in Synodes. helde their peace and quietlie heard Paule and Barnabas, declare what signes and wonders, God had wrought by them amongst the Gentiles. And leaste yee should vnderstande the multitude in that place, for the multitude of the Apostles, it followeth in the 22. verse. Then it pleased the Apostles and Elders, with the whole Church to choose certain men &c.

By which scripture we learne, that the Synode consisteth principally of pastors, Elders, Teachers, and men of Wisedome, Iudgement, and grauitie, as it were of necessarie regents. For, although the whole multitude came together, yet the Apostles & Elders came together to inquire, and consider of the matter in controuersy, the multitude heard, and for their better instruction and modestie, submitted their consent, vnto the determination of the Apostles and Elders. All mens reasons were heard. For there was greate disputation, but the authoritie of Gods worde preuayled, good order was obserued. So, after the matter was throughly discussed, by the godlie argumentes, alleaged by Peter and Barnabas and Paule, the controuersie was concluded, by the sentence of Iames, to whome that prerogatiue was graunted, not of singular authoritie, but for orders sake.

The Pastors
authoritie
with the Synode.

The Superior authority of calling Councelles.

The auncient Emperors
authoritie
heerein.

There are three points touched by our Brethren. First, for the Pastors authoritie. Secondlie, of what persons the Synode consistes, and thirdly, who hath the prerogatiue therein aboute all the residue. And first, for authority of the Pastor, they say: with the Synode, the Pastor hath authoritie to determine, concerning regiment of the Church. They begin heere (mee thinkes, vnder correction) verie preposterously, with the authority to determine in the Synode. Whereas more orderlie, they might haue begun, with the beginning of the Synode, and who hath authoritie to summon or call the same. By authoritie of which summons, they ought to assemble and meete together at time and place assigned, and to direct them an order to proceede by. For, if the seuerall Churches and Bishops thereof, be (as our Brethren say) all alike equal in the authoritie of these thinges: then hath no one among them any authoritie to prescribe these thinges to any other, and much lesse to many other, or to all the seuerall Churches and Bishops in a kingdome. The godly and auncient Emperors and Kinges, had the cheefe partes of this authoritie in their Dominions, ouer all Bishops and Churches, in the olde time. All the foure generall Councelles were summoned, and assigned both time and place, yea and the reuerende manner of their proceedinge boyde of friuolous contentions, by the godly Emperours, Constantinus, Theodosius, Martianus, &c. Besides diuers prouinciall counsellies.

All which, is here not expressed, but suppressed by our Brethren, And

I marvelle what they meane hereby. Is it to put the Christian Prince out of this authoritie, and to take and part it among these tetrarkes, or to giue it to some one or fewe among them. besides the Prince, the Prince hauing so sayre presidents to the two for it, in the foresayd examples, yea, in the paterne of the olde Testament, by Moses, Iosue, Samuel, David, Solomon, Iosaphat, Iosias, &c.

But of this we shall (God willing) anone see further, what they giue or leaue to the Prince, when we shall come thereto.

And since that heere, we must skip ouer all the beginning and processe of the synode or councell, and come to the determining or ending of it, and the controuersies in it: Let vs see, vpon whome our Brethren will now bestowe this authoritie. The Pastor (say they) hath authority to determine. Whome meane they heere by the pastor, any one pastor alone? so that they say the pastor, not the pastors, or haue the pastors onellie this authoritie? No (say they) but with the synode. And hath the synode then, the authoritie of determining with the pastor? they sayde before, that in their severall consistories, the Elders or Gouernours had both the hearing, examining and determining of all matters pertaining to discipline and gouernment of the congregation, pag. 84. and the matter heere in hande is also of the authoritie to determine concerning regiment of the Church.

To whom the autho-ritie to determine doth belong.

But what if the doubtfull and diuerse cases bee of doctrine, and not onellie of the Regiment of the church? shall the Elders or Gouernours that are no Teachers nor pastors determine then those cases (as they say heere) with the synode the pastor hath authoritie to determine: whome meane they by this word synode, which heere they doe thus distinguish from the pastor, though in this authority they ioyne the one with the other?

Wherefore (say they) we haue to inquire, of what persons a synode doth consist.

This indeede is the second point here touched, and it is necessarie to be considered. For if the synode shoulde consist of such persons as bee pastors: then they can not say, the pastor hath authoritie with the synode, the pastors them-selues being the synode, so that were as much as to say, a man hath ioint authoritie with him-selue.

And did not they their selues confesse before, even on the other side of the leafe, that a generall assemblie of all the pastors, is called a synode or generall councell? is it called so? and is not so? and if it bee so, How is not the assemblie of the pastors themselves the synode it selfe?

But of whome nowe (if not of the pastors,) doe they make a synode to consist?

For which intent (say they) wee finde in the history Acts. 15. That when a con-

ning in a controuerſie aroſe concerning the ceremonies of the Lawe, whether they were to bee vſed, by thoſe Chriſtians that were conuerted of the Gentiles: the apoſtles and the Elders came together to conſider of this matter.

The aſſemblie of the Elders.

Actes. 15.

Although this comming together of the Apoſtles and Elders, were not ſuch an aſſembly as vsuallie wee call a Synode or Councell, and as our Brethren alſo vſe the ſame terme, ſo; the aſſembly or comming together of the Elders of diuerſe ſeueral Churches: but is ſpoken of the comming together of the Elders of the church of Ieruſalem: yet I accept of this example, and it is very fitte ſo; the office of the perſons, of whom not onely the aſſemblies of ſeueral churches, among themſelues, but alſo of Synodes and Counſelles doth conſiſt. Wherein beſides the Apoſtles, is mentioned the comming together of the Elders.

Matter of doctrin &
of diſcipline

And although in this example, there bee a greate diuerſitie of the caſe, betwene matter in controuerſy concerning the regiment of the church and concerning the vſe of the Lawe, which is no ſmal point of Doctrin: yet ſith they bring this controuerſie ariſing ſo; Doctrin, to be an example, ſo; the like determining of the church regiment: I am content alſo to admit it.

The Elders
Act. 15
were Paſto-rall.

The Apoſtles (ſay they) and Elders came together to conſider of this matter.

True it is. But theſe Elders (as wee haue ſeene by Caluines owne collection on the ſame) were paſtorall Elders: and therefore the conſidering of this matter did properly belong vnto them. But, had the people any ioint authoritie with them in the conſideration thereof?

multitude
did at the aſſembly.

And that the people (ſay they) was not excluded, appeareth by the twelſe verſe, the whole multitude, being perſwaded by the arguments alleaged by Peter, helde their peace and quietly heard Paule and Barnabas declare what ſignes and wonders God had wrought by them amongſt the Gentiles.

There appeareth as yet nothing to the preſent purpoſe: either to proue of what perſons the Synode conſiſteth, or that the ſynode & the Paſtor haue ioint authoritie in determining of the controuerſie.

Who are ment by the multitude,

And leaſt (ſay they) yee ſhoulde vnderſtande the multitude in that place, for the multitude of the Apoſtles, it followeth in the 22. verſe. Then it pleaſed the Apoſtles and Elders, with the whole Church to chooſe certain men &c.

This cauſeth, that we ſhoulde not vnderſtand the multitude in that place, for the multitude of the Apoſtles: is not materiall. For, although by the name of the multitude in many places may well bee vnderſtoode the people, and not the Apoſtles: yet in that place, why may not both the Elders and the Apoſtles be comprehended, pen,

Then, Peter also, that spake before, and James that spake after, and all that were there in presence, except onely Paule and Barnabas that declared those signes and wonders. When as the text saith after Peters oration: Then all the multitude kept silence, and heard Barnabas and Paule declare what signes and wonders God had wrought by them among the Gentiles. What is here, but hearing and keeping silence while the other speak: upon which wordes sayth Beza: But vnderstand by the name of the multitude, not the whole Church, which as yet was not wholie ioyned to them: but the whole assemblie of the Apostles and of the Elders, as appeareth aboue out of the sixt verse. Whom he distinguisheth from the Church, verse 4. and annone after verse. 22. So flatts contrary heerein, these our Brethren are to Beza. Hee sayth, that by the name of the multitude in that place, the Apostles are comprehended, and not the whole Church or people: and he commaundeth the reader so to vnderstand the word Multitude, for the Apostles and Elders: and they say, leaste yee shoulde vnderstand the multitude in that place, for the multitude of the Apostles it followeth in the 22. verse, &c. Which very verse, also Beza citeth to his vnderstanding, and so, they imple two or three playne contradictions all at once, against Bezacs assertion and his reasons.

But since Bezacs authoritie can preuaile no further, let it go as our Brethren here will haue it, and let vs vnderstand the word Multitude, in that place, not for the Apostles, but for the people.

What of this? haue the people soynt authoritie with the Pastors in determining of controuerxies? they say, it followeth in the 22. verse. Then it pleased the Apostles & Elders, with the whol Church, to chosse certain men, &c.

What is this to the purpose, for the authority of determining the controuersy? Can they gather hereupon, that because afterwards, the whole Church liked well of the determination, and agreed that those Letters shoulde be sent, wherein the matter before determined was comprehended, and that to this writing, and sending, & choosung of the messengers, they also gaue their assent: that therefore they had soynt authority or any interest in determining of the controuerxies? If our Brethren think they haue, because not onely the Letter is written in all their names, verse 23. The Apostles, the Elders, and Brethren, vnto the Brethren that are at Antiochia, &c. But also that the decree it selfe runneth soyntly in all their names, verse, 28. It seemeth good to the holy Ghoste and to vs, that we shoulde not lay any more burthen vpon you, besides these necessary thinges: To this Beza answereth in 23. verse: On these wordes, and Brethren: saying: The vulgar translation omitteth the copulative coniunction, and that naughely. For the Apostles and Elders are here manifestly distinguished, from the rest of the assemblie; when as now standing the Epistle is written in the common sentence and name of all, that is to wit, the whol mat-referred the matter to the iudgement of the Apostles and the rest of the Doctors and Teachers: they do nowe also subscribe to their decree. ~~out~~ Here Caluine sayth, the Apostles and the rest of the Doctors or Teachers, speaking of them whome the text calleth the Elders. So that, heere the Elders are not gouernors which are no teachers, but teaching go-uernors, which haue the Iudging, decreeing, and determining of this case in controuersie, in which authoritie the people did not intermeble, but onely did modestly subscribe thereunto. And on the other side (saith Caluine) the Apostles did shewe some token of their equity, in that they set downe nothing concerning the common cause of all the godly, without admitting the people. For assuredly this tyranny did spring from the pride of the Pastors, that those thinges which appertaine to the whole Church, are subiect (the people being excluded) to the will (I will not say, to the lust) of a fewe.

 Actes. 15.

Heere he worthily reprobeth the pride and tyrannie of the Popish Pastors in utterly debarring of the people, and yet imposing on them what decrees they pleased. Which thing (God be prayes) it is euident; that we do not, but so farre as this example warranteth, doe in like manner admit the people to vnderstande: our proceeding and decrees in the Synode or Councell; whome also it becommeth not to disobey, (except they finde the decrees to be against the worde of God) but to submitte them-selues in all modesty vnto the authority of the decrees, that the Pastors (so) so againe he calleth the Elders, whome before he called Doctors or teachers) shall haue determined about any controuersies, so farre as concerneth the common cause of all the Godly. But what is our Brethren gather heereupon?

The peoples

 obedience to the Pastors decrees.

By which Scripture (say they) wee learne, that the synode consisteth principallie of Pastors, Elders, teachers, and men of wisdom, indgement and grauitie, as it were of necessity regents.

Of whome
 our Br.
 make the Synode to consist Foure kind of persons,
 Pastors, Elders, Teachers, men
 of wisdom.
 &c.

They are now come to the point, whereof they sayde before, that they had to inquire, of what persons a synode doth consist. And heere they make it to consist of foure kindes of persons, Pastors, Elders, Teachers, and men of Wisdom, Iudgement and gra-uitie.

By Pastors, we haue seene already what they meane; and also by Teachers. But what meane they heere by these Elders? what are placed after Pastors

Pastors and before teachers? Whether the Elders not teaching, whom they called Gouernors, are placed in the thirde place of the Tetrarchie; Whom they that, they tell not. But if they meane them by the name of Elders, meane here whereas Caluine by Elders vnderstandeth Pastors and teachers: then by Elders. are they very pregnant Schollers, that by this Scripture can learne that, which this scripture (euen by Caluines teaching) doth not teach them.

Regents.

Deacons mentioned in the Synode.

But where are our Deacons here become? what are they shrunke in the wetting? or are they excluded out of the Synode, which before made up the full tetrarchie? or are they included in this last indefinite sort, men of wisdom, Iudgement and grauitie? But these are not named as any officers at all, but generally they are called men: and therefore, more likely, that by this name of men, they meane the people or the whole multitude, which (they sayde before,) was not excluded.

But though these men haue no speciall office: yet are they here adorned with three excellent qualities, Wisdom, Iudgement, and grauity, wherein commonly the common people of the whole multitude doth not excell, except some rare and odd persons among them, namely, in the diuerse cases and controuersies of doctrine: or be it but in these controuersies of Ecclesiasticall Regiment, and such like. Yea, woulde to God the Pastors, Elders and Teachers, not onely such as are for the most part, but also (besides that I wishe vnto my selfe) would God that euen such as these our Brethren, that haue compiled this Learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall Gouerment, were so well furnished in these three pointes, as they, and we all should be. For (I hope) when they say thus in general, and euen of wisdom, Iudgement and grauitie, that they do not so meane the people, that they leperate these three vertues, from the Pastors and teachers.

Who are meant by the men of Wisdom, Iudgement, and grauity.

But howe now shall the Synode consist of all these foure sortes of persons, whether they exclude Deacons or include them: for sooth say they, the Synode shall consist of these, as it were of necessary regentes.

Necessary Regents in the Synode.

What, and shall all these foure sortes be Regents? and necessary regents, the whole multitude, people and all? And that in the authoritie of determining the diuerse cases of the Churches regiment, and the diuerse controuersies of religion? For, such matters were handled in the assembly holden at Ierusalem. Actes 15. But both Caluine and Beza haue debarred them of this: yea, our Brethren (when it cometh to the pinch,) eate this worde againe, and conclude cleane contrary, saying:

For although the whole multitude came together, yet the apostles & Elders of the Synode. Elders came together, to inquire and consider of the matter in controuersie.

Wherefore the Pastors, wherefore the whole multitude came together. A ha, (Brethren) go to then, they came not together all, but heere are two kindes: ends of their comming together.

The apostles and Elders came together to inquire, and consider of the matter in controuersie.

What, and no further?

Yes, and to giue the determination of the same.

Pea forsooth, this is indeed a Councel-like and authentick comming together, whereupon a Synode doth consist. But wherefore then came the multitude together?

The multitude heard, and for their better instruction and modestie, submitted their consent vnto the determination of the Apostles and Elders.

And was this then all that the multitude had to doe heerein? what is this to the authority of determining? nay it reacheth not heere so far by this their limitation, as to the authoritie of inquiring or considering of the controuersies. But, since it is sayde before, that, with the Synode, the Pastor hath authoritie to determine concerning regiment of the Church: and the people or multitude haue nothing to doe heerein, being not Pastors, Elders nor teachers: it plainly followeth, that the people or multitude are none of those persons, of whome a Synode doth consist. Which is the thing that our Brethren here woulde proue, and yet in discussing the matter, cleane confute it selfe.

How our Br. confute themselves.

But they say, all mens reasons are heard.

The hearing of all mens reasons.

And good reason too, (say I) that all their reasons shoulde be hearde, that spake and reasoned. But who were they? any that came, not to determine, nor yet to consider, nor so much as to inquire of the matter; but onely to heare to submit their consent? is their necessarie regencie come downe to this submission?

Tell say they, there was great disputation.

The disputation. Caluine.

And who (say I) disputed? Caluine, on these wordes: and when there was great disputation, answered: though there were choyse made of graue men, and such as were teachers of the Church, yet could they not by and by agree.

Gods word preuayled. Good order obserued. The controuersie concluded by Iames his sentence.

But (say they) the authority of Gods worde preuayled.

And we graunt, so it ought alwayes to do.

Good order (say they) was obserued.

So woulde it not (I feare) if the orders that our Brethren woulde haue, were in practise.

So (say they) after the matter was thoroughly discussed, by the Godly arguments, alleaged by Peter, and Barnabas and Paule, the controuersie thoritie of was concluded, by the sentence of James. And were any of these dis-cussers of the matter, such Elders as withall were not teachers? but how was this done, that they conclude here, the controuersie was concluded by the sentence of James?

They said before, with the Synode the Pastor hath authoritie to determine. For, although it be good reason, that the Pastor should not determine without the Synode, yet, by their proving hereof by this example, James is made the Pastor in this Counsell, and so by their stone consequence, that a Pastor and a Byshop are all one. James is also made the Bishop, and the controuersie being concluded, after all their discussing, by his sentence, the sentence being the finall, resolute, and iudiciall, determination, he hath authoritie therein aboue them all, and then of consequence, though the Synode ioyne with him in the consent of the matter, yet ioyne it not with him in the authoritie of determining, or iudiciall denouncing the finall determination of it. But to stoppe this, they say, to whome that prerogatiue was graunted, not of singular authoritie, but for order sake. Ergo, he had herein a prerogatiue, and if a prerogatiue, then it was aboue all the residue, and if aboue all the residue, then was it singular in him.

But not (say they) of singular authoritie.

If of any authoritie at all (as they confessed before, the Pastor hath authoritie) then of singular authoritie, else, no prerogatiue.

Pea, but (say they) that prerogatiue was graunted to him.

And I graunt that also, for had it not bene graunted him, it had not bene authoritie, but usurpation, and therefore the graunt confirms the authoritie.

All the better (say I) that it is for orders sake, and even therefore, and go no further, for all the Pastors to be equal in authoritie, is to bring all Synodes and Counsellors, and all cases and controuersies arising in them, or to be determined by them, both in matter of Doctrine, and in the regiment of the Church, into all disorder and confusion, which our Brethren beginning now a little better to perceiue, and to feele yet somewhat at least heereunto, they are diuinen at length to con-fesse and say: And this place doth admonish vs to intreate somewhat of the preeminence of one Elder or Pastor aboue the rest. We confesse, that in euery assemblie or companie, some one of necessitie must haue this prerogatiue, to order and dispose the same with reason, or else great confusion is like to follow. But this gouernment is onely of order, and not of authoritie, as to propound matters to be decided, to gather the reasons and consent of the rest, and so to conclude, &c.

this preeminence, Actes 21. 18. &c. and we may gather the same, Galath. 2. 9. 12. not that Iames had greater authority in his Apostleship, than Peter, or Paule, or Iohn, or any other of the Apostles, but bycause hee was chosen of the rest to haue prerogatiue of order, which some one must haue in euery assemblie, and such was the prerogatiue at the fyrst, which was graunted sometime to the Byshop of Rome, and sometime to some other Byshops, to be President or Prolocutor in the generall Counsellies, beeing chosen thereto for the tyme, by consent of the rest, as the Prolocutor is chosen in our Conuocations, that are called with Parliaments. Therefore, as it were an absurd thing for our Prolocutor in our Conuocation, to take vpon him to be a controller of the whole Synode, and to challenge that office to him and to his heyres for euer: so vnreasonable is the authoritie that the Pope claymeth ouer generall Counsellies. One therefore is to be chosen by consent, to be as it were the Prolocutor or moderator of order, but not authoritie in euerie assemblie, whose prerogatiue must so be tempered, that in all things tyrannie be auoyded, which we see by experience easily creepeth in vpon prowde natures, to whome, if you graunt an inch, they will be readie to take an ell, according to the prouerbe.

Bridges
Our Bre-
threns confession of one Pastors preeminence aboue
the rest.

Concerning the preeminence of one Elder or Pastor aboue the rest, we haue sufficiently seene already at large the p^{ro}ofe thereof, against the p^{ro}oues that our Brethren haue before alleaged, for Pastors to haue no superioritie ouer theyr fellow Pastors, but be all of equall dignitie and authoritie, Bag. 23. &c.

Yet here now at length in theyr treatise of the Synode, they say this place, meaning Actes 15. doth admonish them to intreate somewhat of one Elder or Pastor aboue the rest. Thanks bee to God, that they will yet acknowledge, be it but this place, onely, to admonish them of it. And yet, if they search the Scripture somewhat further, they shall fynde moe places than this, to admonish them of this preeminence, if they will take admonishment by them, as, not onely that (which they selues haue here noted) in Peter and Iohn, besydes Iames, Galath. 2. but also in the authoritie aboue other Pastors, that Saint Paule giueth to Timothy and to Titus, and Saint Iohn to the Angells of the seauen Asian Churches. But to leaue these and other places, being before touched: since now they are content to take admonition onely of this place, Actes 15. to intreate (as they tearme it) somewhat of the preeminence of one Elder or Pastor aboue the rest: let vs heare what this somewhat amounteth vnto.

We confesse (say they) that in euerie assemblie or companie, some one one of necessitie must haue thys prerogatiue, to order and dispose the same with reason, or else great confusion is lyke to follow.

This is a good confession and a prettie somewhat to begin withall: first, that among all the other assembled, a prerogatiue aboue the rest, belongeth not to some many, or to some few, but allonely to some one.

Secondly, that this prerogatiue of some one aboue the rest, is not to be in some assemblies, as in the assemblies of Synodes and Counsels onely, but in euery assemblie or companie.

Thirdly, that it is not voluntarie in euery assemblie or companie, neyther yet of decencie or conueniencie onely, but it must be so, and that of playne necessitie.

Fourthly, that this preeminence and prerogatiue of some one in euery assemblie or companie, stretcheth not onely to declare, to moue, to perswade, to examine, to discuss and to determine, but also to order and dispose the assemblie or companie, that is, not only to set them in their places, but to direct and appoynt vnto them, how to demean themselves in all their actions.

Pea, but (say they) to order and dispose the same with reason.

God forbid else (say I) for it were vnreasonable to ouerrule in any thing against reason, which were with more reason to be called disordering and dissoluing, then ordering and disposing, if without reason.

Well then (say they) all this must nedes be confessed, or else great confusion is like to follow.

And is this then our Brethrens free confession? though in very good reason, (if they will confesse the truth) they must of necessitie confesse no lesse, though they will confesse no more: and how then did they say before (speaking of the name of Byshops) that it is neuer vsed in the Scriptures, for such Byshops, as clayme and exercise dominion ouer whole regions, and all the Pastors of the same, but onely for those that be Pastors of euery seuerall Congregation, hauing no superioritie ouer theyr fellow Pastors, but bee all of equall dignitie and authoritie? pag. 22. 23. for (to remitte the defence of theyr superioritie ouer whole regions, to the p^{ro}oues before alleaged) how haue not our Brethren abused so many places in the Scripture, as they cite hereto in this theyr Learned Discourse, from the foresayde 23. page, till the 29. concluding thus: these testimonies of Scripture directlie condemne the authoritie of one Pastor aboue another? likewise, page. 80. that the Ministers are equall among themselves. May they not bee assembled and ioyned in a companie among themselves? and is there

Reason, the limitation of the disposing. Confusion if it be not thus.

there no assemblyes or companyes of Pastors, but onely Synodes or Counsellers? Is there not some dayly standing and continuall assemblies and companyes of Pastors, as in Colledges, and in Cathedrall and collegiate Churches: or are these no longer to be called a company, then they company in one place together? And how then is there not a day-ly, standing, and continuing dignity and superiority of this preeminence and prerogative, in some one Pastor ouer all the rest of his fellow Pastors, and so, not all of equall dignitie and authoritie? yea, his continuing this prerogative (as our Brethren here confesse) must needs be, or else take away this standing and continuing prerogative or preeminence of some one, from among those companyes of the Pastors, such as are, (besides the Brouosts, Wardens, Presidents, and maisters of Colledges) the Byshops in their Cathedrall Churches, and the Deanes in their Chapters: and quite disorder, yea, cleane dissolve all those companyes, whereby great confusion is like to follow (as they say) or rather, to vse their former wordes, it must needs follow of necessitie: and who are the authors of this so great confusion?

Now, when they haue made this free confession, for a good beginning, and that we should looke for their like proceeding, and so might hope that we should some come, (for effect of matter, though we differed in tearmes) to some more effectuall agreement in these controuersies: they suddenly start backe after their former manner, and as though they were afrayde, that they had already confessed somewhat too much, they begin (with restraints and limitations) to pinch, and in effect to deny that, which they haue before confessed. But this preeminence (say they) is onely of order, and not of authoritie.

What meane they here by this, that it is of order, and onely of order? for, we would not haue it, though they would offer it, to be a pre-minence of disorder. They sayd before, that it was to order and dispose the same, to witte, the assemblie or companie. Is this, onely to set them in their seates, rowes and fourmes, one before or aboue, another behinde or beneath, and themselves highest: or do they meane, by this preeminence of order, that he hath a dignitie aboue all other in the companie? for, I thinke not, that they meane here, the common distinction, of the power of order, and power of iurisdiction, which were to giue them more than we strine for, or then we graunt to any Byshop or Arch-byshop, who are distinguished by no preeminence of order, but are all of one and the same order of the presbyterie, priesthood or pastorall Eldership, euen with the poorest and simplest Pastor in the Church. Not-withstand, in the authoritie of dignitie, euen in the same order of the Pastor-ship, they haue not equall iurisdiction. And therefore; except that warily we vnderstande these wordes, our Brethren in seeking this starting

starting-hole, to shunne the Bishops lawfull preeminence of authoritie, nence of order.
do vnawares giue more indeede, in giuing some one aboue the rest a preeminence of order, than if they sayd in playne words, that they gaue hym a preeminence of authoritie: and so, straying a gnatte, swallow a camell. And yet, how hath not this some one aboue the rest, preeminence of authoritie: if his preeminence be authorized? yea, what law-full preeminence can it be, if it be not of authoritie, and of good autho-ritie too?

How our Brethren
denying the lesse, con-fesse the greater.

But now, to specifie these their doubtfull speeches, they adde these instances: as to propound matters to be decided, to gather the reasons and consent of the rest, and so to conclude, and is this all? or is the ordering and disposing of the assemblie before mentioned, eyther to be added vnto these, or conteyned in these? but take these, or any other, wherein this some one Pastor hath preeminence aboue the rest, do not these argue a greater authoritie to do these things, then any other in the company haue? if we should consider but these three things, as first, to propound matters to be decided, if it pertaineth, and that of neces-sitie, to the prerogatiue of some one, and so, it be not lawfull to euerie one, although he be one of the Synode, assemblie or companie: how then can any other orderly besides him, or without his leaue or assigne-ment thereunto, propound any cases or controuersies, eyther of the doubts of doctrine, or regiment of the Church, to be decided? is not this a very great authoritie? neyther is it a means authoritie, to gather the reasons and consent of the rest, which some Emperors themselues haue done in generall Counsels. Albeit, Bezaes words in his Confess. cap. 5.
artic. 29. seeme to giue more, not onely in gathering the company together, so that he must haue authority before the Synod begin, but also in that he saith, Collegas mittat in suffragia, he should send his colleagues, to the giuing or taking of the voyces, and not himselfe to do it, as the scrutatores do.

But specially this third point, that his preeminence reacheth also to conclude, which comprehendeth the determining, iudging, and ending of the matter. And all this authority, or as they call it, preeminence and prerogatiue, they confirme by this present example: as we see (say they) in this place Iames did. And not onely in this place but they confirme it further, saying: of whome also wee reade, that he had thys pre-eminence, Actes 21. 18. &c. and we may gather the same Galath. 2.

The example of Iames.

9. 12.

All this is verie true (as we haue seene before) and withall, it clerely proueth, that Iames hauing still this preeminence, at all the times mentioned in all these places, his preeminence endured not onely the time of a Synode, and so ceased, but was permanent in hym, whether

Our Bre-
thens proof

nuing pre-eminence.

continuing they had any Synode, or had none. For, what mention of any Synode at preeminence Ierusalem is there at that time, when as Saint Paule saith, Gal. 2. ver. 9.
Calvinus in James with Cephas and Iohn gaue him their hands? which (as Caluine Gal. 2. vpon the 1. verse of the same Chapter, Gal. 2. sayth) was at Pauls second comming to Ierusalem, mentioned Actes 11. verse 30. rather than at the assemblie. Actes 15. Scarcely can any man auouch for certieintie (sayth he) whether he vnderstandeth that voyage whereof Luke maketh mention, Actes 15. 2. yea rather, the context of the hystorie leadeth vs vnto the contrarie part: for, it is there recorded, that Paule came to Ierusalem foure times: of his first comming, we haue already spoken, (he meaneth Gal. 1. verse 18. & 19. where Caluine also sayd of hym, Qui Ecclesia Hierosolymitana praeferit, which gouerned the Church at Ie-Calvinus in rusalem.) His second comming was, when as he with Barnabas caried Gal. 1. the almes collected in the Greeke and Asian Churches, according as is conteyned in the ende of the twelfth Chapter (where Luke speaketh of Barnabas and Pauls returne from Ierusalem to Antiochia) whereof, that I should vnderstand this present place, many reasons mooue me, for otherwise, it would of necessity be, that eyther the one or the other, (he meaneth Luke or Paule) should alleage a falshood, &c. So that, at neyther of these two times, there was any Synode holden at Ierusalem, and yet at both those times, Iames continued in this preeminence, who still so continuing till this assembly, Actes 15. and after also, till the time here mentioned, Actes 21. verse 18. where sayth Saint Luke (speaking of Pauls comming to Ierusalem the fourth time,) And on the morrow, Paule went with vs vnto Iames, and all the Elders were present. Here was an as-semblie also, or companie of Elders, albeit, not any Synodall assemblie, but he speaketh of the Elders onely of the Church of Ierusalem, whereas, a Synode (as Danæus defineth it, lib. 3. christ. Isag. cap. 35.) is a lawfull and holie assemblie of christian men, comming together from out of di-uers churches and regions, &c.

Whereby it is manifest, that this assemblie, or companie of these Elders at Ierusalem, thus still continuing, and Saint Iames all the while, being the Ruler and Ecclesiasticall Governoꝝ of that Church: this is but a mere fancie of our Brethren, wherewith they beguile themselves and others, that Iames had, and some one likewise must of necessitie haue this preeminence, during only the time of a Synode: and the Synode dissol-ued, the preeminence ceaseth: whereas, cleane contrarie, they should rather reason thus: the assemblie or companie of the Pastors in Ierusalem, did still continue: but there must be some one of necessity that must haue the prerogatiue or preeminence aboue the rest in euery assemblie or companie of Pastors: therefore, there was some one at Ierusalem, whose preeminence and prerogatiue aboue the rest, did still continue,
 which

 ment follo-

which being well considered, both cleane ouerthrow all that our Brethren haue said befoze, and do say heere, for the equalitie, and against the superiority, among the Pastors. ing pre-eminence.

When they haue now confessed this preeminence of some one Pastor, and this example of Iames for proofe of the same, they make exception yet againe, and say: Not that Iames had greater authoritie in his Apostleship, then Peter, or Paule, or Iohn, or any other of the Apostles: and we also do readily yeld hereto, in this respect of their office or function of the Apostleship. But bycause (say they) he was chosen of the rest, to haue prerogative of order, which some one must haue in euery assemblie.

The superiority of one among the Apostles, was not in respect of the Apostleship.

And this we accept also: but this prerogative of order, could not, but be a superior dignitie in the same order: and also, there was an ordinary assemblie, or companie of pastorall Elders abiding at Ierusalem, as (besides the places that we haue seene already) appeareth further, Actes 1. verse 14. Actes 2. verse 46. Actes 4. verse 23. & 32. Actes 5. vers. 12. & 13. Actes 6. verse 2. Actes 8. verse 14. Actes 9. verse 26. 27. and 28. Actes 11. verse 12. 18. and 22. Actes 12. verse 17. As for the 13. and 14. Chapters following, Luke sheweth, that the like standing assemblie of Elders, whome he calleth Prophets and Teachers, was also at Antiochia, Actes 13. verse 1. and Actes 14. verse 27. and 28. and so he descendeth to the 15. Chapter, expresseing the assemblie at Ierusalem, which our Brethren call a Synode, neyther do we disallow their so calling of it.

The prerogative of order, containeth a superiority of dignitie. The ordinary assembly in Ierusalem.

The like standing assemblie at Antiochia.

Now then, if this prerogative of some one aboue the rest, must be in euery assemblie: and euery congregation is an assemblie, besides a Synode, and some Congregations may be of more Pastors than one, as our Brethren would haue the most to be at least of two, and many are already of many, as Cathedrall Churches and Colledges. And our Brethren alleage for the example of many Pastors in one Church, Saint Pauls calling for the Elders of Ephesus to Miletum, which (they say) were the Pastors of Ephesus, pag. 23. and thereto, pag. 24. they alleage also Saint Pauls salutation, Philip. 1. verse 1. how then followeth it not, that eyther we must dissolue and disperse all these standing assemblies and companies of more Pastors than one, in one Church or Congregation, except onely in Synodes, or else that we must of necessity admit (by admitting that one must haue the preeminence and prerogative of order aboue the rest, in euery assembly of Pastors) a standing and continuing inequality of dignitie in the Pastors?

The ordinary assembly or companie of many Pastors in some churches.

The consequence of our Brethrens graunt

And such (say they) was the prerogative at the first, which was graunted sometime to the Byshop of Rome, & sometime to other Byshops, to be presidēt or prolocutor in the general Counsels, being chosen therunto for the time, by cōsent of the rest, as the Prolocutor is chosen in our

This also (be it spoken with their reuerence) is not altogether true, concerning Synodall assemblyes, or generall or prouinciall Counsels. For although there be an other standing and continuing preeminence of order (vnderstanding order for dignitie and authoritie) of some one Pastor in a Church, Citie, Diocese, or Prouince, aboue other Pastors, which preeminence is Episcopall, or Archiepiscopall, as we haue before at large most clarely proued, and which is in deede our farre greater controuersie: yet notwithstanding, to speake now onely of Synodes and Counsels, where Byshops and Pastors of dyuers Churches are assembled to determine controuersies, he that was President of the Counsell, was not such an one, as was chosen thereunto for the tyme, by consent of the rest, as the Prolocutor is chosen in our Conuocations, that are called with Parliaments, sith our Prolocutor, or chiefe speaker in our name, (so for the word importeth) both he and all the residue, are called together by an higher Ecclesiasticall Ordinarie, as by our Byshops in their Dioceses, and they by our Archbishop in his prouince: and he is appoynted so to summon and call vs all together, at time and place assigned by our Soueraigne, who beeyng thus assembled, then in deede we chose our Prolocutor, as the Latie chose theyr speaker, to moderate our actions in our Synodall assemblyes, and to do (as is aforesayd) in the Counsell, &c. Whowbeit, thys debarreth not, but that any one man in the Synode or Counsell, as he hath an other peculiar charge, so he may haue an other peculiar prerogative and preeminence, in his feuerall Church, City, Diocese, or prouince, by vertue whereof, the Byshop may assemble a Synode of the feuerall Pastors in his Diocese, and an Archbishop, of the feuerall Byshops and Pastors in his prouince, as it was before the Emperors (hauing many Christian Prouinces vnder them) became the open professors of Christianitie. For, how were the Synodes and Counsels then called, but by some one among them, that had a continuing and standing preeminence aboue the rest, before the calling of those Synodes and Counsels, and much moze before the assembling of them.

But now, when as there was one Soueraigne Prince or Emperor Christian, ouer all, or the most of these Christian Prouinces, the which was publikey professed first in so high an estate, by Constantine the great, by whome, Counsels began to be moze generall: then the Prince hauing a generall charge, and highest soueraigntie ouer all his Prouinces, both summoneth the Generall, and somerimes the Prouinciall, to designing the time and place of their assembly, and appoynteth them such a President, as he thought mete, if we may call the President and the Prolocutor, all one.

*Bezaes grāt to Metropolitanes ouer

counsels.* And as he saith thus for general Councils, so in the 22. Article he saith also, for Nationall or Prouinciall. What in the olde time was ordeined concerning the gathering together Prouinciall Synodes of (or by) the Metropolitans, dooth abundantlie appeare out of the olde Canons. Neither yet are we those, which if the ruines of the Church were repaired, would thinke either this, or anie other not vnlike order to bee refused. But heere we require two things in principall, that is to say, that no tyrannie bee againe brought into the Church, as though the holie Ghost were tied to anie certein Seate or Person ; and then that al things be referred to adifying, the olde Canons beeing reuoked (or called againe) vnto this ende.

*Bezaes allowance of Archbishops: and the conditions
thereof
to be reuoked or retained.* These wordes of Beza are worth the weighing, which not onelie shew that the prouinciall Synodes were in the olde time called together by the Metropolitans or Archbishops : which implieth, that then there were such Metropolitans or Archbishops, in the Church, in that olde time thereof ; and that by the olde Churches Canons, they had Canonically authoritie hereunto : and so, there was both a standing and continuing preheminence of authoritie in some one Bishop about the pastors in a Diocesse, and also of some one Arch-bishop about the Bishops in a prouince, (which is all cleane contrarie to these our Learned Brethrens premisses :) but also, and that which is moze to be marked of our Brethren, than all this commeth vnto: that Beza himselfe (vpon certaine conditions) both alloweth of al this, and of the bzinging the same againe into the Church, and then much moze of retaining it. Yea, his conditions being graunted, he speaketh not only in his owne name, but in all ours. (and I hope in all our Brethrens too) that we are not the men, that would or should so much as thinke, those old orders and Canons, for the Metropolitans or Arch-bishops authoritie, to call prouinciall Synodes to be refused. In which wordes he both plainly allowe their authoritie to be in it selfe good and lawfull. Which if it were not, but simply, vnlawfull, all the conditions in the worlde could not make it lawfull : there is no agreement betwixt light and darkenes, Christ and Beliall, no conuention, no conditioning nor indenting, and therefore, in admitting the Metropolitans authoritie vpon condition, it is as much (before the conditions be propounded,) as to graunt, that in the owne nature thereof, (and but vpon the contrarie to those conditions) it is not vnlawfull.

Archb. law-full by Bezaes confession. Let vs see therefore what are Bezaes conditions.

*Bezaes conditions of allowing
Archb.* If the ruines of the Church (sayth hee) may bee repayred (or renewed.)

This (being rightly understood) is a very faire condition, and we gladly accept thereof. Hoping that all the substantiall parts of the ruines, either are repayred among vs, or might haue bene long ere this (with the good pleasure of God) if our Brethren themselves had not more hindered the repaying of the ruines thereof, than our aduersaries that decayed it, were able to doe. Yea, let our Brethren ioyne with vs on this condition, and then we trust in God, it shall the sooner and easlier be performed.

Howbeit, because the condition is yet so vncertaine, that a good & lawfull thing should not be refused vpon such generall wordes, as the repaying the ruines of the Church: for so, they might still pretende, that one thing or another were in decay, and thereupon still refuse to retaine this old order, which were a meere mockerie: no; one good & lawfull thing is to be refused, for the decay of an other, except the same also be decayed, and so be refused till it be repayred: Beza therefore (seeing the invaliditie of this, as yet too generall a condition) draweth nearer to the speciall pointes, that he requireth in this condition, for the admittance of this olde order and Canons, for the authoritie of Metropolitans.

But here (sayth he) we require chiefly two things, that is to wit, that no tyrannie be againe brought into the Church, &c.

This condition with all our heartes wee againe like of, and detest all tyrannie both in Metropolitans, and in all other: but as Beza in this condition, both againe acquite the Metropolitans dignitie in it selfe, to be no tyrannie, for else, to say he thinketh it not to bee refused, so that no tyrannie be brought in, if he thinke the dignitie it selfe to be tyrannie, is but againe another mockerie and elusion: and then, thinking that of it selfe it is no tyrannie; it is againe no sufficient stoppage against the interest of a right, for the inroching of a wrong. Some will abuse the Pastors, Presbyters, or priestes office. yea, it hath bene most blasphemously abused by the Papistes. And the Princes office also by turning it into tyrannie. And yet we must not thereupon, except simply against the princes and the priestes offices and lawfull authorities. And although the Metropolitans dignitie and office were but an order of men: yet since Beza approues it in it selfe, for a lawfull dignitie and office in the Church: yea, we haue the practise of it approued, euen from and in the Apostles times: therefore the ground of the argument is all one in all lawfull vocations, authorities, powers and dignities, omnis potestas est a Deo. And therefore, remooue or debarre the tyrannie a Gods name, but doe not vnder pretence of tyrannie, remooue or debarre the office.

But yet Beza very well therein, least he should againe seeme to giue vs the slip, with exception of the generall name in the worde tyrannie: both particularize this tyrannie vnto vs.

As though (saith he) the holie Ghost were tied to any certeine Senate or person.

Indee this was a foule and most dangerous tyrannie, not onelie oppressing the bodie, but intangling the conscience, and an iniurie to the ho-lie Ghost. Under which pretence the Pope abused all Princes and Churches. But the Bishoppes and Metropolitans authoritie in our Church (God be praised) neither claineth, nor vseth, nor admitteth, anie such ty-rannie, nor anie other tyrannie, that anie can proue to be indeed tyrannie.
As for this foule and erroneous tyrannie, we vtterlie with Beza and our Brethren, renounce and accurse it. And therefore, for anie thing in this exception, we may retein our Metropolitans with good conscience.

But there is yet another condition behinde: And then (saith Beza) that all things be referred to edifying.

If he meane all things that can by reason of this dignitie, he saith wel.
For it is not meete to burden this dignitie and the officers therein, with other things, and much lesse with all things, and therefore to refuse them, if all things bee not referred to edifying. But then as befoze, we may hereby also see, that this office or dignitie it selfe, is no hinderance to edification. So that, if there be anie hinderance to edification, it commeth rather of this fault, that all thinges be not referred thereunto.

But what is this to the office or dignitie it selfe of the Metropolitane?
For, if it can by no meanes be referred to edification, then how can Beza say, he is not the man that dooth refuse it, so it be referred to edification? Is not this plaine, that he meaneth, there is a good vse of it, which may verie well be referred to edification? And so wee accept it, and not other wise. And if our Brethren will be the men, that Beza here saith he and his are; let them then acknowledge with him at length, that they are not the men that (on these conditions) do thinke the olde Canons, for gathering Synodes together by Metropolitans, is an order to be refused. If now they dare say thus with Beza, for their parts; we for ours, will ioyne with them, in these conditions.

And to continue them the more, in this opinion of Beza; let them turne also to that, which Danens likewise hath on the same matter, in the third part, and 3. booke of his Christian Introduction, the 38. chapter. Wherein (after he hath spoken of the calling of generall Councils, principal-lie appertaining vnto Princes, descending to Prouinciall, he saith.

But if a Prouinciall Councill onelie bee to be called together: in the olde time that matter and care pertained onelie vnto Bishops, that were Metropolitans, & not vnto the Magistrates themselves, although they were godlie. At this day, because in the reformed Churches, there are no Metropolitans, especiallie in the French Churches: that cure per-teineth to all the Ministers of the Worde of God, in euerie of the Prouinces,

vinces, who by letters ought to admonish and stirre up one another, except that by the consent of the brethren, that care of calling together a synode, be specially committed to any man of the Church of that region or province. Here he againe telleth, what was the ancient authoritie of Metropolitane or Archbishops.

*ring this
authoritie.*

And although he do set downe another order among the Pastors (to wit, not to be allowed neither, but by the goodly Magistrate, if there be any such among them:) yet the reason that he alloweth this unto the Pastors among them selves, is not that he disalloweth the authoritie herein of a Metropolitane Bishop ouer them: but that (he saith) there are none such in the reformed Churches (meaning in their countries) and therefore he restrayneth his wordes, especially to France where they are all popish Bishops and as yet aduersaries to the Gospell. And in such case, he refuseth also euen the chiefe Magistrate, being (as he saith) vnfaithfull, a wolfe and persecutor of the Church, that his commandement is not to be expected, no no; yet their purpose made knowne vnto him, of a generall Counsell to be holden among them, least he seek to destroy them. So that, he refuseth neither the Princes, no; the Metropolitane Bishops authoritie, if the persons be faithfull. Yea, in Steele and so; want of the, he saith, that this preheminance of one may be committed to some other person.

*How Dan-
us alloweth or disallow-
eth herein either the ci-uill Magistrate or Meropolitane.*

The conclusion that our Brethren inferre: Therefore as it were an absurd thing for our prolocutor in our conuocation, to take vpon him to be a controller of the whole Synode, and to challenge that office to him and to his heires for euer: so vnreasonable is the authoritie that the Pope claimeth ouer generall Counsellors: All this conclusion was freely confesse, and also in part the other conclusion that followeth.

Our Brethconclusions.

One therefore is to be chosen by consent, to be as it were the prolocutor or Moderator of order, but not of authoritie in euerie assemblie, whose prerogatiue must so be tempered, that in all thinges tyrannie be auoyded.

This preheminance and prerogatiue which they call of order, can not be but of authoritie: is the preheminance and prerogatiue of the prolocutor in the conuocation, or of the speaker or L. Chauncellor in the parliament, of no authoritie? This therefore is but mere dalliance of nice tearmes, to say he hath preheminance and prerogatiue of order not of authoritie. For what authoritie so euer it be, or how farre so euer it stretcheth, or is abridged; yet, such as it is, authoritie it is.

*The preheminence & prerogatiue
of order is also of au-
thoritie.*

As for the tempering of this prerogatiue, that in all thinges tyrannie be auoyded: we like well of it. And it is the thing that Beza before accepted.

The tempering of this authoritie.

But what meane they hereby? Should it by and by be tyrannie, if it be

be

by authoritie? Is there no difference betwix our Brethren in this prebeminence, betwix authoritie and tyrannie? Yea rather if it be of authoritie: it is not of tyrannie. Which (say they, meaning tyrannie) wee see by experience easilie creepeth in vpon proude natures, to whome if you graunt an ynche, they will bee readie to take an ell, according to the proverbe.

The incroching of our brethren in these things

This proverbe indeede is so true, that wee smartly abie the experience thereof. At the first, our Brethren strived for apparell, and when some favourable forbearance of them, was for quietnesse sake, winked at herein; did they stay there? No. But from thence they haue proceeded so farre; as that now not onely the authoritie of the Bishoppes; but the whole Communion booke must be turned out. Not onely the creation of Consistorie Gouernors in euerie congregation, must be brought in; but the Princes supremacie must nowe giue place vnto them. Yea, of an inch that they desired before; what a number of elles doe they nowe challenge and shall wee conclude (as they doe) that this is the tyrannie which easilie creepeth in, vpon proude natures? No, I will not conclude so peremptorie for charitie and reuerence sake, against our Brethren, but I conclude thus farre, that this their incroching from one matter to another, and to so important and dangerous matters, is not good, nor indeede sufferable. And it is more than high time, that it were (by all godly and Christian meanes) repressed.

The danger of this incroching.

But let vs returne to the authoritie of the Synode, which consisteth in deciding and determining such matters as can not otherwise in particular Churches bee concluded, eyther because they concerne the common state of all Churches, or because they lacke sufficient authoritie in some one Church. First therefore the lawefull Synode hath to consider, if anie controuersie of doctrine doo arise, that it be determined by the woorde of GOD: For in the controuersie of byndinge the Gentiles, to the obseruation of the ceremoniall lawe, was a matter of saythe and doctrine.

Bridges.

The Synods authority in deciding controuersies

For the authoritie of the Synode, (vnderstanding the same to bee a synodall assemblie of pastorall Elders) we graunt, it consisteth especially in deciding and determining such Ecclesiasticall matters, as can not otherwise in particular Churches, be concluded. And (among other) we allowe also of these reasons, eyther because they concerne the common state of all Churches; or of all Churches of that Diocesse, Province or Realme: or because they lacke sufficient authoritie, and perhaps sufficient knoweledge in some one Church to decide and determine them. And thereupon wee also conclude, that when the Synode hath hath in such goodly manner, as is aforesaid, decided, determined, and concluded such matters: that then it is not lawfull for any particular Church of that Diocese, Province or Realme; and much lesse, to any particular Ministers or Pastors, and least of al, to any of the people and lay men: to call those matters so decided, determined, and concluded, a fresh in question.

Of which thing if our Brethren shall well bestinke them; it will (I hope) blinde them from the renewing of many of those selfe same controuersies, that in our lawfull Synodes (hauing had sufficient authoritie thereunto) haue bene already after the aforesaid goodly manner, decided, determined and concluded. And if any of these controuersies haue not yet so expressely bene proceeded vpon, they may at all times (by Gods grace) be so decided and determined, to the tryall whereof, wee are alwaies as ready as our Brethren, if they would then hold themselves sufficiently contented, with the sufficient authoritie of the lawfull Synodes deciding, determining, and concluding of them.

And hereupon, we ioyne againe with them, in condition of this their owne conclusion. That, first therefore, the lawfull Synode hath to consider, if any controuersie of doctrine doe arise, that it be determined by the worde of God.

To this most willingly wee subscribe. But where they adde. For, in the controuersie of binding the Gentiles to the obseruation of the ceremoniell lawe, was a matter of faith and doctrine: as we also graunt this, that in that controuersie was a matter of faith and doctrine: and a doctrine is also to be learned in all the ceremonies: so much all, we may not graunt, that all the obseruations of the ceremoniell lawe, were properly matters of faith and doctrine: except we should confound ceremonies and faith; shadowes and substance, things transitorie and permanent altogether.

Secondly, it hath to determine of the vse of the ceremonie, not of will without reason or grounde of scripture, but vpon necessarie causes of auoyding offence and similitude of superstition, of bearing with the weake, of order, and comelinesse, and edification. So did the synode of the Apostles and Elders, command for a time abstinence from meate offered to Idols, otherwise lawfull in it selfe, for offences sake, and for auoyding of all pollution of Idolatrie, Act. 6. 20. 29. And forbearing the weakenesse of the Iewes in abstinence, from eating of bloude and of strangled, which was forbidden by God before Moses time, to teach that childlike age of Gods people to abstaine from crueltie, as in Gen. 9. 4. such ceremoniell constitutions are but temporall, and so long are to bee retayned, as the cause continueth, for which they were made. So that if the weakenesse cease, or be turned to obstinacie, they are no longer to be retained. For this seconde point of the Synodes authoritie, we likewise graunt Bridges. as much, that it hath to determine of the vse of ceremonies, not of will without reason or grounde of scripture. Neither haue done, or doe our The Synodes authority in determining ceremonies. Synodes determine any vse of ceremonies, to be vsed among vs, of will without reason, or without grounde of scripture: but eyther they haue good ground of scripture, or good reason, or both for them.

Necessarie causes. But (say they) it must also be, upon necessarie causes of auoyding of fence and similitude of superstition.

Taking of- fence and mistaking superstition. So farre as the causes shall be founde in due to be necessarie causes, they say well, I confesse. But here againe, we may not debarre the authoritie of Synodes determination of the vse of ceremonies, for the auoyding of euery particular persons taking offence, or mistaking the similitude of superstition.

Bearing with the weake. They adde also, of bearing with the weake. And this likewise (I graunt, that no small consideration is to be had in the Synodes determination, of bearing with the weake.) Howbeit, we must vnderstande wherein, and in what manner they be weake, and how farre forth they are to be borne withall.

For other wise, they may still pretende weakenesse, to couer wilfulnesse. May not the Synode determine, that it is lawfull to catechize much as an egg on Friday, because some will take offence and pretende weakenesse?

But it is a good hearing, that our Brethren are become so carefull, to haue offences auoyded, and the weake borne withall. Would God they would not giue so great offence as herein they doe, both to the weake and strong, with their vnnecessarie strutting for ceremoniall matters, against those things which our lawfull synodes, with the approbation of the Prince and of the whole Realme, haue already determined and concluded. Wherein our Brethren do not only offend the synode, the realme, the Prince, in reiecting their lawfull authorities herein: but euen for the weake (the speciall consideration of whom they here pretende) they haue beene through these contentions the greatest occasion, that many which were before but weake amongst vs, haue now not doubted any more of our ceremonies, but of our faith and doctrine. Yea, where many were more than halfe worne and metely well come on: they are now cleane lost, and utterly revolted from vs, when they see that we will not stande to the determination nor of our owne Churches synodes, nor to the authoritie and decrees of our owne Prince. Is this our Brethrens consideration of auoyding offences, and of bearing with the infirmities of the weake.

Order comelines and edification. As for consideration of order, and comelinesse, and edification: it is neither orderly, nor comely (in my opinion) for any private & particular ministers ministers, to controll and preiudicate the determination, of a whole ^{authoritie,} godly Synode (such as I hope ours are) that hath already determined and concluded, what is order, comelines & edification in these things.

Paphnutius in-deede did gainsay in Priestes mariages, and prevailed against all, or the moste part, of the famous Nicene Councell. But that was done in the Councell, and in the debating of the matter, before any decree determined and concluded, And also, though they had neuer so fully determined and concluded it, with all the authoritie that they had, since it was flat against the worde of God, and an error in Doctrine: he might and ought, to haue spoken against it. In which case, not onely we, but the Wapistes them-selues, as Gerson, Panormitane, and others do graunt that we must more beleue one man neuer so simple, yea, a lay man, more than the Pope, or than a generall' councell, where hee brings the manifest Scripture against them. If our W. can do so, against vs, and not to the Scripture: wee yeelde presently.

Paphnutius his gain saying the whol counsell.

But in those ceremoniall matters, that are neither of fayth and Doctrine, nor are this way or that way commaunded in the Scripture, but left to the Church of Christe to vse, with these three cautions of order, and comelinesse, and edification: when a godly Synode hath already debated, determined and concluded, what vse of them tendeth best to these three ends, and wherein the state of that Church may be best ordered, adozned and edified: it is not then and in those matters, sitting with the duetie of anie such lay or ecclesiasticall persons, to controll that conclusion of the Synode. If our W. ethen sayde so late before on the other side of the lease, that it were an absurd thing for our prolocutor in our conuocation, to take vpon him to be a controller of the whol Synode: How much more is it an absurde thing, out of the Synode, and after the Synode, for a meaner person than our Prolocutor, to take vpon him not only to be a controller, but a defacer and oppugner of the whole Synode, and a canceller of all their authoritie and determination?

Particular persons or congregations not to control here in the Synods decrees

How much better shall it be for our W. to call to their remembrance their own conclusion, where before they speake also of ceremonies, page 76. saying there: But to conclude, it is the duety of euerie true pastor, to obserue those thinges, that are concluded by the lawfull authority of the Church, concerning ceremoniall matters for order and comelinesse sake and for edification, and not to controll publike order by his priuate iudgement, except vpon great and waighty causes. Although in-deede, while they be but such ceremoniall matters, and they are concluded (as they say) by the lawfull authority of the Church (and if lawfull, then haue they not gone beyond their bounds) there can no causes bee so great and waighty, that shoulde make any true pastor to set vp him-self, against this lawfull authoritie of the Church. For if hee doe, hee doth it

When the assembly or Synode of the Apostles and Elders at Ierusalem (which our Bethzen here alleage for an example) did commaunde for a time abstinencie from meate offered to Idols, (otherwise lawful in it selfe) for offences sake, and for auoyding of all pollution and Idolatrie, (which the Euangelist noteth, Actes 6. Luke 15. ver. 20. 29. Had it then beene lawfull for any particular Minister or Ministers, to haue reiected the authoritie of this decree, or to haue kept it and broken it at his or their pleasure? and if this bee an example to followe, though not to compare in like authoritie, with this moste holy assembly and decree of the holy ghoste, but as all good Synodes may take example from hence: How then is it now lawfull for any private ministers, to reiect the authoritie of a lawfull Synode, and the ceremonies, rites and orders therein decreed, & by the Princes and the realmes authoritie already established?

The Synods
commandement for a time.

They say, the Apostles and Elders commaundement was but for a time. But coulde their authoritie haue reached to the forbidding that meate for any time, which was otherwise lawfull in it selfe, during all the time of the Christian libertie? and can the authoritie of no Synode nowe, restrayne our Bz. for any time to forbear that, which otherwise is lawfull in it selfe, but that they will needes vse still their libertie in ceremoniall matters: or will they be the prescribers of the time for their continuance?

1. Cor. 10.

But they say that decree was made, for offences sake, and for auoyding of all pollution of Idolatrie.

So it was, I graunt. But that pollution of Idolatrie was not in the meate it selfe, nor the offence so much in the strong as in the weake. And yet the strong obeyed this decree, onely to auoyde the weakes offence. And to this end, that the strong in sayth should not abuse their libertie, by offending the consciences of the weake. Saint Paule hath a notable treatise at large thereof, 1. Cor. 10.

Admitte therefore, that any of those ceremonies being in them-selues otherwise lawfull, because they haue beene offensiuellie abused, and Idolatrously polluted: yet, the abuse and pollution beeing expressely abolished, and onely a good purpose and vse of them decreed: the same are as much (besides, for the goodnesse of the purpose and vse) for the verie authoritie of the decree, to be for the time as farre forth receyued, as the other meates beeing otherwise lawfull in them-selues, yet being for good purposes and vses of them, by the authoritie of the decree for the time forbidden, were then and for that time to be refused.

But that was done also, say they, for the forbearing the weaknes of the Iewes in abstinencie, from eating bloud and strangled, which was forbidde by God before Moses time, to teach that childish age of gods people people to abstaine from crueltie. As in Genes. 9. 4.

Although the time befoze the comming of Christe, bee called of the Apostle, Gal. 4. ver. 3. a childish age, when wee were Children (saith he) wee were in bondage vnder the rudimentes of the worlde: yet, when the fulnesse of time was come, and Christe reuealed, receiued, and the Gospell established: in calling still that primitive age, a childish age, we must take good heede that the Papistes and other Heretikes take not aduantage by these speeches, that say, the Church of Christe in the Apostles times, was but as weake as a Childe or babie, and afterwarde grewe to ripe perfection.

Gal. 4. 3.

Our Br. calling of the childish age

And albeit (I graunt) these tempozarie degrees were made cheefely in respect of some such persons among them, that were but weake, and as it were of childish age, in the knowledge of Christe and the Christian libertie: notwithstanding, euen for these weake childrens sake, the strongest and all (for the time that those decrees were in force) were bound to obey them.

And that priuate person which publikely had broken or controlled these degrees of the Church in these caeremoniall matters, (which onely for this expedience were decreed, though the matters otherwise in them-selues were such, as might lawfully haue bene broken or controlled,) had greatly offended: euen so, whatsoeuer these caeremoniall matters (that we and our Bz. doe nowe strue for,) are otherwise in their own nature free and indifferent, and so might bee receyued or refused or haue otherwise in the vse of them bene abused: yet being nowe by the Church of God, decreed to be well vsed, and that, with expresse cautions against all the former abuses of them, and that with full freedom of conscience, wherein the Christian libertie most consisteth: what priuate person soeuer shoulde attempt, publikely to bzeake or controll them, shoulde offer manifest iniurie to Gods Church. If we be the Church of God (as I hope we be) that thus haue decreed them.

They say, such caeremoniall Constitutions are but temporall.

Neither do we goe about to make them perpetuall.

And yet heerein, wee must note also a difference, from those Constitutions that were no longer in force, then for a certaine time, as the abstaining from bloud and strangled: and those that may perpetuallly be kept, if there be perpetuall causes of them.

Difference

of temporal

constituti-

ons.

And this their selues confesse, that they are so long to be retained, as the cause continueth for which they were made.

And they say true herein. But, since the cause of the making of our caeremoniall constitutions doth continue: howe are they not then to bee still retained, untill the cause shall cease, or that by the same authoritie, whereby they were ordeyned, they be also altered or remooued?

But (say they) so that if weakenesse cease, or be turned to obstinacie, they are no longer to be reteyned.

If the weakenesse (say I) cease generallie, or generally bee turned to obstinacie: that were in-deede another matter. But if weakenesse cease in some and remayne in other, or in some but not generally, or in the moste part, nor generally be turned to obstinacie, but in some: then, the cause of the Lawe (respecting not particulars) both not cease, and therefore, the caeremoniall constitutions decreed by the lawfull Synode, are still (as before) to be reteined.

Also for order and comelisse, and best ædification, the Synode hath to determine, what shall be obserued in particular charges: as of time, place, and forme of preaching and praying, and administring of the Sacramentes. For who shoulde bee able to knowe what order, comelisse and ædification requireth according to Gods worde, but they that bee teachers and preachers of the same vnto all others? For it is absurde, that they shoulde bee taught by such in these smaller thinges, as ought to learne the trueth of them in all matters.

But to say simple, as here our Brethren doe, who shoulde bee able, so much as to knowe it, but they that bee Teachers and preachers, &c. is a greatesse (me thinketh, vnder their correction) too presumptuous a question.

May not a man bee able (by Gods grace) to knowe thus much, as, what order, comeliness and ædification requireth, according to Gods Worde, except hee bee his selfe a Teacher and Preacher of the same vnto all others? Yes verily, and to knowe much more, even in the greatest con-controuerfies of Doctrine, as (God bee praifed) there are many godly ^{for know-} learned, both men and women among vs, that are not unfurnished with ledge.

Yea, what were the teachers and Preachers at first them felues. Did they take vpon them to teache and preache the same vnto all others, befoze they had the knowledge hereof? or did they teache and preach immediatly vpon their getting knowledge? or was the knowledge suddenly by inspiration giuen them, with their entring into this function, as S. Paules words to Timothie may be vnderstood. Dispise not the gift that is in thee, which was giuen thee by prophesy with the laying on of hands of the Elderſhip. 1. Tim. 4. And yet Timothy was able to know theſe things befoze, inſomuch that S. Paule ſayth to him, 2. Tim. 3. 15. And that thou haſte knowne the holy Scriptures of a childe.

And ſome men can excellentlie declare their knowledge alſo of theſe things befoze. The Synode, preaching with more eloquence and knowledge too, than many of theſe our Learned Diſcourſes; and yet bee no Preachers of the ſame vnto all others.

But what is their reaſon, that they imagine, none is able to knowe theſe things, but teachers and Preachers of the ſame vnto all all others?

For (ſay they) it is abſurde, that they ſhoulde bee taught by ſuch in theſe ſmall things, as ought to learne the truth of them in all matters.

The reaſon that makes our Br. think 'none can knowe theſe things but teachers & preachers. The Paſtors may bee to ſeek in ſome ſmall things.

So an humble minded man and glad to learne, this is no abſurditie. A godly and learned Preacher may eſther bee as ignorant, or not ſo ſkilfull, expert, or prouident in ſome things, (yea, now and then in ſome of theſe ſmall things) as ſome other may be, that are no Preachers. And if controuerfies of them be moued in the Synode, conſiſting of Paſtors; it is a ſigne, that all the Preachers haue not ſuch knowledge of them, but that they alſo may be to ſeek and learne. Yea, the ſmaller things they be, the Preachers may perhaps haue leſſe imploied themſelues, in the ſtudy or ſearch of ſuch ſmal things, or not remember themſelues ſo well, as an other leſſe learned, which is no preacher, may. And a lowly ſpirit will not diſdaine to learne great matters of his inferior in learning, though he be no Preacher. Moſes learned of Iethro, how to diſpoſe his iudgements more orderlie, both in ſmall matters and in great.

Neither is there indeede (if the Preacher ſet aſide al haughtie counteys, of his owne ſingular doings and deuifes) any abſurditie at all or ſhame herein, but that it may beſeeme him wel enough, and he were better then he is, ſometimes to take notice and to bee taught of ſome godly, wiſe, learned and experient men, that are no Preachers, yea, and of ſome women too now and then, not only in ſome ſuch ſmall things, but alſo in matters of great importance: as Iudith taught the Elders and Paſtors of Bethulia. Although (I graunt) they againe ought to learn of the Preachers

Neither in these diuers kindes of teaching is any absurditie, so long as their manner of teaching is not opposite, nor that these lay persons do take vpon them, as an ordinarie office, nor do it of arrogancie, and controulment, nor do it as publike teachers & preachers vnto the publike preachers and teachers of them, nor do it to deface and blemish the estimation or authoritie of their teachers and preachers, nor doe it in all things, but in these thinges, which beere their selues confesse, are but small thinges: being done in this order, they ought to take no scoime to be reue-uerently remembred, or to be taught of them: were it neuer so true: that they which are no teachers and preachers, ought to learn the trueth of them that are teachers and preachers, in all matters: which notwithstanding thus againe generallie to anonch, is a great ouer overshoot. For there are many, and those good matters besides religion and Eccle. matters, and there is also a truth of them, and yet men are not bound to learn the truth of them, onely at the mouth of the preacher: no, nor the preacher is bound to know them; or can, or if he could, ought to teach them And therefore, this againe, is too largely spoken for all matters, and seemeth to proceede of too great a reach, and too high a liking of them selues, and too much incroching vpon others. But what now is their conclusion herevpon?

Is there no meane, but the drift of this conclusion must needes bee directed against the Ciuill Christian Magistrate? howe chauce our Elders then did not looke a litle neerer among them selues: and then they shoulde haue saide howe they had thoroughly payde, and cleane ouer-throwne their Governours, that are not teaching Elders, whome they make to bee a greate part of the Synode, in examining and determining Ecclesiasticall causes and Ecclesiasticall regiment, and that the pastors can doe nothing without them. But when this question commeth blusfing in: Who shoulde bee able to knowe what order, come-linesse, and edification requireth, according to Gods worde, but they that bee teachers and Preachers of the same vnto all others? Dare these Seniors now peepe out their heades, and say like Governours indeede: who shoulde? we shoulde. You: what are you? we: wot ye well, we are the Governours of all the Ecclesiasticall Discipline and regimet. Tush, tush, are ye teachers & preachers of the same vnto al others?

excluded.

So, no, go seeke your rule and Government in other matters. If yee bee no Teachers and preachers, ye meddle not heere. So, wit yee well as gaine, yee are not able, and much lesse worthie, so much as to know, what order, comelinesse, & edification requireth according to Gods worde, and so, least of all, to examine, decide and determine the same. What, ought not you, (though yee bee Seniors and gouernours) to learne of vs that are your teachers and preachers? wee tell you plainly and roundly at a worde, It is absurde, that they that are (teachers and preachers) shoulde be taught by such, in these small thinges (and it were much moze absurde in greater thinges) as ought to heare and learne the truth of them in all matters. Lo, howe these biggs and loftie wordes haue vtterlie blanked, and giuen checke mate, to these our gouerning Elders that are not teachers and preachers.

But wthust, wee pray you, no moze of this, for we meant not this, against our gouerning Elders, though they be neither Preachers nor teachers, but wee direct it altogether against the Ciuill Christian Magistrate.

Yea forsooth (my learned Brethren) make virtues, now ye see we your selues indeede. Perke at the ciuill Christian Magistrate, and euer (so far as ye may do it wth safetie) spare not, but still come in wth one byous sting or another at the prince. For, this is plausible to the people, as though ye were no accepters of persons, in daring to speake almost any thing, against the ciuill Christian Magistrate.

Our Br. dealing against the ciuill Christian Magistrate.

And both your teaching and preaching tend to this, that for feare the ciuill Christian Magistrate shoulde teach you, (though hee preach not to you) another lesson, you woulde haue it thought absurde that they shoulde teach you, that shoulde be taught by you (as heere you say) in all matters: yea, that they are not able to know what order, comelinesse and edification requireth according to Gods worde, except they them-selues were teachers and preachers?

I looked all this while, when yet now at the length, our B². would begin, to enter (in this their Learned Discourse) into the proper treatise of the Ciuill Christian Magistrate. Which treatise before, page 8. 9. & 10. they put backe and woulde not speake of, till they had fully made all this their Learned Discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, for their whole tetrarchie, first, of Doctors, then of pastors, after that of Gouernors, meaning Seniors, and lastlie of Deacons. And now when they haue thus at large, (as they them-selues tell vs) Leaped the Discoursed on all these their foure tetrarchies: they begin a new treatise here of Synods, but wth the ciuill Christian Magistrate they yet deale not, except in certaine obdeglances. Howbeit now, there is good hope, that they will remember them, and begin a little to bestow some part of their Learned Discourse on that authoritie, which they will leaue to them. And a good beginning (as they say) maketh a good ending. But, do they begin with this after this fashion: Well then, in the name of God, let vs yet go on with them in considering, what here they now begin to graunt vnto them.

How our
Br. here begin to draw
to the treatise of the Princes au-
thoritie.

This authoritie therefore (say they) can not bee graunted vnto any ciuill Christian Magistrate, that without consent of the learned pastors and Elders, yea against their consent (of whome, as in some respect, hee is a feeling member) hee may lawfully make ceremoniall constitutions, whereby the Church may bee gouerned, in meere Ecclesiasticall matters.

What is heere toward the setting forth of the Ciuill Christian Magistrates authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters? so much as it is, this is rather against it, then any thing for it. We haue long expected, what yet at last or at least, (after euerie of the Tetrarches, had his seuerall and ioynt authoritie portioned out vnto him) they would leaue in remayner to the authoritie, of the ciuill Christian Magistrate. And they begin now to tel vs on the negative part, what cannot bee granted to him: not on the affirmatiue, what can or should be graunted. And wherefore doe they begin with this negative?

Her Maiesty
slandered by these suspicious negatives.

When God declared the 10. commandements of the two Tables, Exod. 20. He deliuered both the first precept, and the most of the rest, negatiuely, because (as all the interpreters note) wee are so faultie in the contrarie. Doe our Bz. begin their treatise of the Prince with this nega-tiue, for any such cause, both the Ciuill Christian Magistrate, whome God hath placed ouer vs, (which is principall ouer all the Churches of the realmes of England and Ireland, is now, God bee blessed for it, and long may be, our most gracious Soueraigne Queene Elizabeth) taken vpon her, without the consent of the Learned Pastors and Elders, yea against their consent, to make any ceremoniall constitutions, whereby the Church must be gouerned in meere Ecclesiasticall matters? Let our Bzethzen take heede, that they doe not in their Learned Discourse call forth befoze her subiectes and all the world, any such slanders on her Maiestie, which they are neuer able to proue. Can they shew but one such ceremoniall constitution?

The Princes
authoritie
in ceremoniall Constitutions.

And yet, what the ciuill Christian Magistrate can doe, (and that not De facto but De iure, can rightlie doe) is another question. Dare they stande to this, that the Ciuill Christian Magistrate can make no ceremoniall constitution, neither for time, place, nor forme of preaching nor praying, nor administring the sacraments, nor for order, comelinesse, nor edification, without the consent of the Learned Pastors and Elders: yea, if they would not consent, against their consent also? If they should

shoulde be bryed with this question: I thinke it woulde say so: unto our Learned W². for all their Learning, consent.

Did Moses make all his Ceremoniall Constitutions with their consent that were Pastors & Elders? And what consent can they shewe of the pastors and Elders, for all the ceremoniall constitutions that David made, or Solomon after him: I thinke they doe not dissent, but that the making or efficacy of them relied upon the confirmation of any their consent given thereto by their suffrages: or voices: howe can they prooue it?

And likewise since the coming of Christe, howe will they prooue that all the good imperiall Constitutions and sanctions, of the auncient godly Emperours in Ecclesiasticall matters, and about the state of the Church, had the expresse consent of the Bishops and pastoral Elders, in the very enacting and making of them: but howe neuer all they were made, let them name if they can but one, that hath bene made in her Maiesties time, eyther against or without the consent of the Learned pastors and Elders of our Church.

I denie not, but that they haue bene made, both without and against the consent of some Pastors and Elders, and those Learned too, for, wee graunt Learning to the aduersaries, though their Learning bee blinded with erronious affection. And they pleaded on the selfe same negative string against the Prince, which our W² here doe, that this authoritie can not be granted to any ciuill Christian Magistrate, without and against their consentes, being then (such as they were, for fault of better) the Pastors & Elders of the church, and that had the greatest stroke also (as they tooke vpon them) in these matters. And yet for all their reclaiming to the contrarie, the ciuill Christian magistrate (God be prayesd) did it, and did well too, mauer all the dissents, and against the consentes of them all. Against what pastors consent or Constitutions haue bin made.

But our W² eschewen meane not heere, the Popish Pastors and Elders, but the protestants. And can they prooue that her Maiestie made any ceremoniall Constitutions, whereby the Church must bee gouerned in meere Ecclesiasticall matters, without and against the consent of the protestant Pastors and Elders of the Church? but yet all this will not reach home, to serue their turne. And why: because, by these pastors and Elders, they cheefely meane indeede themselves, whome in the first front of this their Learned Discourse, they call the saythfull Ministers: and here the Learned pastors and Elders. For, as for those Elders that are gouernours, and yet not Teachers and preachers: wee haue hearde how in their last words, they haue handled them, for hauing any authoritie in the Synode. Whom our Br. mean by learned Pastors and Elders.

But where were these our W². then, when her Maiestie with the consent of the protestant pastors and Elders then lining, did make at her first coming consent.

comming to the supreme government of this our Church, these ceremoniniall Constitutions: for perhaps the moſt of them that are moſt businowe, were then but in the ſhell (as they ſay) or but yong hatches. And muſt all theſe Conſtitutions, that theſe Paſtors (which are ſince come, in the places of ſome of the Paſtors then,) doe not nowe conſent vnto, bee all of them vnlaſtfull conſtitutions and muſt the verie Princes autho-ritie alſo be called nowe in queſtion, and ſo flat denied, that it cannot bee granted; becauſe it was without or againſt theſe Paſtors and Elders conſenting that nowe are, and that then were not Paſtors and Elders? were theſe Conſtitutions no longer good, than thoſe Paſtors liued that conſented to the making of them?

And what ſhoulde we thinke nowe, if any other were made a newe, by the Queenes Maieſty (if at leaſt, they would graunt her thus much au-thoritie, that ſhee might make ſuch ceremoniall conſtitutions as ſhoulde not be againſt them, but with the conſent of theſe Paſtors and Elders nowe) woulde this holde, and theſe newe Conſtitutions be firme and un-violable? Yea, if it ſhoulde pleaſe the Paſtors that ſhall come after theſe, to giue their conſent alſo vnto them. And ſo wee muſt runne on in infinum, while the worlde laſteth continually chaunging, or at leaſt, continuall dependance on the Paſtors and Elders conſent: or elſe, all former conſtitutions are cut cleane off. For, if thoſe that our Brethren ſhall nowe conſent vnto, be good againſt thoſe that ſhall be Paſtors to come hereafter: then may theſe ceremoniall conſtitutions which haue bene made by her Maieſtie heretofore, with the conſent of her Learned Paſtors and Elders, that were then, good and ſtrong againſt theſe our Brethren, that pretend to be the Learned Paſtors and Elders nowe. And why cannot her Maieſtie do as much nowe, as ſhe could then? And can ſhe not maintaine theſe nowe, that ſo lawfully ſhe coulde and did make them?

Her Maje-ſties autho-ritie now, is as great as it was before.

And what hath ſhee made ſince, or of late, but that wherein ſhee had,
and hath the conſent of the Learned paſtors and Elders of the Church?
And if our Brethren doe not conſent vnto her Maieſtie, and to the other Learned paſtors and Elders of the realm conſenting. This (no doubt) cannot be but a grief vnto her Maieſty, & to all vs (with conſent herein to her auth.) that anie true & loving ſubiects vnto her, & deare vs, vnto ſhould thus diſſent both from her and vs. Notwithſtanding, this is no ſuffi-cient debarre, againſt her Maieſtie, but that ſhe had and hath full authoafter ward obeyed it, and so consented, when the Emperours had before designed it: but that, with as good reason, the Princes having the consent and that before-hand, of all or the moste part of those Bishops and Pastors: they may lawfully with their consent appoint both times, and places and formes also even of preaching and praying, and administring the Sacramentes. Yea, many of the sanctions that the Emperours have made (and the making of them is good and authentick) are of matters a great deale more meere Ecclesiasticall, as we shalbe ready (God willing) to shewe a greates number of them, if our Brethren shall desire to see them.

As for the reason that our Brethren here include in this Paraphra-sis (of whome, as in some respect he is a feeling member. This is but a weak reason, to debarre the authoritie of the Civil Christian Magistrate, in making ceremoniall Constitutions. For though in some respect, the Prince is but a feeling member (as they terme him) yet is he, under Christ (in some respect) the principall member, and representing (in some respect) a farre higher estate, then any, or than all the Pastors to witte, let them denie with the Papistes, that the Prince is next under Christ the supreme governer in Ecclesiasticall and temporall matters. which they cannot say of any, or al their Pastors. If they shal recommend the pastor in this respect, that he representeth Christ in his Ecclesiasticall Ministerie, (which the Prince though he also do in his civill Ministerie, yet in that respect is the inferiour) not withstanding, in that some respect, of the Princes supreme government, both Bishops and pastors and all (as Chrysostome saith) are under the Prince.

And what then (when men shall reade this) will they thinke of these high and lofty speeches, that our Brethren here make the Christian Soveraigne prince, a feeling member of the pastors and Elders? If they had said thus, that the Christian prince is a feeling member of the Church, not meaning as the Papists do, by the Church, only the Pastors but the whole composition of it; or actively to seele and founde the Pastors by governing of them, then had their meaning bene plaine and good, but their argument had bene neuer the better. But, that the Prince is made (as a part subiected to them) a member of the Pastors and Elders, is too farre to aduance themselves about the Prince, & about the church and all. For if the Prince be a member of the Pastors and Elders: then much more all those are so, that are vnder the Prince. And if in touching here the Pastors and Elders, they meane by these Elders their Eccl. gouernors that are not teachers: then in saying Pastors & Elders, of whom the ciuill Christian Magistrate is a member, they bring the Prince vnder those Gouernors also, and they being 1. seuerall functions; we shall haue 2. heads, like a spread-eagle, whereof all the people are the body, and the ciuill Christian Magistrate is in some respect but a feeling member. But what respect he can be a member to them both: that let them expound it: in I haue but little feeling of it.

The Prince

nors.

What feeling part they make the Prince
to bee.

And yet is this also as darkely spoken, as the other is presumptuous, to call the Prince their feeling member. For though it be somewhat, that in the worde feeling, they giue him life and sense at least: yet, whether they compare the Prince vnto the hande, wherein the sense of feeling is most sensible; or to any other inferiour part or member, that must also be referred to their further exposition. In the meane season, these speeches being so offensive, to any that haue any feeling in them, I mar- uell that they which cry out so much of the titles of Lord and Archbishop doe vnder pretence of these titles, Pastors and Elders, thus exalt themselves, and in respects of themselves, thus debate the high authoritie of the ciuill Christian Magistrate, that they make him their feeling member. But to confirme this, they proceede, saying:

The learned disc.
pa. 118.

It is out of all controuersie, that before there were any Christian Magistrates (for we will not speake of Sergius Paulus Proconsull of Cyprus, because he was but a Liefetenant of the Romane Emperour) this authoritie was proper vnto the Synode.

Bridges

If Donatistes, Anabaptistes, or Papistes, had repoted this reason, I would lesse haue marvelled. For this argument is the common refuge of all these three most pernicious Heresies, and enemies to the authoritie of the ciuill Christian Magistrate. When the Emperours made lawes against the Donatistes, and they vsed this reason against the Emperours, Saint Augustine answered them thus, Non inuenitur, &c. There is not founde an example in the Euangelicall and Apostolicall writings, that any thing was craued of the Kings of the earth, for the Church, against the enemies of the Church, who denieth that it is not founde? But as yet, that propheticie was not fulfilled, and natyge kynges vnder- stande, and bee yet learned that iudge the earth, serue the Lorde in feare.

23. Q. 4.
Non inue-

August. in Epist. 48. ad
vincentium.

For

For as yet, that was fulfilled, which is sayde a little before in the same Princes psalme, Wherefore did the Gentiles fret and the people imagine vaine thinges? prefigured. The Kinges of the earth and the Princes came together in one, against the Lorde and against his Christe, (or his annointed). Neuerthelesse, if the factes fore-passed in the prophetickall bookes, were figures of thinges to come: in that King which is called Nabuchodonozor, eyther of the times was figured, both that which the Church had vnder the Apostles, and that it nowe hath. In the time therefore of the Apostles and martyrs, that was fulfilled which was figured, when the King whome wee haue mentioned, did compell the Godly and the iust to worship Images, and commaunded them that refused, to bee cast into the flames. But now is that fulfilled, which a little after was figured in the same King, when as hee (beeing conuerted to honour the true God) decreed in his kingdom, that whosoever blasphemed the God of Sydrak, Misak, and Abednago, shoulde suffer due punishmentes. The former time therefore of that King, did signify the former times of the infidell Kings, which the Christians suffered for the wicked. But the later time of that king, did signify the times of the later Kinges, that are nowe saythfull, which the wicked suffer for the Christians.

Nabuchod. figured the states of the Kinges after Christe.

The times figured of Kings persecuting.

The times figured of faithful setting forth godly constitutions.

Thus sayth St. Augustine against the Donatistes, that vsed this argument against the Lawes and decrees of the Emperors, that in the Apostles times there were no Christian Princes, that Christ appointed not Princes, but Preachers to meddle in matters of Religion: and at this day the Papistes and Anabaptistes furbish ouer a fresh the same arguments, and will our Bishops nowe gather vponce again, the offerings of these their rotten reasons, to furnish their Learned Discourse of their Pastors and Elders, in their assemblies and Synodes, against the lawfull authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters, of the ciuil Christian Magistrates?

But wee haue seene this reason befoze sufficiently confuted by Gellius Snecanus, a principall fauorite of our Bishops, to whose further confutations I remit them. Who confuteth also this exception of Paulus Sergius, which namely beere our Bishops put backe, and will not admitte.

But their reason is ouer weake, Because hee was but a liefetenant of the Romaine Emperour. For, if he were the Emperours Lifetenant: he represented to them where he was liefetenant, the cheef authoritie of the Emperour himselfe, euen as much as Pilato, Festus or Felix did in Iurie.

Paulus Sergius the Emperours liefetenant.

And if the people did obey him befoze hee was a Christian, did his Christianitie among those people that were conuerted likewise, ouer whome he still gouerned, diminish his authoritie? but what meane they herebye heereby? doe they reiect all argumentes for prooffe of the authoritie of the ciuill Christian Magistrate, if they bee not as meere Monarkes as was the Emperour? what an aduantage were this giuen to the Anabaptists, and what a number of Snecanus examples were hereby defeated?

And yet both not this argument holde, that because this authoritie was proper to the Synode, before there were any Christian Magistrates, and so, the Synode then decreed all such caremonial constitutions without, yea agaynst the consent of the ciuill magistrate, because (as they say) there were not then any Christian Magistrates, that yet it so remayneth still proper to the Synode, to decree all such ceremonial constitutions, without, yea, agaynst the Ciuill Magistrate, being now become a Christian Magistrate.

But they can not doe so now, the state of the Prince being the principall partie ouer them, and agreeing in faith with them, as they could do them, or rather could do them other wise. So that, all the case is cleane altered, by this so great an alteration. And now, if they will not haue the ciuill Christian Magistrate to decree any such caremonial constitutions without and agaynst the Pastors consent: is it meete the Pastors shoulde on the other side decree any such constitutions, without and agaynst the consent of the ciuill Christian Magistrate? what an arrogancie were this in them, and what an iniurie offered to the ciuill Christian Magistrate?

But as they can shewe no such Caremoniall Constitution in force among vs, made by our gracious souereigne, agaynst or without the consent of sufficient stoze of our Learned Bishops and Pastors: so, they can shewe none made by our Learned Bishops and Pastors, (whereby the Church of England must bee gouerned) without the consent of our moste Christian soueraigne and cheefe Magistrate. So, God forbid, that euer we should contend with so godly a Prince.

And would God, our Brethren would not so farre presume herein, hauing such a blessed Prince of her Maestie as they and wee haue, to contend thus to get vnto them selues the only or cheefe authoritie to call Sy-nodes, to decree caremoniall constitutions, to prescribe lawes, to frame modities, and to lay plot-fourmes of Ecclesiasticall regiment and Christian Discipline: to set forth newe bookes of Common Prayer, of the di-uine seruice and administering Sacraments, of ordeining Ministers, of making new maners of marrying, of Excommunicating the offenders by new gouernors: of burying the dead without all accustomed orders: of altering parishes: of deposing B. of making al Past. to be equall: of bringing in new officers: of disposing al the Clergies livings: yea of limittting the authority of the ciuill Christian magistrate: and commending al these things vnto to do all this and many thinges mo, (besides those that yet wee see not so plainly

plainly opened) both without and against the consent and authoritie of ^{us} Caesar. their moste dread and Christian Soueraigne: yea verillie, to her greate greefe and no small daunger, both of her royall estate and person. But as though all were cleare and safe, our Brethren still go on, against the ciuil Christian Magistrates authoritie, saying.

Which authoritie we knowe to bee graunted to the Church by our Sauour Christe, practized by his Apostles, continued by their successors three hundred yeres, before there was any Christian Emperours (for we receiue not Philip for a Christian Emperour, and long time after The learned disc. pa. 118. & 119. there were Christian Emperours, euen as long as any puritie continued in Religion, vntill both Emperours and Synodes were thrust out of all lawfull authoritie, which they ought to haue in the Church, by the tyranny of Antichriste.

I graunt the Synodall authoritie to bee graunted to the church by our Sauour Christe, to be practized by his Apostles, and to bee continued by their successors three hundred yeares, not before there were any Christian Emperours: but before there were any such Christian Emperours as onelie proclaimed the maintenance and profession of the Christian faith, as Constantine & his successors did. For, Constantius Chlorus the father of this Constantine the great, is commended by Eusebius lib. 8. cap. 14. in these wordes: Not long after, Constantius the Em- Bridges Constantius Chlorus a Christian Emperour. Euseb. lib 8. Eccl. hist. cap. 14. perour (passing all others throughout his life, in clemencie and goodnesse towards his subiectes, singularly affected towards Gods worde) ended according to the Lawe of nature, the common race of his mortall life.

Leauing behinde him his naturall sonne Constantinus, Emperour and Caesar, to supplie his room. And was first related of them (meaning the Heathen) into the number of the Gods. Enioying after his death, all imperiall honor and dignitie due to his person. In his life hee was moste benigne, and of most bountifull soueraignty among all the Emperours, who alone of all the Emperours in our time, gouerned most graciously and honourable, during the whole tearme of his reigne, shewing humanity and bountifulnesse vnto all men, no partaker by anie meanes with any presumptuous sedition raysted agaynst vs, hee regarded the Godly about him in securitie without sentence of guilt and without all contumelye; hee destroyed no Churches, hee practized no impietye that mighte bee preiudiciall to oure Religion.

He obtayned a blessed life, and an end thrise happy. He being Emperour alone ended this life both gloriously and peaceably, in the presence of his naturall sonne and successor, who also was moste prudent and Religious. His Sonne Constantinus being proclaymed full us. Caesar. full Emperour and Caesar by the armie, (and long before by God himselfe the vniuersall King, became a follower of his Fathers pietie in Christian religion. All this his commendation testifieth Eusebius who was also lining in his dayes.

And to confirme this he telleth also lib. 1. De vita Constantini cap. 11. Howe he sayned that he would put all the Christians, which would profess their religion, out of their offices and preferre the Paganes. But when they which were Godlie Christians gaue vp their offices, and chose rather to leaue their honours, then to leaue their profession of the Christian faith: hee embayased them, and those which offered to deny Christe to keepe their dignities, hee utterly remooued from his person, affirming that they would neuer be faithfull to the Prince, which were unfaithfull to God. Whereby it appeareth, that he was a true and Godly Christian Emperour.

Whereupon Eusebius concludeth, that not onely he himselfe, but his subiects also, did enioy by him a pleasaunt conuersation in holinesse, and deuotion towards God. Hee banished out of his Court Idolaters and dissemblers in religion, and hee receiued and iudged those moste worthy to bee about an Emperour, which confessed Gods trueth, commanding such to haue the guard, both of his person and Dominion: Hee serued and worshipped the onely true God. Hee condemned the multitude of the Gods that the wicked had. Hee fortified his house with the prayers of holy and faithfull men, and hee did so consecrate his pallace to the seruice of God, that his housholde was a congregation within his pallace, hauing Gods Ministers, and whatsoeuer is requisite for a Christian Congregation.

And although our Brethren peremptorily doe say, wee receyue not Philip for a Christian Emperour: yet wee haue hearde howe Eusebius, telleth, that though at the first hee was not of the Church of Christe so receyued by reason of his notorious sinnes: neuerthelesse on his repentance and confession, hee was at length receyued into the assemblee of the Christians at Rome, euen as a Christian, and of consequent as a Christian Emperour, except the Christians would haue denied him to bee Emperour, because hee was become a Christian. In dede hee coulde not (such was the iniquitie of the time then) make open profession of his Christianitie, or if he began it, he was too soone cut off. But this impediment was no debarre vnto his right, if hee had had such time and occasion as had Constantine,

Philip a Christian Emperour.

But had there bene no Christian Emperours before Constantine the great: yet were there in other Countreies mo Christian Princes, besides those that were the Emperours of Rome: yea, to goe no further, than this our owne Countreie, was not here King Lucius a Christian, besides other other Christian Princes after him? To which Lucius also (as wee finde in auncient records thereof) a letter was written by Eleutherius Bishop of Rome, anno. Dom. 202. in these wordes following:

You required that we should sende you the Romane and Emperiall lawes, that you might vse them in your kingdome of Brytannie. But those lawes we may disprooue, and not the lawes of God. You haue of late through the goodnesse of G O D, receaued in your kingdome, the fayth and lawe of Christe: you haue there in your kingdome both the Testamentes, out of them by the grace of God, and the aduice of your Realme, take you a lawe, and thereby Gouverne patiently your kingdome. You are in your kingdome the Vicar of God, according to the saying of the kingly Prophet, The earth is the Lordes and his fulnesse is the whole worlde, and all the dwellers therein. And againe, thou hast loued righteousness and hated iniquitie, wherefore G O D (euen thy God) hath annoynted thee with the oyle of gladnesse aboue thy fellowes. They are the kinges children, Christian Nations and people of your kingdome, that liue and consist vnder your protection, peace, and kingdome; according to the scripture, euen as the Henne gathereth her chickens vnder her winges. The people and Nations of the kingdome of Brytannie is yours. Such as are deuied, you shoulde gather them together vnto the lawes of Christe, vnto his holie Church, vnto peace and concorde. And you should cherish, mayntaine, protect, gouerne and defend them from the iniurious, from the malicious, and from the enemies of them. VVoe to that kingdome whose king is a child, and the Princes eate early in the mourning. I do not call the king a child, for his youth and minoritie: but for his follie, iniquitie and madnesse, according to the kingly Prophet: the bloudthirstie and deceitfull men shall not liue out halfe their dayes. By eating we shall vnderstande, gluttonie: by gluttonie, luxurie: by luxurie, all filth, wickednesse, and mischiefe, as sayth king Salomon: wisdome will not enter into a malicious soule, nor inhabite in a bodie thrall to sinne. A King hath his name of gouerning and not of his kingdome. So long shall you be a King as you rule well. Otherwise, you shall not so be named, but loose that name, which God forbid. God graunt that you may so rule your Realme of Brytannie, that with him (whose Vicar you are) you may raigne euer-lastingly.

Whereby it appeareth both that there were ciuill Christian Magistrates before Constantine, and also what authoritie in making Ecclesiasticall lawes and constitutions, with the consent of the Pastors, was the attributed vnto them, in so much that Socrates sayth in his Preface to his first booke of the Ecclesiasticall Histories: that, after the Emperours depended much on them: yea, the chiefeſt counſels haue bene, and are called together & appointed by the. But now, had there been no Chriſtian Prince all that time of three hundred yeres: had this been any debarre to their authoritie, if there had bene any? Nay rather, how doe not our Brethrens owne wordes confute themſelues.

And long time (ſay they) after there were Chriſtian Emperours , euen as long as any puritie continued in religion, vntill both Emperors and Synodes were thruſt out of all lawfull authoritie, which they ought to haue in the Church, by the tyrannie of Antichriſt. :

Ah ha, go to then, after the Emperours were become Chriſtians they had authoritie, and it was a lawfull authoritie, and they ought to haue it in the Church. And how were they thruſt out of it, if they had it not? If they meane not this, of their authoritie in Church matters: how then do they ſay: they were by the tyrannie of Antichriſt, thruſt out of all lawful authoritie which they ought to haue in the Church? With they are not yet, by the tyrannie of Antichriſt thruſt out of all lawfull authoritie, but chiefly of that which they ought with the ſynode (and in ſome thinges aboue the ſynode) to haue in Church matters? And if their authoritie had continued (in poſſeſſion and practice) ſo long (as heere they ſay) anie puritie had continued in religion: then had not the Emperours and other Chriſtian Princes, bene yet thruſt out. For, (thanks be to God) among ſo many pollutions, errors, Idolatries, ſuperſtitions, ignorances, and other infinite abominations of Antichriſt; yet ſtill ſome puritie continued in religion, and euer ſhall do, againſt which the gates of hell ſhall not preuaile. Or elſe, neither the Church of God and kingdome of Chriſte, nor the inuincible truth of his Goſpell, were eternall. All theſe ſpeeches therfore are too inconsiderate, for ſo Learned a diſcourſe as is pretended.

But they except, it was not graunted by Chriſt.

I anſwere, this is the common exception of the aduerſaries, and alſo of the Anabaptiſtes, both of them drawing it from the Donatiſtes, as we haue ſene. But it is moſt vnttrue. For, vnderſtande by the name of Chriſte, the eternall Deitie of the ſonne of God, and his regiment in the Church, beſore he ioyned our humane nature to his diuine nature, as Saint

Saint Paule sayth, 1. Cor. 10. 4. They dranke of the spirituall rocke that ^{Princes be-} followed them, and the rocke was Christ: so was this authoritie euen then ^{fore Christs} graunted by Christe, vnto those Christian ciuill Magistrates in his ^{comming.} Church.

They reply againe, as they did befoze, against the christian Magistrates, that yet they were not in his and his Apostles time.

And I aunswere againe, they were in his time, that is, in the time of that regiment of his Church, befoze that fulnesse of time, wherein God sent his sonne made of woman, as Saint Paule speaketh, Gal. 4. ver. 4. Christe had his day (and a day is a time) euen in the time of Abraham, and in all times. And yet, if at any time there were not in his Church ciuill Christian Magistrates, as at manie times (we grant)

there were not, both befoze the time of his comming in the fleshe, and after; yet is this right of so strong interest, that time can not plead prescription against it. And sith we can prooue, that the ciuill Magistrate in the Church of Christe, had, and had lawefully this authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters, befoze the time of Christes taking our nature on him: let them shewe, that it ceased utterly, or was lost, or is abridged by Christes comming: and then they shall say some what to the purpose. Which if they can not doe: then the want of furnishing the place for a time disanulleth not the right for euer. And therefore this is but a mere babbling (sauiug Brotherly reuerence) and losse of time, if it be not much worse, to vse, and thus still to beate vpon, these cauilling, false and sophisticall argumentes of the olde Scismaticall Donatistes, of the newe libertine Anabaptistes, and of the Romane Antichristian aduersaries, which they make in their trecherous books, against the supreme gouernement of Christian Princes. And yet, we haue sufficiently shewed befoze, especially out of Gellius, that there were ciuill christian Magistrates euen in the Apostles times. Yea, how those also whom our Brethren misconceau, to haue been Eccl. Governing and not teaching Elders; Gualter thinketh them to haue been (in those times of persecutions) their ciuill christian Magistrates, Iudges and Gouernors, that they chose among theselues, till the higher Magistrates, Princes & Monarkes, receaued the publike profession and maintenance of Christianitie.

But they say besides, there is not any promise made in the scripture, that when they were (become) christians, the Synode should resigne it vnto them.

What talke they of the Synodes resigning to the ciuill christian Magistrate, the authoritie that in the right of his office is due vnto him? As though the Magistrate had it by their resignation, or as though they befoze had vsurped the Magistrates authoritie? No doubt, but y those persons in the synode, which exercised (in defect of the Magistrates any part of that Christian Magistrates before Christs comming.

The want of such persons at some times, is no barre to the right at all times.

All things

in their times.

Psal. 2.

For when as they that would not haue iust lawes to be constituted against their impieties, do say, that the Apostles desired not such thinges of the kinges of the earth: they consider not, that then it was another time, and that all things are to be done in their times. For what Emperour did then beleue in Christ, that might serue him in making lawes for pietie against impietie? where as yet that propheticall saying was fulfilled; why did the Gentiles fresse, and the people imagine vaine thinges? the kinges of the earth stood vpp, and the Princes came together against the Lorde, and against his Christ. But as yet, that was not done which in the same Psalme is sayde a little after, and now yee kinges vnderstande, bee yee wise that iudge the earth, serue the Lorde with feare, and reioyce vnto him with trembling.

How kings
serue the L.

Ezechias.

Iosias.

Nabuchodonozor.

Howe then doe kinges serue the Lorde with feare? but in forbidding with a religious seueritie, and in punishing those thinges, that are doone contrarie to the commaundementes of the Lorde? For hee serueth otherwise, for that he is a man: and otherwise, for that hee is a king. For that he is a man, he serueth in liuing faythfully. But, for that he is also a king; he serueth in enacting (with a conuenient vigor) lawes that commaunde iust thinges, and forbid the contrarie.
Euen as Ezechias serued in destroying the groaues and temples of the Idolles, and those high places that were builded, contrarie to the commaundements of God. Euen as Iosias serued, he also dooing the same things. Euen as the king of the Niniuits serued, in compelling the whole Citie to pacifie God. Euen as Darius serued, in giuing it vnto Daniel into his power, to breake the Idoll; and in casting his enemies to the Lyons. Euen as Nabuchodonozor serued. of whom wee haue already spoken, in forbidding by a terrible lawe, all that were placed in his kingdome from blaspheming God. In this therefore kings do serue the Lord, so farre forth as they be kinges, when they do those things to serue him, that none but kinges can doe.

Sith kinges therefore did not as yet serue the L. in the Apostles times,
but

but as yet did imagine vaine thinges against God, and against his Christ; that all the foretellings of the Prophets, should be fulfilled, impieties could not then indeede be forbidden by lawes, but rather be exercised. For so was the order of the times rowled about, that both the Jewes killed the preachers of Christe, thinking they did a dutie to God, as Christ foretold, and the Gentiles fretted against Christ, and the Martyrs patience overcame them all. But when that began to bee fulfilled, which was written, and all the kinges of the earth shall worship him and all Nations shall serue him: what man (that is sober in his wit) can say to kinges? Haue not you care in your kingdome, of whom the Church of your Lord is holden, or is oppugned. It pertaineth not in your kingdome vnto you, who will bee eyther religious, or sacrilegious: vnto whom it cannot be sayde, it pertaineth not vnto you in your kingdome, who will be shamefast, who will be vnshamefast. For, when free choysc is giuen of God vnto a man; why shoulde adulteries bee punished by lawes, and sacrileges be suffered? Is it a lighter matter, for the soule not to keepe her fayth to God, than for a woman not to keepe her faith to her husbände?

Princen care.

The time of persecution. Ioh. 16.

Psa. 71.

The king ought not to think the care of the first table pertaineth not to him, lesse than the second.

Thus both Augustine proue that this authoritie of the Christian Magistrates and Monarkes, in making constitutions & lawes for Ecc. matters as wel as for temporall, though it were not accomplished in the Apostles time, yet it was prefigured, prophesied, and promised that it should be afterwarde fulfilled: and in convenient time it was performed.

Therefore it remaineth, that it be shewed by them that defend that this absolute authoritie is in the ciuill Magistrate, by what spirite, or reuelation, or scripture (if there be any that we knowe not :) for wee would be glad to learne, how this authoritie was translated from the Church (in which it was once lawfully vested) vnto the ciuill Christian Magistrate.

I knowe none of vs that defendeth that an absolute authoritie is in the ciuill Magistrate. And therefore it remaineth not in vs to shewe any thing for that, which we defende not. If wee defende it, let them name the man, and shewe the place, and let the partie defende himselfe as he can. And I would learne of them also, by what spirite, or reuelation, or scripture (if there be any that we knowe not) they can so brutellie burden their so gracious Soueraigne, to take vpon her an absolute authoritie? Or to slander vs their Brethren, that we defend that this absolute authoritie is in the ciuill Magistrate.

Bridges

Our brethr. slander of absolute authoritie.

They say they would be glad to learne, how this authoritie was translated from the Church (in which it was lawfully vested) vnto the ciuill Christian Magistrate. And can they proue then, that the Church was neuer lawfully vested with this absolute authoritie? For my part, I am authoritie. of contrarie opinion, nor euer yet learned (for all the Papists harpe much vpon some what the like string) that the Church of God euer had, or took vpon her, any absolute authoritie, in any Eccle. matters whatsoever, and much lesse do I learne, that it was translated from the Church, vnto the ciuill Christian Magistrates. Volubet (I trust) they will giue vs leave to learne thus much, as euen Beza himselfe out of the worde of God, shall teach vs to be a lawefull authoritie and a needefull, of the ciuill Christian Magistrate, loyned with the Synode in these matters.

The authoritie ouer synodes that Beza alloweth to Christian Princes.

The objections in Beza to the contrarie.

Beza in the 5. Chapter of his christian confession in the 15. article, as fore cited, for the Princes calling the generall counells or synodes, & for making the Presidents or Gouernors of the same, first he alleageth some objections to the contrarie, that the Princes government is different from the Ministers of the word. And that it is for many causes a most perillous thing to throwe the counells vnder the authoritie of Princes. For that thereby the ambition of them that would gratifie Princes is so kindled; and on the contrarie the simplicitie of many terrified, with the vnwonted presence of the Princes; not to speak of that which would God were not true, that there haue alwayes bene but fewe Princes, that haue bin indued, with so much both learning and godlinesse, as is necessarily required, for the moderating of such actions, or that thinke they ought seriously to consider of these matters. When as rather (by a certaine calamitie of the world, as it were fatall) they vse to be intentine either to euery bodie, or to hearken rather to the euill than to the good.

Princes not to be so separated from the ministers as though they were prophane.

Notwithstanding all these objections to the contrarie, Beza sayth: but it seemeth not verie difficult to aunswere these arguments. First I iudge, that heede must be taken, that wee so discern not the Princes of this worlde, from the ministers of the worde, that wee shoulde also separate them, as though they were prophane. Which was the first steppe, whereby the papisticall tyrannie mounted vppe into this toppe, from whence it can nowe scarcely be throwen downe. But when as no man can denie that Princes ought principally to care, that the ministerie of the worde shoulde proceede on his course without offence, vnto whome (I pray you) should it rather appertaine, in the greatest tempestes which oftentimes are stirred vp of the Ministers themselves, to call the Churches together, and to ouersee that in their assemblie, all thinges be done well and orderly, and that euen with their presence to confirme the good and terrifie the euill? But there were no politique Magistrates that gouerned the assemblie of the Apostles, and of the first Churches: I graunt it. For whom would they haue called? Neither doe I thinke, that the Church dependeth on their edictes or authoritie: but this I say, that me thinketh he deserueth worse of the Church, Bezas aunswere to our Brethrs. objection that there were no Princes in the Apostles time.

that

that would deprive the Church of the helpe of the present Magistrates ^{granted to} so often as it is graunted of God. For (I confesse) that indeede the of- ^{Christian} fice of the ciuill Magistrates is one thing, and of the Ministers, another: ^{Prince..} if yee regarde that that is the proper office of euerie one of them. But I saye, that this is a commune office of them both that they should studie for the Churches peace, and indeede so; that they (so often as it pleased God to furnishe the Churches with this benefite, that they may haue a godly Magistrate) should be the chiefeft keepers of good order: and that these out of the pure worde of God should freely and holily, as it were the mouth of the Lorde of which the godlie Magistrate asketh counsell, should constitute all thinges, whereunto the Princes should afterwarde so subscribe, that they shoulde also by their authoritie confirme among their people, that which shall be ordeined out of the worde of God, and that they command it to be straitly obserued.

If anie require examples whereby it may be confirmed. I will aunswere, it seemeth to mee that Dauid, Salomon, Ezechias, Iosias, did not otherwise with the Elders of the Church of Israell. And it clearly appeareth, that all those that were the faythfull auncientes euen euerie one of them, did not thinke otherwise concerning the gouerning of the boundes of the ciuill power and of the Ecclesiasticall ministerie. I thinke therefore it must bee looked vnto, not that the presence of godly Princes bee excluded, but bee circumscribed in their boundes, that heere they shoulde remember they must doe farre otherwise, than if they sate in their throne, eyther in hearing ciuill controuersies, or in enacting lawes. When as they be in the synode, not that they should raigne, but that they shoulde serue. Not that they shoulde enacte lawes, but the same beeing expounded out of the worde of God, by the mouth of his ministers, they should sette them forth to be obserued, both of themselves and others.

But if so be any shall say, it is danger, least any entrie by this meanes should be made open to ambitious wits: I answere that is true indeed. As it appeareth by those foule & flattering synodall acclamations, such as were fitter for the Theaters playes, than for a synode: but I answere, (besides that it cannot be, that all discommodities can bee provided for:) experience it selfe doth shew, that an entrie is opened to farre greater offences by the Princes absence, than by his presence. For, what will not ambitious, light and rash men dare to doe; (of which sort too manie haue alwayes beene founde among the ministers themselves) except that they bee kept in awe in their office, with some reuerence of the Magistrate beeing present, so often as that is graunted of Briefely therefore to conclude, if a general synode were to be gathered together, sith that neither all the Churches do now obey one Prince, nor the greatest part of Princes (be it spoken by their leaue) seeme fitt ynough to gouerne all this action, in so great controuerfies & discords also of mindes; neyther yet in the multitude of Presidentes anie thing could be freely ynough and quietly ordeyned: it should seeme necessa- rie, that all they which are chiefe Gouvernours, or Princes, or Magistrats of free Cities, setting aside all ambition on eyther partie, shoulde by a common consent in the feare of the Lorde, determine of the number of those that should be the collocutors, and also of the time and place of the synode, and chiefly also of him that should be the Moderator thereof, yea and of all the fourme of the action, on those conditions, that both be agreeable to the word of God, & are most fit for restoring the concord of the Churches. This is the authoritie that Beza alloweth to the ciuill Christian Magistrates and Princes concerning Synodes.

Wherein although he speaks indeede somewhat too contumeliously of Christian Princes, and of the godly ancient Councels, and restrayns too much on the other side the Princes authoritie beyond his examples: yet for our partes, what hath there euer bene established by anie Nationall Synode in this Realme, wherein her Maiestie hath taken further authoritie, for Eccl. constitution, although the matters were but meere cere- monial, than is here set downe and circumscribed by Beza? If our Bre- thzen will but graunt thus much to the Prince; then, as her Maiestie may make lawes to confirme those thinges that in this order haue with vs bin decreed, & determined, and to comand that they be straitly obserued: so would I (for my poore skill) be glad to learne, by what spiritie, reuelation or scripture, (if there be any that I knowe not,) both this authori- tie of the Prince as well before the synode is called, as ioynedly with the synode assembled, and after ward in confirming the synodes acts, & also the synodes authoritie it selfe, and the decrees that they haue in this ma- ner, and in these matters, alreadie decided, determined, and concluded; may be still by our Brethz. (being but priuate Ministers of the same Na- tionall Church) called againe into new question, cancelled, contemned, condemned, & written against; and that without any authoritie either of the Prince, or synode of that Nation? How our Brethz. can warrant this, I would be glad to knowe for my learning, and it would satisfie manie mo, if our Brethzen shalbe able to shewe it. But they harping on an other string, crie vpon vs to shewe that the Prince hath an absolute authoritie, and

and to this purpose they proceede, saying :

Therefore, vntill this may be shewed by sufficient warrant of Gods holy word, we hold that the Synode of every Prouince, hath authoritie to decree concerning ceremoniall orders of the Church, whereof some may be general to all cōgregatiōs, some particular to certaine Churches.

If our Brethren stand vpon our shewing by sufficient warrant of Gods holy word, this absolute authoritie, wherewith (by their leaue, both vniuersally and neyther so christianlike nor subiectlike as should be some them) they burthen the ciuill christian Magistrate, which is (God be prayesd) ouer vs, her most excellent Maiestie : we shall then neuer re- clayme them from their opinion, nor let them to hold still what they please. For we profess before hand, at least, I for my part, that I can shew none, nor I knowe of any such absolute authoritie, that either we yeld to the Prince, or that the Prince claymeth in this our Church : but, let absolute adoe, and then, that the ciuill christian Magistrate hath had, and ought to haue some authoritie, and that in the boundes thereof, a supreme authoritie also, we haue shewed by sufficient warrant of Gods holy word, and euen here not onely by the ancient Father Augustine, but also euen by Bezacs owne approbation and p[ro]u[er]s thereof, where he min- ceth it most : neyther can they, nor all the world elude this that we haue shewed thereon, and this is it that we hold also, of the Princes authority, concerning the calling and governing of the Synodes, what we holde further, we shall come to it orderly afterwards : but here they tell us what they hold.

We hold (say they) that the Synode of every Prouince, hath authoritie to decree, concerning ceremoniall orders of the Church. Before, of absolute authoritie, they say, they would be glad to learne, how this authoritie was translated from the Church (in which it was once law- fully vested) vnto the ciuill christian Magistrate. These were too high words, nor they can ener be able to shew it by sufficient warrant out of Gods holy word, that the true Church of Christ was ever vested with absolute authoritie, but alwayes reserved that vesture, to her Lord and husband Iesus Christ. The Pope indeede, and his Popish Church, be like a proude Prelate, and he like a malapert Madame, strined which of them should reuest themselves with absolute authoritie, a more royall robe, then became them or any creature to be vested with : The Queene sayth David, Psal. 45. 10. did stand on thy right hand in a vesture of the golde of ophir. But, least she should thinke her selfe vested with absolute authoritie, he saith vnto her : Hearken O daughter, and consider, and beare downe thine eare, forget also thine owne people, and thy fathers house, so shall the King haue pleasure in thy beautie, for he is thy Lord, and reuerence thou him : so that she is still vested with obedience, and though with authoritie, not with absolute.

But it seemeth, that our Brethren as better aduised, will not let go their former hold, that they sayd the Church did hold, for the vesting her with this vesture. For here they leane out the word absolute, and say onely, that the Church hath authoritie, which is a great deale more truly and warily spoken than before. And yet herein also (we thinke) in another point they greatly overshote themselves: for where they say, that the Synode of euery Prouince hath authoritie to decree concerning ceremoniall orders of the Church, leaning out quite and cleane the Prince, whome they include not in the name of Synode, but making the Prince another partie besides the Synode, moue the question, what is due to the Prince, what to the Synode. This is very much, if I might not rather say, this is very little, or nought at all, to make now the Christian Magistrate to haue no authoritie at all, but be cleane excluded. And that is more, if the Christian Magistrate haue diuers Prouinces in his Dominions, the Synode of euery Prouince hath authoritie to decree concerning ceremoniall orders of the Church, he or his authoritie, neither in all nor in any of those his Prouinces, being once so much as mentioned. But what they meane by these speeches following, whereof some may be generall to all congregations, some perticuler to certaine Churches, let themselves (a Gods name) make their meaning playner: for as yet, I perceiue not, (such is my bulnesse) how all congregations are bound to obserue the Decrees, concerning ceremoniall orders of the Church, that are decreed in the Synode of euery Prouince, or, that euery Prouince, consisting but of certayne perticular Churches, hath authoritie to make Decrees, whereof some may be generall to all congregations. What they intend herein, I can scarce ghesse, except they would haue all Churches and congregations be bound to receiue the Decrees of the Synodes holden in Geneva, or in some other Prouince that they like better, and say, they were of the number of those Decrees, which they made to be generall to all congregations. But, as our Synodes prouinciall, cannot make any such ceremoniall order to binde them, or to binde generally the congregations or Churches of any other Princes Prouinces: so haue they no more authoritie to make ceremoniall orders, to binde our congregations and Churches thereunto. For, as it were to be wished, that all places might be brought to one perfection, so is it not alwayes necessarie, that they bee lyke in all things. This wish for perfection of vni-ty in all places (if the matter might go by wishing) is to be liked, so farre south as perfection may be wished, though hardly hoped for in the imperfection of this life, in the Church militant, and in the great varietie of ceremoniall orders, in the sundry parts and Prouinces of the same: howbeit, in doctrine, especially in the grounds and and principles thereof, it is to be wished for, as necessary: and although it be not alwayes necessary, that all places be like in all things, meaning ceremoniall orders and constitutions, whereof before they spake: yet for all places that be of one countrey, state, realme, dominion or prouince, it is farre better that all places were alike. For, although variety in those things, may stand with the vnitie of the faith, and with the substance of our communitie in the copozation of the mysticall bodie of Christ, which is his true and holy Catholike Church, the communion of the Saints: yet if they be knit together in one order of these ceremoniall things also, where they liue together vnder one Christian Magistrate, it doth more confirme them in the other substantiall vnitie. And the variety is dangerous in one Church or kingdome, euen in those more free and inferior matters, as with græse we see in England at this day, what destructions and contentions haue risen, and dayly do rise in our Churches, that otherwise in doctrine are vnited, and yet the variety of these ceremoniall orders, hath with some called in suspicion the vnitie of religion, and with many hath disturbed, if not broken the vnitie of our christian peace and concord. And therefore excellently well are these two knitte together, Cor. iij. vii. one hart, one way. Zanchius noting the difference of these vnities, in his Confession of Christian Religion, Cap. 24. de Eccl. militante aphorif. 14. & 15. writeth thus: For with what things diuers peoples are gathered together into one bodie, with the same things also (we beleue) that they are conserued, being vnited, and do more and more growe together. Sith therefore the gathering together of the Church, is not made nor conserued properly by ceremonies, but by the holy Ghost, but by the word, but by faith, but by charitie, but by obseruance of the commaundements of God: we doubt not, but that also by the same things, the vnitie thereof is to be reteyned and cherished. When as the Apostle also to the Ephesians, where he treateth of the vnitie of the Church, teacheth that it consisteth in these things, no mention being made of ceremonies.

In the meane season we denie not, but that vnitie euen in ceremonies themselves, and in the rites of euery Church, so farre forth as by conscience it may be done, is to be reteyned and to be reuerenced. For, there are two kyndes of thyngs, wherein the vnitie of the Church may bee: the things that are deliuered in the word of God, and the things that are not expressed in the word, such as are, many externall rites and ceremonies Ecclesiasticall.

In those things (deliuered in the word) we beleue that vnitie euery where and alwayes is very necessary: but in these things, although by it selfe it be not necessarie, but that according to the diuersitie of places, and according to the diuers consideration of the time, it is profitable word.

to haue diuers rites : notwithstanding, where any thing concerning these matters is ordeyned and receyued for the edification of the Church, there (we thinke) that vnitie also in such kinde of rites, is of euerie bodie to be reteyned, and the orders Ecclesiasticall are not to be disturbed. According to the Apostles rule, all things in the Church ought to be done in order decently, and to edification, of which mat- ters, we do very greatly allow and embrace the two Epistles of Augu- stine written to Ianuarius.

The wisdom of the Synode therefore, ought to haue such regard of all Churches, that they haue speciall respect to euery one.

Here is all of the wisdom of the Synode, but nothing of the autho- ritic of the Magistrate : of the Synodes such regarde of all Churches, and speciall respect to euery one, that to the Christian Magistrate, there is here neither any regard, nor respect had or mentioned, eyther generall or speciall, is this the wisdom and equall dealing of our Brethren be- twene the Magistrate and the Synode for this authoritie?

Howbeit, this also is not true, that for the speciall respect to euery one, the Decree of the Synode in one Prouince, may not runne in gene- rall alike to all the Churches in that one Prouince. For, if euery one (Church) in one Prouince, may varie from another, the same may be sayd by as good reason, of euery person in euery one Church. Also, that the Synode should haue a speciall respect of euery one of them, and so in deepe our Brethrens words may be understood, saying, not to euery one Church, but to euery one : so that euery one differing from another, it were best to make no Decree at all, but let euery man do as he best li- ked, hand ouer head, without any order of vniformitie in ceremonies at all, and so, to make worst, and to be partiall to neyther partie, to cut off all authoritie quite and cleane both from Magistrate and Synode in these matters, and let all be fans ceremonies as the French saith.

Wherein we of long time in England, haue beene caried away with an vntrue principle, that vniformitie must be in all places, and things alike, as though we would feede olde men and sucking infants all with one kinde of meates, or as though we would cloath all ages in a robe of one asize : and that which is more absurd, compell men of ripe age to sucke the dugges, to weare their biggins, and to carrie rattles and other childish bables.

If our Brethren by this long time in England, meane the time, since we haue (God be prayd for it) receyued the light and libertie of the Gos- pell : then is not this true that heere they say, we haue beene caried away with an vntrue principle, that vniformitie must be in all places and things alike : for we prescribe not to all places, nor preiudicate any other Churches, that are not in nor off the state of the Churches in England and Ireland :

Ireland: neyther yet all of them, but that in some things also according to their customes and priuiledges, they may differ concerning these ceremoniniall constitutions, from the generall vniformitie of our Churches.

tie.
If particular Churches might alter ceremonies, then were the Synodes constitutions of no authoritie.

But, were it lawfull for euerie particular Church in England, to alter the ceremonies decreed in our nationall Synodes according to their pleasure or opinion, to what purpose neede any Synode at all to be troubled about these: or what authoritie at all hath a Synode to make any ceremoniniall constitutions, if the particular Churches of that nation be not bound vniformally to keepe them?

They say, that the vniformitie of these things, is, as though we would feede old men and sucking infants, all with one kind of meate. Although this similitude fitteth not their purpose, sith it is against, or aboue nature, for sucking infants to feede on all such kinde of meate, as old men can do: neyther are these ceremoniall constitutions set forth, for the soules of the weake and simple people to feede vpon, in stead of Gods word, or that they should receyue them as any part or substance of their soules nourishment and substance, as the meate is that the infants feede vpon: yet notwithstanding in the very point indeede, wherein our Brethren should applie it, (if they will applie it at all any thing aptly to the purpose) it makes cleane against them. For although sucking infants can not feede on all kinde of meate that old men can, yet old men can feede well ynough on all such kind of meate, as sucking infants can, for all they can feede on other stronger meates besides. And therefore, if our Brethren will needes compare these Ceremonies vnto the meate of the weake, (although they be ordeyned to farre other vses, both for the weake, and for the strong also) yet, why may not the strong feede on them in their kindes, so well as the weake may, for all they can digest stronger meate? for, though the old men feede thereon in another manner, and not in sucking the dugged, as sucking infants do, yet, for the meate it selfe, which is the milke, they may be fedde both of them wellynough with one kinde of meate: and many a good old man, and yong tw, will not thinke himselfe ill dealt withall, to haue euery morning for his breakfast as good a messe of milke, as euen a sucking infant also, for the proportion of his strength, may feede vpon.

The similitude of feeding old men and sucking infants with one meate. The vniformitie of this similitude. Our Brethrens similitude is against themselves.

Milke may be eaten both of old and yong.

Sainct Paule writing to the Corinthians, sayth, 1. Cor. 3. ver. 1. I could not speake vnto you (Brethren) as vnto spirituall men, but as vnto carnall, euen as vnto babes in Christ. I gaue you milke to drinke, and not meate: for ye were not able to beare it, neither yet now are ye able: and yet for all this, Sainct Paule setteth downe among them an vniformitie in diuers ceremoniall orders and constitutions, to the obseruation whereof all of them were alike bounden, albeit that all were not alike in knowledge among them, for, some of them were Prophets, some had of

tie.

them more and greater gifts then other had, some of them were stronger in faith and grace than other were. Although therfore this similitude may be well applied, to the diuers manner of teaching the doctrine of the word, as S. Paule likewise applyeth it, Hebr. 5. vers. 12, 13, and 14. and S. Peter, 1. Peter 2. vers. 2. yet neyther serueth it to proue any diuersitie in the vnitie of doctrine, nor to inferre any such diuersitie of any lawfull ceremoniall constitutions, as should in any Church impeach the vniforme obseruation of them.

The similitude of cloathing all ages in a roabe of one asize.

As this similitude therfore, of one kinde of meate for old men and sucking infants, serueth not their turne, so much lesse doth this comparison in their other similitude. Or as though (say they) we would cloath all ages in a roabe of one asize.

The overthrow of all the political orders.

And why also do they not apply this resemblance against all the ciuill and temporall lawes of the realme: for, whereas there is an vniformitie prescribed in them, and that the due obedience of all the subiects in the Realme, little and great, yong and olde, according to their degrees and estates, is alike required of them all, might they not say, this were euen as though we would cloath all ages in a roabe of one asize?

The overthrow of all vniuity in life & doctrine.

And if we may thus iest out the matter with such vnfit similitudes, the vnitie euen of doctrine, and the vniuersall obedience vnto it, of all alike, may with a light mocke be shaken off also. Are we not all bidden to cast off the cloakes of vnrighteousnesse, to put off the old man, and put on the new, and to be clothed with the white reynes and righteousness of Iesus Christ? and shall we thus scozne out these generall precepts, and say: who so, this is as though we would cloath all ages in a roabe of one asize: yea verily would we as nere as we could, euen cloath all ages of them in the one asize of such a dutifull obedience as is both requisite to the kindes of these roabes, and answerable for their age and calling worthe: although indeede, this be not one asize, but one liuerie, one cloath, one colour, one cognizance, prescribed to all alike, of the which euery one hath his portion seuered, according to the measure of his scantling.

Sucking the dugge.

And that which is more absurd (say they) compell men of ripe age to sucke the dugge, to weare their biggings, and to carry rattles, and other childish bables.

The ripeness or infancy of the inner or new mans age.

If their ripe age be but onely of the bodily age, and not the ripe age of the new man in the knowledge and growth of Iesus Christ, they may yet be such, as not onely well ynough may sucke the dugge at the brest of the Church their Mother: or, as may feede on milke againe, as the Apostle speaketh: but howsoeuer they thinke scozne, or count it absurd or impossible, as did Nichodemus, yet, as Christ sayd, (if they be not already) they must euen be borne againe, and may be such, as of whome S. Paule saith,

Galas

Galath. 4. ver. 19. my little children, of whome I travell in birth againe, ^{sic.} untill Christ be formed in you. But if they be of ripe age in the inner man, they are not compelled, either to sucke the dugges, or to weare biggins, or to carrie rattles, and other childish bables, by any their due obedience, to the vniforme conso:mitie of such rites, ceremonies, and constitutions, as a lawfull and godly Synode, with the confirmation of the ciuill christian Magistrates authoritie, shall thinke conuenient and fit to prescribe vnto them: for, neither are such ordinances to be thus vnreue-rently (beeing not superstitiously prescribed) compared to such base things, neyther are they set forth, to soade or dallie the people like bables, or bables, but for edifying of them in order and comelinesse. And although there be also some vse of them, for helping the weaker, notwithstanding all be not weake alike, nor strong alike, but some weaker, some stronger than another: yet, while they that are strong, do not glorie in their strength, but in the Lord, the godly stronger will beare with the infirmities of the godly weaker, nor will take the aduantage of all the christian libertie, which otherwise they might, and may still vse in free-dome of conscience, without any controuersie of those ordinances: and yet, were it but for feare of offending the weaker (and following Christ, that would not breake the brooked reede) they will still checke themselues with this sentence of the Apostle, 1. Cor. 10. 23. All things are lawfull for me, but all things are not expedient: which though they be lawfull in their owne nature by the lawe of God, yet if we must submitte our selues to an vniformitie with our Brethren, to edifie and winne them to greater matters, as Saint Paule sayth, He became all to all, that he might winne all: how much more, when to these good purposes, a godly Synode hath made such ceremoniall constitutions, to restrayne or compell those that in arrogancie, disdain, or obstinacie, would not thus brawe together by one rule in one vniformitie, ought the godlie people, yea, although all were strong, and none weake among vs: yet, for feare of opening a gappe to licentiousnes and disorder, or to the breach of publike concord, or to the contempt both of the Synode, and also of the Magistrate, to yeld all due obedience and reuerence to the vniforme obseruation of such lawfull ceremoniall constitutions. And those (especially being priuate persons) as should call these vniforme ordinances, biggins, bables, and rattles, deserue to be rattled by with other rattles, for so vn-reuerent contempt and disobedience.

How much better, and with more graue aduise ment than these, our learned discoursing Brethren, writeth Caluine on these Constitutions of the Church, who in the tenth Chapter of the fourth Booke of his Institutions, Section 1. speaking of the power of the Church, in making Ecclesiasticall lawes, he sayeth even in these wordes.

Has

tutions.
Caluine in Insti. lib 4.
ca. 10. sect. 1.
What constitutions
of the Church are to be impugned, and what are not.

Hac potestas tractanda nunc est, &c. This power is now to be treated vpon, whether it be lawfull for the Church to binde the consciences with her lawes: in which disputation, the politicall order is not touched, but onely this is handled, that God may be orderly worshipped, according to the rule that he hath prescribed, and that the spirituall libertie, which respecteth God may remayne safe vnto vs: the vse hath obeyned, that those things are called the traditions of men, whatsoever Edicts of the worship of God besides his word, haue proceeded from men. Against these is our strife, not against the holy and profitable constitutions of the Church, which make either to keepe discipline, or honesty, or peace. The end of our struing, is to restreine the vnmeasurable and barbarous Empire, that they vsurpe vpon the soules, which would be counted the Pastors of the Church, but in very deede, are the most cruell butchers. Here we see, what Ecclesiasticall lawes and constitutions Caluine alloweth, and what he impugneth. If they be such as be made for matter of the worship of God, or to inroch vpon the spirituall libertie of the conscience, Caluine proclaymeth warre against them, and so do we also, but, if they be such as tend to any of these three good ends, discipline, honestie, or peace, Caluine professeth not to strue with any such constitutions, and such only do we defend, and eyther our Brethren strue against them, or we agree so farre herein.

But here Caluine (least the good and lawfull constitutions also, should be thought suspected, as matters touching the intangling of the conscience,) after he hath moued the question of Saint Paules saying, Rom. 13. 5. how we must obey the Princes lawes, not only for wrath, but for conscience, proprie autem, &c. but properly conscience respecteth onely God, as I haue already sayd. Heereupon (saith he) sect. 4. it commeth to passe, that a law is said to bind the conscience, which bindeth a man simply without mens looking into it, or without consideration had of them, as for example, God commaundeth not onely to keepe the soule pure and chaste from all lust, but also forbiddeth any vncleannes of words and outward lasciuiousnes. To the obseruation of this law my conscience is subiect, although there were no man else in the world aliue. Euen so, he that demeaneth himselfe intemperately, sinneth not only in that he giueth euill example to his brother, but he hath his conscience tied with a guiltines towards God: in matters that are indifferent, the reason is otherwise, for if they breede any offence: we ought to absteyne, howbeit, with a free conscience, so doth Paule speake of flesh consecrated to Idoles: If any (saith he) cast a scruple, touch it not for conscience sake, conscience I say not thine, but the others. The faithful man should sinne, if before hand being admonished, he would notwithstanding eate that flesh. Neuerthelesse, howsoeuer in respect of his brother, an abstinence abstinence is necessarie for him, as it is of God prescribed, yet for all that, he leaueth not to hold the libertie of conscience: we see how this lawe, binding the extemall worke, leaueth conscience vnbound. Now to returne to the humane lawes: if they be made to this end, to cast a religion vpon vs, as though the obseruation of them were by themselves necessarie, we say that they were imposed vpon the conscience, which thing was not lawfull, for our conscience hath not to do with men, but with God alone, whereunto apperteyneth that common difference, betweene the earthly court, and the court of conscience, &c.

To what end humane lawes may be, or may not be made.

But yet (saith Caluine further on this matter) that difficultie is not cleered that ariseth out of Paules words: For, if we must obey Princes not onely for bycause of punishments, but of conscience, it seemeth to follow thereupon, that the lawes of Princes haue dominion ouer the conscience: which thing if it be true, the same also must be said of the lawes Ecclesiasticall. I answer: First, we must distinguish, inter genus & species, betweene the generall kinde, and the speciall fourmes thereof. For, although the particular lawes touch not the conscience, yet are we holden by a generall commaundement of God, which commendeth vnto vs the authoritie of the Magistrates: and on this hingin (or principall point) consisteth Paules disputation: the Magistrates, bycause they are ordeyned of God, are to be prosecuted with honor: in the meane season he teacheth not, that the lawes which are written of them, pertaine to the inward gouernment of the soule, while in euery place he extolleth both the worship of God, and the spirituall rule of liuing iustly, aboue any whatsoeuer decrees of men. Another thing also is worthy to be noted, (which yet dependeth on that we haue sayde before) the lawes of men, whether they be made of the Magistrate, or of the Church, although they are necessary to be kept, (I speake of good and iust lawes) euen therefore (notwithstanding by themselves they binde not the conscience) bycause the whole necessitie of keeping them, hath respect to the generall ende, but it consisteth not in the things that are commaunded: from this order they differ farre, that both prescribe a new forme of worshipping God; and ordeyne a necessity in free things.

How princes must be obeyed for conscience.

The princes lawes touch the conscience in generalitie, though not in specialty.

How good lawes made of the Magistrate or of the Church, are to be kept.

Thus farre doth Caluine shew, how farre the Magistrates, and the Churches constitutions, are good and necessarie to be obeyed of all alike the christian subiects, so farre as they impose no simple necessity of themselves, nor any necessitie at all to saluation, nor directly touch the court of conscience, nor are matter of Gods worship, from all which three points, all our Magistrates and Churches constitutions are free, and therefore, except our Brethren will offer them wrong, they haue no iust cause to refuse or impugne them.

When Caluine hath now thus declared, how farre south the Magistrates, and the Churches constitutions are lawfull and good, after he hath at large confuted the traditions of the Papists, (least rashly we should condemne all alike) he sheweth againe in the 27. Section, how we must take heere what constitutions of the Church we inueigh against.
But (sayth he) since the most part of the vnskillfull persons, when as they heare that the consciences of men are wickedly bound to humane traditions, and that God is worshipped in vayne, they with the same dash include all the lawes, wherewith the order of the Church is established, we must heere also in good time, meete with their error. Certaynely we may very soone be heere deceiued, bycause it appeareth not by and by at the first shew, what difference there is betweene those lawes and these, but I will so lay downe the matter in few words, that the likenesse of them shall beguile none. This (first) let vs hold, if in euery societie of men we see that it is necessary there be some policy, which may serue to nourish the common peace, and to reteyne concord: if in the assayres that are to be archieued, there ought alwayes some rite (or ceremonie) to flourish, which that it should not be cast off, apperteyneth to publike honestie, yea, and to humanitie it selfe.

The same is to be obserued especially in the Churches, which are best of all vpholden, with a well set constitution of all things, but then without concord, they are vtterly no Churches at all: for which cause, if we will haue good regard to the safety of the Church, we must wholly with diligence looke to that which Paule commaundeth, that all things be decently done, and according to order. But when as in the manners of men, there is so great diuersitie, so great varietie in their mindes, so great fight in iudgements and wittes: neyther is any policy firme ynough, except it be settled with certayne lawes: neyther can any rite (or ceremonie) be kept, without a certayne standing fourme thereof: the lawes therefore that are profitable heereunto, we are so farre off from condemning them, that we rather contend, that if these were taken away, the Churches sinewes are dissolued, they are wholly defaced and scattered abroad. For that which Paule requireth, can not be had, that all things should be done decently and in order, except order it selfe and comelineſſe consist by obseruations (as it were certayne boundes) added thereunto. This thing is onely to be alwayes excepted in these obseruations, that they be not beleueed eyther to be necessarie to saluation, and so bynde the conscience with a religion: or that they be directed to the worship of God, and so pietie be reposed in them.

We haue therefore the best and the most faithfull note, which put-teth difference betweene those wicked constitutions (by which it is said, that

that true religion is obscured, and the consciences subuerted,) and betwene the lawfull obseruations of the Church. If we shall remember vnto these, that one of the two be euer set downe; or both of them together, that in the holy assemblie of the faithfull, all things be decently perfourmed, and with the dignitie that is meete: that the communitie it selfe of men be reteyned in order, as it were with certayne bonds of humanitie and moderation. For, whereas it is once vnderstood, that the lawe is made for publike honestie sake, the superstition is alreadie taken away, into the which they fall, that measure the worship of God by mens inuentions. Agayne, when as it is knowne that it tendeth to the common vse, that false opinion of bond, and of necessitie is overthrowne, which cast a great terrour to the consciences, when as traditions were thought necessarie to saluation, sith that heere is nothing sought, but that charitie might be nourished amongst vs by a common dutie.

and order.
Either decency, or order, or both, are the notes of difference betwene good and euill constitutions.

These words of Caluine, doe most cleerely proue, a necessarie vniformitie of all the people in common alike, to the obseruation of these ceremoniall lawes, and constitutions.

And here, least any scruple or cauill should arise, about the vnderstanding this way or that way, of these the Apostles words, which are the generall squire of all these ceremoniall constitutions, Let all things be done decently, and in order: Caluine also expoundeth the true and simple vnderstanding of them, and proceeding, sayeth: But it is woorth the labour, yet more cleerely to define, what is comprehended vnder that comelinesse which Paule commendeth, and what also vnder order. And verily, the end of comelinesse is partly, that while the rytes or ceremonies are adhibited, which may moue a reuerence to the holy matters, we should by such helpes be stirred vp to godlinesse: partly also, that the modestie and grauitie which ought to be regarded in all honest actions, should there shine most of all. In order, this is the fyrst thyng, that they that are the Gouvernors should knowe a rule and lawe of well gouerning: but the people that is gouerned, should accustome themselues to an obedience of God, and to a right discipline, and then, that the state of the Church being well composed, peace and tranquillitie be provided for.

Caluines definition of comelinesse and order.

The end of comelinesse

We will not therefore call that comelinesse, wherein there is nothing belydes a vayne delight: the example whereof we see, in the Theaterlyke furniture which the Papists do vse in theyr diuine seruice, where nothing else appeareth, than a vizard of an vnprofytable gorgiousnesse, and an excesse without fruite. But vnto vs, that shall bee comely that shall so bee fitte for the reuerence of the holie mysteries, that it bee a meete exercise vnto godlynesse, or at the least, that which shall make a beautifying agreeable to the action, and yet the same not without fruit, but that it may admonish the faithful, with how great modestie, religion, obseruance, they ought to handle the diuine seruice. Moreouer, that Ceremonies should be an exercise vnto godlinesse, it is necessary that they leade vs straight to Christ. Likewise for order, we will not set it in those toyish pomps, that haue nothing but a vanishing glorie, but in that composition (or placing of things together) that may take away all confusion, rudenesse, stubbornesse, all troubles and dissentions.

To all this againe, we agree with Caluine, and desire no other, nor haue (I hope) any other Ecclesiasticall lawes, and ceremoniall constitutions, then are answerable in all points to this interpretation of comeliness and order, howsoeuer to the honor of these our brethren, they may seeme otherwise. And here Caluine (after he hath exemplified this general rule with such ceremoniall constitutions as are mentioned in the scripture, which I referre, till our brethren anon shall leade vs to the ceremony of kneeling) he concludeth thus vpon the generall precept of the Apostle.

Last of all, such that for this cause he deliuered nothing expressly, because these things are neither necessary to saluation, and ought to be diuersly applied to the edificatio of the Church, according to the manners of euery nation & age, therefore it shall be meete as well to change and abrogate those that are vsed, as to institute new. I confesse in deede, we must not runne rashly, nor often, nor on light causes, to the making of new, but, what may hurt or edifie, charitie will best iudge, which if we shall suffer to be our moderatrix, all shall be safe. But now it is the duty of the christian people, to keepe such things as are ordeined according to this rule (with a free conscience in deede, and with no superstition) howbeit, with a godly & an easy inclination to obey them, not to hold them in contempt, not to ouerslip the of reches negligence, so farre is it off, that by haughty disdain, and frowardnes, they should openly violate them. What liberty (thou wilt say) can there be of conscience, in so great obseruance and heed taking? yea rather, it shall notably stand together, when as we shall consider, that the sanctions whereunto we be bound, are not fixed & perpetuall, but are outward rudiments of our humaine infirmitie, whereof, though we all of vs haue no neede, yet we all of vs do vse them, because we are mutually bound to nourish charity amongst vs one to another, this we may reknowledge in the example aboue cited.

What? is there a religion consisting in a womans linnen kerchiefe, that it were a wicked thing to come forth bare headed? is the decree of her silence a holy thing, that can not be violated without haynous wickednesse? is there any mysterie in kneeling, in burying of a dead corpse, which can not be passed ouer without great offence, that must must be purged? no such thing: for if a woman have neede to make such haste to helpe her neighbor, that she can have no leysure to couer her head, she hath offended nothing, if she runne to helpe bare headed: and there is place where she hath no lesse oportunitie to speake, than in an other place to hold her peace. And also, there is nothing that letteth him to pray which standeth, who being let by disaase, is not able to bowe his knees. To conclude, it is better in good time to burie the dead, than where there wanteth a winding sheete, or where there are not some to carrie forth the corpse, to carrie till it putrife about ground. Howbeit, there is neuertheless in these things, that to be done, or to be taken heed of, that the custome of the region, the ordinances, yea finally, humanitie it selfe, and the rule of modestie shall suggest: wherein, if by unskilfulnesse or forgetfulnesse, any thing be done amiss, no crime is committed: but if it be done of contempt, it is a contumacie, or prowde stubbornesse, not to be allowed. In lyke manner, the dayes themselves what they should be, and the houres, what manner building of the places, which Psalmes, what day should be soong, it maketh no matter. And yet it is meete, that there be certayne dayes and houres standing, and a fitte place to receiue them all, if there be any consideration had of peace keeping. For of how many brawles, would the confusion of those things be the seed, if that according as euery bodie liked, it were lawfull to change those things that perteyned to the common state? sith that it will neuer come to passe, that one thing would neuer please them all, if matters, as though they were layd forth in the middest among them, were left at euery ones choyse: but if any bodie grumble hereat, and would heere be more wise than he ought to be, let him see to it with what reason he may approue vnto the Lord his waywardnesse. Neuertheless, this saying of Paule ought to satisfy vs, that we haue not a custome of contending, nor the Churches of God.

Thus modestie and with great grauitie, writeth Caluine of these Ecclesiasticall Ceremonies and constitutions, wherein, although it were but of a linnen kerchiefe on a womans head, yet, (for publike order sake) he would not haue it contemned, though upon occasion or necessitie it were omitted, so farre off was Caluine from this contemptuous liking of these smallest Ceremonies in the Church, to the sucking of the dugges, to the wearing of biggins, and to the carrying of rattles, and other childish bables, or to the scoffing at the vniformitie of them, as though we would feede old men and sucking infants all with one kinde of meate, or as though we would cloath all ages in a robe of one asize: for, notwithstanding (as Caluine sayth) they be but outward rudiments, to help and strengthen our humane infirmities, whereof (some situations. being of riper age in Christ than other) we all of vs have no need of them, Acts 15. & yet (saith Caluine) we all of vs do vse them, & why so? but that, both by cause (saith he) we are mutually bound to cherish charity amongst vs one to another: and by cause it is not lawfull for euery body to change those things, that apperteyne to the common state, but that they must be orderly changed or taken away, by the same authoritie that did make them: and as they are not lawfull to euery person, no more are they lawfull to euery particular Church to change them: because they reach higher, euen to the common state of the whole region. And besides, if it should be suffered, that euery private person, and by the same reason, euery private congregation, might change the Churches publike constitutions: since that, tot capita, tot sensus, no one constitution would ever please all persons: this would become the verie seede (as Caluine calleth it) of all brawles and confusion, and in the end, the cleane overthrowe of the Church.

Why euery particular person or congregation may not alter ceremoniall constitutions.

True or vntrue principles of vniformity.

These principles of Caluine being well weighed, let now the indifferent reader iudge, how truly our Brethren say of these ceremoniall constitutions, wherein we of long time in England, haue beene caried away with an vntrue principle, that vniformitie must be in all places, and things alike. If this be an vntrue principle in these matters, then hath Caluine himselfe helped to carry vs away. But (I am afrayd) our Brethren (so) all their learning) are a little too much carried away with affection, that maketh them both in this matter and in many other, mistake vntrue, for true, and true, for vntrue principles. But let vs now see our Brethrens reason, that they alleage against vniformitie in these ceremoniall constitutions.

The learned discourse. pa. 120. Bridges.

Our land is not yet wholly conuerted to Christ (so great hath beene our negligence hitherto) therefore there can not be such an vniformitie of orders in all places as shall be profitable for all.

The Apostles decree, Acts 15. generally, and to be kept vniformally during the time thereof

This argument, although we haue scene it already sufficiently confuted by Caluine, let vs yet consider it somewhat further, in the example euen of these constitutions, made by the Apostles and Elders, Acts 15. so often alleaged by our Brethren: for, if this argument be good, then could not they haue made (as they did) these Ceremoniall constitutions; and commanded the charge of keeping them for any time, generally and with like vniformitie of all the Churches, to whom they wrote this letter and decree, saying: verse 23. 28. and 29. the Apostles, the Elders, and the Brethren, vnto the Brethren that are of the Gentiles, in Antiochia, and in Syria, and in Cilicia, &c. It seemed good to the holy Ghost and to vs, to lay no more burthen vpon you than these necessary things, that is, that ye absteyne from things offered to idoles and bloud, and that which is strangled, and from fornication, from which, if ye keepe your your selues, ye shall do well, &c. Willers none of all those Christians in the Churches, to whom they wrote these decrees, wholly conuerted to Christ? or were all the christians in all those churches, wholly conuerted, or conuerted all alike: and yet the decree was generally, to be vniformely kept of all those churches. Yea, what shall we say to the Church of Ierusalem it selfe, where this decree was made: were they all wholly conuerted to Christ? no hypocrites, nor yet weakē brethren among them: did not euen the Elders of Ierusalem themselues, betwixt the great weakenesse of their multitude, when as afterwards, Actes 21, S. Paule came to Ierusalem? did they not say to Paule, vers. 30, thou see'st (Brother) how many thousand Iewes there be which beleue, and they all are earnest followers of the lawe, &c. and for these weakē brethrens sakes, they counceiled S. Paule to purifie himselfe being a Iewe, according to the ceremonies of the Iewes: and although they knew the christian libertie, yet would they haue S. Paule (to auoide the offensiu opinion, that the multitude of the christian Iewes had conceived of him) to conserue himselfe vnto theyr weakenesse. And what shall we say to the other Churches of the Gentiles? were all the Christians in the Church of Corinth wholly conuerted to Christ? and yet notwithstanding, S. Paule ceaseth not to prescribe vnto them all alike, some ceremoniall constitutions: neither was the difference of their strengths, or weakenesse in their conuersion to Christ, any breach or let, to the vniformitie of their observing the same.

But by this reason of our brethren, there could be no vniformitie of ceremonies, not only then with them, or now with vs, in all places of the Church and land of England, but in no place in all the whole world: for, where is the whole land or church wholly conuerted to Christ? if they say, that by these words, not wholly conuerted, they meane not all, nor the greatest part, but that some be not conuerted to Christ: then they confute their owne reason, in that the weakenesse of the lesser part, ought to be no p̄iudice, to the making of vniforme ceremonies vnto the greatest part: for the law considereth rather the vniuersall multitude, than euerie particular party, and so, confessing that our land (God be praised for it) is for the greatest part conuerted, though not wholly conuerted, in respect of euery person: yet, as the greatest part is commonly called by the name of the whole, it may be well said also, to be wholly conuerted. But what meane they hereby, if our land is not yet wholly conuerted to Christ? they haue confessed in their preface vnto this learned discourse, that for the substance of religion, it is now publicly maintained for our true & holy faith. If any be not yet conuerted vnto the whole truth thereof, how both not this argumēt make the more, for vniformity in these ceremoniall constit. were it the easier to win the (if by any meane they may be won) by keeping an vniforme order in those ceremoniall constitutions, y are neither ill of themselves, and are but obeyed to these god ends, that order and comelinesse be retained: shall we rather winne and conuert them to Christ, both by reiecting all vniformitie in those ceremoniall constitutions, that both they and we agree vpon to be good and lawfull, and also by reiecting all vniformitie in any other that may be deuised: Yea, by this their rule, we should keepe no vniformitie in any of those ceremoniall constitutions, that they their selues set forth vnto vs: or, is it lawfull for them, to presse their Ceremonies vpon vs, to be obserued with vniformitie, and is it not more lawfull for vs, hauing the law with vs, to be the like to them, so long as we vrge none, nor otherwise, than seruing to order and to comelinesse? if ours seeme not so to them, no more do theirs seeme so to vs, and we hope, and thanke God, that we are also euen the greatest part, and therefore may be called the whole, that are (we trust) wholly conuerted to Christ: whollic (I meane) for substance of Religion, though in measure of faith, and conuersation of life, there is none of vs all, nor yet of our Brethren, so wholly conuerted, but that the best of vs all come short, and oftentimes diuert from Christ, and must still be fayne to cry to Christ, Conuerte me domine, & conuertar, Conuert me Lord, and I shall be (wholly) conuerted. But now, if we be not so wholly conuerted to Christ, as we ought to be, although (I confesse) negligence may be some part, & too great a part, the cause thereof: yet (I feare me) our Brethrens too double diligence, in disturbing the concord of the Preachers, and euen in this reiecting of vniformity in these ceremoniall constitutions, giuing liberty not only to euery Synode of themselves, but also to themselves in these their discourses, without any Synode, and without yea against the authority of the ciuill christian Magistrate, and much more without, yea against the whole state of the Church in this our lād, yea giuing liberty to euery particular church, and withall by these their reasons, to euery private person, according as he or she is weake or strong, to admit or reiect all vniformitie, to alter and innouate as they fancy, all such Lawes and constitutions of ceremoniall rites & orders, as are by a lawfull & godly Synode of the Church decreed; & by the authority of the ciuill christian magistrate, confirmed, established & proclaimed, to be vniuersally among vs, & vniformely obserued. These sayings & doings of our Brethren their selues, haue bin, if not the chiefeest, yet not the least cause, that not onely our land is not so wholly conuerted to Christ, as it might otherwise haue bene, but that so many are wholly auerted fro Christ, and become peruered renegates & apostates vnto Antichrist, & before these sturres betwix our brethren & vs began, were very wel coming on, & by little & little (so far as man can iudge or hope by that tell vs of childish bables, to take away all vniformitie of ceremoniall constitutions, and all for the difference of some diuerse persons.

And yet wee denie not, but that as there are diuersities of persons, there may well bee diuerse and seuerall orders appointed for them;
howbeit, to be kept vniformly by those diuerse degrees of persons, for whome they are made. For we doe not in such manner (as our Brethren vntruely repozte of vs) feede olde men and sucking in-fantes all with one kinde of meate, nor cloath all ages in a roabe of one assize: but such and such ceremonies, are appointed to such and such degrees of persons, and not all to all alike, although some of those ceremonies be of that nature, that they may as well stretch to all; as some one kinde of meate may bee fedde on, euen of olde men and of young also, as well as of sucking infantes; and of sucking infantes, as well as of olde and young men. May not all the people in a parish come to some one Church, in some one place, at some one time, appointed: and there all of them kneeling on their knees (at least so manie as bee able) saye altogether some one appointed forme of prayer, or confession, or thankesgiuing: may they not all (at least as manie as canne) sing together some one certaine number of Psalmes or hymnes?
May not all infantes, by some one publike forme prescribed thereof, be Baptized alike? And some one like publike forme be appointed, for all the communicantes to receaue the Lordes supper after one manner? May not one forme of marrying bee appointed to bee bled through out all the whole Lande and Realme of Englande? If there can bee no one ceremoniall lawe or constitution made of these thinges: howe haue our Brethren abused vs, that haue sette out a booke of common prayer, wherein manie of these (some one) or-dinaunces, (being all of them indeed but ceremoniall constitutions and decrees) are sette downe and prescribed to be in generally and vniform-ly used of all the Churches in the Realme, so farre as their autho-ritie stretcheth to prescribe them? For if they prescribe them not: why doe they set them out, if they regarde not who vse them, and who vse them not?

If see not therefore, but that euen by their owne example, (and much better hauing better warraunt) some ceremoniall constitutions may bee well decreed, for an ordinarie publike and generall order, to bee vniformly kept, of all Churches a like in a whole Realme, so farre as other necessitie or some particular occasion, both restrayne them.

The same doctrine, although not the same partes of doctrine, is to be euerie where: but ceremonies, euen as they bee ceremonies, doe admitte varietie; as time, persons, and occasions serue to bee di-uerse. Yea Christian libertie, in them sometimes, is necessarie to be testified, because there are manie so simple, that they knowe not the difference betweene those thinges, that are necessarie in the Church, and those that are not of necessitie. There bee that thinke a Crosse or Foont (as they call it) is as necessarie in Baptisme, as water: and that kneeling at the Communion, is more necessarie than preaching of the Lordes deathe: that a surplisse in Common prayer, is more necessarie, than a deuoute mynde: and great occasions offered to the ignorant so to thinke, when they see them that preache moste diligentlie, praye moste feruentlie, and minister the Sacramentes most reuerentlie, according to Christes institution, to bee displaced of all ministerie, for a Crosse, or a Foont, or a Surplisse, or some suche other tryfle.

ceremonies.

There is great difference betweene Doctrine and Ceremonies, but if our Wetherens former reasons shoulde holde, to respect the diuersities of the people: they might alter the vnitic of the doctrine too.

Bridges

But the same partes of doctrine (they say) are not to bee euerie where.

How the same partes of doctrine are not to be taught e. uery where.

This is spoken somewhat too obscurely. For, the doctrine and all the partes thereof, are indeede to be euerie where, though (I graunt) not all to be taught euerie where to the same persons, at the same time: and so may the vse of the same ceremonies also, vpon occasion be altered, or left off.

But ceremonies (they say) euen as they be ceremonies, doe admitte varietie.

How ceremonies admit variety, and vniformitie much better.

This I graunt likewise, and yet againe euen as they bee ceremonies, they as well admitte vniformitie, and in some cases especially may much better admitte vniformitie (euen as they bee ceremonies) than varietie, and much nearer is it to the nature of any ordinance and decree: bee it ceremoniall or otherwise, to admitte vniformitie than varietie. For else, it could bee no certaines decrees. When as the varietie which it admitteth, commeth vnto them in that respect, as extraordinarie times, persons, and occasions, serue to bee diuerse, or as necessitie it selfe (that hath no lawe) enforzeth the breaking of the ceremonies, all which is but accidentall to them, and no prejudice to the ordinarie and generall vse of the same ceremonies vniformitie.

Varietie admitted in constitutions ceremoniall accidentally

And when in vble ceremonies most vniformally, then is the best vse withall of this re-

And yet besides, we graunt this also, euen for the testification of the Christian libertie, by omitting sometimes or altering some ceremonie or some part thereof; and euen for this cause also that our Bzethzen here alleage. Pea, although there were not many so simple, that they knowe not the difference betweene those thinges, that are necessarie in the Church, & those that are not of necessitie; yet, because this erro: might growe in them, if the vniformitie of all ceremonies were byged to precisely. Howbest, all this hindereth not, but that for the ordinarie and generall vse, the vniformitie of them may still remayne, specially being so vble, that testification at all times or often may be made against all absolute necessities, and all superstitions, or any other abuses of them. Which indeede is the moze needefull, because this error of simple necessitie, is not alwayes onely of simple persons: but euen of learned men. As we reade of S. Peter, how strictly for a while he holde the necessitie of the Iewish ceremonies, after their date was out. And how the multitude euen of the faithfull Iewes were so affected stil vnto them that S. Paule was faine for that time, to yelde to the conformitie of them. And this is not the smallest error, among the most learned of the Papistes at this day.

Not only simple persons, but learned haue erred in this matter.

Our Brethr.
error in not knowing necessarie and vnnecessarie thinges.

Pea, by their leane also, I thinke these our Learned discourfers doe chiefely stumble at the like stone. Not only about the Iewes Iudicialles, but for their Sanedrin and these consistorie Elders (if there were euer any such as they pretende, but can prooue none) and for some partes of discipline and ceremonies too: byging these thinges as necessarie that are not necessarie. Wight not a man be so bolde for all these thinges, as to send home these speeches to the autho: of them? Yea Christian libertie, in them sometimes, is necessary to be testified, because there are many so simple that they know not, the difference betweene those thinges that are necessarie in the Church, and those that are not of necessitie: when as we see, so notable learned men euen in their Learned Discourses, so foulely ouershot themselves, in not considering thronghly of this difference betweene thinges necessarie in the Church, and not of necessitie.

But to come now to the particular ceremonies, wherin our Bzethzen would haue this varietie admitted. There bee (say they) that thinke a Crosse or Font (as they call it) is as necessarie in Baptisme, as water.

For my part, I haue not heard of any such, that thinke so, nor I euer read of any the grossest Papist, that so writeth. They rather erre on the other side, in standing too much on the necessitie of water, when they make it of the necessitie euen of saluation. I graunt, they put too great a confidence in the signe of the Crosse, and many haue done and doe, abuse it with foule superstition and Idolatrie. But yet: all this debarreth not, but that there was in the primitive Church before those abuses came, and since those abuses (God be prayed) haue bene remoued from among vs, there may likewise remayne, some good vse therof: being only vsed as a signe or token, without any opinion of vertue in the same. For, we doe not detest the signe it selfe, as did Iulian the Apostata, though wee honoꝛ it not, as Iulian vnpayedd falsely to the Christians, that they did.

the crosse in Baptisme.

As for the font, (for so we call it in-deede, and may well ynough, with out any suspicion of the terme) in my opinion, is the fittest of any ordinarie place, for the baptizing of our infantes.

Baptizing
in a font.

Nowe, if these ceremonies doe admit varietie, as times, persons, and occasions serue to be diuerse: then are they not of them-selues meere superstitious, nor yet vtterly to bee left off, no, though they haue bene (as hath the signe of the Crosse) shamefully abused, but these ceremonies being so vsed, as they are nowe ordeined to bee vsed, and that with libertie of exception against the abuses, and testification of the right vse of them: they may be vsed still, euen by our Brethrens confession well ynough, so that wee will graunt them, that they may admit varietie: and we are content to graunt it, if they woulde in-deede (as heere in woꝛde they say) but admit it sometimes, and leaue of the signe of the Crosse in Baptisme nowe and then, onely to remoue the errour of necessitie from the simple, so that they leaue it not of in contempt, nor vsually: or that the infant sometimes (as times, persons, and occasions serue to be diuerse) be not baptized in the font, but in a bason: so they do not (vpon this permission of varietie sometimes) in the end growe from some-times to all times, and make a necessitie on the contrarie, that it must not bee baptized in the font, and the signe of the Crosse must not be vsed at all: because both the font and the Crosse haue bene abused. If they woulde not (as some doe) encroch vpon this liberty of varietie, but vse it with discretion, when diuersitie onely of time, persons and occasion serued: there is none of our Brethren that might incurr displeasure, much lesse displacing by so doing.

And that kneeling (say they) at the Communion, is more necessary than preaching of the Lordes death.

Kneeling at the communion.

If kneeling at prayer and thanksgiving be a good caremony, it may be well appointed to be vsed also at the Communion. When (besides our recordeing of the Lordes death) we pray vnto him, that wee may receiue those those his heavenly mysteries worthily, and giue him thanks both for the same his precious death, and for the institution of this memorie thereof, and al the other his benefits: whereupon, the name of Eucharist or thanksgiving, is one of the proper names of this Sacrament.

How preaching is or is not simply necessarie at the communion.

But to say, that some thinke kneeling at the communion is more necessarie than preaching of the Lordes death, is hardly and doubtfully spoken.

How kneeling is or is not necessarie at the communion.

If they meane by preaching that which Christ sayth, so often as yee shall do these, ye shall shewe forth the Lordes death: I graunt, in that sense, preaching is simply necessarie, and so, farre more necessarie than is kneeling, which is but necessarie conditionally, and that not in the proper sense of necessitie but of conueniencie. But if they meane by preaching the free Discourse by the Pastor, at large and at his voluntarie, treating on the Lordes death, besides the ordinarie forme in the booke prescribed: then is not preaching at the Communion (for any necessitie thereof) any more necessarie than is kneeling; and in some respect not so necessarie neither, in that an order thereof may be easier appointed to the Communicants, and obserued of them, than a Sermon at the ministration of the Communion, to be alwayes so preached by the Pastor.

How kneeling at the communion may well admit a decree of vniuersitie.

As for kneeling, is indeede but an outward ceremonie, not any thing comparable to preaching, in the dignitie of the action: howbeit, it is a reuerent externall action, and so being easie for the most part of all the communicantes to be perfourmed, it may well admitte a ceremoniall constitution and decree for the publike and vniuerse obseruation of the same. Whereupon (me thinketh) Caluine also writeth very well, enen among those his testimonies that I last cited, but I there passed it ouer and reserued his obseruation of kneeling, with his other particular examples, for this place. Who sayth hereon, Lib. 4. Instit. cap. 10. sect. 29. in these wordes.

Calu. in Inst. lib. 4. cap. 10. sec. 29. Ceremoniall constitutions for comeliness.

Of the former kind, (that is to say of those ceremoniall constitutions that are for comelines) Paule hath examples: as, that no prophane banquetes be mixed together with the holy supper of the Lord. That women except they couer their heads, come not forth into a publike place, and many other things are had in daily vse. That wee pray kneeling and bare headed, that wee administer the Sacramentes of the Lorde not vncleane, but with some dignitie, that in burying the dead wee giue thereto a certaine honestie, and such other things as pertaine thereto. In the other kinde, (that is to say for order) there are houres, designed to the publike prayers, to the sermons and to the mysticall actions. In the sermons themselues there is quiet and silence, and places appoynted thereunto, the tunes (or singing together) of the hymnes; and and daies prefixed for celebrating of the L. supper, that which Paule forbiddeth that women teach not in the Church, and if there be any such like things. But chiefly those that conserue discipline, as the Catechizing, the Eccl. Censures, excommunication, fastes, & the thinges that may be referred to that cataloge. Thus may we referre all the Eccl. constitutions, which we receane for good and whole some, vnto two heads: for the one sort of them haue respect to rites and ceremonies, the other to discipline and peace.

Al eccl. constitutions either pertaine to rites and ceremonies, or to discipline and peace.

Howbeit, because here is daunger, least of the one parte the false Bishops shoulde snatch a pretence hereupon, to excuse their wicked and tyrannicall lawes (he speaketh of those Popish Bishops whome he before described:) and on the other part, least there should be anie too much fearefull, which being warned by the former euils, would leaue no place at all to lawes, bee they neuer so holy: it is a thing woorth the labour here to testifie, that (to conclude) I doe allowe those humane constitutions, which are founded on the authoritie of God, and which are taken out of the scripture, and so are wholly diuine. Let the example be in the kneeling which is made while the solemne praiers are had. The question is, whether it be an humane tradition, that is lawefull for euerie one to refuse or neglect. I saye, it is suche an humane tradition, as that with all it is a diuine tradition. It is of God, in respect it is a part of that comelinesse, the care and conseruation whereof is commended vnto vs by the Apostle. But it is of man, in respect that it designeth out in specialtie that which generally was ordeined, rather than expounded.

Sec. 30.

How kneeling is both an humane and diuine tradition.

No one forme of discipline & ceremonies nor particularly prescribed to all ages.

By this one example wee may esteeme, what wee ought to thinke of this whole kinde, to witte, because the Lorde hath saythfully comprehended with his holie eyes, and clearely declared, both the whole summe of true righteousness, and all the partes of the worship of his godhead, and whatsoeuer was necessarie to saluation: in these he onely is our Master that must be heard: but because in external Discipline and Ceremonies, he would not particularly prescribe what we should followe; neither iudged he one forme to be conuenient for all ages of the worlde: we must here flee vnto the generall rules that he gaue, that what thinges so euer the necessitie of the Church shal require to be commaunded for order and comelinesse, may be driuen to them.

Thus among other these ceremoniall constitutions, writeth Caluine, of kneeling at the times of solemne prayers, which are then most requisite, while wee are participating the heauenly mysteries of the Lordes supper.

And therefore kneeling, though it be not necessarie with any simple necess.

neecessitie in it selfe, yet as it is a reuerent and diuine ceremonie, it is necessarie, as conuenient, at the times of solemne prayer and thanksgiuing, and of consequence, at the communion, both for order and com-linesse of the bodie gesture, and for testification and edification also, of the minde deuotion.

But least a surplusse here should be left out, that a surplusse (say they)
in common prayer, is more necessarie than a deuoute minde.

I do not thinke that any man is, or euer was of that opinion: For were he neuer so blinde a Papist, yet till he chiefly stode on his blinde deuotion. And I appeale euen to our Brethrens consciences, whether they thinke indeede (as I beleue they doe not) that any man is of that minde.

But what shall the reader and all the people thinke of this, that the surplusse being here one of the ceremonies brought in for instance, to admitte varietie, as times, persons, and occasions serue to bee diuerse, and so of consequence, may well be vsed, yea, and by the correlative of this rule, should be vsed ordinarily, though it admitte sometimes such occasion of leauing it off. And this also is become one of the desires in this Learned Discourse, of all the faithfull ministers that seeke the reformation of the Church of Englande, that the surplusse may be accounted but as a ceremonie that admitteth such varietie. And yet we see, there are many amongst them so deuoted against a surplusse; that rather than they will weare it at any time, they will forsake all the ministerie, and make great sturre and trouble about it, notwithstanding the iudgement of all the reuerende and learned men, that haue testified (as euen heere their selues also are faine to doe) the indifferencie of it, and of the vse thereof. But our Brethren not thinking of this contradiction betwene their owne saying and their doing, but thinking (if at least wise they so thinke indeede) that there be (but what number they tell not) that thinke these ceremonies are more necessarie than they be: let vs now see, what reason it meth our Brethren to thinke that there be such as do thinke so.

*Our Brethr. are not dis-

trifles.*

And great occasion (say they) offered to the ignorant so to thinke, when they see them that preach most diligently, praye most feruently, and minister the Sacraments most reuerently, according to Christes institution, to bee displaced of all ministerie, for a crosse, or a font, or a surplusse, or some such other trifle.

Euery thing here that misliketh our Brethren is but a trifle with them.
And thus they pretende vnto the world, that they be displaced but for trifles. But what soeuer these are, is all the communion booke, and pub-like prescribed forme of diuine seruice but a trifle too? And is the ciuill Christian Magistrates authoritie, and so, the Queenes Maiesties supreme gouernement, in all Ecclesiasticall causes so well as temporall, and of consequence,

consequence, in all these and other causes in controuersie betwene vs, but a trifle with our Brethren too? and is all the superiour authoritie of the Bishops, all the controuersies about Discipline, and the Ecclesiasticall Regiment of their tetrarchie, for Doctors, Pastors, Governours, and Deacons offices which they contemne for, and all the other particular matters in question, both in this Learned Discourse, and in all their other treatises which they still set forth, nothing but trifles: For, these are the chiefeest matters of their displacing, which are in-deede farre more weightie matters than is the making a signe of the Crosse, than is the baptizing in a Font, or than is the wearing of a Surplesse.

The chiefe matters
wherefore our Br. are displaced.

If the ignorant thinke that they are displaced from all Ministerie, onely for a Crosse, or a Font, or a Surplesse, or some such other ceremonie, as they call trifles: surely, then are they verie ignorant, and our Brethren delude the people in this ignorance, that tell them they are displaced from all ministry, but for these causes. Although in-deede, were they displaced from all Ministry, for none other causes then such as these, admitting also that these were but trifles too, as here they call them: albeit, some of them haue voluntarily displaced themselves from all Ministerie, forsaking their calling, without being by any others displaced: but admit also they are displaced, and that from all Ministerie, (which notwithstanding, the most part of them, or the most learned of them, are not: and whether they are so, that compiled this Learned Discourse, God and themselves do knowe:) yet am I sure that they neede not, nor if their selues were not in greater fault of more contempt & obstinacie against these thinges, than the weight of these thinges: (by their owne account) amounteth vnto, they neither neede, nor should be displaced of all Ministerie for them. For if these thinges be (as they say) but trifles, when as the yeelding to them might keepe themselves from being displaced: ought they for trifles to be the occasion of their owne displacing, from such weightie matters as is all the Ministerie?

Some not displaced
but forsaking their calling.

Faithfull
Ministers should rather yeelde
to trifles
then be displaced for them.

So that euen that which they pretende to the ignorant, yea, to the learned and all, in this their Learned Discourse, (to breed more obiousnesse to the displacers of them) as that they are displaced for trifles, both thewe that this excuse is but a trifle, (or rather an vntrueth,) when as the matter, the more trifling it is, bewrayeth the greater obstinacie in him, that will rather suffer him to be displaced of all the Ministerie, and thereby all the people to bee utterly giuen ouer to the wilde world, for any benefite at all of the Ministry they shall haue by him, or by any other of his procuring, rather then he will relent to the Synode, to the Church, to the Realme, to the Prince, but in any one thing, and that but such, as hee his selfe confesseth to be but a trifle. Howe both not this, the more that they extenuate the matter, aggravate the crime, and make it (as our Bre-

Displacing of

then sayde, (Bag. 93.) that a lesse crime increased with contumacie and contempt of the Churches admonition, may become worthe of the same castigation?

Our Br. praising themselues.

But here our Brethren are so farre from the acknowledgement of this great fault, that to mooue the reader more with the insignitie of their displacing, they fall a praying them selues, that they preach most diligently, pray moste feruently, and minister the Sacraments moste reuerently, according to Christes institution. All which three pointes in whom they doe in dede concurre, we must needs confesse deserue high praise. And woulde God, both they, and we, and all the Ministerie, may doe our indeuours to the uttermoste of our gifts in these three duties.

Our Br.
moste diligent preaching.

But if our B^r. preach neuer so diligently, and yet cut not the wo:de of God a right and with discretion, (as once whereof is worth a pounce of Learning:) if they speake not the words of truth and sobernesse, as Saint Paule saith to Festus, Actes 26. ver. 25. But spende all, as the moste of their preaching, in contention about these vnnecessary controuersies, in Discourfing of Regiment and matters of state, in inuentiues against their Brethren, against the Bishops, yea, against the Ciuill Christian Magistrate, (and all for the vrging of these platformes,) it were a greate deal more commendation (in other mens opinion, than it is in their own) to be lesse diligent in preaching, than some of them be. Notwithstanding, diligence in a good preacher in dede, is worthe both great commendation and (as Saint Paule sayth) double honor.

Discretion with diligence.

Our Br.
moste fer-
uent prayer.

And whereas they recommend them selues also, that they pray moste feruentlie: I am glad to heare of it, and God graunt they do so. But why do they blabbe it thus to all the wo:ld, with publishing it in print? do they seeke the peoples prayse herein also: must the feruencie, and most feruencie of their prayer, bee blasoned thus abroad with this trumpe of their owne Learned Discourfings thereon? What our Brethren woulde rather haue remembred, what Christe sayde, Math. 6. ver. 5. of those that seeke prayfes for their prayings. Non dico vobis mercedem habent. Wouldeit, feruencie in all goodnesse deserueth prayse, and in prayer is euen the marowe of it.

Too fierie feruencie.

But, suche feruencie as condemneth, (bee it neuer so sounde and godly) all prescribed forme of publike prayer, set forth for the peoples vse and edifying, by the authoritie of the true Church of Christe, and of the Christian Magistrate, is too fierie a feruencie in my iudge-ment.

Our Br.
moste reue-rend Ministration of the same.

And as for their thirde commendation that they Minister the Sacraments moste reuerently, according to Christes institution: What mean they herebye can they proue that our Communion Booke, the prescribed order whereof they refuse, both in publike baptisme and in the Lorde Supper,

Supper, for any materiall & necessarie partes of the Sacraments are not ministred according to Christes Institution: If they mislike them for any small or accidentall part, (which is rather no part at all) as not of the substance of them, but accidents and ornaments of comelinesse and order,) doe they also minister the Sacraments, according to Christes institution, for place, for time and for all the manner of them (if the name of Christes Institution may be applied to these appendances) as, for baptizing them in rivers, for ministring the Communion after Supper, for sitting at a Table, or rather on the ground, and such like: if it be lawfull for them to leaue all these circumstances, and yet they may bee sayde to minister the Sacramentes mooste reuerently according to Christes Institution: why shoulde they refuse to Minister them according to the order prescribed by our Booke, except they can prouoe, that wee minister them not in any godly manner, but against Christes Institution twickeolie and vnreuerently, which they shall neuer be able to prouoe. Yea we minister them with all due reuerence, and in many pointes, a greate deale more reuerently then they doe. And therefore for these their vnreuerent demeanours, and obstinacie therein, against our good and reuerent orders, by order and authoritie of the Church and Magistrate established, they are worthily displaced, though with grieffe thereof no lesse to vs, that they shoulde deserue it, than unto them that they shoulde feele it. But heereby the ignorant and all other may wel perceiue, that it is not as they would beare the worlde in hand, they are displaced from all ministerie for a Crosse, or a Font, or a surplicie, or some such other trifle, as they call them: but for matters farre more important and necessarie, they their selues by their wilfull contumacie, beeing the cheefe causes of their owne displacing.

Our ministration of the sacraments.

Our Br. the cheefe causes of their owne displacing.

The Synode therefore, ought to bee carefull in ordeining of ceremonies, not onely that they bee pure and agreeable to the worde of God: but also that they bee expedient for the time and persons, for whose vse they bee ordeyned: and as wilfull contemners of good orders established by publique authoritie, are worthe to bee corrected, so intangling of mennes consciences, or Tyrannicall co-action in these indifferente matters, muste alwayes bee anoyed.

The learned disc.
pa. 122.

Still our Brethren giue the whole authoritie in ordeining of Ceremonies, to the Synode. Albeit, I gladly subscribe thus farre hereto, that in ordeining of ceremonies, (and so farre as their authoritie to ordeyne reacheth:) the Synode ought to bee carefull; that they bee pure and agreeable to the worde of God. But agayne, vnderstanding this puritie of them, in their owne nature and institution,

stitution, although by corrupting the same institution, they haue bene alter-ward defiled. For these ceremonies that the Apostles and Elders Act.
15. did ordeyne, had bene also defiled by the Jewes with great superstition of holinesse in them, and erronious opinion of necessitie, of the worship of God, of the wrought worke, of merite, and of preferring them aboue sayth in God, and the mo:all commandements of the Law: and yet for all those former so dangerous abuses, yea, for all the date of them was also expired: The Apostles and Elders, considering the weakenesse of the Christiāns (for the most part of the multitude) did ordeyn those ceremonies to be vniiformely & generallie (for the time) vsed, without anie of those errors or corruptions of them. And so now in like manner, if any ceremonies in their owne nature be not euill, or be indifferent, and were first instituted onely for purposes that were good, though the posteritie degenerating haue corrupted (with errors and superstitions) those good ceremonies, and so made them euill: yet may the Synode now with the authoritie of the Prince confirming them, not onely (if they thinke it best) remooue and abolish those corrupted and defiled ceremonies: but also (if they see there be needefull and expedient vse of them) remoouing all the corruptions, defilings and superstitions of them, and refining them vnto their first good ends and institutions, they haue good authoritie with the Christian Magistrates approbation, to reordaine them. And so may those ceremonies well be called and holden, (for all their former pollution) pure & agreeable to the worde of God.

But the Synode (say they) must not onlie haue a care of this point in them: but also that they be expedient for the time & persons, for whose vse they are ordeyned.

Ceremonies expedient for the time and
persons.

This I graunt likewise. And even therefore wee vse the ceremonies now in our Church ordeyned, because they bee expedient for the time and persons, for whose vse they are ordeined. And contrariwise, although we impute not in other reformed Churches their ceremonies different from ours, which our Brethren would bring in (though their varietie of ceremonies in one state, is more to be disliked) yet we admit not those ceremonies euen for this, because they are (considering well the time and persons) not so expedient eyther for our time, or for our persons, but woulde breede great offence to manie among vs, and no lesse daunger to the state both of our Prince and of our whole Church also.

Our Br. ceremones
nor expedient for our time and
persons.

And therefore, as we holde vs content with our good and lawfull ceremones: so we accept this that heere they say, willfull contemners of good orders established by publike authoritie, are worthy to bee corrected. But, with we may well take our orders established by publike au-thoritie, for good orders, till they can (better than yet they haue bene able,) proue them to be ill orders (I speake not of the abuses of them, but
of

of the orders them-selves, according to the ends and institution of them) obedience.
it followeth, that they being both wilfull contemners, and that is more, not onely open breakers, but (al that ever they can by preaching, writing, and practising, earnest impugnors of them, they are (by their owne verdict) worthie to be corrected: although we wissh rather their amending than their correction.

And yet let them think of this, that whereas the orders that they would Intangling erect, are not established by anie publike authoritie among vs. mens con- correction then shall men iudge that they are worthy of, who being but sciences.
private persons and without all publike authoritie, would establish, and impose those orders upon vs?

As for intangling of mens consciences, or tyrannicall coercion in these indifferent matters, that it must alwayes bee auoyded, we holde wel therewith: neither doe we knowe or allowe of anie such intanglings or coactions, but doe as much mislike it, as they doe. Notwithstanding, in those mat- To what ters, which in their owne nature are indifferent (but not indifferent in indifferent their use, being established by publike authoritie:) we affirme, that a du- matters o- sake.

The argument of the 15. Booke.

THis Booke proceedeth further on the Synods. First of the Synods Eccl. Censure, for faults and controuersies, and whether there would not still be as many and worse then now there are, and that euen in the Pastors also. Of our Br. remedie by hauing two Pastors at least in euery Congregation, and if these two Pastors contend, of the remedie by the Synod. Of their example in the assemblie Act. 15. Of Timothies Eccl. Censure without Synodes. Of Danaus iudgement in calling Synodes and Councils not without the Princes licence. Of the Assemblies of particular and Shire Synods, and what authoritie our Br. ascribe vnto them, and what daunger they would breede to the whole state. How the elections and ordainings of all the Pastors in the Realme should bee made by these Shire Synodes. Of the example that they would proue it by, Act. 14. in Paule and Barnabas ordeyning Pastors by the peoples election. How election by the people is not necessarilie inferred on that example. How our Br. exclude their Elders that are Gouvernours and not teachers from dealing in these matters. Of calling a Synode where any Benefice is vacant or Pastorship voyd in all England. What the Synode; what the Congregation hath to doe therein. Whether this be the right electing and ordeyning grounded on the word of God & practized in the Church 200. yeeres after Christ. Ecclesiastical censure
The learned disc.
 & 123.

THE Synod hath further authority concerning discipline, to reforme and redresse by Ecclesiastical censure, all such defaultes and controuersies, as cannot be determined in the particular Churches: As for example, if the Pastor himselfe haue neede to be seuerally punished, where there is but one Pastor in a church: or if Elders which should be reformers of others, haue notoriously misgouerned themselues: or if they haue bin ledde by affection to condemne an innocent, or to iustifie the vngodly: in these and such like cases, all contention is to be concluded, by the authority of the Synode.

Bridges.

The Synods ecclesiasticall censure for faultes and controuersies.

So farre as is warranted by euident Scripture, as is not preiudiciall to her Maiesties supreme authority, nor to any the good orders established in the Churches, & Realmes of Englande and Ireland: and with the like exception of the right & interest due to euery one in other states and countries: I graunt this further authority of the Synode, to reforme and redresse, by the Ecclesiastical censure, all such faultes and controuersies as cannot bee determined in particular Churches.

Faults & controuersies would be still as many & worse, if not moe, than now there are.

Moe pastors in a congregatiō, mo controuersies.

A liuely & late example of 2. Pastors equall in one congregation.

As for the examples, that here for instanties they bring in, runne all vpon their former presupposalls, of these pretended Pastors and Elders. Where thelesse, (by the way) we may hereby perceiue, that if we should set by such presupposed Pastors and Elders, as our brethren would haue: we should be little be free, eyther from defaultes of life, or from controuersies in these, or such like matters: that still there would be as much adoe, not onely to punish and reforme the people; but euen the Pastors themselues and that seuerely, and perhaps, moe a do also, (when the authority of the Prince & Bishops, and the lawes established were dissolued, and dispersed to seuerall congregations, or Synods, than now there is.

Yea, but (saye they, this might bee) where there is but one Pastor in a Church.

And what if there be moe Pastors in a Church than one (so: so would they haue it that there should be moe) may there not fall out as greate, and moe controuersies too, among them twaine than where there is but one? and should not the Synode punish them bothe, if they were both faultie? and indeede they haue shewed the examples hereof already, in some places, where of late the congregations haue had two of these Pastors, (as the saying is, unum arbutum non alis duos erythacos) such contentions and part-takinges haue bin betwene them, that the whole congregation hath bin thereby deuided, and dissolued. Example, that congregation which (because they could not at home haue this Tetrarchie of Doctors, Pastors, Gouernors, and Deacons, in such manner as is here prescribed,) went ouer not long since, into the

the low Countries, there to enjoy the. But how long agreed these their two Pastors and their other Governours? did they not even there also (and that in short while) breake forth into such sharpe contentions, that they were sone deuised into two congregations of one, and at length, the most part of them came home as wise, or perhaps wiser than they went out, being taught by experience. (which they saye (pag. 48.) is the mistresse of fooles) to to repent themselves at leisure, for their to quicke following of these newe deuises.

But may these Elders also which (they say) should bee reformers of others, so notoriously misgouerne themselves, that not only they may be lead by affection, but so far lead thereby, as to condemne an innocent, or to iustifie the vngodly, it appeareth by this, they may, and it is not unlikely, but that, as here they put the case thereof before it begins, so, were it once begun, we should feele to late the lamentable experience, by the notorious misgouernments of those gouernours.

The misgouerning of these newe Gouer. non.

But say they (not for remedie to preuent it, for that were the best, to cut it off, according to the olde saying, obstipit principis, sero medicina paratur : but for remedie when it is done, as when the pate is broken to lay a plaister.)

In these and such like cases, all contention is to be concluded by the aucthority of the Synode.

Here is still no aucthoritie but all of the Synode. And can nothing els, or must none els, haue aucthority to remedie these matters, but a Synode? must a Synode (which is an assembly out of many perticuler Churches) be alwayes called together, so often as any contention or default happeneth among Pastors, or among the Elders, in anie one church or cōgregation?

Our Brethrens continuall fleeing to Synoda.

If it be such a default or controuersie (say they), as cannot be determined in the particuler churches.

Loe, heere may our byetheren see and learne, what it is to take away the Bishops Iurisdiction in a Diocese, and in a Prouince the Archbishops, and the Princes Superiour aucthoritie also in a Realme or Kingdome, for, let their Iurisdiccions and aucthorities stande, these controuersies and defaultes might be punished, decided and reformed well inough, and neuer trouble so many Churches, by calling so often their Pastors from them, by gathering, and continuing Synodes for these matters, and so perhaps breeds more and newe contentions.

The inconueniences by the want of the iurisdiccions already established.

But (saye they) some example wee haue thereof. Actes. 15. where those contentious Scismatickes that withstoode Paule and Barnabas at Antiochia, were constrayned to yeelde by aucthority of the Counsell, and Paule and Barnabas restored to their credite.

Will we not denie the aucthoritie of a Councell, nor of that holie assemblie, and if they will so call it, a Councell or Synode, whereby Paule and Barnabas were restored to their credite, and the contentious bly act. 15. Scismatikes constrained to yeelde. And woulde God our brethren woulde consider more aduisedly the force of this Example, least in their not yeilding to the authoritie and decrees of the lawfull Synodes and Councells holden in this Realme and Church of Englande, about these matters whiche they impugne, they shewe themselves to be more factious, than were those contentious Scismatikes.

The assembly.
act. 15. was not a Synode of diuers particular Churches.

But nowe, if wee shall more neerely leuell these Synodes and Councells that our brethren would haue, for the determining of these controuersies, & concluding all contentions, and for the punishing of all surche notorious defaults and misgouernements, to be called together into an assembly of the Bishops or Pastors of diuers particuler Churches, comparing the same with this assembly Act. 15. of the Apostles and Elders at Ierusalem: wee shall not finde, that (besides the parties sent from Antiochia, where the controuersie arose) there was any assemblie at all, either from diuers, or frō any other particuler Churches, but onely the assemblie of the Apostles

“ to this matter”.

Ver. 4.

Here, when they came together, no mention is made of Churches, but of the Church, and of the Apostles and Elders. Which Elders (wee haue shewed out of Caluin) were the Pastors of the Church of Ierusalem: So that if this assemblie shalbe called a Synode or Councell: yet was it but a Synode or Councell of one particuler Church, and the Apostle S. James being the Governour or Bishop of that Church (as is before proued) was the the concluder and finall determiner of that controuersie. And therefore, ^{nodis requi-} where our Brethren say, some example we haue hereof. Act. 15. This ex-^{sue.} ample fitteth not so well as they weene, neither for the Synodes that they would haue, nor for the authoritie of the Synode.

But if they will decide the matter by examples, especially for redressing by Eccl. censure, defaultes and controuersies, and for punishing those Pastors or Elders of the Church which should be reformers of others, and haue notoriously misgouerned themselves: Why forget they here, how Saint Paule gaue Timothie, not only authoritie to make Pastors ouer diuers particuler Churches: but also how to receiue accusations agaynst the Pastorall Elders, and those that sinne, that is (as our brethren call it) notoriously misgouerne themselves, to rebuke them openly, that is (as Caluin expoundeth it) ut quisquis inter eos male se gesseris seuerè corrigatur. Whosoever among them behaueth himselfe ill, that he bee (say our Brethren) seuerely punished. So that, if the Pastors defaultes and controuersies cannot bee redressed by Ecclesiasticall censure, nor determined, in the particuler Churches, wherein they are Pastors: why should they not first go either to the Bishop of the Dioces; or further, to the Archbishop of the Prouince, as we haue seene sufficient prouise that Timothie was?

The Exam. of punishing by eccl. Censure in the authoritie giuen to Timothie.

The first seeing of redresse by eccl. Cens. is of the Bish. or Archbishop not of Synods.

But if the matter be so difficult, that it cannot yet be by them determined: then in deede, by the authoritie and licence of the Christian Magistrate, (if there be a Christian Magistrate, as GOD be praised we haue, if we can be thankfull and obedient) a Synode or Councell of many Bishops and Pastors, may bee called and holden, to reforme and redresse those enormities. Sic tamen conuocetur Prouinciale concilium &c. saith Danæus, lib. 3. Ifag. cap. 38. But let the prouinciall Councell bee so called together, that the same Synode be signified vnto the faithfull Magistrate of that place wherunto it commeth together, to the ende that all suspicion of cluttering together or of faction, may be auoyded; besides that, neither ought that Prouinciall Synode to come together, nor yet to bee summoned, but that the power of calling together such an assemblie, either generally or specially, from the chiefe faithfull Magistrate of all that Region, Kingdome, or Common weale, wherof that Prouince is a parte, be before hand expressly or by silent yeelding, graunted and giuen vnto the Church and to the Pastors thereof.

When a Syn. or councell is requisite.

And in deede for such great matters and controuersies in Religion, and notorious misgouernances, not onely of Pastors but of the Bishops and Archbishops themselves, (when the matters could not bee concluded, nor the persons seuerely punished in their particuler Churches): many Prouinciall and generall Councells were called and holden, as against the Arians, Macedonians, Nestorians, Eutichians, Monothelites, &c. Bridges. To this we graunt with such exception as before, and it is in vse also, for such petite and particular Synodes, as euery Bishoppe hath in his Diocess, and in the partitions thereof, as Diocesses be now taken, in the Ecclesiasticall acceptation of the word, differing from the ciuill acceptation. For in the ciuill Bernar Waltherus lib. 1. miscell. cap. 19. Latwe, as Bernardus Waltherus noteth lib. 1. miscell. cap. 19. the worde Diocese is now and then taken for a Prouince: as in lib. 1. c. de prima. Carcer. where, Egyptiaca Diocesis, is vsed for the Prouince of Egypt. But he thinketh rather there is a great difference herein, for that many Prouinces were conteyned vnder a Diocese, as were many Diocesses vnder a Prefecture.

The acceptatiō of the termes, Prouince and Diocese ciuilly and Ecclesiastically. But wee vnderstand these termes of Diocese and Prouince otherwise, for a Prouince to conteyne vnder it some number of Diocesses: and a Diocese to conteyne some number of particular Churches or Parishes, which now and then are bounded or parted in diuers Shires. And loke how the lawes Ecclesiasticall, and the common lawes of this our Realme haue deliuered vnto vs the distinction and acceptation of these names, ratified by custome, in the same sence doe wee accept them without alteration or contention.

Our triennall and annuall Synods in euery Diocess. So that, although we haue not Prouinciall Synodes so oftentimes, yet haue we Episcopall Synodes, and Synodes of other ordinaries, such as are thought (if they bee well vsed) most conuenient for our state and Churches: if they be abused, the fault is not in the lawe, but in the officers.

These smaller Synodes, as they haue their ordinarie tymes appoynted, and are limited for the number of the particular Churches that are in them to assemble together: so is their authoritie limited accordingly.

As the Synods are limited, so are their authorities. For, if we shall consider all the premisses, what our Bretheren haue giuen vnto the Synode; If any controuersie (say they) of doctrine doe arise, the lawfull Synode hath to consider that it bee determined by the word of God: and to determine of the vse of ceremonies pag. 116. And that, also for order and comelinesse and best edification, the Synode hath to determine, what shall bee obserued in particular charges, as of the tyme, place, and forme of preaching and ministring the Sacraments. pag. 117.

What great authoritie and in how many things is by our bretheren giuen to the Synodes. That to make ceremoniall constitutions, whereby the Church must be gouerned in mere Ecclesiasticall matters, it is out of al controuersie, &c. This authoritie was proper vnto the Synode. pag. 118. Yea, that the Church was lawfully vested with absolute authoritie, and the Synode hath to decree concerning ceremoniall orders of the Church, whereof some may be generall to all congregations, some particular to certeyne churches, churches. pag. 119 & 120: That the Synode ought to haue such regard of all Churches, that they haue speciall regarde of every one. pag. 120. That the ouerseers and Elders of the Church should come together to consider of this matter, what orders were most fit for diuers places to bring them to the obedience of Christ, what for the furtherance of the that are newly come, and what for the continuance and encrease of the that are very well come on. pag. 121. Thus the Synode therefore ought to bee carefull in ordeyning of ceremonies, not onely that they be pure and agreeable to the word of God, but also that they be expedient for the time & persons, for whose vse they are ordeined. pag. 122. That the Synode hath further authoritie concerning discipline, to resourme and redresse by Eccl. censure, all such defaults and controuersies, as cannot be determined in the particular Churches; both to punish severely the Pastor himself, and the Elders that should be refoormers of others.

To what Synode all this great authoritie is giuen.

Here is great authoritie giuen to the Synode. And what now is this Synode that hath all this so great authoritie? Is it a generall Synode? No. Is it a nationall Synode? No, neither. But what of that, though it bee not generall of the whole, but particular of euery Prouince?

A, then is it yet at least of a Prouince, that hath so great authoritie.

Yes, saist, not so, but particuler of euery Prouince, or Shire, as it may be most conueniently.

All this authoritie giuen to the particular Synode of euery Shire.

What? and is this Synod that we haue talked of all this while, a Synod of a Shire? And do our Bre. think this may be most conuenient, that euery Synod of euery Shire may do all these things, as seemeth best to their wisedomes, one Shire one way, and another Shire another way; and so many diuers orders of ceremonies and disciplines in euery Shire, as it pleaseth the Synode of that Shire to determine? Well, yet this is somewhat better than it was before, when vniformitie of ceremonies was cleane condemned for an vnttrue principle. For by that vnttrue principle of theirs, not only all the authoritie therein of all Synodes was ouerthrowne: but euery Church, yea, euery man (for ceremonies) might alter or chaunge the at his pleasure, for feare he might bee thought to holde an vnttrue principle, that there should be an vniformitie in them. But yet would this breede a meruellous diuersitie, and a number of continuall garboyles and contentions in this Realme, if euery Shire therein had their Synod, which Synode had full authoritie to do all these things aforesayd. Howsoeuer our Brethren thinke this may be conuenient: it cannot sinke into my dull head, but that if euery of these Shire Synods had this authoritie: it would sone be a soxe England, the whole Realme consisting of so many Shires, and all the Shires ruled by so many Synodes, and all the Synodes hauing so much authoritie, yea full authoritie, euery one of them, as much as hath the whole in all. For, what is here left to the whole nationall Synod, yea, were it to a generall cecumenicall

Though this be dangerous to the state of the whole, yet better than to abolish all vniformitie.

nicall and vniuersall councell, that this Shire councell or Synode cannot doe, if it haue all this foresayd authoritie? And if one Shire then determine one thing, & another Shire determine & contrary: to what higher Synod shall the appeale be made? Or what neede & other care for such appeale? Or what authoritie hath any other Synod, more than that Synod had? And might not al be the in a wise pickle: cal they this a redressing with speed? I may God sende vs better speede, than (I feare mee) wee should finde by such a redressing.

But I hope our brethren will either helpe vs againe with some more speedie meanes and good deuise, how we may shake of the doubtles of these absurdities and inconueniences: or else their selues on better aduise mentes of them, will neyther seeke quirks to salue and colour them, nor yet maintaine them any longer, but renounce them; when they shall perceauce that their god meaning in them, doth nothing answere to the perillous daunger of them.

pag. 124.

Last of all, for as muche as the Election of Pastors, is a great and waightye matter, whiche ought not to bee permitted to the iudgement of anye one man, but pertaineth to the Church whereunto they should bee chosen, both for better aduise in choosing of a meete man, and for authoritie in causing him to accept their Election: it is conuenient that it bee done by the iudgemente of the particular Synode.

*The Synodes
election of Pastors.*

Our brethren heere from the correction, returne to the Election of Pastors, because (say they) it is a greate and waightye matter. They vrgē afresh, that it ought not to be permitted to the iudgement of anye one manne, but pertaineth to the Church wherunto they shoulde bee chosen.

I replye: that although in some Churches it may well so bee, and hath beene, and is, that the Church had, or hath some voyce, inter-est, or consent, in choosing of their Pastors, namelye in choosing of the Byshops: as the Pastors of all Cathedrall Churches haue yet some interest, in the electing of the Bishops to their Churches, whome the Christian Princes by the prerogative of their chiefest estate. and as Patrons for the temporalities that they haue endowed the Bishopricks withall, and for their chiefe charge that they haue in generall, and specially of all the Churches in their Dominions, doe commend vnto their elections: yet on the other side, manye Churches haue beene and are furnished with good Bishops, and especially inferiour particular Churches with excellent Pastors, by the iudgemente and appointing of one man. And we haue good warrant also for the same. For not onelye Christ himselfe by his owne onelye Iudgemente, did first elect and ordaine the Apostles, and all the other 72. Disciples: but also Sainct Paule elected and ordeyned Timothy and Titus to bee Bishops,

*Christes and

rather, Archbishops, of Ephesus, & Creta: & that they (mentioning no other ioyued with them in the Authoritie of that action) should also ordaine others to be Bishops and Elders, in euery Citie of those Prouinces. And although they except, that Christes doing heerein is about all other: yet me thinketh, that it is the better Example. For, had it bene absolutely euill, to appoint any to be a teacher of the people, and to minister the Sacrament vnto them, whom the people their selues had not chosen: then would Christ (being but one man) neuer haue so chosen any at all to that office. Neyther helpech it their tourne, that they say, the Apostles had not certaine places or boundes assigned vnto them, wherein to preache and Minister the Sacramentes, as Bishops and Pastors haue: for, neyther the limitation of the places, as any prejudice to the matter, nor yet the very Apostles, and the 72 Disciples were so left at large, by these wordes of Christe, Marke, 16. 15. Goe into all the worlde, and preache the Gospell to all Nations. &c. But that both for a while, the places of their preaching were limited vnto them before this commission, and also that afterwarde, they did portion out among them selues certaine partes and limites of the worlde, wherein they would preache: and some continued still, or mooste commonlye at or neere about Ierusalem: and Iames had such especiall Resyance and charge in that Church, that he is called both of the auncient and late wryters (as we haue seene) the Bishop thereof.

But what shall we saye to those Pastors, that in euery particular Church of their prouinces, were made by the onely Iudgement of Timothie and Titus? For, the text inferreth no necessity whereon we should gather, that they were chosen and ordeyned by the Iudgement and authoritie of any other. Vea the very wordes of the Apostles charge, to ordaine them city by city, or in euery towne, (except we shal say, he called the Synodes to euery towne) plainly argue, that the making of the was without Synods.

But let vs now see how these sayings hang together, that the election of Pastors pertaineth to the Church wherunto they should be chosen: and yet, it is conuenient that it be done by the iudgement of the particular Synode, which they called before, the Synode of euery prouince or shire. For, whatsoeuer their reasons are that here they alleage, both for better aduice in choosing a meete man, and for authority in causing him to accept their election: yet, if the Election pertaine to the church, wherunto the parties elected should be chosen; then, eyther it pertayneth to both, or not to the iudgement of the Synod, be it either particular or generall. For the Synode is not the church whereunto they are chosen; except they will call a particular church, a particular Synode.

And though they say, they giue not the synod the authority in choosing a meete man, but onely, for better aduice in choosing a meete man, & authority only, in causing him to accept their election: yet both not this follow hereupon that it is couenient that the electio it self be done by the Synods iudgement. For then hath the iudgement of the Synode authority in the election it selfe, and such authority too; that if any election of a Pastor in any congregation be made, without the iudgement, at the least of a particular or shire Synode; it is an inconuenient election. To auoyde with inconueniencie, it must needs fall out, that so often as any Pastorship is vacant in all England; by and by there must not onely bee an assemblee made by that particular church, but also a Synod be called and assembled of y whole prouince, or at least of the whole shire, for their iudgement in the election of euery particular Pastor to be chosen. Wherby we should haue if not in euery shire, yet in most shires, continuall Synodes. But in euery assemblee or company, some one of necessity, (e he a Pastor or Elder,) must haue this prerogative to order and dispose the same with reason, or else great confusion is like to followe: pag. 114. and how then, must it not also followe of necessity, that there must bee a continuall prerogative of one, among and ouer the Pastors?

But what grosse contradictions these sayings imple: and that is more, what daylye molestations, contentions, daungers and inconueniencies, these their so often & continuall assemblies & Synods of euery shire, eyther with the Princes warrant (as Dancus would haue it) or without it, would breede throughout the whole realme, although there were no other daunger by their former too great authority, but only this their aduice, iudgement & authority in the elections of euery newe Pastor that is to be chosen ouer all England: I referre it to the further consideration of the indifferent readers iudgement.

That no one man hath authority to ordaine Pastors and to impose them ouer Churches, hath bene before declared, by the example of the Apostles Paule & Barnabas, who although they were Apostles, yet wold they not challenge that prerogative vnto themselues, but by common Election they ordeyned Elders in euery Church. Actes. 14. 23. Timothie also receaued his charge, although it were through prophetic, by imposition of handes of the Eldership. 1. Tim. 4. 14.

Our brethren now to confirme this, that no one man hath authoritye to ordayne Pastors: rub ouer here againe their former examples, and first, of Paule and Barnabas. Act. 14. 23. But the text is moste plaine, that Paule and Barnabas did challenge that prerogative vnto themselues: And as for ordeyning Elders in euery church, by common election: the testimonie here cited, mentioneth neither common election, nor election at all. Although (I graunte) election is inferred to haue proceeded, where ordeyning is mentioned. The woorde (as we haue often seene beefore) is χειροτονίσας, as who saye, ordeyning, by confirmation or stretching forth of the hande. The Geneva translation calletp

callecth this, ordeyning by election. And our brethren here, (so expresse withall, whose this ordeyning by election was) doe add, common election. Beza telleth vs (as wee haue heard) of the olde custome among the Grecians and Romaines in holding vp their handes, and thereby giuing their voices in the Elections of their officers. True it is, that many times the word is so taken. But doth it follow, it must be so taken heere: haue wee not heard Caluines better interpretation, that referreth it to the laying on of the Ministers handes, and not to the lifting up of the peoples: and so, let the word be translated for election, must it follow it was the peoples?

But it is a worlde to see, how the greatest learned and best of all, when they haue once deeply conceaued an opinion, will drawe thinges to their owne cōstruction. For, although Bezaes travels & learning in his obseruations on the newe Testament, deserue in generall, both laude and admiration, yet now and then ouershootes (and that not small) to escape him, as they did Erasmus and others before, especiallye in so greate and difficulte a woork, Nemo omnibus horis, and (as they say) Bonus aliquando dormitat Homerus. Yea a meane person of no great learning, that otherwise is no whit comparable, yet if he doe but marke here the contents it selfe, and sence thereof, may most easily perceauie that they vnderstand this worde cleane amisse.

To whom the words χειροτονήσαντες is referred.

For to whome is this word $\chi\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\gamma\omicron\tau\omicron\nu\omicron\alpha\upsilon\tau\epsilon\varsigma$ referred: to the people? or to Paule and Barnabas? Luke saith in the two verses next before; And preaching, (or when they had preached) the Gospell to that Citie: and teaching (or had taught) many, (or had made disciples many) they retourned, &c. Who preached, taught or made Disciples, and retourned here? Is not all spoken of these two onely, Paule and Barnabas? confirming the soules of the Disciples, and exhorting to continue in the faith, &c. Who confirmed them here and exhorted them? Are these wordes spoken of any more, then Paule and Barnabas onely: and then it followeth: $\chi\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\gamma\omicron\tau\omicron\nu\omicron\alpha\upsilon\tau\epsilon\varsigma$ $\kappa\alpha\iota\ \alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma\ \pi\epsilon\tau\omicron\beta\omicron\upsilon\tau\epsilon\varsigma$, &c. but ordeyning by confirming with the hand (or, when they had ordeyned by confirming with the hand) elders vnto them, by the church, or as we english it (throughout euery Church, praying with fastings, they commended them to the L. on whom they beleued: & passing throughout Pisidia they came to Pamphilia; & speaking, (or when they had spoken the word in Perga,) they went downe to Attalia. Is it not here most apparant, that these nations, both before & after, are still spoken of Paule & Barnabas? and wherefore then shoulde these wordes of ordeyning Elders vnto them, with confirming by the hand, be understood of the peoples ordeyning the Elders with them?

ers, vnto one or other of these two. Our brethren may remember their owne wordes, pag. 63. 64. As it were greate confusion and vncomlinesse, for euery man to make his seuerall prayers in the publike assemblies: so is it orderly for one to pronounce the prayer in the name of the rest, and the rest to pray with him in silence, and to answer, Amen. And againe, as it pertaineth to the Pastor to conceaue publike prayers; so it is the dutie of the whole Church, in the name of the whole Church, to ioyne in hart with the Pastor in the same prayers.

The relation in the text betwene the ordeiners & the people to who they ordeined the Elders.

In this sence, of the consent of their hartes vnto Paule and Barnabas prayers, as the people here might bee saide also, to haue prayed with them; so we graunt that in consent of their hartes, they may be saide to haue toynd with Paule & Barnabas, in the ordeyning of the Elders. And yet, this were more hardlye spoken of the ordeyning; sith in the very wordes of the text, is expessed a different relation, betwene Paule and Barnabas on the one partie, that ordeined the Elders: and on the other parte, the people vnto whom, they did ordeyne the Elders. Χειροτονισας δε αυτους, saith St. Luke. They ordeyned them with the confirming of the hand vnto them. Vnto whom? but vnto the people: wherein it is manifest, that the people are cleane seuered from the ordeyners of the Elders, and were only the correlative parties, vnto whom the ordeyners did ordeyne those Elders. By all which it is most euident, that the word, Χειροτονισας, hath no reference at all to the people, or to any action of them, but to Paule and Barnabas only, and to their action. For here were as yet no Elders ordeined, to ordeine the Elders in the peoples name, sith the Elders were as yet to bee ordeined. But the people did not ordeyne them to themselves with the Apostles: therefore, the Apostles onely did ordeyne the Elders vnto the people.

As for the vse of the worde by the prophane writers, (as also these words Ecclesia, Euangelium, Episcopus, Apostolus, and diuers others, haue bene vsed prophainely) though Beza hereupon conceiue, that this action was here vsed also in the people by holding by their hands: Neuerthelesse, sith that we haue (and that by Caluins owne confession) already seene, that the Eccl. writers doe vse the word better, for that solemne rite (sayth he) of ordayning, which is called in the Scripture, laying on of hands: why should wee here in this holy action rather follow the interpretation of the prophane vse, than of the Ecclesiasticall? Why should wee rather ascribe it, with the prophane writers of the heathen, to the common election of the common people: than with the diuine writers of the Church, to the imposition of hands, which was a sacred ceremonie of ordeyning sacred persons, vsed onely by Gods sacred Ministers?

The Etimology of the word Χειροτονισ

Neither yet, (if we shall etymologize the word Χειροτονισ, of Χειρ a hand, and τονισμα, which is a pronouncing of the partie, on whom the hands are laide laide, to be made or consecrate the Pastor: or els of $\chi\epsilon\gamma$, and $\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma$, which is, ple of Timo- to confirme or strengthen) is there any unaptnesse, why this worde may this.

 not bee as well and much better vnderstode, for confirming or ordeyning an Elder in his consecrating, by laying the hand vpon him, which was the action of the Minister onely: than by holding vp the hand to his electing:
 which was the action of ρ people. in such places where they were in so great numbers assembled, that their Suffrages could not so well be discerned, by the confused noyse of their voyces, as by the holding vp of their handes, for a token of their liking of the partie. But in euery Church where Paule and Barnabas went, and ordeyned Elders, there were not such great numbers of the faithfull people, that they should need so to signifie their election by holding vp their handes, as Beza thinketh.

Neither sufficeth it, (as we haue seene also) that Calvin maketh Paule and Barnabas the chiefe moderators, least any tumult should arise among the people: I like better of that he sayd before, vpon this 23. verse: therefore Christ did not only send his Apostles to preach the Gospell: but he commaunded also that there should be Pastors appoynted, that the preaching of the Gospell might be perpetuall & in daylie vse. Paule and Barnabas doe marke, that this order was set downe by Christ, whē as they assigned Pastors to euery Church. The assignement therefore of the Pastors, was the prerogatiue that Paule and Barnabas here chalenged to themselves.

I graunt, they did it not by any imposing Elders vpon them, against the peoples liking and good willes: but that the good people gaue their good assent vnto those, whom Paule and Barnabas assigned to bee their Pastors.
 And this Calvin himselfe here confesseth, that Paule and Barnabas are said to choose the Elders. Which if it be truly sayde, then the word $\chi\epsilon\rho\tau\omicron\nu\iota\varsigma$ $\sigma\alpha\rho\tau\epsilon\varsigma$, is spoken onely of Paule and Barnabas, and not of the people. And so Calvin confutes himselfe, in gathering thereon a free election of the people. For although we may graunt, that Paule and Barnabas did not alone so choose and ordeyne them by their priuate office, but that it was the consent of the all: yet was not only the moderating, but the choosing, the assigning: and the imposition of handes, (which was the action of the ordeining) was the prerogatiue that Paule and Barnabas here did chalenge and haue, euen by Caluins owne confession.

The other example 1. Tim. 4. ver. 14. Now Timothie also receiued his charge, since our Brethren applye it to the example of Pastors, I like it very well, and this withall is to be remembred. For, when we alleadge Timothie as an example of Bishops, whom they also doe call Pastors: they repell this example, saying, he was an Euangelist, therefore no Pastor: and now they selues alleadge him as an example for the choosing of Pastors. And this I like also, that they say of Timothie receiuing his charge, although it were through prophetic, yet was it done by the imposition of handes of the Eldership, μετὰ ἐπισκόπων τὰν χειρῶν. Which wordes doe well expound the other worde, being of the like matter and action that þ other were, for ordeyning of Elders. And was this a lifting vp of handes to, or any election by voyces of the people?

No. But here was such an imposing of the Pastor on the people, as had the imposition of hands:

Yea, but (say they) of the Eldership. Not of (say I,) but with the Eldership. And this I graunt: but, doth this debarre Paule, that he only might not haue chosen, assigned, and appoynted him, if any other Elders did in the action of ordaining, lay their hands also on him, with the Apostle?

Though other in the Eldership laid hands on Timothie with Paule, yet might he bee the onely chofer of him.

Albeit euen by Caluins owne interpretation, (we haue seene, how in this place the name of Presbiterie or Eldership, maye be fastwell vnderstood, for the office of the priesthood or Eldership; as for the persons of the Priests or Elders. By which exposition of Caluine, it is apparant, that he might also well be sayde, to haue (in his ordeyning) the imposition of hands with the Eldership; although onely S. Paule alone (when he ordeined him,) had laide his handes vpon him. But howsoeuer it was done there in Ephesus, where there were moe Elders, before Timothie was ordeyned by S. Paule to be the chiefe Elder and πρεσβυτερος (as Beza calleth him) the Prouost or first stander, or B. of that Citie and prouince. Yet in all the places where Paule & Barnabas traueled, A.C. 14. there is no likelihoode, that they ordeyned there, first, other Elders to be their Gouernors, that were not Pastors, & then topped those Elders with the, in þ Elections of the Elders that were Pastors: put as Caluine expressly saith, Luke speaketh there of Pastors onely. But, put the election of Pastors to the peoples elections, and not to the Elections in the name of the people, to the gouerning Elders: and then our brethren straightway crye out; this were to breede confusion, yea, horrible confusion, whereof God is not the authour. pag. 83. 84.

These Examples therfore serue not their turne, but the oftener they turne them vpon vs, they retorne vpon themselves, with moze and moze manifest prooues against them.

The learned disc.

pag. 125.

Therefore as it hath bin evidently declared before, the assemblie of Elders, consisting of graue, wise and godly men, ought to enquire, when the Pastors place is voide, where they may finde a man meete to supplie his roome, and therein to desire ayde of the Synode. The man by such godlye aduise so chosen, ought to be presented to the congregation, & of them to be allowed and receaued, if no man can shew any reasonable cause to the contrary. This is the right Election, and ordeyning of Pastors, grounded vpon the word of God, and practised by the Primitiue Church, two hundred yeeres after Christ, vntill the mystery of iniquity, grewe to worke more openly, to the setting vp of the tyrannicall kirk-dome dome of Antichrist.

That the assemblie of Elders should consist of graue, wise and godlie men, they haue in deede declared before. But what are these graue, wise and godly men, of whom the assembly of Elders should consist? Are they Teachers and Preachers, or are they not? If not: then haue they no authoritie to determine any thing in the Synode. For (as they haue also declared before. pag. 117.) who should be able to knowe what order, comelinesse and ædificatio requireth according to Gods word, but they that be teachers and preachers of the same vnto all others? Which rule if it be true in one place, is true in all places, and so in the particular assemblies of Elders. Whereby it followeth, that except the assemblies be of so vnwise men, that they be not able to knowe what order, comelinesse, and ædification requireth, they must bee teachers and preachers, and of consequent Pastors, as likewise they haue before declared, and thereto cited euen one of their last testimonies: pag. 21. by the name of Elders, the Pastors are called. Act. 14. 23. where Paule and Barnabas ordeyned Elders by election in euery congregation. But if now, that they may be able to knowe these matters (of which the hauing a Pastor, is an order both of comelines and ædification according to Gods word) these Elders themselves must be Pastors: How shal these Elders enquire when the Pastors place is void, where they may finde a man meet to supply his roome, when the roome is neuer voyd of Pastors, so long as the assemblie of Elders doth continue? If they continue not, much lesse can they enquire for one, nor choose him, nor deserue therein the ayde of the Synod for him.

But, be the assemblie of the Elders, Pastors themselves, or not; can they not choose another Pastor to supplye his roome, when any Pastors place is voyde among them, but that they ought therein to desire the ayde of the Synode? For, wherein do they meane this therein, but of that they declared before; to enquire when the Pastors place is voyde, where they may finde a man meete to supplye his roome; and therein to desire the ayde of the Synode? They declared before, concerning the Pastors election, that it was conuenient to bee done, by the iudgement of the particular Synode, both for better aduice in choosing a meete man, and for authoritie in causing him to accept their election. And ought they now to haue the Synods ayde also, to helpe them to enquire when the Pastors place is voyde where they may finde a meet man to supply his roome? So that, when and wheresoeuer in all England, a Pastors place is voyde, we ought not onely forthwith to haue a Synode bypon that onely occasion, except the roome shall stande voyde till some greater occasion of a Synode happen: but the Synodes ayde must bee craued, before the newe election, where they may finde a meete man; and in the election it selfe, their aduise also must be had in choosing a meete man; and besides this, their au-thoritie must be had in causing him (that is, the elected partie,) to accept their election; and finally, it is conuenient, that it bee done also, even by the iudgement of the particular Synode.

And then, this meeete man, after all this inquirie, both of the assemblie of Elders of that particular Church, and of the Synodes ayde in this enquirie, being at last found out: and the man by such godly aduice so chosen; and by this authoritie so caused to accept their election: and all this being thus authentically done and ratified, by the iudgement of the particular Synode: the man ought to be presented to the congregation, and by them to be allowed and receiued.

What: and must a new allowance of the congregation be had, after all this assembling, inquiring, aduising, and choosing of the gouerning Elders of that congregation? Yea, and aboue them, after all the assembling, inquiring, and better aduising, and choosing, and authorizing, and even causing the man to accept their election, and after iudgement and all, of the particular Synode? What shall we thinke hereon? Hath the particular congregation an higher authoritie of allowing the Pastor? then haue not onely the gouerning Elders, whom the congregation their selues haue of confidence chosen, and committed vnto them their authoritie. pag. 84. but also then the whole particular Synode, whose ayde therein was desired: and must it now be ouerruled by the allowing or disallowing of euery particular congregation?

Whether the congregation
ought to re-
ceiue the man whom the Synod appointeth to them.

If they say, they meane not, that the man ought so to bee allowed and receiued of the congregation, that he may also of them bee disallowed or not receiued: but that the congregation must allowe him and receiue him, after all these allowances of him and authorities. What: and will they impose him vpon them, and inforce the congregation to allowe him and receiue him? Well may they be compelled to receiue him: but they cannot compell them to allowe him, except from teeth outward.

If they say, they meane not to cause them to allowe him or receiue him: but that they ought onely of their duetie so to doe: doe they not say in plaine words, of the Synodes authoritie ouer the elected partie: and for authoritie in causing him to accept their election? What imply these words, but that he must accept their election, be he willing or unwilling to accept it? And haue they more authoritie to cause him to accept their election, than they haue to cause that particular congregation, (which haue committed their authoritie to the assemblie of Elders, which assemblie haue desired the ayde of the Synod,) to accept the man whom they haue thus elected for them?

The Synodes
imposing of Pastors vpon
the congregation.

But they say, that they ought so to doe, not simply, but, if no man can shewe any reasonable cause to the contrary.

And what if no man can doe this? must they thus therefore impose Pastors

stors on them? And is not this imposing, one of their quarrells against the imposing pa- Bishops? & are they now themselves faine to come to imposing of Pastors stors.
on the congregations?

But what now, if any man can alleadge any reasonable cause to the contrarie? must every reason of any one man, ouer-rule al the reasons and authorities, both of all the residue of the congregation, and of all the gouerning Elders, and of all the Synode? See, what a great sturre wee haue here had, & still must haue, about the choosing of euery Pastor in y^e Realme; all the seuerall congregation, all the assemblie of Elders, all the Synode of the Prouince or Shire must meete together with all this adoe: and when all is done in comes any one man, & he alone vpon any reasonable (though not necessarie) cause, may turne topside turne all their doings.

All their election defeated

man.

And is this the right election and ordeyning of Pastors?

Yea (say they) this is the right election and ordeining of Pastors. Yea, and grounded vpon the word of God, and practised by the Primitive Church 200. yeres after Christ.

Our brethrens
auouching of the right election and ordey-ning of Past.

This is stoutly auouched, if now they can proue it. But can they shew this election and ordeyning of Pastors in any places, yea, in any one place in al Gods word?

Well, what of that? It is grounded (say they) vpon the word of God?

What? Are they some grounded? What meane they by grounded? Can they shewe vs any one rule, or but any one example hereof in the worde of God? No place that they haue yet alleadged, sheweth any such election and ordeyning of Pastors?

Our brethrens
election & or-deyning of Pastors is not grounded on Gods word.

What Synodes assembling, inquiring, aduising, choosing, iudging, and causing of the partie elected to accept their election, was there had in the electing and ordeyning Pastors by Paule and Barnabas. Act. 14?
Or what electing and ordeyning of Pastors was there in the Synode (if we shall properly call that assemblie, a Synode,) which was of the Apostles and Elders of Ierusalem. Acts. 15? Or both S. Paule in any of his precepts to Timothie or to Titus, commaund not only an assembly of the same congregatiō, whereunto the Pastor should be chosen; but also a Synod either general, or nationall, or Prouinciall, or particular, yea be it but of one shire, to be called and holden, at the electing and ordeyning of all, and euery, or of any Pastors for their particular congregation?

And how then dare our Brethren for very shame, so confidently affirme, as though it were most cleere and out of all crime: This is the right election and ordeyning of Pastors grounded vpon the worde of God. What a grounding is this, of the which no one place, nor sorte of grounde can bee found, or seene, or heard of?

And yet, if this were the right election and ordeyning of Pastors: then all the elections and ordeynings of Pastors expresse in the word of God, must either be according vnto this; or els, they were not elected and ordeyned aright; or els, this is not so the right election and ordeyning of the, but that other elections & ordeynings of Pastors mencioned in the word of God, without these assemblies and Synods for the doing of them, are as right as they. And then, this manner of electing (if euer there were any such) is no necessarie prescription vnto other.

But our bretheren not content, thus amisse to father this their electing and ordeyning of Pastors, as grounded vpon the word of God: they pre-tende further to this practise of 200. yeeres after christ. But this pretended practise also, we haue already sufficiently improued. And albeit, during the sayd tyme, and as long againe in many places, the people had voyces of ob-sent in the elections of their Bishops. Yet had they not also y^e like dealing, in electing all the Pastors vnder the Bishops, but as for ordeyning they had neuer any part at all therein, neither for Bishops, nor for any other Pastors, neither during the practise of those 200. yeeres, nor far before, nor after, except they shall find some odd extraordinarie example, which I remember not but that were not able to cary away at the practise of the primatine church for 200. yeeres after Christ.

But, (to call them to the iustifying of that they haue auouched here) can our Bretheren bee able to prooue, that all the elections and ordey-nings of Bishops and Pastors, were made by the Inquirie, aduice, choise, iudgment, and authoritie of Synodes, causing the party elected to accept their election? or that Synodes were alwaies called, whensoever any Pastor of any particular church was to be elected and ordained?

By this wee maye plainely see, that our presentation of patrones, is both prophane and preiudiciall: our giuing of orders by Bishops, is presumptuous and full of absurdities. First, because they take vpon them to doe that, which none of the Apostles durst doe: that is, without Election of the churches to ordaine Elders. Secondlye, that they giue an office without a charge, to make a Pastor and send him to seeke a flocke, where hee can finde it: which is as vnreasonable a thing, as if one were chosen to be a church warden, & had neuer a church to kepe: or made a constable, that had neuer a towne or place appointed, wher-of he should be constable. For the name of Pastor, Elder, or ouerseeer, is the name of an office in act and esse, because it is a proper relative, and not potentiallabilitie in the cloudes. If Bishops as they be now, were consecrated after the same maner to seeke their bishopricks, where they could find them, it were no greater absurditie, then it is to ordaine Pastors, and let them proll where they can for their benefices. Thirdly, by this wading (we may also say vagabound) ministrie, shifting from place to place, and in all places, to bee counted a minister where he hath noe charge, it would grieue a man to thinke what inconuenience doth follow,

lowe, but principally howe filthilye it stinketh of the olde popishe indelible charecter, from whence it hath his grounde, and neither of any reason, or of the worde of God. And yet forsooth it is so perfect, that it may abide no reformation. Fourthly, if you will see howe well the authority which they claime and practise is vsed of them, that onely haue the choyse and admission of Ministers: Looke ouer the whole Realme of England, what a multitude of vnfit Pastors shall you finde in euery place? so that Ieroboam neuer made worse priestes of the refuse of the people, to serue his goldē calues, then they haue ordeyned Ministers, to feede the flock of Christ which he hath purchased with his own blod.

By this that wee haue befoze perused, wee can neyther plainlye, nor any way see that our presentation of patrones, (being bled as in right & lawe established it ought to be) is eyther prophane or preiudiciall, which wayes are very rough and hard, being spoken not so much against such patrones as doe prophanely, & with the Churches spole, abuse their interest; as simply against all our presentations of patrones, since of whomsoeuer, and against the right and tytle of them although they chuse neuer so meete a man, or present him neuer so freely. For since that (to whomsoeuer the right of Electing hath perteyned) the principall end thereof was to provide the Churches of meete Pastors, so that this may be provided for and upheld: The right of electing is not in it selfe prophane.

And to whom is this our presentation of patrones preiudiciall? Is it preiudiciall to the people? Yea rather, (if it be well bled) is it not moze beneficiall to them? there is no simple necessity of the peoples presenting, nor example in the Scripture as yet alleadged. But if the people had got a right afterward, might they not againe haue lost their right or interest whatsoeuer they had (which was rather in Cities, about the choosing of their Bishops, than of all Pastors in euery particular congregation) by abusing the same, through their factions, immoderate and tumultuous contentions, oftentimes ended with bloodshed, whereof the Ecclesiasticall histories haue many examples, and some within the space of the foresayd 200. yeres?

And why might not their interest in electing Bishops haue ceased, as did their authoritie in many other things besides, that they had among themselves befoze, while the Princes that were in chiefe authoritie ouer them, were as yet out of the household of the faith, and enemies thereto? Which Princes afterwarde becoming faithfull, this care especially belonged to them, both to provide for godly Bishops, and to restrayne their people from factions, and from sedicious growing by their disordred elections. And so the people left off by little and little, to deale in those matters when the Christian Princes & the Clergie in the Cathedral Churches dealt therein.

And doe not our Bretheren in effect confesse, that the people haue resigned by what interest they had, vnto an assemblie of Elders consisting of graue, wise and godly men, to elect for them; and pag. 84. 85. in whome they repose such confidence that they commit vnto them their authoritie in hearing and determining such matters, as without horrible confusion they cannot perfourme themselves: and hereto also may bee referred that which is sayde of election of Pastors, that the Apostles Paule and Barnabas did ordeyne by election of the congregation, Elders vnto many Churches Acts. 14. 23. because the name of Elders is common to both: to Pastors and Gouernours.

If then they thinke, that the people may passe ouer this authoritie of election from themselves to a fewe other: might they not aswell passe it ouer to the Prince, and repose as great a confidence in his vpright doing of the same?

How diuerse waies the right of patronage
and presentation might haue
come.

But what, if vpon any Conquest made, the Prince and the Nobles haue reserved among other things, this honor and priuiledge ouer the people conquered; or in the partitions of Cities, Townes and Parishes, to bee kept to themselves, or distributed among the chiefest of the Conquerors? What, if for some notable defence and maintenaunce of the people, or some benefite done vnto them, they haue graunted all such right, title and interest vnto the Prince, to the Nobles and Gouernours of them? What, if any Prince, or other of noble or gentle stemme, by erecting, founding, or giuing some proportion of house, land or reuenuue, to mainteyne the Pastors liuelode, the right of presenting the Pastor to that Towne or Village, is deuolued to him and to his lawfull heyres; and so the Parson descending of that ligne, doe claime and hold by that right, to be euer after called, and to bee indene the patron of that Pastorship, that is, to be not onely the doner of his liuing, but the defender of him both in the exercise of his office, and in the liberties, rites and priuiledges of his Church?

The ends
while patrona-ges were orde-
ned.

To which ends and purposes, these patrones haue onely and no further, the interest of choosing a meete man, and then to present that man of whome he hath made choyce, vnto the Bishoppe, as to the superiour pastor in that Diocese, that vpon his further triall and examination by the Bishop whether he be meete or no, he may be admitted, or repelled from that pastorship. And if this patron doe not in sufficient tyme inquire after, and prouide a fitter Pastor: then the Bishop himselfe is to prouide one. Which matters and the reasons of them, with all other rites and orders pertaining thereto, are now shewed and sufficiently prouided: or in the lawe, both for the Pastor and the congregation, both for the Patron and the Bishop, or from him to the Archbishop, or from him to the Prince. And should now all these positive lawes and laudable customes, growne to the auient title of any, nay, of so many and so great persons rightes and interests of this presentation, be thus defaced as prophane, and extorted from them as prejudiciall to the people?

I defend not, nor excuse the corrupt dealings of any patrones, but rather hartely heartely lament and utterly mislike the manifold abuses of them. But they may be remedied by farre better meanes, than for the wrongs done by some, to overthrowe the right due to all; and neither to spare Gentlemen, Noblemen, Bishops, Archbishops, Prince, nor anye, but turne all loose to the peoples election. And yet to giue them the hobbe also, to take it cunningly away from the people too, and to giue the patronage or right of choosing and presenting the Pastor to an assemblie of a few, in the name of a whole. And whereto would this come, but to reuiue these old boyles (in euery Parish for euery Pastor) that had wont to be in Cities, about the elections of the Bishops? And that which is moze, to summon Synodes and assemble the Pastors and Elders of euery Parish at least in the Shire, to intermeddle themselves in this matter, which are all, or the most of them as much strangers (if not moze) vnto that Parish, as perhaps is the Patron to that Benefice.

This newe devised electings and ordeynings far more indicall then the presentation of patrons

If our presentation of Patronage be prophane and preiudiciall; verely this election and ordeyning by their Elders and Synods, is farre moze dangerous vnto all the state, and manifest iniurious vnto many.

But their conclusion runneth not onely against our presentation of Patronage: but also, that our giuing of orders by Bishops is presumptuous, and full of absurdities.

Our Bishops giuing orders.

Whether our Bretheren presume not ouer much in these presumptuous speeches, I referre to other, least I should also be counted too presumptuous. And yet, though I dare not presume to wage anye thing with our Bretheren on this poynt; neuertheless, I dare resume this vpon me, that, so many absurdities as we haue seene already, in the elections and ordeynings of Pastors, by the assemblies of their governing Elders and Synodes, they shall neuer be able to shewe, in our giuing of orders by the Bishops.

Our brethren charge our Bishops giuing orders with 4. absurdities and presumptions.

But here, (whether they bee all, or they haue moze in store) they charge ours with fower absurdities and presumptions. First (say they) because they take vpon them to doe that which none of the Apostles durst do: that is, without election of the Churches to ordeyne Elders.

Our Bretheren here doe not simply denye, but that our Bishops may ordeyne Elders: but saye they) not without the election of the Churches. But this is the poynt we stand on before. So that if our Bishoppes may ordeyne Elders, then it may suffice for their giuing orders. For what is the giuing of orders els, but the ordeyning? And if they may ordeyne them to be pastorall Elders, which is the office it selfe of the Ministerie, and so, farre moze principall than is the electing of the partie, to be ordeyned a Minister or Pastor; or thā is the electing of him (being a Minister) to a place or living, where he may employe and exercise himself in his Ministerie: why then may not the Bishops elect also, hauing moze discretion and skill then most commonly other haue, to choose a meete man, either to the office, or to the living?

But they say none of the Apostles durst so doe. And where finde they this in all the Scripture, that they durst not, or that they had any commandement not to do it? Doth it suffice, if they could alleadge any example, where the Apostles did ordeyne Pastors with the election of the Churches? I thinke that were no sufficient proofe, that they durst not doe it otherwise, or that alwaies they did so, or that they had commandement so to doe, or that their so doing were a rule and prescription for al elections. But in very badde they cannot shewe, (or at least, they haue not as yet shewed) so much as any one example where they did so. All those that they haue shewed, the others they alleadge them, the more they make against them. There is not one worde in them, that inferreth either the peoples, or in their name any consistorie Elders election of the Pastors, that the Apostles used or prescribed, in the ordeyning of Pastors. Yea rather, both the examples, and the preceptes of Saint Paule to Timothie, are either playne (or seeme to encline) to the cleane contrary.

And shall wee dare to saye on the other side, (finding both the example heere alleadged by themselves, Acts 14. and Saint Pauls preceptes to Timothie and to Titus, of ordeyning pastorall Elders to bee made without mentioning of the Churches elections,) that the Apostles durst not ordeyne any Pastors with the Churches elections; no, wee dare not say so, but that the Apostles might haue done it with them, or without them, as they thought best, hauing the warrant of Gods Spirit, and as the occasion serued for their ordeyning of the Pastors. And therefore, I meruell how our Brethren durst so boldly affirme, that the Apostles not only did it not, but durst not doe it.

Secondly, (say they) that they glue an office without a charge, and sende him to seeke a flocke where he can finde it.

Our Brethren here begin to descant upon the names of Pastors and office. Neither doe wee denye, but that the name Pastor, betokeneth an office, whether wee vnderstande it as hee is onely a Minister of the worde and Sacramentes, and so he is sayde to haue taken Orders, or as he hath a peculiar flocke to minister the worde and Sacramentes in, as we commonly call the Rector, Parson, Vicar or Curate, the pastor of such and such a Church or Parish. The worde Pastor in both senses may bee comprehended in the name of an office. And yet here if wee should goe as strictly to worke, as our Brethren doe, (which curiosities I mislike not in them, to finde out all the quirkies in the worlde, to beate out the trueth more thoroughly) wee shall easely see great differences in the proprieties of these names and words of an office, and of an order. Albeit they may well bee taken and oftentimes are used indifferently.

The 2. absurditie and presumption is the geuing of an office without a charge or flocke.

But

But the question is here whether any office can bee giuen, and the man truly called an officer, without a charge of a place or a flock giuen with all vnto him, whereof he is and may bee called the officer. They denye it, and I say he may, and my reason is this.

The word office hath not alwaies relation to the charge of a place only and that specially of a certeyne place, where, or of persons among whom, the office is exercised: but of the matter it selfe and duetie, whereof the office consisteth, in respect of which matter, the other are as it were but accidentall, which our Bretheren here make all, or principall. The Prophetes were Prophetes before they had any certeyne places where they prophesied. The Apostles were called, and in office were Apostles, before they were sent into any message of their Apostleship. And Saint Paule calleth all both Apostles and Pastors, Ministers, 1. Cor. 4. 1. though all of them had no certeyne standing places designed to them to minister in, and yet were they all of them in the very office of the Ministerie full Ministers of the worde and Sacraments, if wee may so properly call the Ministerie of the worde and Sacraments, an office as an order.

Whereto the worde Office hath relation.

Phophets Apostles hauing no certaine Places.

In deede Saint Paule sayth of an office, Rom. 12. vers. 7. or an office, on the office. That is to say, he that hath an office let him bee diligent in his office. But he assigneth not any certeyne places and charge of flocks to all the offices that he there reckoneth vp. Although, as it is an old saying, so it is not vnerue, Priesthood and Knighthood are orders rather than offices. And Priesthood (I mean not the Popish sacrificing Priesthood, but the Pastorall Eldership) may well be called an order, when the making of a Priest or pastorall Elder is called, the ordering or the ordaining of him, and our Bretheren themselves so well call it the giuing of orders.

The difference betweene Office & Order.

Knighthood now being likewise more properly called an order than an office: when a man hath receiued the order of Knighthood, it followeth not that he must be a Knight of this or that place, as were some Knights, namely the Knights of Prussia, or the Knights late of the Rhodes, and now of Malta: neither followeth it, that he that made him Knight must alwaies withall giue him laundes and liuing, and yet all the better for the Knight if hee so doe, and more fitte for his order to haue sufficient maintenance, and though hee had but xl. pounde a peere, which was called a Knights fee. Howbeit, hee might be a Knight, though a poore Knight, without any such fee. For the order is one thing, and the maintenance of him in his order, yea his charge to doe his duetie in his order, is another thing, and not the order it selfe.

The order of Knighthood giuen without giuing landes fee to maintaine it.

But (say they) this is as vnreasonable a thing, as if one were chosen (not to be a Knight, but) to bee a Churchwarden, and had neuer a Church to keepe, or made a Constable, that had neuer a Towne or place appoynted, ted, whereof he should be Constable.

The difference
betweene these offices and the office or order of a minister.

Some offices
made in respect of place & charge, that cease not with the dispossef-sing of the place or charge.

The similitudes of these two offices, and of Church-warden, and of a Constable, are not a like to the order, or (if they will so call it) to the office of the ministerie, for because that these two Offices haue a necessary relation in them setues not onely to the office, but also to the place where the partie is the officer: so that, if no place be assigned them, there is no such officer made. To which kinde of officers, the old distinction serueth, that the office & the place be distincta ratione non re. They cannot in the act of them be separate, though they be distinguished in the reason of them.

And yet we see, that in some such offices, as in which besides the office, there is ioyned with all a degree of honour and dignity, though the relation of the office, in respect of the place where the office laye, doth cease, as, either the place being waisted, or possessed by another, and he dispossessed: yet may his degree of dignitie not cease or be in him utterly extinguished, so long as the right of the office is in him, though the exercise and action of the office, together with the place, and other appendices of the office, bee taken from him, as a Kinge, Duke, Earle, or Lord, though he loose, (be it not by his own demerite, resignation, or lawefull deprivation) his Kingdome, Dukedome, Earledome, or Lordshippe, but by an others intrusion or occupation: yet is he still both called, and is in deede, a King, a Duke, an Earle, a Lord, by reason he still holdeth the right of the office, and capacitie to repossesse it though he haue neither possession, action, nor exercise of it at this instant. Notwith- standing, as it is sayd in the old verse on fortunes wheele, regno, regnanti, regnabo sum sine regno. He may be rex sine regno, euen the lowest degree of them all, and yet rex still.

Yea, to descend to baser offices also, not only a professor of liberal sciences, but euen one professing mechanicall artes, or as we commonly terme him a handicraftes man, although he exercise not alwaies the action of his function, nor occupie in his occupation, or as wee may generally call it also his office too: yet the office, occupation or function ceaseth not in him, and if now, it may bee thus in so manie other offices, which notwithstanding take all their denomination euen of the action and exercise of them, and of the charge or dutie therein required: why may it not, and much more, be thus in the order or office of the minister? Doth his office cease, if he be put from his place, where he was first appointed to minister.

If his office should cease with the place, then could hee minister in no other place. Nay, then were hee no minister at all anye longer, so that, turne him out of his place, and turne him cleane out of his ministry, & if he be preferred to an other place, he must be made minister again. And is worse then (as Chaucer saith) A Monke out of his cloyster, is not worth an oyster for a monke is a monke still: but the minister is become no minister, and so all his preaching and ministring of the sacraments and a laye mans actions, and not a ministers: and (by their owne consequence) no sacraments at all, if he do these things where his charge and flocke is not: And in deed some of our Bretheren beginne to be so perris, that thinke it scarce lawefull to preach, except it be in their owne proper charges, though they be orderly requested thereunto, but they neede not to be squemish by this rule, for there they are not Ministers at all if they do it.

Now if the office of the ministerie it selfe cease not, with the altering of the place, where they had a charge, much lesse both the institution and entrie into the office of \bar{p} ministrie, which is the ordeyning or geuing of orders, depend vpon or require the necessitie of a place, as it doth in the office of a Churchwarden or Counstable, or in the offices that haue local honours and dignities annexed to the degrees, or to the offices of them, as in Kings, Dukes, Earles, Lordes, &c. For these offices begimme together with the places and charges annexed vnto them, but in all the offices of ministrie, it is not so. And if our Bretheren will so vrge it, let them looke to it their selues. For I suppose, that some of them (if I take not my markes amisse, and those too, whom otherwise I reuerence and honour) had not prouissions of place and charge of flocke committed vnto them, at their verie first receiuing of their orders, but perhaps caried some piete while after, and yet (I hope) they make account that they were ministers beefore. Yea had they not bin ministers at all beefore, and that tryed, to be both learned, and pre-supposed to be meete men: they had not bin capable of those places and Charges.

How our Bretheren were made minist-
ters.

And if I should goe further: what one of our Bre. were not made simply ministers of the word and sacraments, and not ministers conditionall, as the ministers of this or of that place, charge, or flocke? although it might be some of them were already prouided for in that behalfe: but their taking of orders or office of the ministerie it selfe, dependeth not thereon: which it must haue done, were the place a parte and that a necessarie parte of the office.

They say that this their learned discourse, is a breefe & plaine declaration concerning the desires of all those faithfull ministers that haue & do seeke for the Discipline and reformation of the Church of Eng-lande. But if this be one of the payntes they desire and seeke for: then they desire and seeke for that, which ouerthrowes both their owne ministerye, and their faithfulness too. For, if this rule be true, then are they no faythfull ministers, nor ministers at all, hauing receiued the orders of ministry otherwise, than their selues desire, seeke for, and prescribe that other should doe.

Our brethren
ouerthrowe their owne Ministrie.

But they not considering this, goe forwarde from their examples of Churchwarden and Constable, to prouide it somewhat more Clerke-like. For (saye they) the name of a Pastor, Elder, or Querseer, is the name esse of a pastor.

The name of act and esse, but that it ad-

miteth also Po-tentiall habi-
tude.

name of an office in Act and Esse, bicause it is a proper relative, and not a potentiall ability in the cloudes.

Are all potentiall abilities in the Cloudes? But our brethren were disposed heere to speake in cloudes, and to tell the people of offices in Act and Esse, of proper relations, and of potentiall abilities: be like, bicause they woulde the worlde shoulde well vnderstande, that this is (for sooth) a learned discourse: howbeit, all this discourse here, is but of the names of this order or office of the ministerie. But, be they relatives as proper as they will, and the relation also in Act and Esse, as they terme it: yet doth it not follow þ this actuall and essentiall relation, must be so strictly related to a place, where hee must bee a Pastor, or Elder, or Ouerseer, that hee cannot bee made the Pastor, Elder, or Ouerseer, till hee come thither his selfe, and exercise the office actually: for, if there bee no potentiall abilitye, but onely the verie Act and Esse, thereof to be considered in the office of a Pastor, Elder or ouerseer: then is hee not a Pastor, Elder, or Ouerseer, till hee doe feede or teache them, gouerne them and ouerseer them actually. But, if hee bee not the Pastor till he come actually his selfe to doe these actions among them: then is all the action aforesayde in the Synode frustrate, except they goe all home with him, and ordaine him onely then and there, when and where he must doe the thinges in act and esse, that the name of his office hath relation vnto.

This Position
ouerthroweth all the making of Pastors in the Synods.

The grosse ab-surditie of this position.

For (say they) the name of a Pastor, Elder, or ouerseer, is the name of an office in act and Esse, bicause it is a proper relative, and not a potentiall abilitye in the Cloudes. Is not this a proper baliance on the name of Pastor? and to make it a proper relative, doe they not make it withall a proper office? Yea, see whereunto by this nice baliance on these names and termes, this office will come: and all bicause it may in no wise suffer a potentiall abilitye. And whie so: forsooth for feare it would vapour by by and by into the cloudes, but admitte this to be true; and then it presently followeth, that when soeuer the officer ceaseth from the very act and doing of his office (as both bypon many occasions hee may sometimes doe, and of naturall necessitye he must oftentimes do,) so often doth he cease to be a Pastor, Elder, or Ouerseer.

But because they stand vpon these 3. names, Pastor, Elder, and Ouerseer, which they make all relatives alike, and to haue like relation vnto an office in act and esse. For the Esse, it is an other matter, if they meane the being of the office. For, as soon as the office hath begun his esse or being; then his esse or being continueth still in the office in all these 3. names therof, although the act in all alike be not in esse or in being, which confuteth so muche more our brethrens assertion. But that all these three names are proper alike in respect of the Act: this againe is nothing so.

For

For, the name of Pastor signifying a shepheard, beareth more heavily upon this actuall relation, than the name of presbyter, Priest, or Elder doth, which hath more reuerence to the office, function, dignitie or degree either in it selfe, or in respect of yonger and inferiour persons, than it hath vnto any charge ouer them committed vnto him.

As for the name of overseer inferreth the relation of an office more in act, than doth the name of Elder or of Pastor. Because, hee may easiler & oftener actually oversee them, than he can feede them. Yet none of these names are alwaies so related either to act or to esse, that they debarre all potentiall abilitie in him, but that he may remit the continuall exercise and acte of his office, per intersitium, with pausings and ceasings oftentimes betwene, and yet the Esse of his office reasseth not, nor he to be still an essentiall officer; and much lesse, that the esse or being of his office, yea, or the acte either of the same, should be limited and tyed alwaies to one place, or flocke or charge: yea the place, flocke, or charge, to be a part of the esse or being of the office.

But thus straightly doe our brethren drue vs, to tracke them in these harsh termes of schoolemens quiddities, into the which, because, I am rather brought by them, than that I haue to stay the reader in them; I craue & hope for the easier pardon. For indeed, we strue not there so much for names and termes, as whether the order or office of the Pastor be not competent to any man, that hath not withall a charge and flocke of people committed vnto him at the very instant of making him a Minister, or giuing him orders: which thing, because our Bishops do not, nor indeede can performe, nor was performed in these faithfull Ministers our brethren themselves, nor is necessary alwaies to be performed; while they would thus challenge our Bishops of absurditie for it, they their selues incurre all these moste grosse absurdities, and yet they urge them still, with more and more absurdity.

But say they, if Bishops as they be now, were consecrated after the same manner, to seeke their Bishopricks, where they could finde them: it were no greater absurditie, then it is to ordaine Pastors, and let them Prole where they can for their benefices.

This meriment here would haue done well (among so solemne and subtil relations of abilities, potentialities, actualities, and essences:) to recreate the readers spirits, if it were to the purpose. But as before, they would haue shifted off the matter, from the order of the Priesthood or eldership, to the office of a Pastor, which yet we see serueth not their turne: so, much lesse doth this hold, that if a Minister may be made a Minister, and haue no proper place or benefice withall assigned him, where to Minister: that then after the same maner, a Bishop may be made a bishop; & haue no place or Bishopricke assigned him, whereof to be Bishop.

Indeepe, if a bishop were all one & nothing else, but (as our brethren haue sayd)

Our brethrens
resemblance of Bishops to seeke their Bishopricks.

Ministers. saye) an elder, pastor, or Minister of the word and Sacraments : then, to make a bishop, and after to let him seeke a bishopricke where he can finde it, were no absurdity at all.

Our brethren
durst for Bish.
& bishopricks.

And I doubt it shewdly, this be not the least of many of our Brethrens mistes, to make Bishops indeede goe seeke their bishopricks. For euen these our learned brethren haue tolde vs already, Pag. 54. of deuinding the superfluities of some places that haue too much, vnto the that haue too little. And there want not more than inough, to barken in the wind for such a bargain, and euen therfore our brethren maye finde the more fauorites, in these deuises.

The Bishops
office besides Pastorship.

But since that a bishop, besides that he is an Elder Pastor or Minister, hath also an other office, in respect wherof he hath the name of Bishop. By which office he hath a superiour oversight & higher charge of Iurisdiction, ouer a number of other Pastorall Elders in certayne particular Churches, limited and bounded for his dioceses : and of this we haue cleerely seene the practise euen in the Apostles times; and from the Apostles times, during all the times of the auncient and holy Fathers succeeding : the contrary wherof our brethren shall neuer be able to proue : who may not then see, that is not blinded with too much ignorance or partiality; what a great difference there is in this poynt, betweene a Bishop, and one that is but onely a Minister. While the Ministers office respecteth the Ministerie of the worde and Sacraments, in what place soeuer he shalbe assigned to Minister the same, and Bishops office respecting (besides this ministerie the Bishopricke, that is, the iurisdiction and oversight of those Churches, that are allotted to his Diocese.

And can our brethren then iustifie this saying, If Bishops (as they bee now) were consecrated after the same maner, to seeke their Bishopricks where they could finde them, it were no greater absurditie, then it is to ordayne Pastors; and let them prole where they can for their benefices.

Bish. as they be nowe.

What meane they by this word Bishops as they be now? For this maketh yet more against themselves. For Bishops as they bee now, haue liuinges also more or lesse, besides the charge of their Diocese, annexed & appropriated vnto them, which all Ministers haue not, neither (I thinke) al our brethren their selues had their benefices when they were first made Ministers. And should wee retorne such vnseemely speeches on them, that they went seeking and prowling aboute for their benefices, where they could finde them? No, I doe thinke more reuerently of our brethren, but I mislike their termes, and more their argument.

Thirdlye (say they) by this wandering (wee may also say, vagabunde) ministrye, shifting from place to place, and in all places to bee counted a minister, where he hath no charge; it would grieue a man to think what inconueniences do follow, &c.

We like as ill and are grieued as much, at wandring ministers, namely such as wander not vpon any unlawfull cause, but shifting from place to place; as any of these our learned brethren are grieued therat. Although againe it be no small grieue, to heare them thus continue such vnruerent and vcharitable termes, as Vagabund ministers, they being their pooze brethren, and ministers of Christ, not of Antichrist; ministers of Gods worde and Sacrament, not Idolatrous nor Hallemonging Sacrificers. It were well, there were none but such as were so sufficiently prouided for, that they need not wander. And the auncient Canons (as I thinke) are in force, that whosoever should be made a presbyter, priest, or Elder, the bishop is bound to see him haue Titulum (as they terme it,) a Title of some stipend or pension wheron to be maintained; or else the Bishop that ordeyned him to be bound to finde him. If this be not executed, that is another matter, and may be remedied, the Eccl. state both for the substance of the bishops, and of the ministers dignities and offices, standing as it doth. And if anye bishop were complained vpon and conuicted. I thinke he might by order of lawe be compelled to finde his Ministers, or be punished for making of them. But what is this to our brethrens assertion, that a man cannot be counted a minister where he hath no charge; and if not so much as counted; then not be. For, if he be a minister, then he ought to be counted a minister.

out of their

The 3. absurditie & presumption is wandring and vagabund Ministers.

No Ministers to be made sine Titulo.

Our Brethren sayde before, it was an absurditie to ordeyne Pastors, and let them prowle where they can for their Benefices. But is that such an absurditie, as is this? Yea, this is not onely most absurde, and includeth all the former inconueniences: but it is cleane contrarie to all their owne positions hereon. For if the office of his Ministerie haue his esse (as before they called it) that is, the essence or beeing thereof onely in that place or congregation, where the Minister hath a charge: then not onely (as I sayd before) being out of his charge or congregation, he is out of his Ministerie, and so a lay man, and if he preach, his preaching is no preaching:
& if he minister the Sacraments, they are no Sacraments, neither the Lords Supper, nor yet Baptisme, nor so to bee counted by their owne rules, any more, than if a woman did minister them. For if those actions of his, be to be otherwise accounted: then is it by reason, that he himselfe is to be otherwise accounted that did them. And if he be to be accounted otherwise; then it is in respect he is a Minister. And if in that respect, then he is to be counted a Minister, though out of his charge, and how true is then this our brethrens paradoxe, that he is not to be counted a Minister where he hath no charge?

Ministers are,
and are to bee counted ministers out of their charges.

All these absurdities and dangerous inconueniences, with their traynes and sequelles doe so followe hereupon; that many may call into question both their receiuing of the Lords Supper, and their childrens and their own bap-tisme too, and so stagger whether they may make full reckoning, that they be Christians yea or no, sauing in the profession of their faith. And yet they may brethrens position.

begin to doubt in that also, since that S. Paule useth this gradation, Rom. 10. verse 14. But how shall they call on him, on whom they haue not beleued? How shall they beleue in him of whom they haue not heard? and how shall they heare without a Preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? And how is the Preacher sent, if he goe out of his charge? And so vpon calling this in doubt, nay, that is more, vpon flatly denying both his sending, and the very being of his Ministerie; how doe we not vndoe agayne all the former part of this gradation? and all because he that preached, (as for example, I imagine it were at Pauls Crosse) preached where he had no charge. If these things be no absurdities nor inconueniences with our Brethren; though they and I agree not herein; yet how doe they agree to their owne selues?

Our brethren
ouerthrow all Synodes.

When a Synode is called, be it either vniuersall, nationall, prouinciall, or particular of any Shire, (as they woulde haue it) there to ordeyne Ministers vnto the particular congregations, or to decide a controuersie in doctrine, or to determine of discipline, or to decree ceremonies for order & comelinesse: as they would haue these things to bee decided and concluded in Synodes: and Synodes (at least prouinciall Synodes) to bee called of them who are they that should bee called thither? Are they not the Pastors, Teachers and Preachers, as (pag. 117.) they sayd before? Who shall be able to know what order, comelinesse, and edification requireth; according to Gods word, but they that be teachers and preachers of the same vnto all others?

Pastors and Ministers in Synodes.

But now, when all these Pastors, Ministers, Teachers, and Preachers go to this Synod, and are there assembled, they are out of their particular congregation, which they say is their charge: and what followeth, but they must forthwith bee counted no Ministers? And being no Ministers, they can neither preach nor teach; they can determine none of these controuersies; no, they are not able to knowe what perteyneth to order and comelinesse, so that for that while, they haue lost both their habilitie and their knowledge. But no maruell of that, when they haue lost their being Ministers, and so lost themselves and all, so long as they bee out of their charges. And now where they come to make Ministers, being no Ministers themselves; how can they make others? and in what a pickle be we now?

Our brethrens
contradictions

But they say (and we must beleue them) that they must haue Synods for the doing of all these things: but the Synode is not the flocke, the Benefice or particular congregation of them, and so not their charge: and what the followeth hereupon, but that a man may bee counted a Minister where he hath no charge? which is here the cleane contrarie to our Brethrens paradox, that a man must not bee counted a Minister where hee hath no charge?

Now consider, since they haue auowed both these sayings; and both these (being cleane contrary) cannot both stande true, one of them must needs be be packing for a manifest falshood: which were best to let goe? I thinke our Bretheren when they haue weighed well the peyle of both, will rather let go this, than the other, and neuer bee ashamed (for all the learning of their discourse) to say, this was but a course ouerslip, and that a minister is, and must still be counted a Minister where he hath no charge nor flocke.

But if now to saue all vpright in both, they will say, he is not out of his charge in the Synod, though it bee not his flocke: shall they flocke vs for? Doe they not by his charge vnderstand his flocke? when they say of the Bishops that they giue an office without a charge; and what is that? For such to make a Pastor and send him to seeke a flock where he can finde it? And did they not expounde this flocke also to be his Benefice, in saying, to ordeyne Pastors and let them prowle where they can for their Benefices? Doe they not here plainly meane by the charge the flocke, and by the flocke the Benefice of the Pastor? And will they also make him Pastor there, where he hath no flocke? And do they not make a distinction also pag. 111. of his double estate saying, we haue declared before that there is a double authoritie of the Pastor, the one ioyned with the Elders of the Church whereof he is Pastor, the other with the Synod or holy assemblie, whereof he is a member.

What our bretheren meane by a ministers charge.

So that in the Synodes he is not present as a pastor, but as a member. No, not only he is not in the Synod as a Pastor, but he is not at all a pastor there, and if no pastor, then no minister. For if minister, then pastor, by our Bre. owne reckoning. For they make pastor and minister all one, and that they sayd before of making a pastor without a charge, here they repete, to be counted a minister where he hath no charge. So that, still all comes to this reckoning, that being not minister in the Synod, because that there he is not pastor: and he is not pastor, because it is not his charge, nor his flocke, nor his benefice: we are still at the pitch that we were at before, that either nothing can bee done in the Synod, and so wee shall haue no Ministers at all, if they must bee made there: or els, ministers be no ministers still, bee they in their charge, or be they out of it.

Our Brethrens position ouerthroweth all

But, because our bretheren should not be pressed too hard, & that it might bee thought, that yet this assertion may hold vp his snout, because that, although it be not properly his charge, nor the charge which inuolde they both meane and expresse: yet because the wordes runne so large, that he is not to bee counted a minister where he hath no charge, and here he hath some charge although not Pastoral: let vs see further, what our Bretheren can get hereby.

The charge of the function, not of the place is of the essence of the ministrie.

Set aside the Synode it selfe; what is he, if he chauce to be in any other place? is he neither pastor nor minister, if he be in some other place where hee hath no charge, as, be it but in the waye vnto the Synode: is hee no minister?

of the Function!

But perhaps they will say, that they say it not of any or of some places; but, in all places to bee counted a minister where hee hath no charge. And both the number of places then make or marre the matter: verily, I see not why, if he ought still to bee counted a minister in some place where he hath no charge; but that he may bee counted so aswell, even in all places where he hath no charge. And therefore it is not so much the charge of the place, as the charge of the function, that is the materiall poynt in deede in a minister. Albeit (I graunt) he is ordeyned to haue a charge also, which he must exercise in some place, if he wil not altogether be idle, though this place or that place be not assigned vnto him.

But they say, it would grieue a man to thinke what inconueniences doth followe, but principally how filthy it stinketh of the old Popish indelible character, from whence it hath his ground, and neither of any reason nor of the word of God.

Our ministerie smelleth not of the Popish
Character.

It grieveth me to thinke, (and I thinke it would grieue any man, that truly loueth our Bretheren, and neither hateth them nor flattereth them) that they so much as thinke not of the absurdities, contradictions, and inconueniences of these their straunge opinions that so stinke in deede in the smell of all men els; that I meruell their selues are not grieved with it, nor yet thinke thereon. As for the office and function of our ministerie, howsoever there may bee cause of griefe, either by the foule sauour of euill report and sleaundersous infamie of it, or too euill a smell and stench in deede, by the default of some that are the ministers: yet is not that to bee imputed to the ministerie; of which function there is no cause to bee agrieved or ashamed, but for vs to reioyce; and for other, specially our Bretheren, if they bee (as they say and I wish them to bee) faithfull ministers, to thinke of vs, as they would haue vs to thinke of them: according to the Apostles rule, 1. Cor. 4. 1. Let men so esteeme (or thinke) of vs, as Ministers of Christ and dispensers of the mysteries of God.

The function and potentiall abilitie remaining till degradation without indelible
Character.

So farre of is our ministerie (whosoever wretched sinners wee are our selues, and unworthie in our earthen, polluted and brytle vessels, to carie the heauenly liquour, and precious treasure of Gods worde and mysteries) so farre is it off from stinking or smelling of the false ministerie, or errors of Antichrist, and from all stench of the olde (or rather the late) Popish indelible character: that it is not (God bee blessed for it) characterized out, with any such Balaams markes and characters, as the Popish Priesthoode was, neither of Dylinges, nor Shauinges, nor any such order or office, nor any such indelible of the same: but that without scraping or disfigureing of the minister, he may bee disgraced, deposed, vnderbred, or cleane depriued of his order or office, (as well as depriued or displaced from his Benefice) for his demerites in false doctrine, or wicked life, if he shall so deserue. And yet, till he bee lawfully disgraced or depriued, from his order or office of the Ministerie; yea, though he were deprived of his Benefice. Neuerthelesse, hee may remayne in the function of set and esse of a Minister still of the worde and Sacramentes; and in potentiall habilitie to the act and exercise, yea, although he were also suspended for a tyme, from all the action and exercise of his Ministerie.

Will our Bretheren neuer allowe suspension, as a gentler correction, than utter depriving or disgrading? when they allowe euen the excommunicated offenders (vpon their repentaunce and amendment) to bee re-ceined agayne into the bosome of the Church? pag. 98. And shall they not bee receined agayne, as clerely forgiven, into their former places and offices? Or doe they so make him for that while, no Minister at all, that he must bee newe made Minister a fresh when he is released from that sentence of excommunication or suspension?

The minister not a newe ordeined after suspension or excommunication.

But why not; if he must bee newe made Minister doe he but once set his foote out of his charge of flocke or Benefice? and is hee Minister agayne, when hee setteth in his foote agayne into his charge? and can hee then bee minister or not minister when hee will? and can hee make himselfe minister a newe, as often as hee list thus to steppe in and out, to and from his charge?
 Or who shall make him minister agayne, so oft as hee thus starteth aside?

The absurditie of our Bretherens position.

Truely it grieneth mee; and I am euen wearie to thinke (and I thinke the reader also to heare, or to thinke) what an infinite number of absurdities, doe still more and more arise, on these their straunge principles. Of which they may well bestow these their owne speeches, that they are indeede grounded neither of any reason, or of the word of God.

But whether our ministerie be grounded on the old stinking popish indelible character, or (besides good reason) euen on the worde of God: let any godly or reasonable man, whose reason is not forestalled with affection, be an indifferent iudger betweene vs, in Gods name.

The grounde
 of our ministeric hath Gods word & good reasons for it.

And yet forsoothe (say they, in mockerie of our ministerie) it is so perfect, that it may abide no reformation.

We haunt of no perfection in our ministerie. It may bee good and godly; and yet vnperfect, as wee our selues and all our actions and offices are. Though our Bretheren boast too much of puritie and perfection; wee rather tend to it, than that wee are as yet able to apprehend it. For (as the Apostle sayth, 1. Cor. 13. vers. 9, & 10.) wee knowe in parte and wee prophetic in parte; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in parte shalbe abolished. Would God, both for our Bretheren and for vs, wee were in the better parte for our ministerie; and more neere to perfection all of vs, both in that and in all things els, than we be.

We vaunt not
 of our ministe-
 ries perfection.

And for our partes, wee are readie to abide all due and true reformation. But as for such reformations as these are, that these our learned Bretheren (which call themselves all the saythfull Ministers) doe

We are readie to abide all true reforma-
 tion.

of vnfit Ministers.

doe desire, or rather, doe not desire, but prescribe vnto vs, for the discipline and reformation of the Church of England: they are so farre off from any nerrues to perfection, that (forsooth, and forsooth) they would rather deforme vs altogether, than any whit reforme vs, or amend vs.

The 4. absurditie and presumption is the vse & practise of ordaining vnfit ministers.

Fourthly (saye they) if you will see how well the authoritie which they claime and practise, is vsed of them, that onely haue the choyce and admissiō of ministers: looke ouer the whole Realme of England, what a multitude of vnfit pastors shall you finde, in euery place? so that Ieroboam neuer made worse priestes of the refuse of the people, to serue his golden Calues, than they haue ordeyned ministers, to feede the flocke of Christ, which hee hath purchased with his owne blood.

Howe wee should looke on this practise

It is good to see how well or ill, the authoritie claymed is practised or vsed; so wee see it with an intentiue, and yet a single eye, discerning euermore betwene the authoritie it selfe, and the practise: and in the practise, betwene the vse and the abuse thereof. Now, if wee shall thus looke ouer the whole Realme of England, which (GOD bee praised) is a large circuite, and conteyneth a very great number of Pastors; it is lesse maruell if there bee many, not in all things so good, as their office and order doth require.

St. paules fault finding with the prophets of Corinth.

Saint Paule findeth fault in the Church of Corinthus, euen with all the prophetes there, (being though not all of them, yet many, the ordinatie ministers and teachers of the worde) for their great disorders. And how much more (especially in this our more corrupt age) is it lesse wonder, if wee should see a multitude of vnfit pastors, in looking ouer a whole Realme, and that such a Realme as Englands is: maior est orbis urbe, sayth Saint Ierome. And yet in the Citie where hee was at Rome, the multitude of the euill Priestes or ministers and their enuie, made him forsake Rome and goe to Berthelem. Yea, for the enuie of the Priestes and ministers long befoze him, Tertullian from growing in malecontentment with the dissolute life of the ministers, fell so farre from them, that in the ende hee became a Montaniste. And the too much disliking of the corrupt liues of the Bishops, the Clergie and the Ministers in the auncient Church, hath made many to austere Ministers, otherwise excellent learned men and streight liuers, become Drismatikes, as many of the precise nouations and uadæes, or Puritanes were.

How some to seuer fathery haue fallen into scismes by offence of the ministers liues.

Not such great multitudes of vnfit ministers as our brethren pretend.

But now, if wee shall looke ouer the whole Realme of England, what a multitude (say our Bretheren) of vnfit Pastors shall you finde in euery place? And in deede, what a multitude? I graunt, more than wee would there were, or than there should bee. For in duetie, there ought none at all to bee vnfit. But if wee shall viewe the number well without sinister affection: I trust wee shall not finde (considering the whole Realme) so great a mulmulti-multitude, as our Bretherens exclamation, (grounded on ill will to the State of all the Ministers, and to their Ministerie it selfe) would make the world beleue, that there is vnfitness in so many, that euery place wee should finde a multitude of them. Whereas contrariwise, though there bee not a multitude of fitt Pastors in euery place, yet there is some, and some good multitude in many places, God bee praised for it, and increase the multitude of them.

But they finde fault, not onely with the multitude of vnfitte Pastors in euery place, but that also they bee so vnfitte, that they spare not to saye so that Ieroboam neuer made worse Priestes of the refuse of the people, to serue his golden Calues, then they haue ordeyned Ministers. &c.

A slanderous compar'ion of our Pastors to Ieroboams Priestes.

Where here they speake not of so odde particular euill persons, either degenerating from their order, or vnworthy to haue bene at all ordeyned, or perchance crept into the number by subornation and counterfeiting to bee ministers, and are not (as in a whole Realme, such naughty persons may bee found:) but speake it generally and of a great multitude in euery place: These bitter speeches seeme rather to arise from the froch of some sharpe choler, if not very melancholie (comprehending in generall the good and the bad) to compare not onely the poore ministers, that to their habilities feede the flocke of Christ which he hath purchased with his owne blood, to the Idolatrous Priestes that Ieroboam made, of the refuse of the people, to serue his golden Calues: but also with like generalitie of all the Bishoppes, without discerning who hath made any vnfit ministers, and who not (that the fault being personall, might light vpon the persons offending): they charge them all alike, that they haue all done, as did that execrable Apostata and Idolatrous tyrant Ieroboam, who (being though a Prince, yet a mere laye man) tooke vpon him to make Priestes and ministers of the rascalles and refuse of the people, whereas in deede, neither hee (had he bene otherwise neuer so good) coulde make any Priestes at all: nor they (had they bene neuer so fitt, learned or godly) could bee made Priestes, being not of the stocke of Aaron, and so in deede were no true Priestes at all.

But what doe I goe about, to repell this so manifest a slander: the indignitie whereof, deserueth chastisement rather than answer: I saue that our Bretheren vse a little poynt of cunning herein, from which they should be rather wunne; because as ill men as was Ieroboam, euery many auncient Hereticks vsed the same comparison. And at this daye, it is the common practise of the Papistes, when they would breede a mistaking of all our doctrine, and our ministerie, to vndermyne it, by finding fault with the ministers vnfitness in their liues and learning. And because they dare not openly condemne all, which is their meaning, they make a shewe to bee offended with the multitude of the vnfittest ministers.

Our Bretheren vse heerein the practise of the old Heretikes, and the papists by theminis- tering to dis- credite their ministerie.

I wille, if wee should thus rigge into the vnfitnesse, and that of ministers which are greete fauourites and bigers of these deuises and reformations, wee could finde (if not a multitude in euery place, which God forbid) yet some numbers, very vnfit to bee called faithfull ministers, that desire the reformation of the Church of England. Which haue made such deformation in the ministerie, and therevpon being partly mistaken of vs, and partly either hauing bene punished, or fearing punishment, haue saine to take vpon them a great countenance of this our Bretherens zeale and practise that they vse, to mutigh against the Bishops, challenging them for pride and tyrannie; and against all the Clergie and state of Ecclesiasticall government now established: and these men get such great credite among many our male-contented Bretheren; that I am afrayde, some of them goe in the multitude and name also of these faithfull ministers, that recommend vnto vs this their learned discourse. Qui simulant Curios & Doctores uolunt.

The vnfitnesse of manie among our bretheren to bee ministers.

But, let such passe as they are worthy: to whome I rather lament, than studie to decipher their unworthinesse. Howbeit, of these our learned (but miszealous) Bretheren, I thinke more reuerently, as becommeth mee, and doe not condemne them all, for the multitude and number of some among them, and craue that they would asoord vs the like equitie, not for the defaultes of some (though a multitude) to condemne all, and withall it selfe all the ministerie too: for so, wee may call the doctrine also too nere in question, and the whole corps and substance of our Church.

The learned disc.
 pag. 128.

This complaynt wee confesse is grieuous, but the indignitie of the matter inforceth it. Wee knowe that vayne excuses shall not bee wanting, of necessitie, &c. But if necessitie compelled them, to take such at the first: what necessitie compellerh them, to suffer them to bee such still? For, if they would needes admit ignorant persons to that charge, yet should they haue inforced them to studie, as well as to other thinges, they haue inforced them vnto, that in tyme they might haue growen to bee meete for their calling. Which if they had done in 10. 12. or 13. yeeres space, a great many might haue prooued excellently well learned and able to serue in the Church with great fruite and profite; and the rest according to proportion of their tyme, might haue come to some mediocrtie in knowledge: whereas now, as ignorant and as vnfit, as they were the first day, so are they still for the most parte, and will so continue to their lines ende, if they may be suffered in yalenesse as they haue bene hetherto.

Bridges.

After our Bretheren haue thus bitterly compared, the multitude of our Pastors in euery place, to Ieroboams Idolatrous Priestes: they now goe about to excuse themselves of this so grieuous a complaynt, and withall, to cut off from vs all excuses.

This

This complaynt (say they) we confesse is greuous, but the indignitie of the matter inforceth it.

It is a greuous complaynt in deede (as they confesse) and an heynous, both agaynst the Bishoppes, and agaynst their poore Bretheren ministers. Whether is there any so greuous indignitie or necessitie, that inforceth them to complayne so greuously, and beyonde not onely the merite of the matter, but the boundes both of charitie and all modestie, and that in such greuous maner of complayning, not by lowly supplication, exhibited in writing to her most excellent Maiestie, or to her most honourable Councell; but to published in print to all the whole Realme, and that without licence to print it, yea agaynst Lawe and order given in such behalfe so to doe; and to scatter it abroade in every parte of the whole Realme, as much as they may; and that with such reprochfull inuectiues, and notorious scandaues: doth any thing, or should any thing, inforce our Bretheren to complayne in this extreame maner?

But now from this insufficient excuse of their so greuous complaynt on the Bishops & our Ministers: they turne to the taking away from vs, the refuge and mitigation of all excuses.

Wee knowe (say they) that vayne excuses shall not bee wanting of necessitie, &c.

That that is amisse, and can bee so euicted; if our Bretheren will needes become so rough, that it maye deserue no modest excuse, nor mitigation with them; wee will gladly confesse it, and studie to reforme it in good order. And so (God bee prayes) as wee may, wee doe. And if wee did not, lawe would compell vs.

But they knowe before hand (as they say) that wee will alleadge necessitie. And they also before hand, will reiect it, as a vayne excuse.

For wee knowe (say they) that vayne excuses shall not be wanting, of necessitie, &c.

And how knowe they (before hand) that wee would alleadge necessitie? Doth their minde (before hand) misgiue that there was at the first some necessitie indeede? and why might it not then be alleadged?

But what meane they here, by adioyning this, &c. Doe they also knowe before hand, that we haue some other excuses, if necessitie would not be admitted? And would they not alleadge them too, but suppress them, or without all regarde, or hearing, or knowing of them, shake them off before hand, as vayne excuses to? But, not to stand bypon et-ceteras: let vs see what they say to necessitie.

And yet they haue cast off that also before hand, as a vayne excuse. And indeede if they meane it, that wee should alleat, 2. that necessitie byaue our Bishop to ordeyne, and vs allow such persons, of whom they sayd before, Ieroboam neuer made worse: then, as he had no necessitie, that did or ought of necessitie. to haue vsuene him to make suche Priestes : so wee could not alleadge any such necessitie, but that it should bee a very vayne excuse, to choose and vsuene such (not vayne onely) but most vile persons. But wee are sarr (God bee prayed) both from excusing such false and wicked Pastors, (or rather, no Pastors at all) or from excusing any that haue made such, as they knewe or suspected, to bee either an euill person in life, or altogether vnfitte in knowledge for the ministerie.

The occasions of the necessi-
tie.

Notwithstanding, if wee shall better consider of the matter, how for the neede and want of learned Preachers, especially at that first tyme, when the Popish pastors were remoued, and the learned Preachers of the Gospell were the most of them destroyed, saue a small remaynder: and fewe of any towardnesse in learning indeuoured themselves vnto the Ministerie, but rather to other professions: and since that tyme also, seeing on the one side, so many hunting and prowling after those the Clergies liuinges, or the fleecing of them, which for their better maintenaunce in learning and hospitalitie they were endowed withall; and how the Clergie were continually enuyed, pinched and pulled at; and on the other side, seeing the innouations and garboyles of our Bretheren themselves in the Clergie, to make odious to the people both the Pastors, and also all the Prelates of the Realme; and the peoples vnthankfulnesse; and their owne vncertepntie; whereby the learned sort were the more discouraged, and their friendes would hardly permit them, for these and other reasons, to enter into this function of the ministerie, so difficult in it selfe, so enuyous, vnthankfull, dangerous and vncertaine to the worlde; except that God euen by the mere motion of his Spirit, raysed by some, and confirmed them against all these no small tentations to flesh and blood: why may not this rowe goe for a lawfull and no vayne excuse, that when learned Preachers could not bee gotten for Pastors, to furnish all the vacant places: they were euen glad and sayne to take some such other, (for supplie of this generall want) as being honest and godly poore men in conuersation, sound in Religion, zealous and readie to further the Gospell to their best, though not able learnedly to preach vnto the people: that very necessitie did inforce it, that is to saye, this neede and want of learned Preachers caused it? Better is halfe a loafe than no bread. Necessitie (they say) is a sore weapon: and will our Bretheren bee so rigorous, not to admit this necessitie, but for a vayne excuse?

But if necessitie compelled them (say they) to take such at the first: what necessitie compelleth them to suffer them to bee such still?

If (as now they graunt) necessitie compelled them: then it is not a vayne, but a lawfull and necessarie excuse.

But if it did (say they) what necessitie compelleth them to suffer them to be such still?

This is not true, that they are suffered to be such still. Orders are appointed, pointed, both by the auntient discipline, and by later degrees, to see that they exercise themselves in the studie & knowledge of Gods word. If the capacities of al be not such, as to attaine vnto the gift of preaching, hauing not bin from their tender yeeres (as was Timothie) trayned by in learning: yet are they not to be depriued of their liuing, or deposed from their Ministry, hauing bin lawfully ordeyned, and by law possessed of their liuing. But if any continue in ignorance of the knowledge conuenient for him, and so terme it wilful, carelesse and obstinate ignorance: there are god lawes prouided to correct him, yea, if his faulte or defaultes so require, to depriue him.

The exercise of the ministry to increase in learning.

If they say, these lawes are not duly practised, but that some are suffered to be such still: Although (I hope) there be not many such, yet if there were: that is the officers faulte, blame not the office. And yet, be officers neuer so diligent, some negligence may escape them, and wee must not blame all for some.

But they still reiecte all these as vayne excuses. For (say they) if they would needes admitte ignorant persons to that charge: yet should they haue enforced them to studie, as well as to other thinges that they haue enforced them vnto.

The Bishops slandered, that they would needes admit ignorant persons.

See how charitably our brethren turne the matter, not as though the necessitie were for neede of more skilfull men: but that the Bishops would needes admitte ignorant persons. Is this our brethrens gentlest construction of this necessitie?

But they saye, they should haue enforced them to studie.

That hau bin vaine indeede, if the necessitie lay in the Bishops wilfulnes, that they would needes admit them that were ignorant persons: wherefore then should they enforce them not to be ignorant? But the Bishops by all lawfull meanes, doe labour that they shoulde not be ignoraunt. And therefore this is neither true nor likelie, that the Bishops would needes admit ignorant persons.

Enforcing the ministers to studie and learning.

I graunt they enforce them not with such enforcement as our brethren would haue them doe; that is, to turne them out of their dozes, to goe studie where they maye begge their breat: nor as Harrison that full charitably, would haue all the poore vnlearned Ministers to be hanged vp and that in the churches and publike assemblies: but otherwise (according to their capacities and habilities) there are sufficient ordinances for that they should be enforced to studie more orderly.

Harrison against Mr. Cartwright pag. 23.

But they saye they shoulde bee aswell enforced to studie, as to other thinges that they haue enforced them vnto.

Enforcement vnto other thinges.

What those other thinges are that they haue bin enforced vnto, because they suppress them, I can giue no certayne aunswere, but this ingenerall, That I knowe of no vnlawfull thinges that they haue bene enforced vnto. For, speaking hereof the ignoraunt sorte (the moste of who haue, God wot, but small lpyng) they are but very poore men, & therefore are not enforced wth any great charge, except it be to buy some few booke, & to assemble theſelues the oftner vnto \bar{p} exerciſes of learning, which I take not to be \bar{p} way to ſuffer the to liue in ignorance, but rather to be a good & tractable meanes, & if they wil ſo cal it, a inforcemēt alſo vnto knowledge.

The growing of many in the increase of learning.

That in time (ſaye they) they might haue growne meet for their calling.

And we doubt not but that many haue ſo growne, and yet many of them, that haue and doe growe daily more and more in knowlege, haue not the gift of utterance to be a Preacher. And many of them, as they grow more meete in knowledge, yet growing withall in yeres, age makes them ſcoupe, & become vnable to be preachers. Yea it oftentimes diſableth many that haue bin able, and that beſore were good preachers. Beſides many infirmities, & \bar{p} very neceſſities of pouerty it ſelfe, (which the poets called pondus arua grauius) preſſeth manye downe, that they can not prouide ſuch furniture of booke, as were requiſite in theſe controuerſies, for a preacher not to want.

But (ſaye they) if they had done this, in 10. 12. or. 13. yeres ſpace, a great many might haue proued excellently well learned, & able to ſerue in the Church with great fruit and profite.

All this hath bin done, & not done in bucker mucker, but notoriouſly knowne & that longer ſpace ſtil continuing than 10. 12. or. 13. yeres: Yea more than \bar{p} ſpace doubled, euen the yeres of al her Maiesties raigne, & much good (no doubt) hath bin done by this exerciſe of \bar{p} clergy. Mediocrity in knowledge.

This is better said, & of this sort are (I hope) if not all, yet the most part.

Wheras now (say they) as ignorant & as vnfit as they were the first day, so are they still for the most part, & will so continue to their liues end, if they may be suffred in Idleness as they haue bin hitherto.

If any such Idle Doones be, & so be proued: they may by law be more sharply reured, or removed, without removing of the law for the. That any be suffred in idleness, & so haue bin hitherto: let the sufferers answer it, & suffer the shame or smart therof, when the accusers haue proued it, but let our brethren here take heede of flanders.

The punishments or removing of the idle & hopelesse.

Then it is a torment to think what ambitious suing, what enuious laboring, what vnseemely flattering, what prodigall bribing, is vsed to attain to great dignities in the church, too far vnmeet for the modesty & gravity, that should be in christia preachers. & as for the inferior benefices, from the fattest Parsonage to the porest Vicarige almost, if it be worth 40. pound by the yere, what Simonical bargains of Leases, annuities, reservations, exhibitions: yea notwithstanding the Act of Parliament Anno. 13. by Antidates & other subtil conueiances, what Christian harte can thinke of them, without detestation of such horrible abuses.

The learned disc. pag. 129.

The crimes here heaped vp together, are all personall, & neither the faults of the law it selfe, nor approued by any law established in the church of Englad. Now soeuer any party is acquit, or guilty, the authority of the law remaines intire, & where it findeth such horrible abuses, clearly proued, it severely punisheth the, if it be duly executed. & therefore thus to aggrauate these crimes, & to reason from them, to take away the B. & pastors lawful authority: containeth a number of fallacies ab accedente, ab ignoracione elenchi, a non causa vt causa, & a secundum quid ad simpliciter, & it may as easily be retorted on our Bre. that whē they had done al that euer they could; except not onely they would cleane take away all the great dignities, (which is their drift, and which some be glad to harken after) but take away withall the inferiour benefices from the fattest Parsonage, to the porest Vicarige also; yet would there bee corruptions and abuses still in diuers persons, though their might be the lesse ambitious suings, when the livinges were so horribly spoiled, which indeede were a worse spoyle, than any is made, and more detestable. And yet would there be ambition still, & far peradventure worse in another more perilous sort, than any now there is. Diogenes when he sayd that he trampled downe Platonis fastum, the pompe of Plato: it was well answered, sed maiore fastu, but with a greater pompe then Plato had.

Olde sir Iohn lackelatine, that had not seene some of his Benefices, a dosen yeare before, was carryed aboute on his mare, and sometimes on a carte: firste to the Bishop whome he chose, if he might for his purpose, such a one as had beene a priest of his owne order, and cared leaste what Ministers serue in his diocese, and then from shire to shire, one distant an hundredth myle from another, mumbling vp his Articles in his morrow masse voyce in euery Church where he had liuing, and returned as verie a beaste as he came.

Wee account the Popish Priesthood as great blasphemy, as our brethren doe.

But, how long say they was it allowed for a lawfull ministrye? Neuer allowed at all amongst vs, saye we. For euen when the masse was abolished, their blasphemous sacrificing ministrye, was abolished, for an vnlawfull ministrye. And yet as vnlawfull as that blasphemous ministrye was, in respect of most horrible blasphemies that it was corrupted with all, especially their vnblondye sacrifice: yet can we not saye, that it was in all respects meere no ministrye at all, nor had anye lawfull actions in that vnlawfull ministrye. The Pharises, though otherwise sectaries, and mainteyning blasphemous errors, and were the deadly enemies of Christe and his Gospell, yet did not Christe utterly condemne their ministry, but that he sayd, they sat in Moses chayre, and had the key of knowledge. And so, now and then some of the popish priestes preached the truth in some things.

For if our brethren will make them but meere laye men, then are neither they nor wee any ministers at all, but mere laye men also. For who ordeyned vs ministers, but such ministers as were either their selues of their Ministrye, or at leaste were made ministers of those ministers? except they will saye, the people can make ministers: and that which is more, we must eyther graunt, that he which is no minister but a meere lay man, may baptise, (which our brethren utterly haue denied:) or els, that al those which were bozne in the time of that ministry, were not at all baptized, and so, not only a great many both of vs and of our brethren, are not yet baptized; but that also baptisine utterly ceased in the churches. Yea, that so, the Church and all ceased, when there was no other ministrye.

And therfore we must not utterly condemne the whole ministrye but distinguish betwene it & y good therin on y one side, & the blasphemies & al the bad therin on y other side, which did corrupt it. This corruptio is to be take first it, and then the Ministerie it selfe, which is, the office of teaching or preaching of the word of God, the Ministration of the Sacraments of Christ, the making of publike prayers, and the gouerning or executing of those thinges that pertaine to the publike gouernment and discipline of the Church; is good and lawfull.

Neither were any of these so excellent Ministers, Luther, Suinglius, & Colompadius, Caluine, Bucer, Peter Martyr, & many others, made Ministers a newe: but disclaimed onely and renounced all the errors, corruptions, and blasphemies in the Ministerie which befoze they had receaued, as wee haue heard Caluines prescription, Epist. 373. and so continued still in the office or ministry thus repurged.

And therefore, since the masse was taken away, and all the other corruptions of the Ministerie, that were vsed in the popish priesthood; & an other Ministration appointed as is sette downe in our booke of publike prayer, by the godly lawes of the realme and Church of England established, which was done so soone as conueniently it could be done, forthwith after her Maiesties moste happy entrance into this kingdome: this is not truly sayd, that the popish priesthood being the greatest blasphemie that euer was, was allowed for a lawfull Ministerie, vntill by the godly meaning of the sayd parliament (Anno. 13.) some brande-marke of shame was sette vpon it.

As though the sacrificing Priesthoode had continued with allowance therof, for thirteene yere together of the Queenes Maiesties raigne, which was as long a time, as befoze they mencioned, for the inforcing of the ministers to studie. Yea, by this rule, it continueth still, though disallowed: or rather (as they say) but noted onely with a brand-marke of shame set vpon it. So that this is not the taking of it awaye, but the continuing of it with more shame to the parliament and to all the states of the Realme, that haue marked it with a brand-marke of shame, and yet shame not to continue it, though we disallow it.

The Parliaments brande marke of shame.

And this withall is but a shamefull and vnreuerent terme that here they vse, in calling epyther the statute, or the booke of articles agreed vpon by all the clergie of the Church of England, and appoyned in the high court of parliament by al the states of the realme, and by the statute commaunded to be read, a brand-marke of shame.

But our brethren to mitigate the matter, say the parliament had a godly meaning in making that statute, for Priestes (that had bin made in the tyme of Popery) to profess their consent to the true doctrine, agreed vpon in the booke of articles, by their publike reading of the same booke in their benefices.

The godly meaning of the parliament.

Yea verily, the parliament had therein a very godly meaning, and it was also as godly an act as meaning of the parliament, anno 13.

Eliz.

But (saye they) how pitifullye that authority was abused, which by the same statute was committed to the Bishops, in allowing of Priestes that came to doe their pennance, by negligence of the Bishops and bribery of their officers, the country cryeth out of it, and the state of the Church is little amended by it.

The committing to the Bishops the authoritie for the statutes execution.

There is no such crying out in the country, as are these outcries of our brethren. If it be but little amended: yet little is somewhat. But if it bee not greate: that is not to be imputed to the good lawe, but to the euill and indirect accidents. For it was not pitifull, that that authority was committed to the Bishops in allowing of Priestes, that came (not as our brethren here say) to doe their pennance, or to haue a brand-marke of shame set vpon them: but the statute it selfe more reuerently and rightly, setteth downe the cause and order of their act, saying.

The wordes of the Statute anno Eliz. 13. cap. 12.

That the Churches of the Queenes Maiesties dominions, maye bee serued with Pastors of sound religion, be it enacted by the authority of this present Parliament, that euerye person vnder the degree of a Byshop, which doth or shall pretende, to be a priest or Minister of gods holy worde and Sacramentes, by reason of anye other fourme of institution, consecration or ordeyning, than the forme set forth by Parliament in the tyme of the late King of most worthye memorye King Edward the sixte, or now vsed in the raigne of our moste gracious Soueraigne Ladye, before the feaste of the Natiuitie nexte following, shall in the presence of the Bishop, or gardian of the spiritualties of some one diocesse, where he hath or shall haue ecclesiasticall liuing, declare his assent, and subscribe to all the articles of religion, which onely concerne the confession of the true Christian Faith, and the doctrine of the Sacraments, comprised in a booke imprinted, intituled: Articles wherupō it was agreed by the Archbish. & Bish. of both prouinces, & the whole Clergy in the Conuocation holden at London, in the yeare of our lord God, 1562. According to the computation of the Church of england, for the auoyding of the diuersities of opinions, and for the establishing of consent touching true Religion, put forth by the Queenes Authoritie. And shall bring from suche Bishop or gardian of Spiritualties, in wryting vnder his Scale authentike, and testimoniall of such assent & subscription, & openly on some Sondag, in the time of publike seruice afore noone, in euery church (wher by reason of any Ecc. liuing he ought to attēd) reade both the said Testimoniall & the said articles, vpon paine, that euery such persō, which shal not before the said feast, do as is aboue appointed, shalbe ipso facto depriued, & al his Eccl. promotions shalbe voyd, as if he then were naturally dead.

These are the very wordes of the statute. Wherein, what could they better haue provided, than (whatsoeuer they should ordeyne, for the bringing of those persons to the more sure confession and consent of sound Religion,

first

firste, to come before the Bishoppe or the Gardian of the spirituall iurisdiction in the Bishops vacancie, in some one Diocesse where hee had any ecclesiasticall promotion, or living, and there before him, declare his consent and also subscribe to all the articles of religion, which onely concerne the confession of the true Christian Faith? &c. Before whom should he haue done this, if he should doe it authentically, than before the Bishop or the bishops gardian, being the publike officers, that haue competent authority ouer him in those matters: which withall, confuteth our brethrens equall authority of all Pastors.

Before whome the things ordained in the statute should best be done.

If the bishops were negligent, or the officers take bribes: this was the bishops & the officers fault, not any default in the lawes. Wise men should not doe like Willia Summer, strike one for another. But if the bishops negligence and the bribery of the officers be so great, that the countrey cryeth out of it, and the state of the Church is little amended: it is then so much the easier to be knowne, who are the offenders that so pitifully abused this godly meaning of the statute, & that authority committed to them and not they to be thus disorderly cried out vpon, and that in this vncharitable maner, by inuective libelles, vnder the tytle of learned discourses, to be thus discoursed vpon, & with taunts & slanders defamed to all the worlde, so much as lyes in them. If the matter be little amended, this is not to amend it more, but to make it worse, for this is naught worth, but to nourish the malice, suspition, & slander, & yet the fault not knowne, much lesse amended.

The Bishops negligence & the officers bribes.

The disorderly proceeding of our bretheren.

Let the negligence & briberies (with true desire of reformation, as the title of this learned discourse pretendeth) be iudicially in forme of law complained vpon, the parties being named, (if aliuie) called, accused, heard, considered, & conuicted thereof, before their lawfull magistrate: & then we & all the country, would commend therein our brethrens iust & more charitable dealing, then might they better thinke of our bretheren to bee in true meaning suche faithful Ministers as indoe desired the reformation of the Church of Englands discipline. At leastwise, whatsoeuer the country would thinke or speake, both the party and the matter that were proued faulty, of little might be much, and much sooner amended.

Our bretherens orderlie proceeding.

But on this fashio to deface B. & their officers, & spread about such slanders & suspicions on them: all sober and godly affected may mislike it, and all the country may cry out thereon, that it is not the part of faithful ministers & brethren, that it proceedeth neither of true zeale, wisdom, faithfulness, Justice, or charity: nor tendeth little or much, to anye amendment of the right reformation of true Churches state, or of the persons, or of the matter.

But nowe, if wee shall consider the matter better (I speake as they doe, in generall tyll some instance bee orderlye produced to the contrary) that they should heerein so heighnously accuse the bishops of negligence, though the lesser faulte, and the officers bryberye for this matter:

The unlikenes of our bretherens accusations.

what.

lacke latine. whatsoeuer the negligence of the one, or the bribery of the other might doe hurte in other matters: there is no likelihood in the worlde, either of the one or of the other in this matter, neither could the Bishop with his negligence, or any fauour or the officers with their bribes taking, hinder or proceeding, or relieue the person, or abuse the authoritie, or defeat the penaltie of the statute.

If it is so prouidently provided for, by the authoritie of the same highe court of parliament, that the party must not onely bring from the Bishop, or gardian of the spiritualities, in writing vnder his seale antecike, a testimoniall of such assent and subscription: but also openly on some sonday, in the time of publike seruice afore noone in euery Church where by reason of any liuing he ought to attend) the partie shall reade both the sayde testimoniall and the sayde Articles: and all this to be done, vppon paine of loosing all his Eccl. promotions ipso facto. So that here, no negligence or any corruption of the Bishop, nor briberie of the officers coulde any whit helpe the partie, but that hee must needes do the thinges, that are thus prescribed, to be so openly in the face of all the Church performed.

Wherein the Bishop and his officers ar, or are not to bee blamed.

Which things now if the minister did not (as he ought to do) vnseynfully, and with all his hart, but hypocritically: that is not the Bishops nor the officers fault; his owne sin be vpon his owne head. But if his sin be founde out, and be not further punished, so farre as the Bishop by his superiour authority may doe: then hardly blame the Bishop and his officers, if the faulte thereof be in them.

Sir Iohn lacke latines traue-ling to read the articles.

As for poore olde sir Iohn lacke latines lacke of latine, that fault is not to be laide to any of our Bishops, that made him not priest, howbeit many of our most zealous brethren, (which take vpon them not onely to bee faithfull ministers, but to bee preachers also) neede not much to insulte vpon old sir Iohn for lacke of latine.

But, what an olde mumpsimus haue they heere raked out, to make their wondermente and spectacle of example vppon, to leuell all those priestes by, for whome the statute in the wordes aboue cited, was enacted. Here is drawne out (as it were an owle out of an Iuie Bush, for all the birds to howl at) an olde sir Iohn lacke latine, though hee had his orders from rome a porta latina, hauing as it were a tot quot of benefices on his back in a number of diuers shires, one benefice distant a 100. miles from another miserably carried about in a cart or on his mare bestia super bestiam, to goe mumble vp his articles in his morrow masse voice, in euery church where hee had liuing, and returne as verie a beast as hee came. What meane our brethren to bring forth such a beast as they haue here described or did they know of any such in all England? and if they did, & the crie of all the countrey rang vpon him, and that he was by negligence of the bishop and briberie of the officers borne out and unpunished: then may hee be the easilier easier be knowne, and the other parties also (if liuing) to be punished all in time. And not for this one odde palinodie; all the Bishops & their officers to be thus burdened with such crimes and outcries, for abusing that authority of the statute committed vnto them.

But if that, knowing no such old croust, yet in the person and discription of such an hypocrite, they would insult on all those Ministers, that had before bin popish priestes, especially vpon the poore, old, and simpler sorte of them: they offer a great many honest men, that are neyther beastes nor Papistes, too great and too contumelious an iniury, that are nowe God bethanked Good & sound conuerted protestants.

But let vs take this old sir Iohn, as they haue here set him out. If nowe he had so many benefices that he saw not some of them in a dosen yeare before: there is expresse statute to haue abridged his number, and lawes to limite his circuite too.

But if he held them by any lawe or priuiledge, and saw them not before in a dosen yeres, nor were by necessary impediment deteyned from them, & prouided not the better in his absence for their instruction, and the diuine seruice, with the administration of the sacraments, & the preaching of the worde of God, to bee orderly set forth vnto them, by some other to supply that, which by his infirmity, absence and ignorance he could not do him selfe: then indeede the Bishop and his officers may pertake the blame with him, contrarywise, if he did all these thinges: what could the Bishop do against him?

But if now vpon this statute for feare he should loose his benefices, this old sir Iohn lacke Latine, were carried about on his mare, and sometimes on a cart, so it were to doe his duty, eyther then, or before, or after, if he were so carryed about, eyther for pouerty, or infirmity: our brethren should not haue objected that vnto him. Every one that cannot haue a horse to ride on, pouerty may make him glad that he hath a mare, or else he might perhaps trot on bayard a tentoes, and he that could neyther ride nor goe, by reason of great age, or other weakenes, if hee could neyther haue horseletter, couche, nor waggon, he must haue bin carryed in a carte, or else carry at home & loose his benefice, for any remedy he had, that I knowe of, but howsoeuer his case stode, pouerty and infirmity are rather (me thinkes) to be pitied than vpbraid, yea though the man otherwise deserved no pitie.

But say they he was carryed, first to the Bishop whom he chose if hee might, for his purpose, such one as had bin a priest of his owne order, & cared least what ministers serue in his diocese.

From the disdayning of poore sir Iohn, our brethren mount by againe to another slander of the Bishop, burdening him also not onely with the popish priesthood, and so to be one for the popish priestes purpose, as a fauor-er of popery; but also to be carelesse what ministers serue in his diocese. But till they name and proue any to haue then bene, or yet to be suche euill

M mmm.

Bishops

Sclaunder of
the Bishops.

Bishops: this againe may goe for so a foule slander, that it deserueth for answer, a due rewarde of so great an obloquie.

But to come downe againe, from the Bishops to olde sir Iohn lacke Latine, that was carryed about on his mare or in a carte: if hee was so poore to be carryed thus basely aboute: howe is it sayd, that hee had not seene some of his benefices in a dozen yeare before, and that hee was carryed from shire to shire, one benefice beinge distante from another 100. mile, mumbling vp his articles in his morrowmasse voyce, in euery Church where he had liuing?

No likelyhood of this deuise
of Sir Iohn
lacke latine.

It might haue beene, that this olde popish priest sir Iohn lacke latine, might haue serued some smale cure, or perhaps in some obde corner haue got a benefice: but if hee had so many, it is not likely that he was but a sir Iohn lacke latine, if not rather, (had he had withall grace and truth,) that he had latine inough, and siluer ynough also, (if not too much) so that hee needed not, to be carryed about on his mare, or in a carte for the matter. There is no probability in this tale.

Sir Iohns not satisfying the acte.

But what liuinges soeuer he had, or hauing liuinges, howe beastly soeuer he spared his money, and rode thether on his widge beaste: when hee came there, if he mumbled vp his articles in his morrowe masse voice; meaning heereby, that he did it also in such a beastly sorte, that the people did not vnderstand him; or that he did it not in the best reuerent & hartie maner he could, but that he shewed himself to doe it against y^e hart, and for fashion sake only to saue his liuing, and so returned (if he came such a beaste thither) as very a beaste as he came: this was no sufficient satisfaction, to the intendement and godly meaning of the lawe. And therefore if anye godly disposed persons, were iustly offended at his mockery, and manifest eluding of the godly meaning of this acte, & cryed out vpon him for a counterfeite, or but orderly repleyned on his misdemeanour; they might most easily haue had him punished, & the matter amended, euen with the losse of all his liuinges, for so apparant mocking of the statute.

Whether our
bretheren the selues satisfie
the godlie
meaning of the statute.

But now, howsoeuer this old sir Iohn lacke latine shitten, since our brethren here cite this acte of parliament anno. 13. And withall doe so greatly commend the godly meaning of the sayd parliament, and picie that the authority of the same statute was abused, and would haue the priestes made by the popish Priesthood (and with good reason) to haue bin senerely looked vnto, in the full accomplishment of that, which the said statute of so godly meaning did enact: such I hope our Bre. also meane as they speake; may it please them, to consider with me, or with their pillow, a little better of this godly meaning of the acte, & of the wordes therof, & then tell me, whether that some, if not all of their owne selues, might not haue bin shrewdly touched, & yet may be, by their manifest breach thereof. And for, to begin with the entendment & godly meaning of the acte, to repeate the wordes againe & marke them better.

ter. The words are these.

That the churches of the Queenes Maiesties dominions may be serued with Pastors of sound religion, be it enacted by the authority of this present parliament, that euery person vnder the degree of a B. which doth or shall pretend to be a Priest or minister of gods holy word & sacraments by reason of any other forme of institution, consecration or ordering, than the forme set forth by parliament in the time of the late king of most worthy mermory king Edward the 6. or now vsed in the raigne of our most gracious soueraigne Lady, &c.

The godlie
meaning of the statute shew against our Bretherens
discourse.

Doe these words and the godly meaning of them, reache onely to the popish Priesthood? do they not plainly reache also to any fourme of institution, consecration or ordering of any other neuer so much reformed churches beyond the seas, or in this realme, other than the forme set forth by Parliament, in the raignes of king Edward, & of our now most grations soueraigne Lady Queene Elizabeth? so that the forme of institution, consecration or ordering ministers, Priesties or Elders which our brethren doe pretend and vrge in this learned discourse, & the forme that they haue prescribed in their new boke of comon prayer, these words & godly meaning of the statute comprehend the. And what now if any protestation were ordeined in any reformed churches beyond the seas, according to their formes of institution, consecrating or ordering, or according to that our brethren desire, & yet read not the articles, nor were deprived: will our brethren crie out, how pitifully that authority was abused, which was by the same statute committed to the B. by the negligence of the Bishops, and bribery of their officers?

And although, that br aunche touche not so much, these our Bre. now, because it saith: which doth or shal preted, to be a Priest or Minister of gods holy word & sacraments, by reason of any other institution, consecration or ordering: sith our Bre. (as I take it) do not pretend to haue bin ordered or made ministers by anye other forme, but onely; that they should, or would bee made ministers by another, that is, by the forme following the Geneua order set out in their communion booke (so that withall, it haue the additions of this learned discourse, and be in a Synod) & so escape the danger of the statutes words: yet therein they both do much discredite themselves, in holding by that obeyning which they desire to leaue: writing against it, & yet retaining it & calling themselves faithful ministers, & are made ministers by the very same forme, of a B. ordeining them, which they condemne to be an vnfaithfull forme of ordeining ministers, or rather no ordeining at all, except Antichristian, being done by the authority of one man: besides that, they manifestly oppose themselves to the godly meaning of the statute.

How our Bre-

neuerthelesse they confesse to be godly, to the wordes of the statute, that they pretend not to haue bin ordeined by another forme tha is allowed in the statute: notwithstanding, in that part of the statute that followeth, how can our brethren excuse them selues, that they be not in danger of this Act, if they haue benefices? or haue they not done and doe cleane contrary to this their learned discourse, in agreeing to the statute that they might holde their li- uings, if they haue not lost them againe, by setting out this their learned dis- course, and by their maintenance of these opinions, and assertions, that are so direct against the statutes, marke the wordes of the act, and (as they call it) the godly meaning of the parliament.

And that if any person ecclesiasticall, or which shall haue ecclesiasti- call liuing, shall aduisedly mainteyne or affirme any doctrine directly co- trary or repugnant to any of the sayd articles; and being conuented be- fore the Bishop of the diocesse, or the ordinarie, or before the Queenes highnesse commissioners in causes ecclesiasticall, shall persist therein or not reuoke his error, or after such reuocatio estsoones affirme such vn- true doctrine, such mainteyning, or affirming and persisting, or suche estsoones affirming, shalbe iust cause to depriue such persons of his ec- clesiasticall promotions. And it shalbe lawfull for the Bishop of the diocesse or the ordinary, or the said commissioners, to depriue such per- son so persisting, or lawfully conuicted of such estsoones affirming, & vpo such sentence of deprivation pronounced, he shalbe indeed deprived.

Now if we shall withal consider how our brethren haue aduisedlie, that is to say, of deliberate and aduised purpose, directly in this their learned dis- course, pag. 135 challenged the doctrine of the sayd booke of Articles, say- ing. As was practised in the conuocation of the foresaid parliament, vn- to diuers Godly and learned preachers, that offred to speake against diuers grosse and palpable errors that had escaped the Bishops de- crees, as, for the distinction of Canonick and apocriphall bookes, for explication of the clause in the article of predestination, where it is sayde, the elect may fall from grace, and such like matters: how truly this is spoken of that conuocation, and howe true also they haue in these wordes, burdened both the Bishops and the articles, of no lesse than grosse and palpable errors, and that in principall pointes of doctrine: I restrue that, till I come to the proper place, where it is to be answered. But howe haue not our brethren aduisedly affirmed and (if they will stand to it) main- tained doctrine directlie contrarye and repugnant, to some of the the Articles of the sayde booke?

For to affirme and maintaine that, that which is good doctrine, is a grosse and palpable error: what is that, but to affirme and maintaine the doctrine that is directly contrary and repugnant thereto: and what remaineth. But that if the Bishops will not pitifully abuse that authority of

of the statute that was committed vnto them; they of the ordinary, or the Queenes Maiesties highe commissioners in Ecclesiasticall causes, ought to conuene these our learned discoursing Bretheren before them (if they had anye names, that they might knowe them) and if any of them shall persist and not reuoke his error &c: that this shalbe iust cause to depriue such person of his Ecclesiasticall promotions.

And besides these Articles aforesaid they challenge for grosse & palpable errors: how do they not also impugne the 34. 35. & 36. articles of the said booke. Vnder diuers of the haue bene also conuicted before the Bishop, the Ordinary, or the Commissioners aforesaid; and haue persisted in the contrarye to those articles, and these our learned discoursing bretheren haue gone further, to put their contradictions forth to the worlde in print. The wordes of the 34. article, which they impugne, are these. Who soeuer throughe his priuate Iudgement willingly and purposely, doth openly breake the traditions of the Church, which bee not repugnant to the worde of God, and be ordeyned and approued by common authority, oughte to be rebuked openly (that other maye feare to doe the lyke) as hee that offendeth against the common order of the Church, and hurteth the authoritye of the Magistrate, and woundeth the consciences of the weake bretheren. If our Brethren would agree vnto this article, there should not be such troubles as there are, amongst vs.

The 35. article is of Homilies. The second booke of homilies, the severall titles wherof, we haue ioyned vnder this article, doth conteyne a godly and wholesom doctrine, & necessary for these times, as doth the former booke of homilies, which were set forth in the time of K. Edward the 6. & therefore we iudge them to be read in churches by the ministers diligently & distinctly, that they may be vnderstood of the people.

Our bretheren say, pa. 49. that a prescript forme of reading of praiers, of homilies, & such like, when they are alleaged to maintain the ignorance of vnskilful pastors (as though they were the vse they are alleaged for) are but the instrumēt of foolish & Idoll shepherds, which haue a certaine pretēce of Pastorall office, but in effect, are altogether vnmeet for the same.

The 36. article is for Consecratio of B. & ministers: The booke of consecration of Archbishops, B. & ordering of priestes & deacons lately set forth in the time of Edward the 6. & confirmed at the same time by authority of parliament, doth conteyn al things necessary to such consecration & ordering: neither hath it any thing that of it selfe is superstitious or vngodly, & therefore, whosoever are consecrated or ordered according to the rites of that booke, since the secōd yere of the aforesaid king Edward, vnto this time, or hereafter shalbe consecrated or ordered according to the same rites, we decree all such to bee rightly, orderly and lawfully consecrated and ordered.

And is not now the greatest part of this our brethrens learned discourse, for the consecrating, ordering or ordeyning of Archbishops B. Priestes, or Elders and deacons, directly contrary and repugnant to the doctrine and decree of this article? and what followeth hereupon? but that eyther our brethren must renounce this their learned discourse; or must denie the authority and godly meaning of this act Anno. 13. which here they haue approued: or else, if the B. and other officers shall not pitifully abuse that authority which by the same statute is committed to them, they must by the godly meaning and wordes of this act, pronounce them to bee iustly deprived; yea themselves haue pronounced sentence against themselves.

But this and all other inconueniences before rehearsed, shoulde vtterly bee auoided, if wee might once establish the lawfull election of Pastors, according to the woordes of God. It were also greatlye to bee wished, that it might bee brought to passe, that in euery congregation, there shoulde bee two Pastors at the leaste, both bicause the charge is greate, and also for supplying the lacke of the one, if the other were sicke, or absent vpon necessitye, or anye such lyke case. Which thing were both agreeable to the example of the Apostolike church, and also verie profitable for the congregation. Wee doe not meane this in euery parish, as they be now distinguished, but in euery congregation as they may be desposed, both for best edifieng, and also for sufficient living for the Pastors.

Bridges.

The inconueniences that they haue objected, and the inconueniences that they haue incurred: the election also of Pastors that they would establish for lawfull, againste the lawe established: and howe they haue not yet proued it by any example or rule, to be according to the word of God: all this I remitte to the indifferent readers waighing of that we haue both of vs before spoken.

As for this other point, concerning the number, which they say, were also greatlye to be wished, that it might be brought to passe, that in euery congregation there shoulde be two Pastors at the leaste: it is neither necessary, nor in many places can well be brought to passe. Not, but that we graunt also, it may be well and very fitte in some places, where the charge is great, and if it could be also in all places we mislike it not, & in many places it is so already, where the Pastor hath other inferiour Ministers or Curates, which in the propriety of that living are inferiour to him, as the Vicars vnder the Parsons, or as the Curates hauing stipendes vnder eyther of them, and yet in the order of the ministerie, all are equall. But there is no necessary precept nor example of the Apostles, that there were or should be mo Pastors than one ordeyned in euery congregation.

And although it might bee in some respectes very profitable (I graunt) for the congregation; yet in other respectes not very profitable not anie

for

for that these two hauing equall authoritie, will the harder agree: but also euen for the charges and profite of maintenaunce, to haue at least too learned Preachers, which they also make to be Bishops, besides the Doctor, one also at least in euery congregation, as they haue sayde, pag. 15. that certayne men shoulde bee appointed in euery congregation, whom he hath indewed with giftes meete for the same purpose which shoulde employe them selues eyther wholye or principallye to the studie of the holye Scriptures, thereby to learne to auouch the principles of true Religion, and to repress and beate downe all false and straunge opinions, &c. Whose office is onelye to teache true doctrine and to confute all heresies, &c. Without applying their teaching, &c. Pag. 17. so that, they must not be anye of these two Episcopall Pastours. And besides these, there must be a Seignior of Ecclesiasticall gouernours, that are Elders not teaching, and of what number these must be, they sette downe no stinte, nor of the Deacons, And all these must be maintayned, especialllye and altogether the doctors and Pastors, of Ecclesiasticall lyuing in that parish, or if that will not stretch, then eyther the Parrishe must be at the charges of their maintenance, or the Bishops, and Cathedrall Churches, and Colleges landes, wherefoeuer they lye in other congregations, must be thought thereof for their maintenance.

One Doctor also at least in euery congregation.

The Number of the gouernors and Deacons not determined.

At whose charges all these must be maintayned.

But they except, that they meane not this in euery Parrishe, as they be nowe distinguished, but in euery congregation as they maye bee disposed, both for the best edification, and also for sufficient lyuing for the Pastors.

The factions arising by 2. equall pastors.

What edification, or rather emulation and faction, this maye breede, to reduce euery congregation, to I holde of this Pastor, and I of that Pastor; when both the Preachers in a Parrishe must be in all authoritie equall: Ierome testifieth (as wee haue heard) that the Churches in the very apostles tymes, did finde the inconuenience. But our tymes haue later and freshe examples, euen among our owne bretheren in their congregations. As for sufficient liuing of the Pastours, which here they remember, when they haue remembered their Doctors also, and all their other Ecclesiasticall Officers: it maye hap to proue as small a sufficiencie, as he that sayd of the two kindes of enough; there was much enough, and little enough. But which enough shoulde be a sufficient lyuing, that is not yet determined. No, wee cannot yet see that, till the Parrishes be newe disposed.

A new disposing of all the parishes in England.

What? and must all the Parrishes and congregations through out all Englande not bee distinguished as they be nowe, but be altered and newe disposed, for these new deuises, and for these newe Episcopall Pastors maintenances?

sing of parishes.

They may be, say they.

They may be: what a saying is this: are they disposed to vally? for if all the other things and officers must be thus disposed: then must all the parishes be so disposed too. for else, if the parishes new disposing hath no must be but may be; then let them say of the other thinges and officers also, that they may be, but not, they must be, yea, all thinges considered, they must not be, for if we stode but euen vpon this, that enery parish shoulde not remaine as it is now distinguished, but be newly disposed: what a daunger might this breede, not onely in titles of inheritancies and other pointes in lawe (for this woulde make worke for lawyers indeede, more then did all the altering of Abbey landes) but such an vniuersall innouation, and altering of all parishes and congregations in the realme, might bring such daungers to the whole state, as I am afrayd but to thinke on them.

The lear-

pag. 131.

It will bee obiected, when we haue all thinges at our pleasure, concerning the election of Pastors, yet will there creepe in many abuses. Wee aunswere, they shall not so soone nor so easily, nor so many abuses creepe in, as nowe at wyde wyndowes, yea, great port gates do throong in. But if as many or moe abuses (if more could be) were crept in, yet were the case better then it is nowe, for wee should be sure, that G O D approueth our order, though he condemne the abuses, bicause it is grounded vppon Gods worde, whereas nowe he abhorreth both.

Bridges.

Our Bretheren
hauing all thinges at their plea ure.

They terme it right for them selues, in saying: when we haue all things at our pleasure: for in verpe deede, set their pleasure a stee, and all their reasons, examles, and authorities, when they are thoughtye considered, serue not their tourne. Onely this is the strongest argument that I can perceau, they haue yet made, that it is their pleasure thus and thus to haue it.

Abuses creeping in after our bretheren haue all thinges at their pleasure.

But, if it will bee obiected (as they saye, it wilbe) that when they haue all thinges at their pleasure, both concerning the election of Pastors, and their pleasure also in all other thinges besides, that they contend for, yet will there creepe in many abuses: what will it please them now to say to this obiection?

We aunswere, (say they) they shall not so soone, nor so easily, nor so many abuses creepe in, as nowe at wide windowes, yea, at great port gates, doe throong in.

And we demaund what warrant and assurance of this: is there any thing here, but their bare answeere, and meere promise: which maye bee as sure (for ought that yet we see) as sealed with butter, and wee may beleue it, if it pleaseth vs also to afforde them so much credite, as it pleaseth them to payne so free a promise: but for anye reason to moue vs, here is none, but that they giue as here three promises together, that abuses shall not so soone, nor so easilye, nor so many, creepe in as nowe they they thrung in at wyde windowes and port gates.

Indeeve considering well of all that pro & con, hath passed betweene vs in the examining but of this their learned discourse: we neede not doubt that abuses would thrung in at wyde windowes and port gates (as they say) now they doe: for when all the walles are beaten downe, what infinite abuses, and worse than abuses, may not most soone come in not only creeping, but come tumbling in, saye and easilie, if not rather foule and most contusely: howbeit, we feare not beating downe the walles, or one port gate or but portall, or but windowe opened, or any hole made, by all the batterie of these our learned Bretheren, except wee will let them (as we doe too much) discourse and take their pleasure inderbe, to dispose and transpose, to pull downe, and set up, all things as they please to frame them. Now, whether they feare this obiection to be too true, or in securitie they will graunt it vs, for their further pleasure:

But if (say they) as many, or moe abuses (if moe could be) were crept in: yet were it better than it is now; for we should be sure, that God approueth our order, though he condemne the abuses, because it is grounded vpon Gods word, whereas now he abhorreth both.

And can our bretheren at length confesse this difference, betwixt the order grounded vpon Gods word and the abuses rising vpon mans corruption: both chauce then, they haue grounded all their former so bitter inuectiues, agaynst the orders of our Ministerie, vpon the abuses of the Ministers: and all to bleare the peoples eyes, to make the orders odious, because of the offensive abuses that they pretend agaynst the persons. But it is well, that yet they here confesse, that their owne orders which they would haue, are not free from abuses: yea frō as many or more abuses, than are the orders that we haue. They doe well to graunt this, befoze hand, for if their orders were admitted, we should finde it too true afterwarde, that there would be as many or more abuses. Neuerthelesse, they set a good face thereon, that for all there were more abuses:

Truly, what of all that, yet should our case be better, when it should bee worse, than it is now.

Yea? how can that be?

For we should be sure, that God approueth our order.

And how should we be sure of this?

Because it is grounded vpon Gods word.

But can they tell vs in what part of Gods word this ground lyeth: they haue oftentimes told vs, it is grounded on Gods word, but when we come to seeke for the words, wee can neuer find the, nor any necessary consequence that they haue led vs vnto, in all the word of God, either for any example or commaundement, that wee are charged or bounde to followe: and therfore this is but their owne confident presupposall. When they can proue such a members of the synod. ground in Gods word for them; then we will, yea wee must needs, will we will we, to Gods orders. But till then, wee craue leisure, that removing the abuses as well as God will giue vs grace, we may keepe our orders still in Gods name, except wee might bee better assured of better orders, and lesse subiect to abuses than these be.

The learned disc. pag. 132. But of the authoritie that Pastors haue as members of the Synode, wee haue spoken hetherto sufficiently. By which it is euident, how all things haue bene corrupted in Poperie, which had at the first, any good institution, which corruptions we also retayne at this day, without desiring of any reformation.

Bridges. To that they say, they haue spoken hetherto sufficiently of the authoritie that Pastors haue as members of the Synode, whether it be also answered sufficiently, to that they haue spoken thereupon; I yeeld it to the indifferencie of the Reader.

What the pastors haue as members of the synod. But what is this they say here, that Pastors haue as members of the Synode? Indeede they vsed that terme before, pag. 111. of the Pastors double authoritie, the one ioyned with the Elders of the Church whereof he is Pastor: the other with the Synode or holy assemblie, whereof he is a member. But after that, they sayde pag. 117. who should bee able to knowe, what order, comelinesse and edification requireth, according to Gods word; but they that bee teachers and preachers of the same vnto all others? What then meane they by these termes, that they haue authoritie as members of the Synode? If they meane, as all the members, and so, as the whole, that none be members or parts of the Synod but only they: then holde they take indeede to that their former clayme, who should bee able to knowe those things but they? But in so doing, they not onely quite exclude the Prince; but their governing Elders also, and their Deacons, whom if they will not exclude from some authoritie, as members also of the Synod: then was that not sufficiently spoken, or rather they gaue their Pastors more than sufficient authoritie in the Synode.

The reformation of the corruptions in Poperie.

The corruptions in Poperie, our Bishoppes and such as acknowledged their Episcopall authoritie, founde out (God bee prayesd for it) before our Bretheren came, and reformed the same; and they now vnthankfully reward the reformers of those corruptions, to asseyd them this good word for their labour, that we reteyne those corruptions at this day, and that without desiring of any reformation.

If in saying we, they speake of themselves; they are their owne Judges, if, of the Queenes most excellent Maiestie and of all the Prelates and Pastors, and whole state of the Church and Realme of England: it is too euident and too foule a sleaunders, that wee reteyne at this day all things that haue bene corrupted in Poperie, and that without desiring any reformation.

Neither

Neither helpeth it that they say, all thinges which at the first had any good institution: they haue not yet bene able to proue, that by authoritie of any lawe established, wee reteyne so much as any one such corrupted thing; but, either haue reiected it, if it could not be scoured from the rust and ranker of that corruption: or if it could, wee haue so cleansed and reformed the same, to his good institution; that wee may well and safely reteyne it without desiring innoation. If any persons reteyne the corruptions still; that is contrarie to the reformation of the lawe, and punishable vpon the lawfull proue in the reteyner. And sith they doe here confesse, that the institutions were good, of those things, whereof they say, wee reteyne the corruptions: howsoever we reteyne them, the institution of them was not nought (if good) but lawdable. And therefore, they are not utterly to be condemned; but contrarywise, may be well reteyned, being reduced to their first and good institution.

For, to begin first with our particular Synodes, good Lord what a mockerie they are of lawfull Synodes, being holden for no other ende almost, but to gather vp fees, both ordinary and extraordinary, with daylie newe deuises to powle the poore Priestes of their money, which they extort for seeing the letters of orders, for dinners and such like matters. And yet a newe inuented pillage, whereby they compell men to buye bookes of them for 4. pence, or 6. pence, which are too deare of a penie or two pence, & not only such smal ware, but also great bookes, being such as euery Parish is appoynted to buye, must bee bought of them for two or three shillings in a booke deerer, then it may be bought in Paules Churchyard: yea otherwhiles though the Parish be furnished of them alreadie, they are not authenticall, except they bee bought at maister Chancelors and Officiall, at maister Registreas hands. As for reformation of any thing in the Church, there are indeede many presentments, and men sworne to present matters, but little or none amendment at all doth followe. So that it is a common saying in the countrey, when the presentment is once receiued they shall neuer heare more of it. Soone after the visitation or Synod the petite bribing Summer rideth forth laden with Excommunications, which hee scattereth abroad in the countrey, as thicke as hayle-shot, agaynst this Parson, or that Vicar: this Churchwarden, and that Sydeman, whome he himselfe when he came to summon him to the Synode, for a Cheese or a gammon of Bacon, had vndertaken to excuse for non apparance. But when hee is once excommunicated, there is no remedie, but hee must trudge to the Chauncellor or Officiall for absolution, who after hee hath once absolved his purse of a fewe groates, giueth him his blessing and sendeth him away. And this is the Image of our little or particular Synode.

Our Brethrens
mockerie.

To begin firste with our particuler Synodes, good Lord what a holbe and open sclaunder is this, that (whatsoeuer these corruptions are, which here they heape vp agaynst the officers) they dare not shame to saye, that the particuler Synodes are holden for this end, yea for no other ende almost, but to gather vp fees both ordinarie and extraordinarie, with daylie newe deuises to powle the poore Priestes of their money?

It cannot bee denyed but that in such Synodes there are, and must needs bee, where there are ordinarie officers, some ordinarie fees, except there be ordinarie stipends provided, that the officers may be otherwise allowed for their acts, their paynes and charges, if they would haue any officers at all, to enact or record the things done or decreed in their Synodes. Yea, the very Pastors themselves must haue (as they sayd before) a sufficient liuing. And were it well sayd of any enuying the same, because the Pastors must euen of ordinarie haue sufficient lyuings, that therefore a sufficient lyuing is the ende, or there is no other ende almost, but that, of hauing Pastors? where, as indeede that is no ende at all of the Pastorship, but a necessarie or conuenient concurrence and appendix annexed thereunto. And euen so is it in the fees of the officers both in Synodes, and all other publike actions of the officers. For if there were no other endes of them; both their fees and the offices could not continue, nor euer had begun.

Neither helpeth it the matter, that they say not simple, Synodes are holden for no other ende at all: but that they are holden for no other ende almost: for, although almost neuer reached home; and so, it appeareth, that they are holden for other endes, if they had bene as willing to shewe them, as to shewe these thinges that here they picke quarrels withall: yet, if they had so done, they should haue shewed, that the gathering of these fees, in very deepe were no endes of Synodes at all, but allowances assigned vnto them, that trauelled in the Synodes, to the endes that Synodes were and are ordeyned for. And if any officer (as I graunt many officers doe) shot at other endes, and made his fees his ende: so also may any other officer doe, Pastor or whosoever. But this is the fault of the man, and not to be imputed to the matter.

But it is a good hearing (if they meane good sooth) that our Brethren pet now at the length begin to haue some pittie on the poore Priestes, whom for the greatest parte of this their learned discourse, they haue courted and recourfed, withall the most dispitfull reproaches that they could deuise; and some would haue them hangd, and some would haue them turned out a begging: and now forsoothe, they begin to smoothe them, and pittie the poore Priestes, that they should bee polled of their money. Shall wee crye, good Lord what a mockerie is this? But there is no Priest so poore nor simple, that may not perceiue their mockerie both of him, and of the good lawes and and lawful orders of the Synods? Yea, how they would mocke them euen with that Sophisticall deception, which their selues last noted, of not discerning, betweene the lawfull order and the abuse thereof.

And here (to make the Synod the more odious, they begin with the accusation extorting money for seeing the letters of orders.

Extorting money for seeing letters of Orders.

But for plaine and simple answer hereunto: for the ordinarie and ancient accustomed fees of Registers, or other fees by law rated and set downe, as are thought reasonable; there is great reason, that without all scoffing, grudging or detracting, they should be payd vnto them, seeing that the office of a Register in making and keeping authentick records, is a good and necessarie office. And euen this among all other things, that our Bretheren here first begin to bee offended withall, to call for, to see, and to recorde, yea, euen at euery Synode, such of the Ministers letters of orders, as they shall thinke requisite, which is a matter of no small importance.

The dutie of lawfull fees in Registers &c.

If any Registers doe abuse themselves therein, namely by extortion (as here they are burdened) uanie the Register, proue the extortion in tyme, place and manner competent; and the Law hath prouided readie remedie. This generall complaint on all, we knowe not by whom, is not lawfull. But belike they would either haue no Registers, or they should haue no fee, or about all things, the letters of orders must not be called for, nor scene: for in that, tangis vltim, if our Bretheren must bee diuened to shewe how they were made Ministers, by authoritie whereof they take themselves for Pastors. This is euen as when the Pharises Math. 22. were diuened to shewe the penie that conuicted them, either they must cleane ouerthrow all this their learned discourse, and disclaime all these deuises of their Pastorshippe; or els they shall shewe themselves to bee no faithfull Ministers nor true Pastors, yea to bee utterly no Pastors or Ministers at all, nor to haue any lawfull authoritie to teach or preach, nor to be capable to hold any Ecclesiasticall function or liuing, which would bee a shewder losse vnto them, than all the Registers fees (for all his extorting) amounteth vnto.

Our bretheren loth to shewe their letters of orders.

But by their leaue, the Register must not leaue still to call for the letters of their orders, both to see that they haue them, and that they bee recorded, and that in their still presenting of them, they stil acknowledge, that they hold all the lawfulness of their entrie into their calling and function by the testimony of them: so that if they shall now pretende to bee Ministers, and teach and preach and hold liuing, by that order that themselves crye out vpon, and yet retheyne it: all the world may see this great vnfaithfulness perpetually remayning in record agaynst them. I speake not this to approue the manner of ordeyning in the Popish tyme (of the which for the most of our Bretheren are not) the corruptions in which orders they haue publicly renounced & disclaimed: & yet the exhibiting of the also, for the good part in the, is necessarie, & thereby they also are knowne, how they were called into the Ministerie.

From

From letters of orders they come to dinners, and (say they in general) such like matters.

If they bee no worse matters than dinners, they are no ill matters. But if they were no better, they might haue dined at home. And is it not good reason, if their dinners be there prouided, they should pay for their dinners, or prouide otherwise, or kisse the poste, for ought that I perceiue, except any will bestow their dinner on them. What a toy is this, to helpe to furnish up their learned discourse, to picke a quarrell at the Synodes, for the Priestes paying of money for their dinners? Let them goe reckon rather with the Capster or the Poste, than trouble their learned discourse on Synodes, for dinners and such like matters.

Selling & buying of bookes.

From dinner they come to selling and buying of bookes.

Neither is this worthe their learned discourse, nor yet can bee much amisse, if ought amisse at all, so that the buyer haue ware worth his money. Call they this pillage?

Yea, say they, whereby they compell men to buye bookes of them.

I doe not thinke that they compell any: for if they list, they may buye them in other places. So that this is but a gentle compulsion to buye the bookes of them. Although, to appoynt some bookes meete for them, and to compell them to haue such bookes, is both lawfull and conuenient. If they maye haue them there, it is their more ease that buye them, and if they pay a penie or two pence more for the reddinesse of them, and for his charge that prouided them, let them looke to that, a foole and his money is soone parted. And must this also bee inserted into this learned discourse?

No meruell if they forget not the greater and dearer bookes, when they remember a booke of a groate or two pence? But belike, some of these our Bretheren met with a hard bukster, or els they are ouer hard handed, if not worse affected, to any of those bookes, of which, if they might set the price, though the booke were well worth two or three shillings, would they not yet thinke it too deare of a penie or twopence? Lo, how easie a matter it is to finde a sticke to beate a dogge; to picke a quarrell at euery small offence, when one is disposed to cauil.

If the booke bee necessarie for the Parish, or for the Pastors, why should they not bee compelled to haue it? If they haue it already; this is not true, that they can be compelled to buy it agayne, of these or those men. If they thinke they may haue it cheaper in Paules Church-yard; they may sende ther for it, none can let them. If any compell them, or extort more than it is worth: their complaynt may bee hard in other places, and the partie offend- ing, (be he mailster Register, or maister Officiall, or maister Chauncellor neuer so much) may be punished for it.

From the bookes, they come to the presentments, with the which they ments not re-

seeme to finde no fault, that there are many presentments and me sworne to present matters, but they finde fault with this, that for reformation of any thing in the church, little or none amendement at all doth followe. And I confesse, that here they saye some thing, for little amendement, but not, for none at all. But still, this fault is not in the Lawe, nor in the Synode, but eptier in the people that were worse and worse, or in the Officer that is negligent, and perchaunce also corrupted. And if the fault bee found to bee in him: there are lawes also provided to resourme him.

As for the common saying in the Countrey, when the presentment is once receiued, they shall neuer here more of it.

The presentment no more hearde of.

It may bee, that some may say so, and it may so fall out in some matters and in some persons, but in all, it cannot bee true, nor for the most parte. Let them inquire after it, and they shall finde it farre otherwise. But I will defende no mans fault, nor yet myne owne; and by some negligence or ignorance, without any corruption, some faultes perhaps may not bee resourmed, that haue bene presented, or all mens humors are not satisfied, in the maner of resourming the same. Some count it no reformation, if it bee not resourmed as they imagine it should bee. But, id possumus quod inre possumus. As for the reformations which our Bretheren woulde haue (in the conceyte of many other, that are as godly learned and wise as they, and of great experience in the sequell of such matters) where little amendement is now; would bring a great deale lesse amendement, if not rather, it would cleane matte all.

Reformation of faultes.

Next to the presentments, they fall a quarreling with the Summoner, for giuing warning to the parties presented to appeare and aunswere, or for their not so doing, and for giuing notice to them, that they haue incurred the censure of excommunication.

The Summoner caryinge forth the citations and excommunications.

But here, howsoeuer the Summoner also may abuse his office, with pettishying (as they terme it): yet is not his office all vnneressarie. And euen by the poore Summoner they may perceiue, that the common saying in the Countrey, is not very true, that when the presentment is once receiued, they shall neuer here more of it. For belike they heare somewhat more, when they heare of Citations, and perchaunce heare themselves summoned, and agayne after that, when they heare other newes, that for their contumacie besides their other notorious tymes, they stande excommunicated, and if the excommunications be scattered abroad as thick as hayle shot, the countrey were very thicke of hearing, if they hard not of them.

The presentment hearde of.

And if the Summoner (notwithstanding al his promises for a Cheese or a gammon of Bacon) could not excuse the partie for non apparance: then bribes auayle the lesse, and Maister Chauncellor and the Officiall are the once excommunicated, there is no remedie but he must trudge to the Chauncelor or Officiall for absolution. Neither doth his absolution consist (as they, to make it obious and contemptible, scoffe out the matter) in absolving his purse of a few groates. It was meruel they raysed it not from fewe to many groates, and yet good reason, if he be able, that he should smart so farre, euen by the purse also, as to satisfie the duetie of the fees, that are by lawe appoynted to the officers? But this is most vntrue, that his absolution and releasing from the bonde of excommunication, that in mockerie, they call, the giuing him his blessing (which terme they might as well vse, if it had bene the action of their whole Seniorie) is the absolving of the purse, or consisteth on paying of money. Whereas indeede, he was neither excommunicated, nor is absolved, for money: but as he was excommunicated for the encrease of his fault with disobedient contumacie, and contempt, for the which lesser sinnes deserue this correction as our Bretheren pag. 39. confesse: so is he released of the same, and restored to his state, vpon his humble and penitent submission, and serious request. Yea, if the case so require, vpon his publike acknowledgement and declaration of his hartie repentaunce, with some demonstrances and notes, of humble stepping open rebuke and shame, in the face of all the congregation. With what conscience now, can our Bretheren (agaynst their owne knowledge, in things so manifest) knitte vpon this matter, saying and this is the Image of our little particular Synod? and is this the Image also, of our great faithfull Bretherens, little faithfull and sincere dealing?

Act. 15.

Our generall conuocations hauing a more shewe of good order, but in effect little better. For first they are stuffed full of Popish & prophane Chauncellors, and other Lawyers, which being meere lay men, and vnlearned in diuinitie, by their owne law ought to be no members of the Synode: and yet these will beare the greatest sway in all things. The Bishops, as though they were greater than the Apostles, must haue their seuerall conuenticle, whereas the Apostles and Elders came together with the whole multitude. Acts. 15. and as they are seuered in place, so will they be higher in authoritie. So that whatsoever is decreed among them, that must be called the determination of the whole Synode. So that no man must be suffered to speake any thing agaynst it, be it neuer so reasonable or agreeable to the word of God: yea, whosoever will not subscribe to all such things as they decree, must be excluded out of the conuocation, as was practised and threatned in the conuocation at the foresayd Parliament, vnto diuers godly and learned Preachers, that offered to speake agaynst diuers grosse and palpable errors, that had escaped the Bishops decrees. As, for the distinctions of Canonical and Apocryphall bookes, for explication of the clause in the article of predestination: where it is sayd, that the elect may fall from grace, and such like matters.

matters. If this be not to practise Lordship ouer our faith: to set downe decrees of Religion, which must be accepted of all men, without either reason or testimonie of the Scripture to proue them, and no man permitted to shewe any reason or Scriptures, that inforceth his conscience to the contrary, but onely to hang vpon the authoritie of Bishops: let some other declare what Paule meaneth, 2. Cor. 1. 4. where he denyeth, that hee would exercise any Lordshippe, ouer the faith of the Corinthians.

For although their decrees were neuer so perfect, yet it were an example of Tyrannicall dominion, neither to giue reasons to satisfie the ignoraunt themselves, nor to heare or confute that which might bee alleadged agaynst them by others; but for a fewe Lordbishops in comparison of all the Conuocation, to sit by themselves and order all thinges at their pleasures, as though the Gospell sprang first from them: or had come vnto them onely; it fauoureth nothing so much as of Popish tyrannie: whereas otherwise it is well knowne they are not all of the best learned, nor all of the longest studie, nor all of the soundest iudgement, nor all of greatest zeale, nor all of best example, and therefore not meetest to be the onely determiners in Ecclesiasticall matters, to the preiudice of the whole Synode. Wherefore it is greatly to bee desired, that our Synodes also, which are so farre out of order, may bee reformed according to the Scripture, and the example of the Primitive Church, that all thinges maye bee done with such modestie, grauitie, and iudgement, as they were by the Apostles and Elders. Acts. 15.

From our little or particular Synods, our Bretheren come now to our generall conuocations, of which they yet confesse, that both they haue a more shewe of good order, and are in effect though little, yet somewhat better. And here to proue this little better, they say:

For first, they are stuffed full of Popish and prophane Chauncellors, and other Lawyers.

Is this their little better good order in effect, that they spake of? If this were true, it is much worse, than before they made the little Synodes to bee. Before we had but trifles, here is worse stuffe if the conuocations are stuffed full of Popish and prophane Chauncellors and other Lawyers. And if they bee stuffed with them, then belike there is some store of them. But can they name and proue any such Chauncellors or Lawyers, as bee admitted to bee members of the Synode, to bee popish and prophane? If they can; it had bene very well done, that at such tymes as the Conuocations were holden, they had (by these our Bretherens intimation) bene detected and examined, that if they had bene so conuicted, they might haue bene auoyded, remoued, or punished. If they can name none, nor proue any to be such persons, then is this too prophane, too vncharitable, too vnprotestant-like a sclander, and the more at randon that these foule speeches are thus cast forth, so much the worse and more suspicious. Q is the very name and office of Chauncellor or Lawyer, accounted of them to bee prophane and popish? Q doe they meane it of Chauncellors onely, and not ioyntly of Lawyers? And are all Chauncellors then popish and prophane? These speeches (sauing our Bretherens reuerence) are not onely rash, but daungerous, agaynst many worshipfull and right honorable personages, that haue the name and office of Chauncellors, and are yet neither prophane nor popish, but godly, sincere, religious, and very great fauourers of the Gospel.

Chauncelors
or Lawyers in our conuocati-
ons.

As for our Conuocations, are so little stuffed full of Chauncellors or Lawyers, that wee haue there very fewe of them. And if wee haue some of them for their counsell and experience in the lawe: I thinke it no such matter of offence, but rather expedient, they being such, as are knowne to be of sound Religion, and not popish, or infected with any other knowne errour: and not prophane but vertuous and holie in life and conuersation. We thinke rather, wee might bee glad, to haue some such Chauncellors or Lawyers amongst vs, because of their better experience in Ecclesiasticall regiment, and in deuising lawes, orders, and decrees, than wee our selues are so well able to conceiue, whose onely or principall profession is Diuinitie.

But say they, of these Chauncellors and other Lawyers: which being meere lay men, and vnlearned in Diuinitie, by their own lawe ought to be no members of the Synode.

Whether our Chauncelors
or Lawyers in conuocations be more lay & vnlearned in diuinitie then our bretherens
gouernors.

If they spared not before to call them popish and prophane, no meruell if they call them mere lay men and vnlearned in Diuinitie. But see here the indifferencie of these our learned Bretheren. When they speake of their gouerning Elders in euery congregation, they forsooth are not laye men, but persons and officers Ecclesiasticall. Although they bee Gentlemen, Marchants, Artizanes, Farmers, Husbandmen, or what trade soeuer. These are forsooth, no meere laye men, but Presbyters Priestes or Elders. And who made them so? The Pastor and the Parish haue chosen them to this office. And can their choyse make a meere lay man, not to be a meere lay man: and cannot the choyse of all the Pastors in a whole shire, nor the approbation of the whole prouinciall Synode, make a Chauncellor or other Lawyer to be no meere lay man, in respect of the Ecclesiasticall office that they chose him vnto, as well as could that particular Parish or congregation?

Yea, but (say they these Chauncellors and other Lawyers) they are vnlearned in Diuinitie.

our bretheren
objecting to chauncelors
& Lawyers

I meruell that our Bretheren euen for very shame, would haue euer objected this vnto them; knowing what great learned men many of their Seniors must needes fall out to bee, in many Parishes, whom their late olde fir

for Iohn lacke latine would soone appose, for he yet at least could reade his Articles, but they could not reade a letter on the booke. And yet these men because they bee Seniors, must bee counted learned in Diuinitie, and how got they on a suddayne, all this learning, by inspiration with the election of them to the Seniorie? or came it by vertue of their Eldership? As though learning in Diuinitie were euen tyed to their Consistory.

As for Chauncellors and other Lawyers Ciuill or Canon (for I take it that they speake not so much of the Temporal Lawyers) these are meere lay men and vnlearned in Diuinitie. What a straunge and high conceyte is this of themselves, still boasting in the toppe of euery lease of their learned discourse, and often of their graue wise and godly Seniors, with contempt of others, if they fauour not their deuises, bee they neuer so learned men?

If they say, though they bee learned men, yet in other things, not in diuinitie. Is it not moze likely, that they bee or may bee, farre more learned in Diuinitie too, professing the studie that is euen next vnto Diuinitie, and in a great parte consisteth on Diuinitie, than those Temporal men, that are altogether or for the most parte trayned by in worldly matters and in mechanicall occupations, and haue little minde or leisure and lesse helpes of fearing to imploye themselves in any deepe studie in Diuinitie, yea many of them utterly vnlearned? What a greate vanitie is in this dealing?

And yet these (say they, meaning Chauncelors and other Lawyers) will beare the greatest sway in all things in our Synodes.

These beare little sway (GOD knowes, and it is apparant) at most, no moze than doth any other particular man in them. But in their Synodes (though they speake cleane contrary therein vnto themselves) yet these they lay rather than Ecclesiasticall Elders, either should beare the greatest sway of gouernment, or let them lay aside the prerogatiue of this name of Gouernours, which title they make moze peculier to them, than either to the Doctors or to the Pastors.

But now after the Chauncellors & Lawyers, which in our Conuocations or generall Synode are very fewe amongst vs, except withall they be Ministers of the worde and Sacraments, or els Deacons: our Bretheren must here (there is no remedie) haue yet another sling at the Bishops.

The Bishops (say they) as though they were greater than the Apostles, must haue their seuerall conuenticle.

If the Bishoppes haue a lawfull superiour dignitie, moze than the other Priestes or pastorall Elders haue, as before at large is proved: why maye they not also haue a superiour place seuerall by themselves, to consult vpon matters, that are meetest to bee propounded in the whole Synode? Doth it therefore followe herevpon, that they take vpon them to bee greater than the Apostles, or but comparable to them? What a triuolous argument is this? but what reason haue they for it?

The Apostles
example A&.
15. 6.

Whereas (say they) the Apostles came together with the whole multitude. Nay, soft (Bretheren) put by these words agayne, for this time and place, with the whole multitude, in your purse. Adde not to the text. The words are these, A&. 15. vers. 6. Then the Apostles and Elders came together to looke to this matter. I graunt, he nameth afterward, all the multitude, ver. 12. And yet it seemeth that he ment there, none other, but all the multitude of the Apostles and Elders, that he sayde before, vers. 6. did come together. Although afterward for the sending of chosen men to carrie their decree, it is sayd, vers. 22 that it seemed good to the Apostles and Elders, with the whole Church; although the whole multitude of the whole Church came not together about that controuersie. But it may appeare, the Apostles and the other Elders with the multitude were so in one place together, that neuertheless Luke testifieth, Acts. 5. vers. 12. saying: and of the other (meaning, besides the Apostles) no man durst ioyne himselfe to them. And therefore if our Bishoppes haue their seuerall conuenticle, or place of comming together by themselves, what haue they therein that the Apostles also had not? and yet it followeth not, that if the Apostles had no seuerall conuenticle or meeting together, that they make themselves greater than the Apostles; or make any comparison of greatnesse with them.

The Apostles
were seuerall by themselves and yet ioynd
with the Pastors and the multitude.

But they acknowledge themselves farre inferiour, as in giftes, so in dignitie also of their function. Yea, in the order of their Pastorall Eldershippe or Priesthood it selfe, they acknowledge themselves to bee but equall and and all one, euen the greatest of them, not onely with the meanest in the conuocation; but with the poorest Priest in Englande. Albeit, in respect of their lawfull superiour dignities, they may well haue a superiour and seuerall conuenticle or meeting place, notwithstanding ostentymes, both they and all the residue of the conuocation, doe ioyntly also in one place assemble altogether.

The Bishops
higher in thoritie.

And as they are seuered (say they) in place, so will they bee higher in authoritie.

And good reason too, sith (as wee haue seene) it is, not in respect of any higher authoritie in the order of the Eldership: but of their higher authoritie of iurisdiction in the Ecclesiasticall regiment.

So that whatsoeuer (say they) is decreed amongst themselves; that must be called the determination of the whole Synode.

The decrees of the whole
synod not of the Bishops
onlie.

I meruell that our Bretheren shamed not feared not, to stuffe their learned discourse, with so many manifest vntrueths. It is most euident, that nothing is or can bee decreed in the name of the whole Synodes determination, without the whole Synode (comprehending at least, the greatest greatest number for the whole) haue decreed and determined the same.

So that (say they) no man must bee suffered to speake any thing agaynst it, bee it neuer so reasonable, or agreable to the worde of God.

This is another most great and manifest vntrueth, sclanderous to the Bishoppes, and reproachfull to the whole Conuocation. There is none of the house, but that may in any matter, that is propounded to bee debated vpon; yea, any other though not of the house, being knowne to be a reuerent, godly, wise and learned person, either of the Ministerie, yea in some cases, though he were not any Ecclesiasticall person, yet might he also, bee freely admitted (according to the auncient Canons) to speake before the house, in such sorte and manner as the order of the house requirerh, for those that bee or should bee learned men, to speake their minde in the Latine tongue (for feare some young Sir Iohn lacke latine would bee ouer busie) and so to reason freely pro & contra, obseruing alwaies that modestie and reuerence, which becometh the assemblie of graue and learned men. And in this manner, many haue propounded, and reasoned vpon diuers matters; as those that are auncients in the Conuocations heretofore, can witnesse.

How euerie de
of the house may speake in the conuoca-
tion.

Yea (saye they) whosoeuer will not subscribe to all such thinges as they decree, must bee excluded out of the Conuocation, as was practised and threatned, in the Conuocation at the foresayde Parliament, vnto diuers godly and learned Preachers, that offered to speake agaynst diuers grosse and palpable errors, that had escaped the Bishops.

Our Bretheren hauing so often broken the squire of trueth in these matters, doe here waxe bold to rappe out vntrueths now by huddles. What one Preacher hath bene excluded out of the Conuocation, for this, that he would not subscribe to all such thinges as the Bishoppes among themselves haue decreed? Or can they bring any instance but of such one threat made vnto them? And albeit a threat differeth from the putting it in practise: yet this also is a notorious sclander. There was no such thing either practised or threatned at any tyme in our Conuocations, namely at that tyme they mention (which I remember well, and so doe many others) when some speaking in English began to bee ouer busie, and to vse disordered behaviour with vnreuerent termes, they were by the Moderator as moderator commaunded to silence, or els to departe and not to disturbe the house, nor alter the lawfull orders thereof, except they would, and that in seemely modestie speake in Latine: which these godly and learned Preachers that our Bretheren commende, liked not to doe. Neuerthelesse, other being in deepe godly and learned Preachers, did very reuerently and with great learning discusse those matters. And so with generall consent either of all,

None excluded

bing to the Bishops decrees.

or (which sufficed) of the most and best parte, those Articles were confessed vpon and approued for good and sound doctrine. And so I hope will stand, for any thing that our Bretheren, or any other shall euer bee able to say agaynst them.

As for any (and much lesse) diuers grosse and palpable errors that escaped the Bishops: I remember none, nor can learne of any. The Decrees conteyned in the articles aforesayd, are published to the open viewe of of euery man, if our Bretheren as yet can burthen them with any grosse or palpable error, or with any error at all, though not grosse nor palpable, or but with apparance or suspicion of error, it were worth the hearing.
But if there bee no such error in them, who are then worthe the punishing, or at least worthe to acknowledge with repentaunce and reuoking this so great a sleaunders? For it toucheth not our Bishoppes and the Conuoca-tion onely; but, being established also as is aforesayd by act of Parliament, and so the professed doctrine of all the Realme and Church of England: how are wee not all hereby defaced, to mainteyne grosse and palpable errors, and that in no small poynts of doctrine?

If Papistes had sayd this, it had bene lesse meruell, which hate our doctrine and count it stuffe full of errors and heresies too. But they neuer were, nor are, nor euer shall bee (God willing) able, to proue that we mainteyne any one error in any one article of doctrine, but agree in all the substance of Religion, with the true and sincere worde of God. Wee our Bretheren their selues bearing vs witnesse, who in the Preface of this learned discourse confesse, that for the substance of Religion, it is resolved, and now publikly mainteyned for our true and holy faith.

How could this bee true, if those articles, namely these which here they note, being matter of faith, and publikly mainteyned and resolved, by all the Church of England to bee true and holie, were grosse and palpable errors? But to shewe both vnto them, and to all the worlde (least the Papistes should take holde hereon, when they heare of this our owne Bretherens accusation, which will bee euen meate and drinke to them, being glad to feede vpon such sleaunders, that as wee are sounde (God bee blessed for it) in all other articles of doctrine; so in these wee mainteyne no error at all, but a most sure and sincere trueth: let vs come to the viewe of these two Articles, that here they mention for example.

As for the distinction (saye they) of Canonickall and Apocryphall bookes.

Although this bee a matter wherein good and godly fathers haue had some difference: yet for our Bishoppes and Conuocations decree thereon, I see not how our Bretheren shall bee able to finde, that wee holde any error in that matter. It is the sixth Article, the wordes whereof are these.

Holy Scripture conteyneth all things necessarie to saluation: so that whatsoener is not read therein, nor may bee proued thereby; is not to be required of any man, that it should bee belceued as an article of the faith, or bee thought requisite or necessarie to saluation. In the name of the holy Scripture, wee doe vnderstand those canonically bookes of the old and newe Testament, of whose authoritie was neuer any doubt in the Church.

Of the names and number of the Canonically bookes. Genesis, Exodus, Leuiticus, Numeri, Deuteronomic, Iosue, Iudges, Ruth. The first booke of Samuell. The 2. booke of Samuell. The first booke of Kings. The 2. booke of Kings. The 1. booke of Chroni. The 2. booke of Chroni. The 1. booke of Esdras. The 2. booke of Esdras. The booke of Hester. The booke of Iob. The Psalmes. The Prouerbes. Ecclesiast. or preacher. Cantica or songs of Sal. 4. Prophets the greater. 12. Prophets the lesse.

The names & number of the Canonically bookes.

And the other bookes as Ierome sayth the Church doth reade for example of life and instruction of maners, but yet doth it not applye them to establish any doctrine. Such are these following. The 3. booke of Esdras. The 4. booke of Esdras. The booke of Tobias. The booke of Iudith. The rest of the booke of Hester. The booke of Wisdome. Iesus the sonne of Syrach. Baruch the Prophet. The song of the 3. children. The storie of Susanna. Of Bell and the Dragon. The prayer of Manasses. The 1. booke of Machab. The 2. booke of Machab.

The number and names of the Apocryphall bookes in the old testament.

All the bookes of the newe Testament, as they are commonly receiued, we doe receiue and account them for canonically.

This is the whole article, especially for the distinction of Canonically and Apocryphall bookes. And is there any grosse and palpable error, or any error at all in this distinction, that any godly and learned Preacher should haue offered to speake agaynst in the Conuocation? Well, if he could not be suffered to speake then: let him do it yet, doing it in seemely order. Yea, if it be a grosse and palpable error that all we grossely maynteine in this distinction he is bound to shewe it orderly, comiter monstrari viam errantis, if he will be a faithfull Minister. And if wee cannot bee able to defend this distinction, we will then (by Gods grace) yeld it to be an error, and forsake it. But I meruell, if it be so grosse and palpable, that we cannot yet feele nor vnderstande it, which were indeede a great grosseesse in vs all. But because, I confesse my selfe to be but grosse, that cannot so quickly find out this palpable error: neuerthelesse since that it is palpable or may be groped (and yet our learned Bretheren will not bouchsafe to set it downe) I will therefore grossely grope after it, if perhaps I may finde it, and giue others warning of it. For (by the grace of God) wee shall not be so grosse, as defend any error, if we may finde it, and perceiue that it is indeede an error, that is to say, a wrong and false opinion.

call scripture

Is this grosse error in these wordes: holie Scripture conteyneth all things necessarie to saluation, so that whatsoeuer is not read therein nor may bee proued thereby, is not to bee required of any man, that it should be beleeued as an article of faith, or be thought requisite or necessarie to saluation? I trust, they will acquit this parte of the article from all error. Neither is it properly of the distinction of Canonickall and Apocryphall bookes, which are to bee accounted of the one sorte, or of the other, but of eithers validitie or inualiditie in the articles of faith, and matters requisite or necessarie to saluation.

In what words this grosse error should lye.

What then? Is this grosse and palpable error, for the distinction of Canonickall and Apocryphall bookes in the wordes of the article following? In the name of holy Scripture we doe vnderstand those Canonickall bookes of the olde and newe Testament, of whose authoritie was neuer any doubt in the Church. What grosse and palpable error, or any error at all is in these wordes, that wee doe vnderstand those bookes in the name of holy Scripture, of whose authoritie there was neuer any doubt in the Church? Is there any reason to the contrary, why wee should not vnderstand these bookes for holy Scripture?

The bookes that were neuer
doubted of

If they replye, that is true indeede, for those bookes: but not for those bookes onely: then are these wordes also of the article acquit by their owne mouthes. As for the so vnderstanding of them onely, to be accounted in the name of holy Scripture, of whose authoritie was neuer any doubt in the Church: this article hath no such worde, as this word onely, nor any such meaning. Pea, least their meaning or wordes might be misconstrued, they goe also particularly to worke, and booke by booke till which is to be vnderstoode for the holie or canonickall Scripture, and which not, in the olde Testament. And in the newe Testament, they haue reckoned all for Canonickall.

Some of the
doubted of.

If they yet replye, that diuers bookes of those which the articles name and vnderstand for the holie and canonickall Scripture, haue bin doubted of: I graunt it, and the articles doe confesse as much in these playne wordes. All the bookes of the newe Testament, as they are commonly receiued, we doe receiue and account them for canonickall. Do they not here plainly enough inferre, that there hath bene some doubt and not receiuing of some of them, when they say, as they are commonly receiued, so doe wee receiue them, though some doe not so receiue them? And will our learned Bretheren bee so preumptiue, that if they had not so fully or clereely expessed their meaning in the former wordes, they will not giue them leaue to bee their owne expolitours, but bee so cutted and short with them, that they may not tell out their owne tale, but a worde and a blowe, or euer they haue tolde halfe their tale, to crye out by and by, error, error, pea, grosse error, and palpable error?

Our Brethren
to quicke censure.

Our Brethren, ye are a little to hastie to bée Parrish Priestes: yee giue too short and too sharpe a iudgement in this matter. Take the whole article together, to conferre the later wordes with the former, and if a worde escape incommodiously: What? my Maisters, will yee take vauntage of euery illable? or if ye will needes pise so narrowly: goe to it then hardlye and spare not. I mislike not your industrie therein, syppe (a Gods blessing) euery mote in your byetherens eyes, and note euery tittle in their writtinges, and weigh their wordes euen in the Goldsmithes balance. Yet, when yee haue all done, ye confesse your selues, it is but a scape, whereas indeede, weighe it well and trulye, it is not so much. But admitte it were a scape, will ye make a mountayne of a mole hill, that it is a grosse and palpable error? Nerely, whether we shall weigh the wordes with graue and indifferent iudge-ment, as we ought to doe: or but euen grossely or sleighly consider of them, except our opinion be too grossely foreshadowed against them, we coulde neuer giue so grosse a iudgement of them, as, for a grosse and palpable error to condemne them: for in very deede, there is no error at all in them.

But it maye be (such is my grosse pate) that yet wee haue not light vpon this grosse and palpable error, indeede there are other wordes also, es-peciallye these after the catalogue of the Canonickall bookes in the olde Testament.

And the other bookes (as Hierome sayth) the Church doth reade, for example of the life and instruction of manners, but yet it doth not apply them to establish any doctrine.

Ieronimus in prefationē in libros Salamo-

Is there any thing here that our Brethren can challenge of error? Is the sence of Hierome cyted amisse? Or is Hieromes sentence it selfe Erroneous? The wordes of Hierome in his preface on the bookes of Salomon, are these: as therefore the Church readeth indeede the bookes of Iudeth, Tobie and the Machabies, but receaueth them not among the canonickall Scriptures: so also it maye reade these two volumes (hee speaketh of Iesus the sonne of Syrach, and the booke of wisdom) to the adification of the people, not to confirme the authoritye of Ecclesiastical opinions, or decrees. Or are they offended that yet thus much should be giuen to the apocryphall Scriptures, that they should bee read at all in the Church, for adification in example of life and instruction of manners:
but to be utterly neglected or defaced, as some haue not spared to bestowe, very grosse speeches on all the apocryphall Scripture? but bicause this again, is not so much for the distinction of Canonickall and Apocryphall bookes, as for the estimation of them, I thinke they meane not of anye grosse or palpable error in these wordes. If they doe (by the grace of god) wee shall the easlier cleare them, by the testimonie of manye, whome our brethren (I hope) wil not burden with so grosse speeches. Especially when the whole Frenche Church in their confession, goeth as far forth herein, as we doe. where hauing reckoned vp the whole Canonickall Scripture of the olde Testament and the newe, agreeing in all the particuler bookes with vs; in the fourth article they saye. These bookes wee acknowledge to bee canonickall, that is, wee haue them as the squire and rule of our Fayth, and that not onely by the common consent of the church but also much more by the testimonye and inwarde perswasions of the the holyc ghoste, by whose suggestion we are taught to discerne them from other Ecclesiasticall bookes, which as they may be profitable, neuerthelesse they are not of that sort, that any article of the faith may be established out of them.

To whome accordeth the confession of the churches of Belgia, or the lowe Countreies. Who after their lyke enumeration of the canonickall bookes in the five and sixe articles, saye on this wise. These onelye bookes wee receaue as holy and canonickall, vppon which our fayth may staye, bee confirmed and established, &c. Moreouer wee make a difference betweene these holy bookes, and those which they call appocrypha, that it to wit, because the appocryphall may indeede be read in the church, and it is lawefull also so farre foorth to take instructions out of them, as far as they agree with the canonickall bookes. Howbeit, they haue not that authoritie and force, that any opinion of the fayth and christian Religion can bee certainlye builded on their testimonye. So farre is it off, that they can infringe or diminishe the authoritie of others.

And if after these, I maye alleage any private mans confession; I commend the Reuerende Zanchius. Who in his confession, chap. 1. Aphorisme. 4. after the like particular reherfall, that our Articles make, of the bookes canonickall and not Canonickall in the olde Testament: he sayth.

Thus much of the olde. But out of the newe Testament wee except none. For although there bee some of them, of which it was doubted in the olde tyme: notwithstanding euen they also were afterwarde no whit lesse acknowledged than were the other, to bee the writings of the apostles, vnto whose iudgement we also subscribe. Of the former sorte, are the Gospels, after Matthew, Marke, Luke, Iohn: the actes of the apostles, the Epistles of Paule, the former of Peter, the former of Iohn. Of the later sorte are, the Epistle to the Hebrues, the Epistle of Iames, the later of Peter, the seconde and thirde of Iohn, the Epistle of Iude, the Apocalypse. For although they maye seeme after a kinde of sorte, to bee of a certayne greater authoritie, of the which it was neuer doubted, than those of which sometymes it was doubted: notwithstanding, wee beleue as well the one as the other, euen as the certaine word of God. As for the Apocryphall bookes that are contey-

ned in the Bybles volume: wee giue them the firste place after the Canonickall. And therefore wee vse onelye the Canonickall bookes, to prooue the opinions (or decrees) of Fayth, and with the Fathers wee teache that they are to bee vsed: as for the other, wee thinke that they haue no small authoritie to confirme afterwarde, those thinges that already are prooued. Thus writeth Zanchius agreeing with our articles, And heereto also he quoteth, Hierome in Praef. in Salo. Cyp. in Symb. pag. 377. conc. Load, cap. 59.

But what neede I labour thus, to cleere our Article hereupon: when the Geneva Bible it selfe, hath as much as this comes too, saying: the bookes that followe in order after the Prophetes, vnto the newe Testament, are called Apocrypha, that is, bookes which were not receaued by a common consent to be read and expounded publikeleye in the Church, neyther yet serued to prooue any poynte of Christian Religion, saue in as much as they had the consent of other scriptures called canonickall to confirme the same, or rather whereon they were grounded: but as bookes proceeding from godlye men, were receaued to be read for the aduancement and furtherance of the knowledge of the historie, and for the instruction of Godly maners.

Is not this as muche here as is in anye thing conteyned in these wordes of our bookes article, for the vse and credite of the Apocryphall bookes: and wherein then for these wordes, doeth lye suche grosse and palpable error, as they burthen this article withall: for nothing remayneth nowe therein, not examined, but the enumeration of the bookes themselves, which are counted of vs for Canonickall, which for Apocryphall. And doe not these Articles keepe the same accompt, both for the number and for the Bookes of both sortes, that all these aforesayde, and the verie Geneva translation doth: except they will take aduantage heerin, that where the Geneva calleth Ezra and Nehemiah (as Zanchius calleth them the two former of Esdras) our article retayneth still the vsuall calling of them the firste booke of Esdras, the seconde booke of Esdras, because it treateth also muche of Esdras. But I trust that our Bretheren will not in anye wise accounte of that for a grosse and palpable or anye Error at all, considering howe ordinarilye it hath gone by these names, and in Ieromes preface heresaythe, Neyther let it mooue anye bodye that one booke is of vs set forth, nor let him bee delighted in the dreames of the third and fourth booke, Because also among the Hebrues the speeches of Esdras and Nehemiah are straightened into one Volume, &c. As the bookes & matter we keepe full reckoning if their offence be, because wee counte none Appocryphall in the newe Testament: what do wee otherwise, than Zanchius doth: Than the Geneva Testament doth: yea than the Frenche, the Heluetian; and

and the Dutch reformed Churches doe: and therefore, where these grosse errors and palpable shoulde bee in this article, they are so grosse and palpable, that we can yet neyther see nor feele them. When our bretheren can thewe and proue them, I for my parte (will by Gods assistance) wilfully defende no knowinge error.

Now since we cannot find this, let vs come to their seconde instance, which is, as they say:

Our Brethrens
2. challeng of
of the booke
of articles for grosse and palpable errors.

For explication of the clause in the article of predestination, where it is sayde, that the elect may fall from grace, and such like matters.

Whether it bee negligence, or willfull peruertering, that I knowe not, but I conser it rather to the gentler faulte: notwithstanding, for those that professe themselves to be faythfull Ministers, and to sette forth a learned discourse, and thus grosselye to burthen the articles, yea one of the chiefest articles in doctrine, agreed vpon by all the learned Clergye of the Realme, and approued by all the authoritie and states of the realme, with grosse and palpable error, and to charge the Article with an euident vntruth: if this discourse maye baunt of learning, yet I woulde wish that the learned discoursers were a little more faythfull Ministers, leaste this parte thereof might of any be termed, not a learned, but a lewde and vndiscreete discoursing.

The 17. article of predestina-tion & electio.

Where it is sayde in the article of predestination, which is the seuenteenth article, that the elect may fall from grace, or any such lyke matter in that article, the wordes of the article are these.

Predestination to lyfe is the euerlasting purpose of G O D, whereby (before the foundations of the worlde were layde) hee hath constantlye decreede by his Counsaile secrete to vs, to deliner from curse and damnation, those whome hee hath chosen in Christe of mankinde, and to bring them by Christ to euerlasting saluation, as vessels made to honour. Wherefore they which bee endewed with so excellent a benefite of God, be called according to Gods purpose by his spirite woorking in due season: they through grace obeye the calling: they bee iustified freely: they bee made sonnes of G O D by adoption: they bee made like the Image of his onely begotten sonne Iesus Christe: the walker religiouslye in good woorkes, and at length by Gods mercie, they atteyne to euerlasting felicitye.

As the Godlye consideration of predestination and our election in Christ is full of sweete, pleasant, and vnspeakeable comforte to godlye persons, and such as feelee in themselves the woorking of the spirite of Christ, mortifying the workes of the fleshe, & their earthly members, drawing vp their minde to high and heauenly thinges, aswell because it doth greatlye establish and confirme their fayth of eternall saluation, to bee enioyed through Christ, as because it doth feruently kindle their loue love towardes God: so, for curious and carnall Pastors, lacking the spirite of Christ, to haue continually before their eies the sentence of gods predestination, is a most dangerous downefall, wherby the diuell doth thrust them eyther into desperation, or into rechelesnes of most vncleane liuing, no lesse perilous than desperation.

Furthermore, we must receaue gods promises in such wise, as they be generally set foorth to vs in holy scripture: and in our doinges, that will of God is to be followed, which we haue expresly declared vnto vs in the word of God.

This againe is the whole article of predestination and election worde by word set downe, as it is in the booke. And now, what one sentence, or but one worde is here, that our brethren can proue to bee erroneous, not grosse and palpable (as they say) but to haue any spice neuer so couertly conueyed, of any the least error in the worde: if our brethren be of sounde iudgement in this article, (as I hope they be) Or what doubtfull speeches are there in this article, that neede explication, for feare they might be vnderstode erroneously? But where are heere these words, that our brethren haue by name burdened this article of predestination withall: saying, for explication of the clause in the article of predestination: where it is sayde, that the elect may fall from grace, and such like matters?

Nothing in this article of Predestination and Election but sounde doctrine.

May not our brethren be ashamed, so grossely and palpable to fall from this grace of telling the truth so oftentimes before, but specially heere, in so great a matter, challenging one of the principall articles of our religion for grosse and palpable errors or vntruths, and their selues to fall into so open, so vntrue and foule a sleaunders?

But to helpe our brethren as much as we may, with the true cleering of our selues, from so great and dangerous a sleaunders, (for our brethren harpe here about some thing) they meane be like in the 16 article, which is not (as they say) of predestination, but, of sin after baptisme, where it is sayde thus.

Not euery deadly sin willingly committed after baptisme, is sin against the holy ghost, and vnpardonable. Wherfore, the graunt of repentance is not to bee denyed, to such as fall into sin after baptisme. After wee haue receaued the holy ghost, we maye departe from grace giuen, and fall into sin, and by the grace of God (we may) arise againe, and amende our liues, and therefore they are to bee condemned, which say they can no more sinne, as long as they liue heere, or denye the place of forgiveness to such as truly repent.

The 16. article of sinne after Baptisme.

Here indeede this article sayth, that after we haue receaued the holy ghost, wee maye departe from grace giuen, and fall into sinne, and by the grace of God wee maye arise agayne and amende our liues. And is there any error, or anye darkenesse, or doubtfulness, or suspicion, of

ed may depart

of inclination to errour in these wordes? for, although they speake here generally, and mention not the elect, of whome they speake in the article following, which we haue alreadye perused: yet neyther speake they of falling from grace, which worde, falling, might perhaps bee construed of them in the harder sence, as though they were destitute of all grace and cleane voyde of the spirite of God: neyther the wordes nor the sence tendeth to any suche matter, but are onely these: that after wee haue receaued the holy ghost, we may depart from grace giue, & fall into sin, &c.

Nowe, whether this bee vnderstoode of the Elect, or not: maye not such as are not of the number of the Elect, bee truly sayde also to haue receaued the holye Ghoste, in the giftes of some graces of the holye Ghoste giuen vnto them? The Apostle saythe, 1. Cor. 12. No man can say Iesus is the Lorde but by the holye Ghoste. And yet sayth Christ. Matthew 7. 21. &c. Not euerye one that sayth vnto mee, lord Lorde, shall enter into the kingdome of Heauen: but hee that doth the will of my Father that is in Heauen, and manye will saye to me in that day, Lorde, Lord, haue wee not by thy name prophesied, and by thy name caste out Deuilles, and by thy name done manye great woorkes? And then I will professe to them: I neuer knewe you, departe from mee, yee that woorkes iniquitye. And yet those that receaued these giftes of woorking miracles, &c. They were graces giuen the of the holy Ghoste. And Saint Paule calleth them Charismata and spirituall giftes, the administration, operation, and manifestation of the spirite, the diuersities of whose giftes he reckoneth vp, as we haue seene, 1. Cor. 12. And did not diuers of the Corinthians departe or fall from the true vse of these graces of the holye Ghoste? As wee maye also say of Demas and others. And euen of the apparant reprobate, sayth Saint Paule, Hebrewes, 6. vers. 4. For it is impossible that they which were once lightened, and haue tasted of the heauenlye gifte, and were made partakers of the holye Ghoste, and haue tasted of the good woorde of God and of the powers of the worlde to come, if they shoulde fall awaye, shoulde bee renewed agayne by repentance, seeing that they crucifie agayne to themselues the sonne of God, and make a mocke of him. So then, vnderstanding these wordes euen for those that are not of the number of Gods elected; neuertheles they may be such, as God hath imparted great graces of the holy ghost vnto, and yet they departe and fall from grace.

But now (which is the better and playner sence) because the Article mentioneth rysing againe: vnderstanding these wordes for the Elect of God so far as man can gather by outward tokens: yet may the Elect departe from grace, though not wholly and finally, as doe the reprobate. For example, Dauid and Peter departed from grace, and fell into grievous sinnes: yet not so, but that some sparkes of grace, though ouerwhelmed for the time still remaine in Gods elected, till God by his spirite reclaime them to repentance.

ance. Sain^t Paule writing to ^{the} Gallathians, to whom as to gods elected, chap. 1. 3. he wisheth grace and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Iesus christ saith vnto them, vers. 6. I marvel that ye are so soone remoued away vnto another Gospel, fro him that had called you into the grace of christe, and chap. 3. 1. &c. O foolish Galathians, who hath bewitched you, that yee shoulde not obey the truth, to whome Iesus christ before was described in your sight and among you crucified? This onely would I learne of you, receaued ye the spirite by the workes of the lawe, or by the hearing of faith Preached? are ye so foolish that after yee haue begun in the spirite, ye would now be made perfect by the flesh? haue ye suffered so many thinges in vaine? &c. Had not these lost the grace of God, and S. Paule reclaimed them to repentance;

And so christ saith to the Angell (or B. of the church of Ephesus, apoc. 2. I know thy workes, & thy labour, & thy patience, and how thou canst not forbear them which are euil, & hast examined them which say they are apostles & are not, and hast found them lyers, & thou hast suffered & hast patience, and for my name sake hast laboured and hast not fainted. Here are the great graces reckoned by. But what followeth.

Neuertheles, I haue somewhat against thee, bicause thou hast left thy first loue, remember therfore, from whence thou art fallen, & repent, & do the first works, or else I will come against thee shortly, & wil remoue thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repēt. And is not this euen as much as here is said in this article; after we haue receaued the holy ghost wee maye depart from grace giuen and fall into sin, and by the grace of God, we may arise againe, and amend our liues?

And therfore, there is no error, nor anye suspicion of error in this saying: nor (as though it were doubtfully spoken) any neede of further explication: except our Bre. would euen seke to pick quarrels at words, to make the same suspicious, that are sound & plaine enough: or except they be of a contrary opinion to this article, thinking that if they once haue receaued the holy ghost & his grace, they be so pure & sure euer after, that they can neuer sin: at least, they can neuer fall into any notorious sin. But although I pray both for them & vs, that we may not depart from grace, by falling into any such grieuous, & notorious sin: yet much more, that we fall not into that presumptuous sin, that we should be so puffed by in conceit of our puritie, as to think we cannot depart fro grace, & fall into sin, & notorious sin also. For so our Bre. should themselves, maintaine a most grosse and palpable, yea a most dangerous error & condēned heresie. For although we must not wauer in doubt betwixt feare & hope, distrust & faith, for our saluatiō, but haue a firme hope & full confidence, in ^{the} eternal good purpose promises & mercies of god in christ (as ^{the} very first words of ^{the} article of predestination & election witnesseth) y we are of the number of his Elected to saluation, wherof god hath bouchsased vs good tokens, besides the pledge of his spirite, certifieng our spirit, that we are the sons

of God, and if sonnes, heyres: &c. yet except the spirite helpe our infirmities we should quickly fall into great temptations and enormities. And therefore we are willed for our parte to woorke our saluation with feare and trembling, to pray that we enter not into temptation, and euer to checke our presumption with these & such like sentences: If we shal say we haue no sins, we deceaue our selues and there is no truth in vs, yea, that the iuste falleth seuen times a day, and yet riseth againe, &c.

But I hope our brethren are not sotted in this grosse error of the anabaptists, neyther wee (God be prayes) do allowe of the other grosse errors of the papists, that the elected can finally utterly depart fro grace. But, firmum stat fundamentum, deus nouit qui sunt sui.

Our Brethrens
sclaunder of
the Bishops
for diuers grosse & pal-
pable errors.

Neither is there any error in any of these our articles, nor any of the other articles of the booke. And therefore, I meruaile that they say, diuers godlye and learned Preachers offered to speake against diuers grosse and palpable errors that had escaped the Bishops decrees.

If there were anye so grosse, that they were palpable; and so many to, that there were diuers of them: and that (naming for example, these two matters) they conclude with this generalitie, saying, and such like matters: though we haue cleared our selues sufficiently heerein, and are (by the grace of God) ready to enter, eyther into the apologie of our selues, or to make the acknowledgement of all those diuers errors, and disclaime them, when they shalbe specified and so proued: yet is not this well done of our brethren, to burthen vs with any, especially with grosse and palpable errors, and those diuers, and not so much as name them, that we might see them, and forsake the. For this leaueth in the readers mind, a shetwoe suspicion, of further errors in these articles.

But we craue (in the feare of God and in the testimony of a good conscience) all mens good opinion, in this behalfe towards vs, till our brethren, or any other, be he Papist, Anabaptist, or whosoever, shall burthen vs expressly with this or that error by name: and then, if we cannot throughlye cleere our selues, let them condemne vs, but till then, christian charity ought to hold vs guiltlesse.

And of these (I trust) we haue sufficiently acquit our selues; as for other, we are to aunswere in our defence, when we shall haue heard their accusation. But and they be such as these, (because they tel vs before hand, & such like:) I hope in God we shall do well enough, and had those matters that they suppress, bin worse than these, I suppose they would not haue opened the, and folded vp those on this fashion. But if they be forth coming, we neede not long to heere of them we shall haue them, I warrant you, with a recumbentibus, all in tyme, in the meane time, welcome be the grace of God. But let vs now see, how our brethren conclude, and rattle by our Bishops for these articles, and for all the other matters that they haue charged them with.

If this (say they) be not to practise Lordship over Faith: to set downe ^{with proues} decrees of religion, which must be accepted of all men without eyther ^{The lear-} reason or testimonie of the scripture to prooue them, and no man per- ^{ned disc.} mitted to shewe any reason or scripture, that enforceth his conscience to the contrarie, but onely to hang vpon the authority of bishops: let ^{pag. 136.} some other declare, what Paule meaneth, 2 cor. 4. where he denieth that he would exercise anye Lordship over the Fayth of the Corinthians.

Our bretheren shewe heere a manifest prooffe, howe true that Article is, which they saye, was set downe by the Bishops and the conuocation, that the elect maye departe from grace, For I account of our bretheren, as of the number of Gods elected. Yet, if they had not in this their learned discourse departed or fallen to much from grace, would they, or coulde they haue so fallen from the truth heerein by such vntrue and notozious sclanders, thus to seeke the utter disgracing and defacing of the Bishops: haue they prooued, or can they prooue anye one article or decree of Fayth and Religion, wherein the bishops haue taken vpon them any such Lordship, or anye Lordship at all ouer our Fayth: doth not euen the very former article of these two last, cyted by our bretheren themselves against the Bishops, for the distinction of the Canonieall bookes, fully discharge the Bishops of this sclander? that holy Scripture conteyneth all thinges necessary to saluation, so that, whatsoeuer is not read therein, nor may be proued therby, is not to be required of any mā, that it should be beleued as an Article of Fayth, or be thought requisite or necessary to saluation.

Bridges.

Do they, which with their bretheren in the conuocation doe set downe this decree for faith and Religion, practise Lordship ouer our fayth, or set downe decrees of religion which must bee accepted of all men, without eyther reason or testimonie of the Scripture to prooue them, and no man permitted to shewe anye reason or Scripture, that inforceth his conscience to the contrarie, but onely to hang vpon the authoritie of Bishops: When the Bishops in most plaine wordes renounce all such authoritie, and referre it onely to the canonieall Scripture? who may not see, (if he will not wilfully, of too much affection blindfold himselfe) the apparance of this sclander?

Article 6.

But our Bretheren say, they haue set downe the decrees without eyther reason or testimony of the scripture to proue the. I graunt it, & for some, they haue so done, neyther is it the nature of brieft & summarie Articles which in Synodes are agreed vpon, after that they haue bin by reason and Scripture clarely proued, and are apparant: to haue them set out with their proues annexed to them, which is another point beside the Articles. In the ordinances Ecclesiasticall of the Church of Genena, and the orders of the schole of the said Citie, set out in french An. 1578. of the which many are of faith and religion, and in their summarie of the Christian Doctrine anerronious.

nered, do they still adioyne their prooues by reasons & testimonies of the Scripture. And ~~have~~ not all the most auncient counsels (which are greater ~~than~~ our conuocations) in all their articles and decrees, kept the selfe same order, most briefly and plainly, to set downe the naked article by it selfe? & so thus haue they set downe also the articles of their creedes. And so is the summary of our Faith commonly called the Apostles Creede, set downe in most short, plaine and simple wordes and sentences, without annexing the reasons or testimonies of Scripture that confirme them. For when these ~~ἀξιώματα~~, or principles, gathered as capitall conclusions, and resolutions of the scripture are thus set downe, if they bee not such, nor haue the cleere prooue and ground of Scripture for them, they will quickely appeare in this their nakednesse, and quickely shewe their shame to all the worlde, as doe the Papistes decrees whiche they set forth, so soone as euer they come to the touchstone, to be examined and prooued by the Scripture, they molter away, and resolute to banitie.

Let our bretheren nowe (a Gods name) take this our booke of articles, and whetse all their wittes, and with all their learned discourses set vpon it, examine and trye it peece meale thorow and through euery sentence worde, syllable and type in it, if they finde anye thing contrarie to god and sounde reason, yea, contrarie to our dissnant from the Canonically Scriptures: then saye, our Bishops practise Lordship ouer our Fayth, and set downe orders of Religion which must bee accepted of all men, without eyther reason, or testimonie of Scripture to proue them, and no man permitted to shewe any reason or Scripture, that inforceth his conscience to the contrary, but onely to hang vpon the authority of Bishops.

But if they cannot finde anye thing in these decrees, orders, and Articles, nor anye coulde finde it then, nor coulde euer since, nor euer shalbe able (and there was then in the conuocation, libertie enough, and hath euer bin since, and still is, being bled in that lawefull and reuerent manner that is requisite for the treaty of such matters) which yet coulde neuer, nor, I hope, shall euer be conuinced of errour: then let our bretheren (for verie shame or rather for loue of truthe) peside, and reuoke these foule sleanders on the Bishops, and inderbe on all the conuocation, and on all the realme and Church of Englande, that hath established the allowance of these articles: or rather on the Articles themselves, which they sleander to be decrees of Religion without eyther reason or testimonie of the Scripture to prooue them, and that they onely hang vpon the authority of Bishops, and so are mere doctrines of men, and that they are Errors grosse and palpable. Thus through the sides of the Bishops, are these Articles and our Faith and Religion wounded by these our Bretheren, as though not onely our Bishops, but all the Cleargie, the realme, the doctrine doctrine and all, were as ill or worse than the Papistes, so farre hath this immoderate heate of their inconsiderate zeale, inflamed their passions and patience against the lawfull authority of the Bishops.

Nowe, when our Bretheren haue thus in their eager pursuite of the Bishops authoritye, rased by this foule sclander on the decrees: yet at length beginning to thinke better of the matter, and that it might bee, some bodye would perhaps take the paynes, to searche these Articles, since they were defamed of so grosse and palpable errors, and to bee without reason, nor grounded of the woordes of GOD: and in perusing of them might finde them, (as they are indeede) to bee moste clere and sounde from all Error, and manye of them (where reason is required) hauing excellent reasons also annexed, and all to bee altogether grounded on the woordes of God, whereof they were but summes and Capitall principles: so that, if this their sclander, bypon the present viewe of them woulde vanish away, though it woulde cast a grosse and palpable myste of error, to him that woulde barely on their credite beleue them: Well, yet for all that, haue at the Bishops one flyinge moe, and it bee but for a parting blowe, or for a friendly shakinge handes at the farewell.

For (say they) although their decrees were neuer so perfect.

Then, say I, their sclanders were very shamefull.

Yet (say they) it were an example of tyrannicall dominion, neyther to giue reasons to satisfie the ignorant themselves, nor to heare or confute that which might bee alledged againste them by others, but for a fewe Lorde Bishops, incomparison of all the conuocation, to sit by themselves, and order all thinges at their pleasures, as though the Gospell sprang first from them, or had come vnto them onely; it saoureth of nothing so much as of Popish tyrannie.

This is no lesse notorious a sclander, than the other. There is none of the Conuocation house, but in the debating of any matter pronounced, maye bee throughly heard, behauing himselfe in such order as is desired. Neither woulde the Bishops disbaire eyther then, or at anye other time, their selues to satisfie the ignorant. But whome meane they by this ignorant, that should be brought into the conuocation house, or come before the Bishops there assembled? would they haue it that euery ignorant person of the common people, should come before the Bishops, and desire of them the satisfaction of their ignorance? or doe they meane themselves the faithfull Ministers, that haue in this their learned discourse, made a brieft & playne declaration (as they called it) concerning the thinges that are their desires? and will they then acknowledge their ignorance in these matters? & desire the Bishops to satisfie them with reason, this were a good hearing if they would thus doe. Though they were not chosen to be any of the house, yet and they would so doe, as they were neuer denyed, so would I undertake they should be easily admitted, to come euen to the Bishops themselves & there in due manner to acknowledge their ignorance, desiring to be satisfied with reason given by the Bishops vnto them. They should finde the Bishops reasonable enough, without any tyrannicall dominion ouer them: or if the Bishops would vse anye insolencie or tyrannicall dominion, they should not be suffered, vpon due complaint, and prooffe thereof. But what reason would satisfie them, that cannot so much as speake of these matters, without vaunt of euery speeche of theirs, to be a learned discourse: yea, that cannot speake in print vppon aduised deliberation, but in such a choller, and with such intemperate speeches as these are: Is it likely these learned men would acknowledge their ignorance, and would desire to be satisfied, or be satisfied indeede with reason, as they ought to be, if they might haue reasons by the Bishops themselves giuen vnto them?

Yes, that they would, if the Bishops would heare them, or confute that which might be alleaged against them by others.

Ah, then I perceiue, there is a further drift in this desire, than to acknowledge their ignorance, & desire to be satisfied with the Bishops reasons giuen vnto the: For now on a suddaine, their ignorance is turned to knowledg & to such knowledge, that they professe beforehand, the Bishops must heare them what? to confesse their ignorance, or to desire to learne the Bishops reasons?

No, but the Bishops must heare, or confute that which might be alleaged against them by others.

So that, they must needes dispute with the Bishops themselves, and with no meener persons of all the conuocation house, and if the Bishops will not heare or confute that, whatsoever it be, which might be alleaged against them by others, then the Bishops vse tyrannicall dominion.

But would they be contented, if the Bishops would confute them, yea, if they confuted that, that might be alleaged against them by others?

But when would these others say, they were confuted? they reckon before hand to confute, when whatsoever it were without al exceptiō, which might be alleaged, be it neuer so strong reason, or neuer so firmly grounded on the word of God, by the bishops or by any others: were they neuer so many or neuer so excellently learned, if they be against them, they beleeue they will alleage that against them that will confute them quite & cleane. And all this they must be heard thoroughly, till they haue done it.

Must they so? and what if they were neuer able to doe it?

Not able quoth hee? doubt yee of that? that they were not able to confute all the Bishops? if they be but heard till they haue done speaking, their very sayings are confutations of al that might be alleaged against them by others, eyther the Bishops, or all the whole conuocation.

What? doe our brethren meane to be heard thus: they challenge here the Bishops hard, for sitting by themselves, and ordering all thinges at their pleasures, as though the Gospel sprang first from them, or had come vnto them onely: but howsoever the Bishops would attempt thus to order all thinges, which if they would, could not be suffered, neyther indeede doe they, nor attempt to doe; yet if we shall looke better into the matter, how far of are our bretheren from playing all these partes? they haue hitherto urged many thinges, and some vpon their owne mere conclusions and bare words; yea, we haue not hitherto in all this learned discourse, heard one true and substantiall prooffe out of Gods worde alleaged for the Doctors to bee debarred from preaching; for the Pastors to haue no superiour among them, in any standing dignity, authority and gouernment of Iurisdiction; for a consistorye of Ecclesiasticall Seniors, that may not teache but gouerne onely, to bee elected in euery congregation: for the Deacons not to meddle with teaching, but onely with the care of the poore and of the collections and distributions: for the excommunications to be made by this consistorye of not teaching Gouerniours; for the Pastors to be made in Synodes onely, after they are elected by the people with holding vp their handes: and that they cannot bee made Ministers but of this or that place; & cannot be counted Ministers being out of that place. And that where such preachers are not, there can bee no publike prayers nor sacraments administred, &c. What one of these points; and a number more, hath bin proued by any one cleere testimonie, or necessary consequent of the Scripture, or by any one substantiall reason for the prooffe of them; and what else in effect is this, than but to order all these thinges at their pleasures? And when they take on with all the Bishops, as though by their former industries and labours, they their selues had not receaued this light of the Gospell, which God bee praysed wee haue, if wee can vse it thankfully: or as though they were not by the Bishops made Ministers of the Gospell, if they haue any Ministerie at all thereof, and be not meere lay men: is not this, euen as though the Gospell (so far as the light of these controuersies commeth) vnto and their Ministerie thereof, sprang first from them, or had come vnto them onely, if not to our Bishops, nor to anye of our conuocations, nor to all the clergie of our Church of England but onely to them that set these thinges abroacher: and what now? shall wee conclude on them, as they do on the Bishops; it saoureth nothing so much as of popish tyranny? whereof saoureth this? first, to put backe the Princes supremacie in Ecclesiasticall causes, till all their Eccl. tetrarchie be par-tes among them, in such maner as wee haue already heard; and then, to pull downe all the dignities and authorities of Archebishops, Bishops, and all other Ecclesiasticall superiour Prelates. And to set vp themselves, euerye one to bee a full Bishoppe in his owne seuerall congregation; what though not Lordship in name, but M. Bishop, yet in rule and authoritye ouer all in his congregation to bee euen a Lordship: to suffer no superiour Pastor ouer him in his Iurisdiction, but eche one equall to the best; and hee, as though hee were in his territorye euen another newe little Pope sitting in his pontificalibus, with his consistorie of gouernors, as though it were a Colledge or Senate of a newe kinde of Cardinales, as the hingins that holde vp the doxes of Ecclesiasticall regiment and discipline: with a new mixte kinde of gouernors semi-secular, and dimi-ecclesiasticall Seniors, to sit by the themselves rounde aboute this Episcopall Pastor, ouer ruling all the congregation, yea, whosoener were inhabiting in þ parish, Knight, Lord, Earle, Duke, Prince, Queene, King, or Emperour, they must all of them, for all discipline and Ecclesiasticall regiment, be ouer-ruled by him, & by these his Gouerning Elders sitting about him. Of what sauoureth this? Of dominion? of Poperie? of tyrannie? of confusion? of pride? of ordering all things at their pleasures? besides what dangers else, or worse thā yet we see not? if our bishops shoulde thus retallie these thinges vnto our Bretheren, woulde they not (trowe you) pay home the reckoning?

Our Brethrens
accusation of our Bishops.

But as though they were not yet on euen handes, but that there were a greate oddes in this reckoning; and as though the Bishoppes were not to bee accounted comparable; nor for Learning, Study, Iudgement, Zeale, Example, they were so woorthy of their authoritie, as these our Bretheren are, to haue this newe kind of Eccl. gouernment; they obiect vnto the bishops their non sufficiencie in these thinges.

Whereas otherwise (saye they) it is well knowne, they are not all of the best learned, nor all of the longest study, nor all of the soundest Iudgement, nor all of the greatest zeale, nor all of the best Example, and therefore not meetest to be the onely determiners in Ecclesiasticall matters, to the preiudice of the whole Synode.

Our Brethrens
commendatio
of themselves.

As for this conclusion, wee shall come to it in his turne. This comparison in the antecedent, is somewhat obious, to hypraide to the Bishoppes, that they are not all of the best in these thinges, as though there were some other in the Synode, better heerein than they. Belike they meane those diuerse godlye and learned Preachers, that they sayde before before, offered to speak; or else some other of themselves, that they woulde haue to bee also of the Synode. For, although it were a pretie pollicie, to commit vs together among our selues, with an emulation agaynst our bishops, as not so learned, &c. as they woulde haue vs of the Connocation house, thinke our selues to be: yet they lightly giue not this to any of vs, to be counted eyther learned, or studious, or sounde in iudgement, or of greate zeale, or of best example. But they oftentimes commende themselves for all these thinges, to be godlie, wise, graue, and zealous men; they are those that Preache moste diligently, praye most feruently, and minister the Sacramentes moste reuerently: they are the faithfull Ministers that seeke the Churches reformation; and still, looks vp to the top of euery leafe, and there hangeth by this Iuie Garland to tolle on the reader, A Learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment.

As for our Bishops, tush, for them, it is well knowne, they are not all ^{our Bishops.} of the best learned, nor all of the longest studie, nor all of the greatest zeale, nor all of the best example.

I praye you brethren, of what saoureth this? Surely it saoureth not all of the best learning neyther, (in my iudgement) if not rather of that learning, whereof Saint Paule sayth, scientia inflat. Well (howe vn-founde soeuer they shall accounte my simple Iudgement) woulde God their learning saoured a little more of lowlie humility, and of Christian charitie than it doth; to thinke better of other their brethren in these qualities, namely of their betters, than of them selues.

And yet, if one shall examine these qualities particularly; what cause haue ^{Learning.} they to vphayde their Learning to the Bishops? I wisse, they may easilie enter comparison with many of these our Brethren. And if they shoulde all bee measured by this Learned discourse, might not these wordes returne to their Pastors? that neyther they are all of the best learning: except they haue better learning, that they keepe yet in store for an after reckoning.

And as for long studie in the moste of them, there neede no long studie ^{Longe studie.} for an aunswere. All the worlde may see that, in the peares of the studentes do not their selues in their preface confesse? If any shal obiect, that the graue authority of Archbishops & Bishops, shall receaue a checke, whilst they are brought to deale with those, whom they iudge few, yong, vnlearned, & not comparable to themselves: but now they dare compare both in long studie & in learning to, with the B. and giue the check to, as yong as they be, yea (in their opinion) to giue the check-mate, and that with a patune.

But what sayd they there to this obiection? did they not say: let vs graunt the greate difference which they make of yeares and learning; yet the speeche of Elihu, giueth them sufficient aunswere, that this vnderstanding is not tyed to such outwardes respects, but to the reuelation of Gods spirite. Here (as it were) they renounce they vaunt of long studie, in which they could not for shame, make any comparison, & therfore they flie to the example of yong Elihu, & to the reuelatio of gods spirite; as though their learning, and these platformes, came by reuelation to the on a sudden. and doe they now vpon y mattering of a little learning; or for the small time, be it of their earnest studie, come in as it were vying withall the B. making exception of none, but obiect to them all, that they are not all of the best learned, nor all of longest studie?

But what neede long study, for greate or best learning among them, when their gouerning Elders in euery congregatio, shal go for men learned in diuinity, that haue little leasure to studie long, or perhaps at all? and euery Pastor holden for a learned diuine and for a learned Preacher, although he were but new made a Pastor?

And as for sound iudgement, they measure y, after their own iudgement accusation.

Sound iudg-
ment.

and conceite, esteeming euery mans iudgement, albeit he be of neuer so long studie or greate learning, to bee no sounde iudgement, if it sounde not soundlie in their forestalled Iudgement.

As also their ouer great & preposterous zeale condemneth all the Bishops, and all vs their bretheren in the Gospell of Christ, to be but Popish and without all zeale, if wee yeilde not straight way to them, in all the deuises of these newe platfoymes.

The best example.

And no maruell then, if the shoue in this among the residue, that the Bishops be not all of the best example. Would God, both they and wee, and all our bretheren were, if not of best, yet of better example than wee be. For to say the truth, the better of both, yea the best of vs all therein may be amended. Neuerthelesse though it be an offence vnto the weake, and a stepne vnto the authoritie: yet not so, but that the authoritie it selfe is good, and maye stand euen in those persons, that are not all of best example, no, nor all of the greatest zeale: nor all of soundest iudgement: nor all of longest studie: nor all of the best learned neither: but, if the Bishops were in these thinges inferiour to some other, or to them, or any of them haue any defecte therein: yet ought not our bretheren thus to insult vpon them, being their fathers that made them Ministers of the Gospell, and hauing authority ouer them in the Church: were it but for the reuerence and dignitie of their authoritie, except inderde they were open enemies to the Faich, or manifest wicked in the example of their conuersation.

It should better (me thinkes) befeeme our brethzen, to followe the shame fastnesse of Sem and Iapheth, than the shamelesnesse of Cham, in deriding and reuealing his fathers shame.

But what do I speaking this of those Children that are growne into such disbaime, that they will not acknowledge them to be their fathers?

If they saye, that in these words they do not thus accuse them all, in saying: they are not all of the best learned, nor all of the longest studie, nor all of soundest iudgement, nor all of greatest zeale, nor all of best example?

What then do they meane by these so intricate speeches? bicause they still place this word all so cunningly in the middle, that as it may be called in question, whether they referred it to these matters as when we saie a thing is not all of the best, that is to say, it is but meane or base, not all of the soundest that is to saye, rotten or corrupted; not all of the longest, that is, but short; not al of the greatest, that is but little: or els, that they referre the worde all, not to the matter, but to the persons, as they are not all of the best, that is to saye some of them are not of the best: and so for the residue of these qualities.

In which later sence if they shall meane it, that though they bee not all of the of the best learned, yet some of the are of the best learned, of the longest studie, studie, of the soundest iudgement, of the greatest zeale, and of the best example: as it is apparant, & they cannot for very shame denye these things, or the most of them, in some of our Bishoppes: why then doe they not follow those fewer some, than thus for some not so good in these things, to shake off all. And yet it is well knowne also, that there are many other (God be praised) besides the Bishops, that may compare with any of these our Bretheren the learned discoursers, in any, yea in all these things. But their quarrell is here pretended onely, or chiefly at the Bishoppes, concluding agaynst them upon these premises:

And therefore not meete to be the onely determiners in Ecclesiasticall matters, to the preiudice of the whole Synode.

This conclusion wee may safely admit, were the Bishops neuer so excellent. It is not meete, neither doe they, nor can they, take this upon them, which were indeebe to the preiudice of the whole Synode. For the Synod receiveth this preiudice by them, nor giueth such authoritie to them, to be the onely determiners in Ecclesiasticall matters. For every one that is any particular member of the whole Synode hath both his deliberative and determinative voyce, except wee shall speake of such determination as recollecting all their severall determinations, pronounceth publikely the sententiall and finall determination of the matters, in the name and authoritie of them all, as James did, being Bishop of Ierusalem. And yet neither so, all the Bishops doe it: but one and the chiefeest among them, as the full resolution of the whole Synode.

But how will our Bretheren cleere themselves of this, whereof they accuse our Bishoppes? for they pretending to be Pastors, and that Pastors and Bishops be but al one: they will then be Bishops, every one that pretendeth to be a Pastor. Now, though these Bishops admit their governing Elders to come to the Synode, and to be parts also of the Synode with the Pastors, saying, that the Synode consisteth principally of Pastors, Elders, Teachers, and men of wisdom, iudgement and gravitie, as it were of necessarie regents: pag. 113. And hereto they urge the assemblie, Act. 15. the Apostles and Elders came together to consider upon this matter, &c. yet when they come to the determination euen where they say pag. 117. the Synode hath to determine what shalbe observed in particular charges, as of the tyme, place, and forme of preaching, and praying, and administring of the Sacraments: they so make themselves to bee the onely determiners in all Ecclesiasticall matters, that disoayning any other should so much as knowe them, they say.

For who should bee able to knowe what order, comelineesse, and edification requireth, according to Gods word, but they that be teachers and preachers of the same vnto all others? for it is absurde that they should bee taught by such in these small things, as ought to learne the trueth of them in all matters.

Doe they not here (make their Ecclesiasticall Gouvernours and Elders to be no teachers, and yet principall parts, whereof the Synod consisteth, and necessary regents; & yet when it cometh to the regencie inuerse, to be cleane excluded from all regencie and determining of these matters, except they should determine that they knowe not: What shall we say then: whatsoeuer is decreed amongst them, that is to say, among these Bishops, that must be called the determination of the whole Synode. So that no man must be suffered to speake any thing agaynst it, be it neuer so reasonable or agreeable to the word of God. pag. 135. Tush, what reason you any longer of reason, or of agreeablenesse to the word of God? Haue ye not your aunswere already: Who should bee able to knowe what order, comelineffe, and edification requireth according to Gods worde, but they that be teachers and preachers of the same vnto all others? What? and will you take vpon you to bee teachers and preachers, because ye are Ecclesiasticall gouernours, and because ye are parts whereof the Synode consisteth? or are ye so cranke þe be necessarie regents? What of all this? we tell you agayne, that sure ye bee not teachers and preachers, and so no Pastors nor Bishoppes: It is absurd that they should bee taught by you, which ought to learne the trueth of vs the Pastorall Bishops in all matters. And therefore, whosoever of you all will not subscribe to all such things as we the Bishops decree, must bee excluded out of the Conuocation.

If this bee not to practise Lordship (though not ouer the faith (yet ouer al the Synode, and ouer all the Churches, in these matters, no man being permitted to shewe any reason or scripture that inforceeth his conscience to the contrary: no not their Gouvernors themselues to quitch, for feare they should heere be snatched vp for halting: but onely to hang vpon the authoritie, of these newe vpstart Pastorall Bishops: let some other declare, what this meaneth, and how farre this differeth from tyrannicall dominion, & from ordering all things at their pleasures, as though the Gospell sprang from them, or had come to them onely. It saouureth of nothing so much as of Popish tyrannie: (except of somewhat worse) whereas otherwise, it is well knowne that they are not all of the best learned, but many of them very simple schollers: nor all of longest studie, but mere children (or no students in Diuinity) euen the other day: nor all of soundest iudgement, nor able to iudge of many controuersies, nor to iudge of or sound to the depth of these, nor al of them sound, nor soundly agreeing together in iudgement of them. Nor all of the greatest zeale, though it bee the greatest thing in them, but according to knowledge not so great as theirs: Nor all of the best example, but some good, some bad, and one with another as all other men, and what followeth:

And

And therefore not meete (how sayne soeuer they would, and take it heere vpon them) to bee the onely determiners in Eccl. matters, to the preiudice of the whole Synod, and of all the gouerning Elders, that are parts of the whole Synode with them. So playnly in all these thinges doe our Brethren euen in their owne words, with a very little windlasse turning the home agayne, while they would powre out all these reproches on our Bishops, reaching short of them, spill them by the way, and all to defile and bespall them selues therewith. As for our bishops, as they neither take any such authoritie in the Synod vpon them, ouer the Pastors, as these Episcopall Pastors take vpon them ouer their gouerning Elders; and so our Bishops preiudice not the whole Synod, nor any part thereof, as they do theirs; nor our Synodes finde themselves preiudiced or agreed with the authoritie of our Bishops: but both our Bishops and our whole Synodes finde themselves sclaundered, iniured, defaced, and so, much preiudiced by these speeches and deuises of our Brethren.

Whether our Bishops or these Pastors do more preiudice the synod.

As among other, this conclusion following is a great sclaunder of them: Wherefore, it is greatly (say they) to be desired, that our Synodes also which are so farre out of order, may bee reformed according to the Scripture and the example of the Primitiue Church.

That our Synodes are so farre out of order, as our Brethren pretend, (except they haue some fresh proues to come) they haue not yet proued it. This is but an apparant vntrueth and infamie of them. The refovrning of Synodes according to the Scripture and the example of the Primitiue Church, so farre as the Scripture giueth either rule or example of them, is already in practise, if our Brethren would bee thankfull to God for it. As for the particuler abuses, they may much more easily be refovrned, than by such Synodes and Councils as are heere deuised.

That all things (say they) may bee done with such modestie, grauitie and iudgement, as they were by the Apostles and Elders. A.C. 15.

Pea forsooth, this at length, is a good small conclusion and determination of this matter. I am glad our Brethren yet after all these ruffling stormes, end thus caimelie, with this wholesome aduice of modestie, grauitie and iudgement. Which three poynts if they had all this while set before them, at least wise, if they had followed them: they would neuer thus lauidly haue defaced all our Synodes and Conuocations, with all the Bishops, the Pastors and other officers in them, albeit there had bene some defects or abuses of them, which might with modestie, grauitie and iudgement bee well reformed, the lawes, and orders of them already established (with the Bishops, Pastors and officers authorities reserved) remayning intier and still continuing.

Our brethrens conclusion.

The

The argument of the 16. Booke.

IN this last Booke (after their profession, that they haue now set forth the whole Ecclesiasticall Ministerie, with all the dueties and authorities perteyning to these lower re-trarches) they here graunt, that the place requireth, to treat of the Ciuill Magistrates authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters.

First, of the right understanding the title of the Princes supremacie, and how farre forth they will moue no controuersies thereof. Of their graunt to the Princes supremacie ouer the Ecclesiasticall persons, with their cautions of the Popes supremacie, and of Princes casting off the Popes yoke. Of the Princes supremacie also in the matters Ecclesiasticall, and of the Pastors supremacie therein aboue the Prince, and of the Popes presumption in these matters. Of the Princes authoritie in making lawes of Ecclesiasticall matters, and of their exception for not confounding the Princes and the Pastors offices, and of the Pastors consent. Whether the Princes authoritie reach no further, than to make ciuill lawes for Ecclesiasticall matters. And how farre the Pope also allowed Princes to make such lawes. Whether the Princes authoritie stretch not to their dealing in the making of Ecclesiasticall lawes, but onely for the charge to obserue them, that by the Clergie are already made, and for the bodily punishment of those that violate them: whether this bee any more than the very Papistes and the Pope graunteth, and whether euen this also doe not touch these learned discourfers. Of the authoritie thoritie and dealing of the auncient Princes before Christes comming, and of the Christian Princes since his comming. Of our Bretherens reuerence to the auncient Christian Princes in the Romaine Empyre, and in the Kingdoms of France, Spayne, and of this our Britanie. Of the Emperours authoritie & dealings in Ecclesiasticall matters in the greatest Councils, and of their Ecclesiastical sanctions. Of the French Kings authoritie and dealing in the same. Of the authoritie and dealings of the Kings in Spayne. Of the authoritie and dealing of the Kings in England, and of the Ecclesiasticall lawes of the auncient Saxon Kings. Of the Princes dealing herein by the aduice of their learned Clergie, and whether their aduice inferre their sole superiour authoritie. Of the Princes seruice of God their father, and seruing the comoditie of the Church their mother. Of the testimonies of Esa 49. 23. Psalm. 2. 11. 1. Tim. 2. 2. and of the Papistes and our Bretherens applying the same. How farre the endes and benefites of a Prince doe stretch: and how the Prince is both a childe, and yet withall a foster father or Nurse vnto the Church.

All which being declared for the authoritie of the Prince: our Bretheren make their Epilogus of all this learned discourse.

First concerning their owne perswasion for this prescribed forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, to bee agreeable to Gods word, and cōsenting to the example of the Primitiue Church. And of their auouching that they be able so to proue it: and of their promise that when occasion shall serue, they will proue it so to bee. Of their solemne protestation why in the meane tyme they set forth this learned discourse, and what they seeke seeke herein. And of the true way to reformation. And of their mouing them that be in authoritie, to put this prescribed forme in praëtise. And of their offering vp their bookes hereof vnto the Parliament. And how this doing is cleane contrary to the chiefeſt poſitions in this learned diſcourſe. And of renewing agayne theſe controuerſies by diſputation. And of the euent of this forme if it ſhould be embraced. And of their deſire that either this forme preſcribed, or if not this, yet the like may be receiued: and how vncerteyne this deſire of theirs is: and how we may or may not ſee and iudge what is the vuttermoſt of their deſires herein. Of their ſclaunders of the preſent ſtate, and that wee are the aduerſaries of Gods trueth, and how wee be hinderers of their proceeding to reformation. And of this learned diſcourſe to be their publike teſtimoniall to the preſent age, and that the poſteritie may know that the trueth in this tyme was not vnknoſne, nor vnteſtified, concerning the right regiment of the Church, and whether this can be knowne hereby, yea, or no. Of their diſordered ſpeeches agaynſt our regiment of the Church, and whether it be receiued of the moſt parte of Poperie, and how this redoundeth on our Bretheren. How they accuſe theirs and our godly fathers of neglecting in this poynt for deliuering our Eccleſiaſticall regiment to their children without contradiction, and how preiudiciall they complayne that this is vnto them. Laſt of all of their concluſion by prayer to God, for the pacification of theſe matters.

And

AND now that we haue set forth the whole Ecclesiasticall Ministerie, ministrie.

Thanks bee giuen to God, that now at length our Bretheren here confesse (for I hope they say it not for a vaunt) that they haue set forth the whole Ecclesiasticall Ministerie with all the dueties and authorities that pertaine vnto it. So that, if now either they themselves or any other among them, adde any thing, or alter any thing, of the dueties or of the authoritie of the Ecclesiastical Ministerie: then is either this or that conuincd, not to bee the whole Ecclesiasticall ministerie, nor all the dueties and authorities that pertaine vnto it, as here they say this is. But we haue seene in perusing this their learned discourse, in how many things, and those of moment materially pertainyng to the Ecclesiasticall ministerie and to the dueties and authorities of the same, how they haue often altered and varied one from another, and runne into playne contradictions, besides a number of other, and other manner of popntes, that I could gather and set downe, and (GOD willing) shall at large, if our Bretheren shall call for them: onely now I note a fewe of those, that this learned discourse hath led me vnto: And therefore, either their other discourses, or this their learned discourse is not altogether as here they say according to the word of God.

The diuersities

And now, sith that they haue discoursed and set forth the whole, and all that they could or would, for their Ecclesiasticall ministerie, and all the dueties and authorities pertainyng vnto it: I beseech thee which art the Protestant reader hereof, in the feare of God, bearing thy selfe euen indifferently (as to those that on either parte, though dissenting in these matters the ritie.

And here now, when our Bretheren haue thus to the full, discoursed on the whole Ecclesiasticall ministerie, and all the dueties and authorities that pertaine vnto it: at length they begin to finde some leisure, to bethink themselves of the Christian Prince, and to giue him yet some remaynder at least, in the last lapping vp of all this learned discourse. So that, if the Christian Princes haue not the blessing before hande so plentifully powred forth, as vpon Iacob, to haue the dewe of heauen and fatnesse of the earth, and to bee Lovers ouer their Bretheren and honoured of their mothers children: yet as one boyne out of tyme (as they say by three hundred yeeres) and coming later, they shall not yet bee cleane forgotten, but shall haue at least a portion of Esaus blessing so farre forth, that they shall haue also a dwelling place in the fatnesse of the earth, and somewhat also of the dewe from heauen aboue. Yet they shall haue their liuing by the sworde: but they must serue their Brothers, till they get the maystrie, and breake their Brothers yoke from their neckes. And if they hold not themselves content with this blessing: let them goe further and fare worse, they get no more heere. For, their Bretheren haue come before them, and gotten away the blessings from them. All the whole gouernment of Ecclesiasticall matters, is giuen and parted into fower partes, and is made a fayre tetrarchie, of Doctor, the Pastor, the Gouernour, and the Deacon, these fower haue foreshallied in their seuerall shares and Iurisdiction, the gouernment, and ordering of all Ecclesiasticall matters. But yet since there is a fiftie parte of something left, and reserued for the Christian Prince: let vs see what that portion is, and how our Bretheren will also ordeyne and dispose thereof.

The lear-

pag. 138.

And now (saye they) that wee haue set forth the whole Ecclesiasticall ministerie, &c. The place requireth, that wee should also intreate of the authoritie of the Ciuill Magistrate in matters Ecclesiasticall.

The place required this long before. But let vs now take it while it is offered, least no place at all be left to the Christian Princes.

Of the title of the Princes supremacie, if it be truly vnderstood, we moue no controuersie, but that it doth properly appertaine to the ciuill Magistrate to bee the highest gouernour of all persons within his dominion, so that the soueraigne Empyre of GOD bee kept whole.

If the authoritie of the Christian princes supremacie be good, the title ^{raigne} expressing the same authoritie, is good also. And so, ^{Empire.} vice versa; if the title be good, the authoritie of the princes supremacie is likewise good. But ^{Bridges.} what meane they by this caution, that they say, of the title of the Princes The title of the Princes supremacie. supremacie, if it be rightly vnderstood? For if they denie the vnderstanding of it, as her Maiestie & her predecessors, and the Parliament, and the whole Realmes and Churches both of England and of Ireland do vnderstand it, then do they flatly deny that supremacie which her Maiestie claimeth and hath; and that both her Predecessors, her Maiesties most renowned father claimed, recovered, and had: and which also her Maiesties most godly Brother claimed and had: and that the Parliament and the whole Realmes & Churches of England and Ireland doe owe, acknowledge and yeld vnto her Maiestie, as they did before to her foresaide most noble predecessors. And how then do they moue no controuersie of it? Which to call in question, considering withall (besides the manifest right in the law of God) the danger of the penall lawes of this Realme prouided by statute, were very dangerous for the to do: besides the euill offence and example to the Papists, that would gladly lie in the wind for such advantage, that some of the Protestants themselves should now beginne, to moue controuersies, first of the title, and then of the authoritie of the christian Princes supremacie in Eccl. matters, and then of the vnderstanding of it, as though it had bin all this while not rightly vnderstood, or but ambiguously, which is so cleare, both in the matter it self & by the statutes thereon, & by diuerse that haue writtten & set forth the same plainly against the wangling Papists, and by open declaratiōs in arraignments of those that haue woorthily suffered for their obstinate deniall of the same: that almost no controuersie is made more cleare & plaine than is the vnderstanding thereof. And do our B. come in now at length (after all their putting backe the speaking of it) with granting to it, with this exception: If it be rightly vnderstood? Then I perceane they moue controuersie also of it for the right vnderstanding thereof. Well, what then? For we would not haue them yeld to it otherwise.

The vnderstanding of the title of supremacie.

Our Brethr. exception of Gods soueraigne Empire.

If it be rightly vnderstood (say they) we moue no controuersie of it, but that it doth properly appertaine to the ciuill Magistrate to be the highest gouernor of all persons within his dominion, so that the soueraigne Empire of God be kept whole.

This is a verie good vnderstanding of it, so that the soueraigne Empire of God be kept whole: God forbid that should be violated, invaded, or any iot thereof diminished by the Prince. Neither doth her Ma. or did her most woorthy father or brother, take vpon them, or we acknowledge any other supreme government. And therefore, for our Breth. her Ma. loyall subiectes, to cast forth such exceptions vnnecessarily, and where no pire entire,

cause is, thereby although to moue no controuerſie, yet to ingender ſuſpi-tion, that her Maieſty, her Father, and her Brother, claymed the title of ſupremacy other wiſe, than that the ſoueraigne Empire of God might be kept whole, this being one of the chiefest cauſes of their and her claime, euen that the ſoueraigne Empire of God might be kept whole: or that we do other wiſe yeeld to any ſupremacy of the Prince: this is neither here in them, or in any other dutifully done, but iniurious both to her Maieſty, and to all her obedient ſubjects that do yeeld it.

But ſince they will needs here make this exception, proteſting that they moue no queſtion of the title of the Princes ſupremacy, if it be rightly vnderſtood, and that this right vnderſtanding is onely this, ſo that the ſoueraigne Empire of God be kept whole: go to then, and let vs alſo haue this rightly vnderſtood withall, ſo that, none of all theſe four Tetrarchs, Doctor, Paſtor, Gouvernor, nor Deacon, ſoꝝ whome they contend, be vnderſtood to be God: noꝝ their Empire, for Gods Empire.

Gods empire kept whole by the Princes ſupremacie.

If they ſay, this can not well be graunted; bycauſe, though they be not God perſonally, noꝝ ſo their Empire Gods Empire, yet they be God repreſentatiuely, as Gods Miniſters, and deputies ouer his houſhold, and ſo their Empire or authoritie is Gods Empire, bycauſe it is Gods ordinance, and therefore, Gods Empire is ſtill by them kept whole: doth not all this fitte the Prince alſo: are not Princes in that repreſentatiue ſenſe called Gods? as David ſayth, Pſalme 82. God ſtandeth in the aſſembly of Gods, and iudgeth among Gods: and, I ſayd, ye are Gods: and ſo God himſelfe ſayd to Moſes concerning Aaron, He ſhall be as thy mouth, and thou ſhalt be to him as God, Exod. 4. ver. 16. and Rom. 13.
It is ſayd of the Prince, he is Gods miniſter, and his power is the ordinance of God.

Our Brethr.
graunt of the Prince
to be higheſt ouer the perſons.

But our Brethren haue yet another reſtraint, ſoꝝ they will graunt all this in manner aforeſaid: howbeit, they go no further here than ſoꝝ the perſons, ſoꝝ which they will moue no controuerſie, but that it doth properly apperteyne to the ciuill Magiſtrate, to be the higheſt Gouvernor of all perſons within his dominion. And do they here acknowledge then, in this vnderſtanding the title of the Princes ſupremacie, nothing elſe but that it doth properly appertaine to the ciuill Magiſtrate (meaning the ſoueraigne Chriſtian Prince) to bee the higheſt gouernour of all perſons within his dominion? Well, this is yet farre moze than the blind and rebellious Papists will graunt: Howbeit in ſome reſpect they will graunt thus much alſo.

But ſhal the Prince be gouernor likewise of them, that properly muſt be called Gouvernors?

And why not, if he muſt be aboue the Paſtor alſo, which is aboue them?
Howbeit, all this is granted here, as yet no further than ſoꝝ the perſons.

So is? This is but halfe of the title of the Princes Supremacie. Where is the matter wherein this Supremacy both consist, that is to say, in al matters or causes so well eccl. as tēporall? This is the materiall part of this title, & no lesse necessary than other of the persons, & is the chiefest point of this controuersie betwixt the Papists & vs. And do our B. now begin to stay here another while at this? Whē we may make a faire piece of work. What, is this part so recalled by already by any of the former tetrarches? Gouernors.
How farre
our Brethr.
graunt the Princes su-premacie ouer their Eccl. gouer-
nors.

Indee they saide very suspitionly to the matter, pag. 84. Therefore there ought to be in euery Church a Consistory or Seignory of Elders or Gouernors, which ought to haue the hearing, examination, and determining of all matters pertaining to discipline and gouernment of that congregation.

Pea (but say they) that sentence goeth further: which authoritie of theirs, neuerthelesse, ought to be moderated.

Or else (say I) far well cleane the Princes Supremacy in al eccl. matters; if these Gouernors authoritie in all matters, pertayning to discipline & gouernmēt of that cōgregatiō, be not moderated, and y^e wel moderated.

Yes (say they) it ought to be moderated, that their iudgement may be rightly accounted the iudgement of the holy Church.

Pea but (say I) how is it moderated, that it do not debarre the Supremacie of the Prince in all these matters?

Which thing (say they) cōsisteth in these 2. points, first that the Elders be elected & chosen by consent of all the cōgregation, mē of godlines & wisdom, in whō the whole church reposeth such cōfidence that they cōmit vnto thē their authoritie in hearing, & determining such matters, as without horrible confusion they can not performe themselues.

Why, but al this while, what is this to any point of the Princes authoritie in all this matter? Is there no better prouiso, for the Prince, in the 2. point of moderating the authority of these gouernors in Eccl. matters?

The 2. point (say they) for moderation of the Elders authoritie in such sort, that their sentence may be the sentence of the Church, is this: that whē the Consistory haue trauelled in examining of causes pertaining to Eccl. discipline, & agreed what iudgmēt ought to passe vpo the matters, they propound it to the whole multitude, that it may be confirmed.

Pea: is all the wind in that doze? Still the whole multitude? The whole Church? The whole congregation? As though all the authoritie in Eccl. matters commeth from them, as from the spring, and floweth to thē, as to the sea. They make the gouernors, which gouernors must with the Pastors make all the lawes, must heare & determine of all matters pertayning to discipline & to gouernment of that cōgregatiō: and whē they haue so don, al must be again referred to that cōgregation, & to the whole multitude of them, that it may be confirmed by their consent.

ouer all
persons.

What, and must it not come a little higher after them, to be at least propounded also to the Prince, that it may be also confirmed by his consent? No, no, no, beware that of all things: if it be once confirmed by the multitude of that congregation, it hath passed all his confirmations, and can haue no more godfathers, except it come to a Synode.

But there we haue already heard how the Prince hath sped, except that now we shall heare of any more. For there are some matters yet left to the Prince for his Supremacie to consist in, or else (besides a bare title it is meere nothing, no not of the persons neither, vntlesse withall it be in some matters.

Our Brethr.
reseruati-
on of the Princes Supremacie in the matters.

Well, but they will not yet tell vs of these matters til after wards. But thus farre they haue acknowledged for the persons, that the Prince is the highest gouernour of all persons within his dominion. Would not this haue bin very well & necessarily ioyned together vnto it, to know in what matters he is the highest of all the persons? Or else they may moue what controuersie on the Supremacie they shall please, or cleane deny it. But since they will stay a while vpon the Supremacie ouer all persons in the Princes dominions, & that with this promise, if it be rightly vnderstood, so that the soueraigne Empire of God be kept whole: let vs stay also to go together with them, and consider what stop or limax this is that stayes them here in their proceeding from the persons to the matters.

The learned disc.
pa. 138.
& 139

But herein resteth all the doubt, how this is truly to be vnderstood, & that shall wee best vnderstand by the contrarie: namely, by the vsurped tyrannie of Antichrist. For Antichrist did challenge vnto himselfe all authoritie both that which is proper to God, and that which is common to men. Therefore that the Pope claymed to be the onely head of the Church, from which the whole bodie receiued direction, and was kept in vnitie of faith: this was blasphemous against Christ, & therefore may not be vsurped of any ciuill Magistrate, no more than by the pope. Likewise, where he challengeth authoritie to alter, change, & dispence with the commandement of God, to make new articles of fayth, to ordaine new Sacraments, &c. This is also blasphemous & ought not to be vsurped of any ciuill prince: on the other side, where he challengeth authoritie ouer all princes, and so ouer all the Clergie, that hee did exempt them from the ciuill iurisdiction, this is contumelious, and iniurious against all Christian kinges. And therefore euerie prince in his owne dominion, ought to cast off the yoke of his subiection, and to bring all Eccles. persons vnto his obedience and iurisdiction. Here haue we the first part of the title of supreme government ouer all persons.

Bridges

If all the doubt resteth herein, how this is truly to be vnderstood; that the soueraigne Empire of God may be kept whole: then is the Supremacie that her Ma. holdeth, and that we acknowledge, due, & properly apper-appertayneth to the Prince, without all doubting of the matter. And if ^{gives rem-} our Bishops wil acknowledge all that supremacie vnto the Prince, saue ^{paralyses.} that supremacie, which is proper to God, and saue that supremacie, or rather tyrannie which the Pope chalenged and vsurped. or which is agree- ^{The Christi-} able thereunto: we should some agree herein without moouing any con- ^{an Princes} trouerfie or doubt of this matter. Pea this should some decide al our other ^{supremacie} controuerfies. For first we confesse with our Bishops. that this Antichrist ^{farre diffe-} the Pope did, and doth challenge vnto himselfe all authoritie both that ^{rent from} which is proper to God, and that which is common to men. But so doth ^{the Popes.} not her Maiestie challenge, nor acknowledge any other authoritie, but that that is due and properly appertayning to the Prince vnder God, & common onely to those persons, or rather peculiar to them, that vnder God are the chiefe Soueraignes in their Dominions: We confesse also with our Bishops. that this Antichrist the Pope, claimeth to be that only heade of the Church, fro which the whole bodie receaued directio, & was kept in vnitie of faith: this his claime was (& is) blasphemous against Christ, & therefore may not be vsurped by any ciuill Magistrate, no more than by the Pope: Neither doth her Maiestie, or euer did, neither did her foresayd most royall Father & Brother, claime or vsurpe any such authoritie ouer us, or we acknowledge any such authoritie in them.

We confesse with our Bishops likewise, where he (meaning this Antichrist the Pope) chalengeth authoritie to alter, change, & dispense with ^{The blasphe-} the commaundementes of God, to make newe articles of fayth, to or- ^{mous cha-} dayne newe Sacramentes, &c. this is also blasphemous and ought not ^{lenge of the} to be vsurped of any ciuill Prince: Neither doth her Maiestie, or did her ^{Pope.} foresayde most noble Father and brother vsurp, or challenge any such au-thoritie, or we yelde it.

Caluine indeede did at the first so mistake it, that the most noble Prince K. Henric the 8. took vpon him the like authoritie, and therefore wrote against it verie inconsiderately. But afterwarde both in K. Edw. & in her Ma. perceiuing no such authoritie giuen or taken: he took no such offence at the claime of their authoritie, but approoueth the same, and in all due manner writeth to them.

We confesse also with our Bishops. on the other side, where he (to wit, this Antichrist the Pope) chalengeth authoritie ouer all Princes, & so ouer all the Clergie, that he did exempt them fro the ciuill iurisdiction, this is contumelious & iniurious against al Christian kings. Neither doth her Maiestie, or did her foresayde most noble Father & brother challenge any such authoritie ouer all Princes, nor ouer all the Clergie, except a due au-thoritie ouer al such inferiour Princes (because some states in the Realm may be included in the name of Princes vnder her Ma.) & ouer al those of the clergie, which are within her Ma. dominions, & are her lawfull subiects:

and these Tetrarkes
yoake.

neither exempteth she the Clergie fro al the ciuill iurisdiction, no: offeth in this her authority any contumely or iniurie, to al or against any christian Kings, or against other Soueraignes in their Dominions: neither do wee acknowledge any other, than such as is a lawfull authoritie in her Maiestie.

The Cler-giesholding their temporalties of the Prince.

And here as her Maiestie is free, & her title and authoritie right & due, in her own dominions ouer all vnder & vassaille Princes, in or of the same dominions, and ouer all the Clergie also, in or of all her Maiesties dominions aforesaide, concerning the ciuill iurisdiction, wherof so farre as the Clergie hold any portion, or any other ciuill priuiledge, prerogative, franchise, or immunitie, they hold it & reacknowledge it, in all due obedience and thankfulness, as deriued fro the munificence of her Ma and her royal Progenitors. So let our Brethren herein take heede, how they & their new Clergie of consistory gouernors in their Sanedrins, vnder pretence of enquiring, examining, determining, iudging, and punishing all offences in their seuerall congregations, encroch not vpon the Princes ciuill iurisdiction. For this also is contumelious and iniurious both against her Maiesties authoritie, & against al christian Kings & Princes, and against the most of the ciuill Magistrates, Judges, Iustices & officers, vnder the chiefe and soueraigne Princes, besides the Eccl. Prelates & their officers.

Our Brethr.
gouernors
incroching on the Prince.

And therefore (we conclude as our Brethren here do) every Prince in his own dominion, ought to cast off the yoake of his (to wit the Popes) subiection, & to bring all Eccl. persons vnto his or her obedience & iurisdiction. And we conclude a little further, that in the number of these Eccl. persons, the Prince ought to bring in (presupposing there were any such) all this new kinde of Doctors all these new Bishops in every parish, all these new Gouernors, and all these new Deacons in euerie congregation, in his or her dominions, vnder his or her obedience & iurisdiction, and to cast off the yoake of their subiection: which if they ought to doe, then let our Brethren againe take heede, how they impugne the obedience and iurisdiction of her Maiestie, and her lawes established, and cast among her subiectes such repugnant discourses as this is, vaunt they neuer so much therein of Learning.

Euery prince ought to cast off the yoake of the Popes and of these new tetrarks subiection.

Here haue we (say they) the first part of the title of supreme gouernment ouer all persons.

And thus farre both our Brethren & we agree, concerning the persons.

In matters or causes Eccl. likewise, the Pope doth not onely presume against God, as we sayd before: but also against the lawfull authoritie, giuen by God vnto men. For he forbiddeth Princes to meddle with reformation of Eccl. matters, or to make any lawes pertayning to causes of religion, aunswering them, that those thinges do appertaine only to him and the generall Counsell. But when he cometh to debate any thing with with his Clergie, then al lawes and knowledge, are inclosed in the closet of his breast. When any generall Councell must be holden, all that they do receiue authoritie from him. For except he do allow, it is nothing. And hee is so wise, that neither with the Councell, nor without the Councell he can erre or thinke amisse in matters Eccl. when as it is not onely lawefull, but also necessarie for Princes, if they will doe their dutie, to looke to the reformation of religion, and to make lawes of matters Ecclesiasticall. But so that wee confounde not the offices of the Prince and Pastor. For as it is not lawefull for the prince to preach nor administer the Sacraments: no more is it lawfull for him to make lawes in Eccl. causes, contrarie to the knowledge of his learned Pastors. For as these three partes of the pastors dutie are granted to him by God, preaching, ministring of Sacramentes, and Eccl government: he may no more take from a Pastor the third, than he may the two first.

They are now come from the persons, to the matters or causes Eccl. wherin and how farre forth, they will acknowledge the title and authoritie of the Princes supremacie. All this that our Brethren say here against the popes claime of supremacie for matters or causes Eccl. the same say we. And we gladly accept that which our Brethren do condemne, in the popes presumption and vsurpation both against God and man, and his forbidding princes to meddle with reformation of Eccl. matters, or to make any lawes pertayning to causes of religion, answering them, that those thinges do appertaine onely to him, and the generall Councell.

And here we beseech our Brethren, confessing thus much against the pope, (as it becommeth good subiectes to their prince) to aduise themselves withall, of their former vnadvised speeches. pag. 9. 10. 84. 85. 117. 118. 119. in which places besides their hard termes of Christian princes, doe they not giue (vnder the name of the Church & her authoritie) the knowing, the hearing, the examining, the determining, the iudging and the punishing, of all matters and causes pertayning to discipline & government of the Church, either to their pastors and teachers, or to the Seignories of their gouernors? And what differeth this from forbidding princes to meddle with reformation of Eccl. matters, or to make lawes pertayning to causes of religion, answering them, that those thinges do appertaine only to them, and to their consistories, and to their particular Synodes, or generall Councell?

But when he (say they meaning the pope) cometh to debate any thing with his Clergie, the all lawes and knowledge are inclosed in the closet of his breast. And is this any more, than to say not onely to the Prince, but also to their owne consistorie gouernors, of whom their Synodes consist, as well as of themselves, pag. 117. who should be able to knowe matters.

what order, comelines, & edification requireth according to Gods word, but they that be teachers & preachers of the same vnto all others? For it is absurde that they should be taught by such in these small things, as ought to learne the truth of in all matters. This authoritie therefore can not be graunted vnto any ciuill Christian Magistrate, that without consent of the learned Pastors and Elders, yea against their consent, of whom as in some respect, he is a feeling member, he may lawfully make ceremoniall constitutions, whereby the Church must bee gouerned in meere Eccl. matters.

With therfore they turne al this against the Prince, is not this as much, as when they come to debate any thing with their Clergie Gouvernors, that the all lawes & knowledge is inclosed in the closet of their breasts, both from the Prince, and from their owne Clergie and Eccl. Gouvernors? Is not this as much, as when they holde their generall Counsels, or Pro-uinciall, that all the authoritie must come from them? For except they doe allow it, it is nothing. And how farre differs this frō the Popes conceit, that they also are growen so wise, that neither with counsell, nor without the Council they can erre or think amisse in Eccl. matters? Had they a generall Councell of all those, that they call the faithfull ministers, that composed this Learned discourse of Eccl. gouernment? Well, yet there is here some good hope, that when our Breth2. shall haue better be- thought the of these things, which they mislike in the Pope, debarring the right & interest of Christian Princes: the verie vggly sight thereof will be as a glasse vnto the, to see & mislike their owne speeches and doings, in ta- king vpon them, though not the verie same, yet so like presumption and vsurpation, especially so many, and so little states, as they are, farre infe- rior to the Pope, and at the verie first peeping out of them, yea before they are come to that they would haue, thus to insult not onely on the Bishops, and to come and set out lawes, before themselues are called vnto such authoritie: but also thus to blemish and deface the Christian Princes authoritie, to abase and debarre it, to examine, and determine, yea to en- croch vpon the right and interest in these matters of all Christian Prin- ces, and of their owne most godly and gracious Soueraigne.

Our Brethr.
owne sayings rightly returned on themselues.

But since the sight of their own description of the Popes presumptio & vsurpation, doth begin heze to make them stoupe somewhat to the Princes supremacy, let them now in good time likewise remember their own say- ings, pag. 77. & 78. where speaking also of the Pope: whose intollerable presumption (say they) as we haue long since banished out of this land; so wee wish that no steppe of such pride and arrogancie, might bee left behinde him: namely that no Elder or Minister of the Church (marke these your owne wordes well, good Brethren, and turne them not so off against our Bishops, that ye forget your selues) should challenge vnto vnto himfelfe or accept it, if it were offered vnto him, any other authoritie, than that is allowed by the spirit of God, but chiefly to beware, ^{uerrors & Pastors not in Script.} that he vsurpe no authoritie, which is forbidden by the word of God. For wherefore do we detest the Pope, and his vsurped supremacie, but bycause he arrogateth the same vnto himfelfe, not onely without the warrant of Gods word, but also cleane contrarie to the same?

Now if the same reasons and authorities that haue banished the Pope, do serue to condemne all other vsurped authoritie, that is practised in the Church, why should not all such vsurped authoritie be banished as well as the Pope? we can alleage against the Pope and rightly, that which S. Iohn Baptift did aunswere to his disciples, No man can take vnto himfelfe any thing, except it be giuen him from heauen, Ioh. 3. 27. and that saying of the Apostle to the Hebrewes, No man can take vpon him any honor in the Church of God, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron: in somuch, that Christ himfelfe did not giue himfelfe to be an high Priest, but he that sayd vnto him, Thou art my Sonne, this day haue I begotten thee. He sayth in another place, Thou art a Priest for euer, after the order of Melchizedech.

Now seeing these rules are so generall, that the Sonne of God himfelfe was not exempted from them, but shewed foorth the decree wherein he was authorized: by what rule can any man reteyne that authoritie in the Church of God, that is not called therunto by the word of God?

All these words haue our Brethren alleaged triumphantly against the Bishops, whose authoritie we haue seene to be thoroughly grounded on the word of God. But for their Consistorie Governours, to whom they giue such great authoritie, we haue as yet after all this shuffling, coniecturing, pulling, and haling of the Scripture, of the auncient Fathers, and of the old Churches practise to found it vpon, we could not yet finde vpon better view therof, so much as one good and substantiall prooue of authoritie for it, or the example but of one such man. And as for their Pastors, if none be Pastors, but such as are ordeyned after the forme by themselves set downe, Pag. 125. saying: this is the right election and ordeyning of Pastors grounded vpon the word of God: when we come to search better in the word of God, we finde not one Pastor so elected and ordeyned. Our Breth. And as for their selues, these faithfull Ministers, none of them neyther vorthankful- nesse to the Bishops. that I can learne of, were so elected and ordeyned, and so, they haue eyther no right calling nor authoritie at all, but are mere intruders, yea, merelaymen, or else that authoritie that they haue, they haue it of the Bishops, and of their authoritie that gaue them authoritie, and now they reward them well for their labour, that would eate them vp that brought them vp, as did the wolfe eate vp the Goate of whome he suckt, or rather as God complayneth, I haue nourished children.

¶ Pea, they are growne now so cranke on this little authoritie, that they fall vnto prescribing, abiding, limittin, and setting downe lawes, euen to their soueraigne Princes. But quo warranto, by what newe authoritie they can do all these things, against all these states and degrees of men, in all these matters, though it be beyond my authoritie to examine them, yet, bycause it is beyond my learning, I would but gladly know it, if they can teach it. But since they begin here to relent somewhat to the Princes supremacy, without further ripping vp of former matters, except they begin againe to shynke backe, after their former manner: let vs take them now in their good mode, and most ioyfully we accept this our Brethrens graunt which here they yeld vnto, that it is not onely lawfull, but also necessary for Princes, if they will do their duty, to looke to the reformation of religion, and to make lawes of matters Ecclesiasticall. ¶ Pea for sooth, this is another manner of matter, than we heard of any yet of our Brethrens mouths, towards the reformation of these things, that it is lawfull and necessary for Princes, besides their looking to it, euen to make lawes of Eccl. matters, so indeede did Moses, Iosue, Dauid, Salomon, and other good Princes, befoze Christes coming, and so did Constantine, Theodosius, Valentinian, Martian, Zeno, Iustinian, and diuers others godly Princes, since Christes comming, and such Eccl. lawes haue we in this Realme, of the auncient Bryttish Kings heretofore: and euen so did some Kings also since the Conquest, make some such lawes of Eccl. matters, for all their authoritie was much impugned, incroched vpon, and in the end oppressed, by the intrusion and tyrannie of the Pope, till God moued the heart of that most heroicall Prince King Henry the eyght, and after him, of his most vertuous sonne King Edward the sixt, who both of them regained this supreme authoritie, and thereby made many most godly and excellent lawes, for the reformation of religion, and of Eccl. matters, and so (the Lord be glorified for her) our most excellent Soueraigne Lady Queene Elizabeth, (whose dayes God long prolong in all felicitie) beris dutifully, carefully, and religiously, to the uttermost of her power, hath done, and doth looke to the reformation of religion, and to make lawes of matters Ecclesiasticall, if our Brethren would on the other side do their dutie, and in thankfulness be contented with her Maiesties reformation of religion, and with the lawes Eccl. that her Maiesty hath already made, yelding their dutifull obedience, in the reuerent accepting and observing of them. ¶ If now our Brethren would thus hold on, in the acknowledgement of the Princes authority, we should some agree, and (as they say) moue no controuersie neyther on this, nor other matters. But this confession that commeth thus in a good mode vpon them on a suddaine, it is too good to continue long. For streight they begin (for feare they might seeme to haue graunted the Prince too much) to come in and pinch it on the backe backe with new conditions and promises. But so (say they) that we confound not the offices of the Prince and of the Pastor. Well, if there follow no worse than this, we accept also of this exception, provided againe on our part (to fall to indenting on even hands) so that they rightly vnderstand this tearme of offices: for, her Maiestie neuer attempted, nor the Statute admitteth any such attempt, of confounding these offices of the Prince and the Pastor: would God (and it were his will) our Brethren themselves were as farre off, from confounding of these offices, and that they and their new gouernors would encroch no more vpon her Maiesties royall office, and on the offices of her officers vnder her, than she or they do vpon the office of the Pastors. But now, least we should yet haue in suspence, what they meane here by these offices, that should not be confounded, they specifye the same, and say: For as it is not lawfull for the Prince to preach, nor administer the Sacraments, no more is lawfull for him to make lawes in Ecclesiasticall causes, contrary to the knowledge of his learned Pastors. I thought by little and little the winde would turne about, and sit rustling againe in his old place: what neede these caueats here so suspiciously cast out, as though these offices, or at least some of them, were confounded, or in hazard to be confounded by this supremacie that her Maiesty claimeth, or that is yielded to her: whereas neyther the Statute giueth her Maiesty any such authority, as whereupon any suspicion of such confusion of these offices should arise: nor her Maiesty, or her father, or her brother, did euer by this title, claime or take vpon the any such thing, as either to preach, or to administer sacraments, or to do any other actions properly appertaining to the Bishops, or to the Pastors, or to any other Ecclesiasticall officers: neither yet did make any lawes in Ecclesiasticall causes, either contrary to the knowledge, or without the knowledge, and the consent also; but with the knowledge, aduice, counsell and consent of her learned Pastors, and (so far likewise as reacheth to their Eccl. authority) with their determination, resolution and decree thereon: which thing since her Maiesty hath so done, satisfiying all these caueats and exceptions: how followeth it not, by our Brethrens owne confession, that it was and is lawfull for her so to do? yea, that it was and is necessary for her Maiesty, if she would do, as (God be prayd) she hath done, and her duty, to looke to the reformation of religion, and to make lawes of matters Eccl. and how then (if our Brethren will looke to themselves, and to do their duty) is it lawfull for them any more than for the Papists, to disobey, to deface, to controule, to impugne, to violate, to alter the lawes in Ecclesiasticall matters that her Maiesty hath thus made? If they thinke she made them contrary to the knowledge of her learned Pastors, because they take it that it is contrary to their knowledge, if they were not Pastors at all when her Maiesty made these lawes: or if that they which be Pastors now, either be not, or renounce to be such Pastors, and of such ordeyning, as her Maiestie, and the Lawes of the Realme, acknowledge to be Pastors: or if these our Bishops be not Pastors of such learning and knowledge as they pretend, nor of any such number or estimation, as the other learned Pastors in her Maiesties dominions are, is she bound to take such knowledge of them, that when all those whome she acknowledgeth to be her lawfull Pastors, both the most and most este-med, both the best and best learned of them, haue consulted vpon, and consented vnto, haue agreed vpon, and decreed also the same lawes, that yet it shall not be lawfull to her Maiestie, (bycause of the dissent of a few other, whome she knoweth not to be her Pastors) to make any lawes at all of Ecclesiasticall matters, or to looke to the reformation of religion?

Why might not the Papists vse this reason, as well as our Bishops, to debarre her Maiesties right and authoritie herein: yea, did not they vse the selfe-same reason, pleading, that they were the Pastors of the Realme, and so her Maiesties Pastors also, and that she could not looke to the reformation of Religion, nor make lawes of matters Ecclesiasticall, contrarie to their knowledge and consenting? for at her Maiesties first en-trie into her raigne, as she carefully looked (before all other things) to the reformation of Religion, and to make godly lawes of Ecclesiasticall matters, so the Popish Pastors, which then were most in number, and greatest in power, and were in dutie her Pastors also, if they had performed their dutie dutifully, which they did not: neyther can we denie, but that they, or many of them, were learned also, if they had had grace answerable to learning, and had submitted their learning to truth, and not deteyned others in blindness of ignorance, to mainteine their errors: was it not lawfull therefore vnto her Maiestie, to looke to the reformation of religion, and to make lawes of matters Ecclesiasticall, bycause it was contrarie to their acknowledging, and to their consenting? yes, she performed all this, notwether their withstanding, and she did well, yea, most excellent well in her so doing: not yet (as the Papists cried out, and still crie) that she did contrarie to the knowledge of her learned Pastors, for they accounted none to be learned Pastors, nor at all to be Pastors, but themselues. But her Maiestie did these things, with the consent of those that were both Pastors, and her Pastors too, and her learned Pastors: and even by learning it was tried, and by the better learning of her better learned Pastors, vicit veritas, the truth had the victorie, and Poperie was confounded. And so her Maiestie made her lawes of Ecclesiasticall matters, and reformation of Religion, with the consent of her learned Pastors, and established them with the approbation and authoritie of all the States of the Realme and Church of England, and hath (God be prayed) happily continued, till now of late, (as though we had not inough to do with the continuall maligning, sleaunders, and practises of the Popish Pastors,

Pastors, and their adherents) we fall out unhappily among our selves: and as her Maiesties godly and learned Pastors toged then with her Maiestie, against the Popish Pastors, in displacing them, with all their errors, and superstitious Ecclesiasticall lawes, and reformed religion, and made these lawes Ecclesiasticall that are now as yet in force: so a new kinde of Pastors begin a new stir, and are weary of these Ecclesiasticall lawes, and of this reformation, and of all these Pastors: calling themselves the faith-full Ministers that seeke the reformation of the Church of England, and would trie these matters againe by learning, and so (among other they booke & writings thereon) haue now at length set forth to all the realme, this learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment: and her Maiestie must now reuoke all the reformation and Ecclesiasticall lawes, that she hath then and since made with her learned Pastors that then were, and begin afresh, both to turne out all those Pastors, for no right ordeyned Pastors, and to make new lawes of Ecclesiasticall matters, and a new reformation with their consents, that say they be now her learned Pastors, and on these conditions they will admit her title of supremacy, and her authority to do these things, or else not. If her Maiesty now shall heare of this, what may she thinke thereon: how may she comfort her selfe, and warrant her actions in all things that she hath done already: for if they were well done, they may well continue: if they may not well continue, but must be vndone, it is an argument they were not well done. But her Maiesty, though this be no small grief vnto her, to haue all her doings thus ript vp againe, by her owne subiects, and professors of the same Gospell that she professeth: and though it be no small triumph to the aduersaries of the Gospell, and argument for them to descant vpon against her Maie-stie, and against both our Bishops and vs, and all true Protestants: yet, let not her most excellent Maiesty be dismayed hereat (though indeede it be a great cosse) but when her Maiesty looketh on the grounds of the matter, and not on the vnthankfulnes and mutabilitie of men, and listeth by her eyes to heauen, from whence cometh her saluation, how mightely God hath blessed and defended her, and prospered these things vnder her hands, her Maiesty shall receiue a greater comfort, and confirmation against all the treasonable practices of those her deadly aduersaries of the one partie, and all the dangerous innovations of these her over-zealous subiects on the other party, and repress them both in iustice and mercie, with safe continuance and good successe (God willing) of all her Maiesties reformation and lawes that she hath made of Ecclesiasticall matters hetherto, with the knowledge and consent of those that then were, or yet are her learned Pastors. And except these our new Pastors, that would be,
 haue any better learning, not yet reuealed, than is conteyned in this their learned discourse: the learned Pastors that are now in place, and in

Lawes in Eccl. matters. Our Pastors defence of her Maiesties authoritie and lawes against these new Pastors Pastorall authoritie, will (by Gods grace) mainteyne and defende by truth and sound learning, their authorities, and the Ecclesiasticall lawes that her Maiesty hath made with their knowledge & consents, wel ynough I warrant them. And let our Brethren, to begin withall, looke to this point better. For sith they graunt it is her Maiesties authoritie to make Lawes of Eccl. matters, so that she take from the Pastor none of these 3. offices, Preaching, Ministring the Sacraments, nor the Eccl. Gouernment from them: the Queenes Maiestie hauing made her Lawes without doing any of these three thinges, nor hauing taken from the Pastor the thirde, any more then the two first: Let them looke to it, both how they disobey the Lawes she hath made, and how they cast forth such suspitious pa. 141. By this it appeareth, howe farre it is lawfull for Princes to intermeddle with causes Ecclesiasticall: namely, that it is the cheefest point of their duty, to haue speciall regard that God may be glorified in their dominion, and therefore they ought to make ciuill Lawes, to binde the people vnto the Confession of the true sayth, and the right administring and receiuing of the sacraments, and to all Ecclesiasticall orders, that they being instructed by the worde of God, through the ministerie of the preaching of the same, shall vnderstand to be profitable for edifying of the Church of Christe, and the aduancement of the glory of God. If any shall offend against the Lawes, whether he be a Preacher or hearer, besides the Ecclesiasticall censure, which hee shoulde not escape, he is also to be punished in body by the ciuill Magistrate.

They haue not yet, eyther by these, or by ought else before spoken, made it appeare, howe farre it is lawfull for Princes to intermeddle with causes ecclesiasticall. And howe their supreme authoritie therein (which is farre higher then onely intermeddling) stretcheth. As for the things which heere (as a recapitulation) they set downe: are nothing so much as they graunted before. For although they say, that it is the cheefest point of their duetie to haue especiall regard, that God may bee glorified in their Dominion: yet that both not shewe what especiall authoritie they haue therein, and how farre forth they haue it.

All our Br. graunt of making lawes of Eccl. matters, is turned only to ciuill lawes.

If they say, that they do this in the conclusion following these wordes: And therefore they ought to make ciuill Lawes, to binde the people vnto the Confession of the true sayth, and the right administring and receiuing of the Sacraments, and to all Eccl. orders. What haue they graunted heere to her Maiestie, but the onely making of ciuill Lawes: and thus the conclusion (when all comes to al) is not so much, as that they graunted before, or at leaste, made vs a shewe thereof. And yet they made to great dauntie in the graunt thereof, with so many exceptions: which graunt graunt notwithstanding we gladly accepted at their handes, and made much of it: that it is not onely lawfull, but also necessarie for princes, if they will doe their duetie, to looke to the reformation of religion, and to make lawes of Ecclesiasticall matters, so that we confounde not the offices of the Prince and the Pastor. Weere euerie man that meaneth no subtiltie, woulde straight haue thought, that as the pastor hath some part of looking to the reformation of religion, and of making Lawes of matters Ecclesiasticall, pertayning to the office of a pastor, distinct from the office of a prince: so the prince also hath some parts of looking to the reformation of religion, & of making lawes of matters Eccl. pertaining to the office of a prince, distinct from the office of a pastor. And that, although the partes of eyther of their offices be distinct, yet in the verie looking to that reformation of Religion, and to the verie making of those Lawes of matters Ecclesiasticall, they both of them do intermeddle, which is the terme that their selues euen here do vse.

But see nowe what a fayre gift our Brethren haue here graunted. It is lawfull and necessarie for Printes to make Lawes of matters Ecclesiasticall. What Lawes? Forsooth, they ought to make ciuill lawes, to bind the people vnto the confession of true faith, and the right administring of the Sacraments, and to all Ecclesiasticall orders. Yea forsooth, in this last and third point, lieth chiefly the question, of making lawes. But haue they any stroke in making lawes of any those Eccl. orders? No, but onely that they being instructed by the word of God, through the ministry of the preaching of the same, shall vnderstand to be profitable to the edifying of the Church, and the aduancement of the glorie of God, should bynde the people to them. What? should they make ciuill lawes, to bynde the people to them, before that they be made lawes and orders Ecclesiasticall? or howe can they be made lawes and orders Ecclesiasticall? both the scripture make all the lawes and orders Ecclesiasticall that are made? or is the ministerie of the preaching of the same, a sufficient instruction for the Prince, to take them for Ecclesiasticall lawes, because they put him to vnderstand, that they be profytable for edifying the Church of Christ, and aduancement of the glorie of God? so that, what they shall say as profitable hereunto, that is a lawe, or he must so take it? or else, still I demaund, who had the authoritie to make those lawes and orders Ecclesiasticall? except they shall say, they were all made before there were any christian Princes, which was they? for mer refuge. Albeit, Moses, Iosue, Dauid, Salomon, &c. will overreach that shift: for they had a stroke euen in the verie making of Ecclesiasticall lawes and orders them selues, and not onely in the making of ciuill lawes for Ecclesiasticall lawes and orders, to bynde the people vnto them: and so had also ouers Christian Princes since

Since Christes time: many of whose lawes, are Ecclesiasticall lawes themselues, and Canons of the Church in the Canon lawe, and not onely ciuill lawes made, to binde the people to keepe the Canon lawes, or Ecclesiasticall orders: and such also are diuersa lawes of the auncient Bryttish and English Kings in this Realme, and the Epistle of Eleutherius himselfe (if it be his) giueth Lucius no lesse authoritie.

But is this all that our Brethren will allow to Christian Princes, and no further authoritie than this? yes; If any shall offend against the lawes, whether he be Preacher, or hearer, beside the Ecclesiasticall censure, which he should not escape, he is also to be punished in body by the ciuill Magistrate. And is this againe all that we shall get more than before we got, for the supreme authoritie of the Christian Prince in Ecclesiasticall matters? and what more is here graunted to the Prince, than the verie Papists, yea, than the Pope himselfe (as proude and iniurious to Princes as he is) will graunt vnto them: to make ciuill lawes for the defence of the lawes Ecclesiasticall, that he and his Cleargy onely do make, making the Princes to be the onely punishers, and as it were, their executioners of iustice vpon them, that shall offend against their lawes. This they can well allow and like, that Princes should haue authority to punish the offender in body, besides the Ecclesiasticall censure, which the offender shall not escape at their hands: and for this cause they call the Emperour the Churches aduocate, and the Pope himselfe yelded this title to King Henry the eyght, to be called the defender of the faith, and will our Brethren yeld no better supremacy, nor greater authority to christian Princes, and so to her Maiesty, than the Papists, and the very Pope wil offer to yeld her, so that her Maiesty will but make ciuill lawes to bynde the people to their lawes, and Ecclesiasticall orders, that the Pope and his Cleargie shall make, and that if any shall offend in body against his lawes, whether he be Preacher or hearer, besides the Ecclesiasticall censure, which he should not escape, he is also to be punished in body by the ciuill Magistrate. All this both the Pope offer to all the Princes in their dominions, that haue not cast off the yoke of his subiection, but live in greatest seruitude vnder him, and yet our new Pastors make all this mincing, to graunt but thus much authoritie at length vnto their Princes.
But now, if they will beare so hard a hand, that we shall get no more authoritie for the Prince, and so, for her Maiestie, but bare and hardly this, which would make a man to maruell, that they which so often talke of her Maiesties supreme gouernment in Ecclesiasticall causes, haue now brought it from a supremacie, to such an inferioritie, that the Pope will offer as much authoritie to Princes, to mainteine his errors, as these Pastors will offer to mainteine the Gospell: yet I maruell the lesse, considering all things: for they haue great cause to be affrayde, to graunt the

Prince

Prince but thus much. For, haue the Prince but this authoritie ouer all the persons, that if any shall offend against the lawes and orders Ecclesiasticall, or against the Princes ciuill lawes, made to bind the people to them, whether he be Preacher, or hearer, besides the Ecclesiasticall censure which he should not escape, that he is also to be punished in body, by the ciuill Magistrate. If this be so, then it stands our Brethren vpon to take great heede, for howsoeuer they shall despise our Prelates Ecclesiasticall censure, how will they escape this bodily punishment? Yea, how do they not pronounce this sentence thereof against themselves? do they thinke that they offend not her Maiesties lawes, that thus deface them, breake them, and write against them? or do they thinke they be not her Maiesties Lawes, but the Churches, or the Cleargies? Did not her Maiesties approbation of them, quicken & confirme them to become Lawes? and hath she made no other ciuill Lawes also, with the whole authoritie of the Realme, to establish those Lawes? And do they thinke her Maiesties Lawes to be no Lawes, neyther Ecclesiasticall, nor yet Ciuill? so they may inuade make a worse match, and finde, that not onely her Maiesties Lawes be Lawes, and good and lawfull lawes also, but that her punishments be punishments, and that iust and seuer punishments too. But her Maiestic is most mercifull, and I hope they will be more dutifull, and betwinke themselves better on these things.

This we see that all Christian Emperours obserued, that when any controuerſie arose, eyther of doctrine, or of order and ceremonies, they commaunded the Cleargie to consult and determine thereof, according to the Scripture, who assembling together in counsell, obeyed their commaundement: their conclusion then by the authoritie of the Emperour, was commaunded euery where to be obserued, and those that impugned it, to be punished. The same order we reade to be obserued by the Christian Kings of Fraunce and Spayne, yea, of this our Bryttannie also, in gouerning their Ecclesiasticall state by the aduice of the Cleargie of their dominion.

Her Maiestic taketh not on her, nor desireth any more, neyther do we acknowledge any lesse authoritie in her, then had the auncient Christian Emperours, Constantine, Theodosius, Valentinian, Marrianus, Honorius, Arcadius, Iustinian, &c. And we graunt, that all Christian Emperours obserued this, that when any controuerſie arose, eyther of doctrine or of order and ceremonies (if the importance of that controuerſie did so require) they commaunded the Cleargie to consult and to determine thereof, according to the Scripture: this is most true, and it was well done of them. Howbeit, they their selues made many good Ecclesiasticall lawes and fuctions, besides those which they confirmed with their supreme authoritie, that by occasion of great controuerſies, were consulted vpon, and determined in generall or prouinciall Counmaund the Cleargie to consult, and determine of the controuerſies, ey-ther of doctrine, or of order and ceremonies: and when the Cleargie had consulted vpon, and determined the same, and had declared theyz determination to the Emperour, then he allowed it, and commaunded, that euery where it should be obserued, and those that impugned it, to be punished: for this indeede were no more, then (as I sayd before) the verie Pope hymselfe (saue for the commaunding of him and them) could be content the Emperour yet should do, so that he would intermedle na-thing in the matters themselues that are in controuerſie, but let him and his Cleargie alone, with the consulting and determining of all the con-trouerſies, and the Emperour onely to allow of their Decree, and to commaund all his subiects, whether they be Preachers, or hearers, to obserue the same, and to punish those that do impugne it. But, (that which the Pope can in no wise abide) the Emperour went further than all this commeth to: for, besides that he did all those things in the Coun-sells, which we haue before declared, though he had also Presidents, whome he appointed accoꝝding as he thought mete, to gouerne the Counsell, and all the order and actions thereof: yet now and then, (as the importance of the matter required, and other affayres hindered him not,) he sate hymselfe in the Counsell among them, debated and consulted on the matters with them, and ioyned also with them euen in the determination of the matters themselues.

And that this is true, the Emperour Constantines owne woꝝdes do witnesse of his owne doings, in the most famous Nicene Councell, and that both in the chiefeſt controuerſie of our faith, and also in that great controuerſie of the order and ceremonie of keeping Easter day, after the order that we now keepe it: whereof Constantine writing his Epistle vnto all Churches, as appeareth in Socrates hystorie, lib. 1. cap. 6. he sayeth on this wise.

pistle to the Byshop for the keeping of Easter day.

When as I perceyued by the prosperous and flourishing estate of the common weale, how greatly we are beholden to the goodnesse of Al-mightie God, conferred vpon vs, I iudged that aboue all things it behoued me of dutie to foresee, that in the most holie and sacred assemblyes of the Catholike Church vnder heauen, there should one faith, sincereloue and charitie, vniforme consent and agreement, touching the religion and seruice of Almighty God, inuiolably be reteyned, but sithence that the same could by no other meanes be settled in sure and firme place, except all the Byshops, or the greatest part of them, had assembled together, and that euery one had given his iudgement

of

of the matters pertainyng to the most holie religion: when as for the same cause, so great an assemblie as possiblie could be made, was gathered together, I my selfe euen as one of your number, was present together with you: for neyther did I refuse to ioyne my selfe with you in that ministerie, of which doing, I conceyue great ioy: and so farre were all the matters exquisitely sought out, vntill the sentence grateful and acceptable vnto God, for the concord and consent of mens minds, was openly pronounced, in so much, that nothing at all remayneth hereafter, that may lead to discord, or controuersie of the faith. When as at that time it was disputed vpon concerning the feast day of Easter, it was thought meete by the common sentence of all, that all men euery where, should celebrate the same vpon one and the selfesame day: for what could be better or more honorable, than that this feast, by which we haue the hope of Immortalitie set forth vnto vs, should be continually kept of all men after one manner and order? &c. And so he entereth into many excellent perswasions to the Churches, to moue them to forsake the Jewes order, and to ioyne all in obseruing the order that he with the Counsell had decreed. But (sayth he) if these thyngs had not beene set forth by me, yet were it your wisdomes to imploy your diligence, and with prayers to wish, that for no manner of cause, ye should be compelled to intermingle the integritie of your mindes, with the customes of wicked men. And euen as Constantine the great, and most godly Emperour, ioynd thus with the Byshops in these Ecclesiasticall causes, and in many other, so did the other godly Emperours in all the approued generall Councelles: if they were not present themselves, they appoynted Deputies, and those ciuill Magistrates also, that now and then improned all the whole Councelles Decrees: as in the Counsell of Chalcedone, when all the Counsell had decreed Balsianus Byshop of Ephesus, to be restored, the Judges appoynted by the Emperour Martian, reiected that sentence, and appoynted them to chole another, whose commaundement therein they obeyed.

And many tymes, the Emperour himselfe nameth the Byshops, and appoynteth the Counsell to ordeyne them, as Theodosius did at the second vniuersall Counsell holden at Constantinople, when they could not agree in the election of the Byshop of Constantinople, they deliuered by a number of names for him to chole one, and he appoynted Nectarius to be Byshop: which Emperour also, when he had called before him a number of Heretikes, by the counsell and aduice of Nectarius, who also was counselled thereunto Silinius the Emperour in the Counsell reasoned with them severally, demanding of them all whether they allowed not of such and such godly and famous fathers: whome when they extolled, and sayd that he allowed of them, he demanded if they would stand to their opinions in those controuersies: whereat, when they began to varie and stagger, he willed them euery one severally, to bring to him a coppy of their faith in writing, and then he would deliberate and determine among them all, which he would accept and follow: whereupon, braving out the copies thereof, they presented them all before the Emperour: who hauing first made his prayers to God, and after ward perusing and deliberating of their copies, he approued onely the right and true faith of the consubstantiation, (or ioyntsubstantiation of the sonne with the father) and tare all the other copies in peeces before their faces, Socrates, lib. 5. cap. 10.

And when in the Generall Counsell at Constantinople, they had concluded all their Decrees, all the whole Counsell wrote thus vnto the Emperour: Sithence the time of our assemblie at Constantinople by your godly commaundement, we haue renewed concord amongst our selues, and haue prescribed certayne Canons, which we haue annexed vnto this our writing: we beseech therefore your clemencie, to commaund the decree of the Counsell to be established by the letters of your holynesse, and that ye will confirme it: and as you haue honored the Church by the letters wherewith you haue called vs together, so ye would also vouchsafe to ratifie the finall conclusion of the decrees with your owne sentence and seale.

So that the Emperour (yea though he were absent) had the ratification, or the improving of all the Synodall actes, as Theodosius the yonger writeth to the first Ephesine Counsell: we allow of the condemnation of Nestorius, Cyrillus and Memnon: the other actes and condemnations which you haue made, we disallow. Which Emperour also sent to be his Deputy in the Counsell at Constantinople, about Eutyches controuersies, a noble man of his Court Florentius, writing thus vnto them: We will that he shall be present in your Synode, bycause the controuersie is of the faith: which Florentius sitting with the Byshops, examined Eutyches in the points of his faith, and pronounced also his owne determination on the controuersie, saying: He which doth not beleue that in Christ there be two natures, doth not beleue aright.

And in the cause against Dioscorus, Eusebius, Byshop of Dorolannu, writeth vnto the Emperour Martian (whose Supplication is sette downe in the Calcedon Counsell, Act. 2. in these wordes: Wee beseeche your clemencie, that you will commaund him to answer to the matters that wee shall obiekt agaynst him, wherein, wee will prouochym to bee out of the Catholike faith, defendyng Heresyes full of vngodlynesse. Wherefore wee beseeche you, to directe

your holy and honorable commaundement, to the holy and vniuersall counsell of the most religious Byshops, to examine the cause betwixt vs and Dioscorus, and to make relation of all things that are done, to be iudged as shall seeme good to your clemencie.

preffe, and the Emperour.

Thus do the Byshops not onely desire the Emperour to commaund the Counsell to examine the matter, being a matter more Ecclesiasticall, and of faith, but also, to commaund the Counsell to make relation of all their doings to the Emperour, and the Emperour (euen as it should seeme good to him) to be the iudge, and finall determiner of the controuersie. Now upon this occasion, this Emperour Marcianus, and Valentinian, with the Empresse Pulcheria, (that also being a mayden, had the gouernment of the Empire, and chose Martian to be Emperour in gouernment of the same, with Valentinian and her,) summoned a Counsell to be holden first at Nice: whether, when the Byshops were assembled, but the Emperours could not come, they adiourned the same to Calcedon, appoynting to be the Iudges of the Counsell 34. noble men. And after ward, when Martian, with Pulcheria, comming thether, were entred into the Counsell, he prescribeth both to the Byshops and to the Iudges, an order how they should proceed, which order they following, it is set downe in the first Act of this Counsel, that, when the Iudges and Senate had duly examined the causes, they gaue sentence to depose Dioscorus, and others, so that, this their iudgement should seeme good to the Emperour, to whome they referred the whole matter.

In which Counsell, when they came to the setting downe of an vni- forme Decree of the christian faith, conformable to the first Nicen Counsell, after much trouble that the Iudges & the Emperours had to appease their disorders, by appointing committies, to whose resolution, when all the Counsell had consented, this being done, the Emperour, with Pulcheria the mayden Empresse, entred againe into the Counsell, and after he had declared the cause of his calling the Counsell, and of his personall comming into the same, to be for none other end, than to confirme the faith, and to remoue for euer hereafter, all dissention in religion: when the publike Notary of the Counsell had humbly demaunded, if it pleased him to heare the Counsels definition, the Emperour hauing willed him to recite it openly, which done, asking of them if euery man consented thereunto, when with great acclamations and prayes of him, they answered, that it was the consents of them all, then he confirmeth the same, and setteth out a Statute thereupon. As for particular lawes and orders Eccl. that both he and diuers other Emperours, especially Iustinian, made, I referre them to the declaration of the ciuill & Canon Lawyers. There is almost no Church matter, whereof the Emperours, namely Iustinian, hath not some Ecclesiasticall constitution or other on the same: which Iu-stinian also, in the Counsell that he held at Constantinople, where he made the Archb. Mennas President: Mennas concluding the Counsell, saith, that none of those things that are to be moued in the Church, ought to be done without the Princes will and commaundement.

Thus as we see that the Emperours had this authoritie in Eccl. mat- ters, so, graunt this to be lawfull in them, and this lawfulness stretcheth to all Christian Princes in their dominions. And therefore, where our Bre- thren say, the same order we reade also to be obserued by the christian Kings of Fraunce, and Spayne, yea, of this our Brittanie also, in gover- ning their Eccl. state by the aduice of the Cleargy of their dominion: it was the same order indeede that was obserued of these Emperours, which these Kings also did obserue: and because it was the same, there- fore was it not the same that our Brethren say it was, but a farre grea- ter authoritie and intermedling; and not onely to allow that, that the Cleargy had determined, and to punish them that impugned those or- ders, but also to deale so farre forth in ioyning with the Cleargy, so, the very making of Ecclesiasticall lawes, as the foresaid Emperours had be- fore done, and so, a while after did still continue: as we reade of Con- stantine Pogonatus, who called together the Byshops to a generall Counsell at Constantinople, against the Monothelits, sitting as Presi- dent with his Nobles in the same Counsell, where the Deputy for the Byshop of Rome among other also agreed, and acknowledged the Head of Rome to be subiect vnto him, and humbly besought the Emperour, to commaund those that took part with the Byshop of Constantinople, to shew from whence they receyued their new speeches, and erroneous o- pinions: whereupon, the Emperour commaundeth Macarius, Byshop of Antioch, to aunswere, and in the next Session, he reasoneth himselfe with Macarius: and in the third session, when the Byshop of Romes Le- gate, being there but a partie plaintife, had espied forgery in the Synodall bookes that were read, of the fift generall Counsell: the Judges (though lay men) examined and found out the same by the Emperours commaun- dement: and when the Byshop of Constantinople besought the Empe- rour, that the letters of Agatho Byshop of Rome might also be read, the Emperour graunted thereunto. In which letters, the Byshop of Rome sheweth his obedience to the Emperour, so, the effectuall accomplishing of his precepts, in sending of many persons to that Counsell, excusing himselfe, that he could do it no sooner, by reason of the great circuit of his Province: protesting withall, that he sendeth his Legates, even so, the dutifull obedience that he oweth to the Emperour. And after the confes- sion of his faith in the controuersie, he acknowledgeth the Emperour to occupie heere in earth the place and zeale of Iesus Christ, and that he ought to giue the right iudgemēt for the Euāgelical & Apostolical truth.

So after the Emperour had thus sitten his selfe in the examining and discussing of diuers actions & sessions in that Counsell, (as at large in the discourse therof appeareth) and after his departure, his deputies, in the end when all was done, & Macarius deposed, and the choosing of another Archbishop in his place referred to the Emperours pleasure, and that the whole Synode offered vp to the Emperour their definition of the con-trouerſie, subscribed with all their hands, and beseeching him to examine and confirme the same: the Emperour hauing perused it, and demaunding whether it were their vniſorme consent, vpon their confessions therof, the Emperour answereth: we haue read this definition, and we also do giue our consent thereto. And even as much as all this commeth to, we reade of the christian Kings both of Fraunce, and Spaine, and of this our Britany also, in governing their Eccl. state, which are the three kingdoms that our Bishops here specifie. Clodoueus even the first Christian King of Fraunce in the Counsell that he called and held at Aurelia, when he had propounded matters for the Counsell to consult and determine vpon, they obeying the Kings commaundement, refer againe their conclusions to the Kings iudgement. And this authoritie both Gunthranus the French King declare, in his Edict set forth in the Counsell of Matiscone, concerning the Princes office, in causing his people to be trained vp in true Religion, and godly discipline, protesting, this charge is of God committed vnto him: wherein also he declareth vnto the Bishops their office, and concludeth, that it was he, which caused the Decrees to be made, that were determined vpon in that Counsell, touching discipline and ceremonies to be defined, he confirming the same by his Edict thereon.

Charlemaine likewise (as Naclerus sheweth) in a Counsell that he called, sitting with many of his Nobles in the Counsell, not only sayth, he called the same, that they should giue him good aduice, how the law of God, and the Churches Religion should be restored: but he decla-reth also, what ordinances he together with them had made to that effect. We did (saith he) ordeyne Bishops throughout the Cities, by the counsell of the Priests, and of my Noblemen, and we did constitute Bonifacius to be the Archb. ouer them. We haue also decreed a Synode to be called together euery yeere, that the Decrees of the Canons, and lawes of the Church, may in our presence be reformed, &c. We haue degraded the false Priests, Deacons and Clearks, being adulterers, and fornicators, and haue driven them to penance. We haue vtterly for-bidden all manner of hunting and hawking to the Cleargy. We also decree, that euery Preeſt dwelling in the Diocese, be subiect vnto his owne Bishop, and that alwayes in Lent he make an account, and shew to the Bishop the manner and order of his ministerie, &c.

they had decreed all their matters, they decree this withall, that all their doings should be presented to Charles the great, that where any defects are in their Decrees, he would supply the same by his wisdom, and if any thing be otherwise than well, that he would amend it by his iudgement, and that which is well, he would ratifie and assise it by his authoritie. Where they say in the 45. Canon, that for the amending of all those abuses which the Counsell found to be in Eccel. matters, the kings mind must be knowne.

The like they do at the Counsell which he called at Cabellinum, especially in the Counsell that he held at Mentz, where the Counsell craueth his ayde and confirmation of such Articles as they had agreed vpon, so that he iudge them worthy to be confirmed, beseeching him to cause that to be amended, that is found to be worthy of amendment. Which Counsell also giveth God thanks, that he had giuen vnto his Church a Gouvernour, godly and deuout in his seruice, who in his time opening the fountaine of godly wisdom, doth continually feede the sheepe of Christ with holy foode, & instructeth them with diuine knowledge, &c.

And in his Edicts, set out not only to the Layte, but to the Clergy, he writeth thus: Charles by the grace of God, King and Gouvernour of the Kingdome of Fraunce, &c. Wherefore I thought good to moue you, O yee Pastors of Christes Churches, ye leaders of his flocke, and cleere lights of the world, that ye would trauaile with vigilant care, and diligent admonition to guide Gods people, through the Pastures of eternall life, &c. Therefore they are with earnest zeale to be admonished and exhorted yea, to be compelled to keepe themselves in a sure faith & reasonable continuance, within and vnder the rules of the Fathers. In the which worke and trauell, wit ye right well, that our industrie shall worke with you. For the which cause, we haue also addressed vnto you our messengers, which by our authoritie, shall with you amend and correct those things that are to be amended: and therefore, we haue also added such Canonick constitutions, as to vs were thought to be most necessarie. Let none iudge this to be presumption, that we take vpon vs to amend that which is amisse, to cut off that which is superfluous. For we reade in the bookes of the Kings, how the holy King Iosias trauelled, in going about the circuits of his Kingdome, correcting and admonishing his people, to reduce the whole Kingdome vnto the true religion and seruice of God. I speake not this, to make my selfe equall to him in holinesse, but because we ought alwayes to follow the examples of the holy Kings, and so much as we can, we are bound of necessitie, to bring the people to follow a vertuous life, to the prayse and glory of our Lord Iesus Christ.

And so he entresth into his rules & exhortations to the B. and Priests, how they they should guide their Diocesses and Churches both by reading and preaching, and the Bishops to sende forth the Priests to preach. It belongeth (saith he) vnto your office, O ye Pastors & guides of Gods churches to sende forth through out your Dioceses Priests to preach vnto the people, and to see that they preach rightly and honestly, that ye do not suffer new things that are not canonicall, but forged of their owne minde, & not according to the holy Scriptures to be preached vnto the people, yea you your own selues preach the things that are true and honest, and that lead vnto euerlasting life. And instruct ye other that they doe the same, &c.

Pea Alcuinus in his preface of his treatise on the trinitie, which he being his Chaplaine dedicated vnto this French king, being then also made Emperour, maketh the Prince to haue so farre authoritie aboue all other ciuill persons in Ecclesiast. matters, that he calleth him also a Preacher, and sayth, that he hath, as it were a priestly office in these things. And least (sayth he) I should seeme not to helpe and further your preaching of the faith, I haue directed and dedicated vnto you this booke, thinking no gift so conuenient and worthy to be presented vnto you: seeing that all knowe this most plainly that the Prince of the people ought of necessitie to know all things, and to preach the things that please God. Neither doth it pertaine to any man to know better or mo things than it doth to an Emperour, whose doctrin ought to profite all the subiects &c. All the faithfull haue great cause to reioyce of your godlines, seeing that you haue a Priestly power, (as it is meete so to be) in the preaching of Gods worde, a perfect knowledge in the Catholike faith, and a most holy deuotion to mens saluation.

Alcuinus in prefas. lib. de Trinitate.

Of the princes preaching and priestly power.

This authoritie and interest even in the chiefest Eccl. matters both that famous Alcuinus a countriman of our owne, acknowledge vnto the Christian Prince. And the like both this Emperours sonne Lewes take vpon him, and it was yelded vnto him, both in the Councell that he called at Aquisgrane in Germanie, and afterwarde in Italy at Ticinum: where hee giuing in charge to the Bishops and Councel, to consult among other matters concerning the conuersation of the Bishops, the Priestes, and other Eccl. persons, of their doctrine and preaching to the people, of writing out of bookes, &c. He concludeth, I am very much desirous to knowe and couet to reforme them according to Gods will, and your holy aduise, in such sort that neither I bee founde reproveable in the sight of God, neither you nor the people incurre the wrathfull indignation of God for these things. How this may be searched, found out & brought to perfection, that I committe to be treated on by you, and so to be declared vnto me. The lesser matters, which in generall touch all, but that touch some in speciall, and neede reformation, I will that yee make enquire Ludonius pius his authoritie and dealing in Eccl. matters.

Ludonius charge to the Bishop of Spaynes dealinges. Whereby we see, that these Princes had the chiefe authoritie in those Councelles, and both made Ecclesiasticall lawes them selues with the Bishops aduise and counsell, and also all the Bishops decrees and determinations depended on the Princes ratifying. This then was the order, and not that onely which our Brethren here say, we read to be obserued by the Christian Kings of France.

And euen as much do we read to be obserued by the Christian kings of Spayne: by whose authoritie, the first, second & third Councell at Bracara were called, and many pointes for doctrine and discipline disposed. After whom Richaredus commanded a Councell to be assembled and holden at Toledo, where the king sitting among the Bishops, declareth vnto them how he called them together that he might by the common consultation in the Synode repayre and make a newe forme of Ecclesi. discipline which had bin long time hindred by Arianisme. The which impedimēt (sayth he) it hath pleased God to put away by my meanes, whereupon he exhorteth them to giue God thanks for his so doing, and admonisheth them befoze they enter into the consultation, to fast and pray to God, that he would vouchsafe to open vnto them a true order of discipline. And so after a three dayes fast appointed vnto them, the Synode beginning to enter into consultation, the king commeth in with his Queene and nobles, and sitteth amongest them, and causeth the confession of his faith, which he had writtē and subscribed with his and the Quēnes hands, to be publicly reade befoze them, contayning withall, his care & industrie in these matters. For the which doing the Councell reacknowledgeth the king to deserue the reward of an Apostle, because he had performed the office of an Apostle.

And when at the nobilitie had giue by also their confessions in writting and subscribed openly vnto the, then the king commanded the Synode to go in hand with the repaying and establishing some forme of ecclesi. discipline, saying, that the care of a king ought to stretch forth it selfe, & not to cease till he haue brought the subiects to a full knowledge & perfect age in Christ. And as a king ought to bend al his power & authoritie, to repress the insolencie of the euill, and to nourish the common peace & tranquillitie: euen so ought he much more to studie, to labour, and be carefull, not only to bring his subiectes from errors & false religion, but also to see the instructed, taught & trayned vp in the truth of the cleare light. And hereupon by this his authoritie, he maketh a decree, & commandeth the Bishops to see it put in executiō, that euery time at the receiuing of the cōmuniō, al the people together, do distinctly with a lowde voice recite the Nicene creede. Which being done, & that the Synode had consulted about the orders of their discipline, & exhibited the same vnto the king:

The kinges performing the office of an Apostle.

The care, charge, and auth. of the Prince for discipline.

The kinges decree for the peoples confession of their faith at the communion.

he considering the same, ratifieth and confirmeth all their doings. And first he himselfe, and after him all the Synodes, subscribeth to those orders.

The like was read in the Council of diuerse kinges of Spayne afterwards. Sisenandus, that called the fourth Council of Toledo. Chintilianus, that called the 5. and 6. Chinawindus, that called the seventh, Reccessinuthus, that called the 8. 9. and 10. Councils at Toledo. Bamba, that called the 12. & 13. Egita, that called the 14. 15. and 16. all which kinges of Spayne, as they summoned the Councilles their selues, and commaunded the Bishops to assemble, so they sate in the Councils with them, and when the Councils had consulted and agreed upon any Ecclesiasticall matters, they offered the same to the Prince to be ratified and confirmed. This authoritie had the Christian kinges of Spayne, not only in governing of all Eccles. persons, but in making together with the Bishops, and in ratifying and confirming all their Synodall decrees and constitutions of Eccles. matters.

And no lesse authoritie had the kinges of this our Britannie also in governing their Eccles. state, by the aduise of the Clergie of their dominion. For profe whereof, we haue seene the Bishop of Rome's olde letter to king Lucius, that is reputed to be the first Christian king of Brytannie. Who when he wrote to Eleutherius then Bishop of Rome, to haue the Romaine and the Imperiall lawes to vse them in his kingdome: the Bishop returneth him this answers, (as we haue seene) those lawes wee may disprooue, but not the lawes of God. You haue receaued lately (through the goodnesse of God in your kingdome, the faith and law of Christ. You haue there in your kingdome both the testaments: out of them, (by Gods grace and the aduise of your Realme) take a lawe, and thereby patiently gouerne your kingdome. You are in your kingdome the Vicare of God, &c. In which wordes hee plainly confesseth, that the Christian kinges authoritie stretcheth euen to the very making and ordeyning of Ecclesiast. lawes with the aduise of the Realme, and so withall of the Clergie.

And that this supreme authoritie of the king was so practised in this lande, not only by Lucius, but also by the Christian kinges that succeeded him: while the Brittaines had the kingdome, which rather were not full kinges, but vnder the soueraintie of the Romaine Emperours which beeing at that time the most of them Paganes: the Princes in Brytannie hadde the lesse authoritie, whereby there grew manye corruptions, especiallve the Heresie of Pelagianisme in this realme, till the Brytaines were expelled by the Saxons. And therefore, what with the often warres, eyther with the Romaines, or with the Pictes, or with the Saxons: little or no certaine retoybe remaineth, of any Councilles holden, or of any Ecclesiasticall Lawes made,

Except we shall account Constantine the great as one of them, being the sonne of Constantius Chlorus, by the most noble and Christian Queene Helena, who being excellently learned in the tongues, wrote diuerse treatises of Religion and Ecclesiasticall matters, of the providence of God, of the immortalitie of the soule, of the rule of godly life, &c. As Bale reporteth of this Queene, of whose husband and sonne we haue heard sufficiently before.

But to come to the Saxon kings after they had receaued the faith of Christ (for perhaps our Brethren also comprehend them in the name of the Christian Kinges of this our Brytanic) William Lambert hath much helped vs, in gathering and translating, though rather to the sense than to the wordes, the auncient lawes of those kinges, whereby we also may gather, what great authoritie they hadde in these matters, who beginning with the Lawes of Kinge Inas, setteth them downe in these wordes:

The lawes
of king Inas

I Inas by the benefite of God King of the West Saxons, through the persuation and institution of Centede my father, of Lyedda and Erknwalde my Bishoppes, and of all mine Aldermen, (or Senators) and of the most auncient wise men of my people, in the great assemblie of the seruantes of God; I studied both for the saluation of our soules, and for the conseruation of our kingdome, that lawefull contractes of matrimonic, and that right iudgementes might be founded and established throughout all our dominion: and that hereafter it be not lawfull to any Senator, or to any other inhabiting our dominion, to breake these our iudgementes.

This preface being made, by all their aduices and consentes, but (as is aforesayde) by his authoritie: he setteth downe his Lawes in Chapters, both for Ecclesiasticall and ciuill matters. And first he beginnieth with Ecclesiasticall, of the forme howe the ministers of God should liue.

Cap. 1. of the ministers liues.

First of all, wee commaunde that the Ministers of GOD doe care for, and keepe the appointed forme of lyuing. And afterwarde wee will that among all our people the lawes and iudgementes be thus holden.

Cap. 2. of Infantes.

An infant shalbe baptized within 30. daies after it is come forth into the worlde. Which thing if it be not done; the default shalbe punished with the paying of 30. s. but and if it die before it be baptized, he shall forsaite all his goods.

Cap. 3. of working on sunday.

If a bondseruant be put to any seruile worke on the Lordes day, his Master shall make him free, and his Maister shall paye thirtie shillings; but if he did that worke without the commaundement of his Maisters, the seruauant shall bee beaten with stripes, or at least let him redeeme with with a price of money, the feare of his beating.

If a free man labour on this day, without his Maisters commaundement: let him eyther bee made a bonde man, or paye 60. shillings: if a Prioste offende in this, behalfe the penaltie shall bee augmented double.

of the Saxo Kinges.

The first frutes of the seedes shall be payde at Saint Martyns tyde. He that then shall not haue payde them shall be fined 40. shillings, and besides pay 12. times as much as the frutes come to.

Chap. 4. of the first frutes
of the seedes

If any man gilty of death, shall flee to the Church, he shall enioy his life, and make recompence according to right and lawe. If anie man haue deserued beating, and flee to the Church, the beating shall be forgiven him.

Chap. 5. of the Churches liber-
tie.

These are all the Eccl. lawes of Inas, which are there sette downe, sauing that in the next lawe after the Penaltie of fighting in the Kinges Court, he adioyneth also the forsette of 120. shillings for fighting in the Church, and in the 11. lawe, the forsette of as much to him that byingeth in false witnesse before a Bishop. His other lawes are more ciuill and politike. But by these we see his supreme authoritie euen to the making the decree it selfe, of the Ecclesi. lawes so well as of the tempozall. As for the last decree of killing ones gossippe, or of the KINGS godsonne, or of the sonne of a Bishop (for Bishops and all the Clergie might then marry) are more tempozall.

The next lawes that Lambert translateth, are of that excellent Prince Aluredus. Where first he setteth downe, the ten commaundementes of Almightye giuen by Moses, Exod. 20. and from thence proceedeth to the most of the lawes mentioned in the 21. 22. and some in the 23. chapters of Exod. which done, he sayth:

The lawes
of Aluredus in eccl. matters.

These are the lawes that Almightye GOD himselfe deliuered to Moses to bee kept. As for the onely begotten sonne of God our saluation Iesus Christe, when hee came into the worlde, hee openly declared that hee came not to violate the lawe giuen, but with all meekenesse and goodnesse to fulfill it. For hee deliuered the discipline of true godlinesse. After whome, when hee was crucified, his Disciples (while they were as yet together, nor were seuered a sunder to preach the Gospell) ioyned vnto Christ manie Nations, and sent their legates and Interpreters of the will of God to Antiochia, Syria, and Cilicia, which were conuerted vnto Christ from the bondage of the Gentiles.

The Apostles, and the Elders, Brethren, sende greeting vnto you. For as much as we haue heard that certaine men which departed from vs, haue troubled you with wordes, and when as they would declare vnto you certaine thinges whereof they had no commaundement from vs, they haue rather weakened

your mindes with error, than instructed then with sonnde and entire doctrine: it was thought good vnto vs being gathered together, to sende vnto you chosen men, Barnabas and Paule, which haue aduentured their life for Christe, together with whome wee haue sent Iudas and Sylas, who shall also by wordes declare the same thinges vnto you. For it seemed good to the holie Ghoste and to vs, to laye vpon you nothing more of necessarie burden, than this, that ye must abstayne from those thinges that are offered to Idols, and from bloud and from that that is strangled, and from fornication. And that which yee would not haue to be done vnto you, ye should not doe the same to others.

The imposing of pecuniarie multes.

Out of this one precept it euidently appeareth, that right must be rendered to euerie bodie: for there needeth no other iudiciall booke, saue onely this: whosoever sitteth beeing a Iudge vpon other, that he would not pronounce any other sentence vpon others, than he would haue to be giuen vpon him selfe. But whereas, when the Gospel of G O D was spread abroad, manie Nations, yea, and that the English-men, adioyned theyr sayth vnto the worde of God; manie assemblies were made through-out the worlde, and also in Englande; there were holden meetinges together of the Bishoppes and of other most notable wise men: and these men beeing informed of the mercie of God, did at the first impose vpon euerie offender a punishment of money, and gaue vnto the Magistrates the office of taking the same, without all prouocation of offending G O D, hauing giuen them pardon before; saue onely vpon a Traytor and forsaker of his Lorde, they thought not this (beeing a milder penaltie) to be inflicted: which manner of man they thought good, that hee shoulde not be spared at all, both because God would haue the dispisers of him-selfe to be vnwoorthie of all mercie; and also, for that Christe forgave not them that were betrayers of him to death, but he decreed that the Lorde shoulde be worshipped before other. These men therefore in manie of their assemblies, appoynted punishments of euerie one of the offences, and committed them to the monuments of writing.

Why a traitors punishment should be capitall.

King Aluredes owne writing of his sanctions.

The kings abrogating vnprofitable constitutions.

These sanctions I Alured the king, haue gathered together into one, and haue put them in writing; a great part of which, our auncestors kept religiously, and mee thinketh that manie of them are woorthie, to be in this age kept of vs, with like righteousness. Notwithstanding some of them, which seemed to be lesse profitable vnto vs, I haue by the consultation of wise men provided, partly that they shoulde be abrogated, and partly innouated. And because it might be thought rashnesse, for any man to recorde in the monuments of writing, manie of his owne decrees: and also it might be vncertaine what credite they shoulde haue with the posteritie, which thing thing we do highly esteeme : whatsoeuer thinges I haue founde worthy to be obserued in the actes of my countrey-man Inas, of Offa king of the Mercians, or of Ethelbert which was the first king of the Englishe men that was baptized, I haue collected them all. The other I haue vtterly omitted. And also in the discerning of these actes, I Alured king of the west Saxons, haue vsed the Counsell of the most prudent of our men, and they all liked the obseruation of the same to bee sette forth.

of Edw. the Senior.
King Alureds collection of the former kings lawes

Thus writeth Alured of his doing, both concerning his owne decrees, and the decrees of all those kinges his auncestors in these matters which were not onely ciuill and politike, but also Ecclesiasticall, In all which though he vsed the counsell and aduise of the Clergie, and of other learned and wise men; yet, as he did the action himselfe, so hee did it by his owne supreme authoritie, and reckoning vp all these other kinges decrees also, it argueth that they in their times and dominions, had the like authoritie in eccl. matters.

The auth. of the other kinges here mentioned.

The Eccl. lawes of Alured, are the seconde, and the fift; of the priuileges of Churches, the 6. of robbing Church goods, the 8. of violating Nunnes. the 16. of teaching them in dissolute manner, the 21. of Priests that kill any man, the 29. of them that enter into religion being indebted, the 39. of the festiuall and solemne dayes.

The eccl. lawes that Aluredus set forth.

After this Alured, his sonne Edward surnamed the elder, ioyning with Guthrune the Dane, king of the east Angles, (who changing his name at his baptisme was called Athelstane) doe sette forth diuerse Ecclesiasticall Lawes, which the same Guthrune and Allfred had before made, but belike, not till then sette forth, which lawes were these.

The lawes in eccl. mat. of Edward the elder, & of Athelstan king of the east Angles,

Before all thinges they enact, that one God onely should be honorably and holily worshipped, dispising and renouncing all the barbarous worship. And then (because they certainly knew e, that many would not be kept in the boundes of their dutie, nor obey the Eccl. discipline without them) they prouided humane lawes to be written out, and they sette forth the lawes pertayning to Christe, in common together with the lawes pertayning to the king that by these the rashnes of them might be restrayned, that would not obey the commandements of the Bishop. This therefore did they first decree:

The Princes penall lawes ioyned to the eccl.

That the peace of the Church within her walles, and that the tranquillitie which is deliuered by the hande of the king, should be kept godly and inuiolably.

And so they procede against them that forsake the Christian sayth.

Against eccl. persons that robbe the Churches: that fight, or periure themselves, or commit fornication, &c. And against incest,

Ianeslawes

If anie being condemned, desire to confesse himselfe to the Priest, that all doo earnestly and diligently promote all the lawes of God, &c.

For payment of tithes, for the money that then was payde to Rome, called the Peter pence, for the Church lightes : for the plowe almes: (as I take it almes giuen by the rate of their plow lande) and if any Dane denied or suppressed the diuine rightes or duties.

Of them that doe their businesses on the Lordes daye, of fastinges: And judiciall swearinges on the festiuall dayes, and against witches.

Of those that are entred into orders and are deceaued of their goods. Part of these are the lawes of Ethelstane.

The lawes of Ethelstane in eccl. matters.

The kinges, B. Nobles, and all the subiectes to pay their iust tithes.

I Ethelstane the king, by the prudent Counsell of the Arch-bishop Vilhelme, and of other my Bishoppes, doe verie straightly charge and commaunde, all the Gouvernours that are in my dominion, by the holie diuine powers of God, and of all the Saintes, and for my loue, that I beare to them, that before all other thinges they paye the iust and due tenthes (or tythes) of that that is mine owne in proper, as well of liuing beastes, as of the yearly profites comming of the earth, which thing besides mee, euerie one of my Bishops, Senators, and Gouvernors shall do, &c.

After Athelstane followeth Edmund.

The lawes of Edmund in eccl. matters.

The Clergies chast life, which chastitie was shewed before that it debarred not in B & Pastors matrimonic.

In the solemne feast of Easter, king Edmund did celebrate at London a great assembly, as well of the Ecclesiasticall persons, as of the Laye, in the which were present Oda, and the Arch-bishop Wolstane and many other Bishops, to consult about the health of their soules, and all them that they had care of.

First, they that haue entred into holy orders, and of whom the people of God ought to require the example of vertue to followe the same, they shall leade their life chastly (as the reason of their order shall suffer) be they men or women; which thing if they shall not doe, they shall be punished according to the rules of their orders, that is to witte, they shall forfeit all their earthly possessions, so long as they liue, and beeing dead they shall not be buried with holy buriall, except that they amended their manners.

Tythes, first fruts, almes.

Euery Christian shall religiously pay their tythes, and the first frutes of their seedes, and the money that is due for the plowe almes. He that payeth it not let him be accursed.

Reparations of churches.

Euerie Bishop at his owne charges shal reparaire the house of God, and may admonish the king, that the other Churches may be decently adorned, which is a very necessary matter.

Periury and idolatrie.

Whosoever forswere themselves, or make any barbarous sacrifices, except except they repent and amend their minde the sooner, they shall for ever be debarred of all the diuine seruices. I Edmund the King, to all that are in my Dominion and power, yong and olde, doe clearly signify, that I haue earnestly inquired of the moſte ſkilfull of my kingdome in the aſſembly as wel of the Eccleſiaſticall as lay perſons, by what meanes Chriſtendome might be moſte aduanced, and it ſeemed beſt vnto vs all, that we ſhould nourish loue and mutuall good will amongst vs through out all our Dominions, for we are all wearie of theſe continuall fightinges. And therefore, we ordeyne in this manner. And ſo hee proceedeth to Lawes for theſe matters.

After this, follow the Lawes of Edgar.

The Lawes which Edgar the King, decreed in the great Senate, God to loue and him-ſelfe to preſerue and to benefite all his Lordſhip (or Dominion). And ſo hee alſo proceedeth to the making of Lawes Eccl. Of the rightes, immunities, and tithes of the Church. Of the manner of their tything, to them that haue a place of buriall in the Church. Of the times when the tythes of all ſortes are due to payde of the Penie to Rome out of euery houſe. Of the Feaſt dayes and faſtings. And then he commeth to humane and politike Lawes.

The lawes of Edgar in Eccl. matters.

Thus did all theſe Saxon Kinges, with the aduice of their Biſhops & Cleargy, make as well Eccleſiaſticall Lawes, as tempoꝛall with the aduice of the Lordes and other their officers tempoꝛall. And this they did their ſelues and by their owne authoritie, and not onely allowed of that which the Biſhops and Cleargie before had decreed. All which I allege not, to allowe of all thoſe their Eccleſiaſticall decrees: for many of the thinges, (eſpecially in the Kings following,) were full of ſuperſtition and error, as (by Gods permiſſion) the blindneſſe of the time then was: but I note them onely for the point in queſtion, of the Princes authoritie, not onely in making Ciuill Lawes for Eccleſiaſticall matters, but in making Lawes of Eccleſiaſticall matters, and ſo, in making Eccleſiaſticall Lawes themſelues.

Howe farre theſe decrees are, & are not allowable.

And thus it continued here in Englande till the Danes got the Kingdome. Neither did Canutus the Dane take vpon him any whit leſſe the dealing in Eccleſiaſticall matters, than the Saxon Kinges had done, but rather ſhe weth it moze liuely than all the other, as appeareth in the collection of his Lawes, as well Eccleſiaſticall as tempoꝛall.

The decree that Canutus King of the Engliſh men, of the Danes, and of the Norways, to the loue of God, to his own ornament, and to the profit of his people, enacted at Wincheſter, on the feaſt of Mid-winter tide, (or the natiuitie of Chriſte.)

Christian religion, and loue the king Canutus with all fidelitie and obseruance.

The peace & honor of God, & next after the Princes.

Let vs maintain the temple of God with Godly & continuall peace, & let vs all often frequent it, both for the health of our soules, and for the encrease and profite of other things, for the onely peace of Christ comprehendeth all the Churches, and therefore it is meete that all Christians holde the Church in greate worship and honour. For the peace of God ought to bee desired and retayned aboue other things, And next after that, the kings peace ought to bee kept. It behooueth therefore that the peace of the Church of God, within the walles thereof, and the tranquillitie deliuered by the hande of the Christian king, bee euer cheefely kept firme and inuiolated. If any therefore shall violate any of these two, (Gods Churches and the kinges peace) forsetting his Lands, he shall be put to death, except the king shall pardon his offence. &c.

And if the Churches peace bee broken without man-slaughter, let the punishment followe according to the manner of the offence. &c.

The Churches orders and dignities to bee maintained.

It greatly behooueth all Christian men moste religiously to maintayne in peace the holinesse, the orders, and the places consecrated vnto God, and to giue to euerye order his owne dignitie. For let euery one knowe, (at leaste hee that will or may knowe) that it is a matter of greate waight and moment, which the Preeste must doe for the health of the people, if so bee hee shall studie to please GOD aright.

Greate is the sanctifying, and more is the sanctifying (or consecrating) with the which in consecratinge baptisme and the Sacrament of thanksgiuing the Deuill is driven away. Yea, the Angelles keepe the holye mysteries, and depending on the Diuine prouidence assist the preest, so often as he serueth God aright.

Which thing they do at all times when as the preeste doth humble from his heart beseeche Christe, and begge of him those things that are necessarie for the peoples life: these men therefore for the fear of God, for the dignitie of their order, are to bee discerned from other men.

Canutus Lawes for the purgation of a preeste accused.

If therefore anye man shall accuse of any crime a Preeste, liuing according to some certayne rule of Religion, and if hee witte himselfe to bee cleane thereof, let him say Masse if hee dare, and with his once receyuing of the sacrament of thanksgiuing, hee alone shall dash all the slander.

But if hee shall bee accused by three, then receiuing the Communion, on, if so be hee dare, and taking with him two other of his owne order, of Canons hee shall wipe away the suspition of the supposed crime.

If any man shall accuse with some speciall sleaundler of crime a Deacon living after some certayne forme of Religion : the Deacon shall Apurgation of a Deacon sleaundler
purge himselfe of the crime, by taking two other with him of his own order.

But if hee haue beene accused thrise, he shall purge him selfe with sixe other men of his owne order, &c.

Wee also doe bidde (or pray) and doe teache all the Ministers of GOD, and especially the preestes, that they obey GOD and loue Canons Lawes for degrees of marriage.
cleannesse and auoyde the wrath of GOD and flee from the lake of Hell fire. &c.

Moreouer wee teache, and wee pray, and in Gods name wee commaunde, that no manne can contract mariage with in the sixt decree of kindred, neyther yet mary the Widowe of his coofine, that was within sixe degrees vnto him, neyther that hee mary any that was of kinne to his Wife, that hee had before, neyther that any Christian mary his Gossippe, nor any that is deuorced. To conclude, hee that hath any care to keepe Gods Lawe, and will study to haue his soule saved fro hell fire, let him shunne harlots, and keepe him to his onelie wife, ioyned vnto him in lawfull mariage, and haue no more, so long as his wife liueth.

Let euery man pay vnto God yeerely his rightes and his iust duties orderly, let him pay the almes of his plowing, the fift day after Easter.
The tenth of his Cattell at Whitsontide, and the tenth of his fruites at Alhollow-tide. But if so be that any will not pay their tenthes in manner, as we haue afore-sayd, concerning the acre that is tythe-able, then let the kinges officer, the Bishoppe, and the Lorde of the soyle, and the seruing preeste of the Church come together, and whether hee will or no, deliver the tenth part to the Church, whereunto it is due, and leaueth the ninth to him: as for the other eyght partes, the Lorde of the soyle shall haue the one moytie of them, and the Bishoppe of the dio-cesse shall haue the other, be he the Kings man or any Noble mans.

And in this order he proceedeth to a great number of other Ecclesiasticall matters, (mingling (as in these) a great deale of graunt of foule chaffe, but good and badde, one with another, all thewe his authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters. But when hee commeth to the nineteenth, and so forwarde, because the Lawes are of better matters, I will craue the readers patience further, in setting them downe also.

And let euery Christian man doe all those thinges, that are profitable to his saluation. Let him applie him-selfe with all his thought of Canonicall thought and care, to the Christian fayth and Religion: and whoſoeuer will conceiue in his ſoule and minde thoſe things that are neceſſarie for his ſaluation (as indeede it ought to bee the deſire of all men) let him prepare his minde to receiue the Sacrament of thankſgiuing at leaſte thrise a yeare.

Receiuing
the Communion -
thrise a yere

And if hee will hope to finde fauour, let him well beſtowe all his wordes and deedes, and diſpoſe them orderly: let him keepe his othe and fayth giuen moſte religiously. And let euerie man to the vttermoſt of his abilitie, driue away from the boundes of our Dominion, all vn-righteouſneſſe, and hereafter earneſtly follow the righteouſnes of God both in wordes and deedes, and ſo at the length we ſhall all bountifully obtain the mercie of God.

20
Fayth & life

Besides this, let vs our ſelues put that in execution, that we commaunde other. Let vs alwayes bee of a firme and faythfull minde to God. Let vs vpholde his honour with all our forces and abilities, and obey his will. For what ſoeuer wee ſhall doe towards the Lorde, (bee-ing mooued with that faythfulneſſe that is ioyned with vertue and our office) that ſhall be to our great aduantage. For in this thing God the cheefe ruler and Lorde of all, will bee exceeding faythfull vnto vs, it ſtandeth vs therefore cheefely vpon, that they which are Lordes behaue themſelues rightly to their vaffailes. And wee earneſtly admoniſhe all Christian men, that inwardly withall their heart they loue God, that religiously they holde the right Christian fayth, and that gladly they obey their Diuine Doctores, that moſte diligently they ſearch the Lawes and Doctrine of God, and that they ſearche for it often and much for their owne commoditie.

Duties of failes.

Obedience to the Teachers.

Charge to euerie chri-ſtia to learn the L.praier & the articles of their beleefe.

And wee admoniſh that euery Christian man doe ſo throughlie learne, that at the leaſte hee doe well knowe the right Fayth, and can ſay the Lordes Prayer, and the Articles of his beleefe. For by the one all Christian men doe call vpon God, and by the other, they pro-feſſe a right fayth.

None that bath not learned theſe thinges to be admitted to the on, &c.

Chriſte him-ſelfe did firſt ſet foorth the Lordes prayer, and taught the ſame vnto his Diſciples. Which diuine prayer conſiſteth of ſeuene petitions, the which whoſoeuer ſhall vtter not faynedlie, but from his heart, hee conferreth with God him-ſelfe of all thinges that are neceſſarie, either for the life preſent or to come.

But by what meanes can any man heartily pray vnto God, except hee haue inwardlie to GOD a right Fayth? And verilie hee that will not learne theſe thinges, neyther ſhall haue his part of reſt with the Christians after his death, neyther ſhall heere aliuie bee admitted to receiue the Communion, neyther ſhall hee bee counted worthy to beare the name of a Christian man, neyther ſhall hee vndertake for any

ny other at the Font nor at the Bishops hande, except hee learne these of Cannons thinges, and shall knowe them well.

We also admonish them, that eche one of them studiously auoyde deadlie crimes and wicked deedes. And if peradventure they haue offended through the instigation of the deuil, that by instruction of the preefte they amend it.

23 Auoidance
of greuous crimes and repentaunce

Moreouer wee admonish euery one to flee filthie whoredome, and the vnlawful vse of the flesh, and violating of the couenaunt of wedlock so long as they liue.

24
To flee
whoredom.

Moreouer we teache, them, that the feare of God be always throughly serled in the mindes of them all, that day and night they feare the punishments due to wicked deeds, and dread the day of iudgement, and abhorre hell. And suppose euen their ending day approacheth.

25
The feare of Gods iudge mentes.

As for the Bishops they shall be the Bedels of God and the interpreters of Gods Lawe, and they must openly teache the benefites of diuine matters, and to set forth them-selues to bee examples of liuing for others to followe, whosoever will giue care to them. For hee is but an euill keeper, which with his voice at least, if he can do no more, shall not defende the flock committed vnto him against him that commeth to spoile it.

26
The duty of
B. & Pastors

But none is so euill as the Deuill him-selke, which alwayes labourerh in this one point, howe hee may mooste destroy mens soules. Wherefore it behooueth the pastors to bee watchfull and to giue warning, that by their aduertisementes, the people may haue knowledge thereof. The pastors wee call the Bishops, and the preeftes, whose partes are with erudition and Doctrine, to wathe and defend the Lordes flock, that the furious and wilde Wolfe doe not forthwith teare nor byte the flocke of God. And if there bee any that will not listen vnto the commaundements of God, hee hath to reckon for that with God him-selke. The name of God for euer bee glorified, and loue him, and praise him, and honor him through out all worldes.

Thus did this Dane King heere in England euen at that blinde time take vpon him (as it were, like a Bishop or preacher him-selke) to set forth these Lawes and decrees of Ecclesiasticall matters. After which hee proceedeth to those that hee calleth his worldly lawes. And yet euen among them also, hee inserteth some Ecclesiasticall lawes: as the 3. 5. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 44. 46. Besides causes of Matrimonie and fornication. And in the ende of all his Lawes of both sortes, Ecclesiasticall and temporall: hee concludeth all with a religious and diuinlike charge, commaunding mooste streightly in Gods name all his subiectes, to conuert them selues whole to God, and to heare their pastors, and the pastors to teach and preach the worde of God vnto his people.

The king

This authoritie and intermedling in the making of Ecclesiasticall Lawes, both aswell for the Clergy as for the tempoꝛaltie, had the Kinges in this lande befoze the conquest. What they haue had since, diuerse o-ther haue set forth moze largely, and I craue pardon that I haue beene so large in the collecting and setting downe of these. But I haue doone it to this ende, that we might moze fully perceiue this point, that the Princes did not onely make ciuill Lawes for Ecclesiasticall causes, or for matters that by the Clergy onely were decreed, that they should be obserued in their Dominions, and appoynted bodily or pecuniarie punishmentes for offending the same, of which sort I graunt many of these Lawes are, that we haue collected: but also that they them-selues with the aduice of their Clergie made Eccl. Lawes, and that mere Ecclesiasticall, or altogether pertaining to Church persons, or to Church matters, yea, to matters of religion and Doctrine. Neyther diminished it their authoritie anie whit, that they did none of all these things without the aduise and determination of their Clergie: for alwaies the Clergy so conditionally determined the same befoze, if it were a matter but of order or ceremonie, and not of Doctrine (which is inferible, neyther dependeth vpon man, eyther of the Prince, or of them) that the supreme authoritie lay still in the Prince, so to conclude the finall determination, that the Princes sentence doe knit vp all the matter, and made that order or ceremonie, to haue the life or force of a decree, Lawe, or constitution among them.

And other supreme authoritie than this, with the consultation, deliberating, aduising and determining, what Ecclesiasticall matter of order or ceremonie her Learned Clergy thinke mosse meete for our time and state, to bee mosse agreeable to order, comelinesse, and edification, to giue her royall assent to the confirmation and establishment of the same, that it may haue the full force and nature of a decree, Lawe, or constitution Ecclesiasticall: her Maiestie otherwise neuer tooke vpon her, nor claymeth, nor desireth to haue, nor the Statute gineth, nor wee acknowledge.

And if our Brethren would graunt thus much (as I hope vpon better aduisement they will not deny it) wee shoulde neede no controuersy in this matter, and all these examples that wee are nowe diuinen to bring forth to satisfie them, wee and they shall moze cheeresfully turne against the Papistes, that are the professed enemies of her Maiestie, and of our Brethren, and of vs.

But it will perhaps be sayde, that for Princes to subscribe to the determination of Preestes (as they call them) is no supremacie, but a subiection.

Wee aunswere, it is no subiection vnto men, but to God, and his worde, in the Church of Engl. for Eccl. matters. 16. Booke. 1367 The Clerworde, to doe nothing in these matters, but by the faythfull aduise of ^{gier aduise} them, that knowe his will, and are bounde to teache it vnto all men: ^{to the K.} no more than it is, to bee counted a subiection, for a Prince in Ciuill affayres, to followe the aduice of wise and faythfull Counsellers.

Wee haue shewed befoze in the examples of diuerse Emperours and Bridges Kinges, how Princes subscribed to their clergies determinations: in such sort, as they beeing humbly requested thereunto, had in ceremoniall matters their free choise, and might haue dashed all, or in subscribing thereto, they ratified the same and made it authenticall.

But if Princes were so to subscribe to the determination of Preestes, as wee may well without error or superstition call them, that the Princes their selues had no kinde of determination in any Ecclesiasticall causes, neyther aboue the preestes, nor yet at all with them: then in-deede it were no supremacie, but a subiection. And what else doe our Bishops heere giue to Princes: neither doe they heere deny, but in playne wordes confesse, that it is a subiection, and so, not a supremacie: saue that, they colour it ouer with this faire shadowe.

Wee aunswere, it is no subiection vnto men, but vnto God.

And what else doe the very popish preestes aunswere, when they take from the prince his authoritie, & bying him in subiection to their pope, & to the selues, but that this subiection, is a subiection not vnto the, as vnto men, but to God, and to his word, and to his Church? And so vnder the reuerende names of God, and of his worde and Church, they greatly abuse those Princes that thinke their sayings to bee true, & make them thral to their subiection, and to that which they pretend to be Gods worde, and to them that call them-selues the Church men, as our Bp. also haue distributed the name of Eccles. or Church persons onely among their tetrarches.

As for the faythfull aduise of those that knowe Gods will, and are bounde to teache it vnto all men: Wee denie not, but that the Prince is againe bounde, to aske faythfull aduice in matters of such impo-taunce as the making of Lawes. And of whome shoulde hee rather aske it, than of those that best knowe, or shoulde knowe Gods will, and haue moste experience in Ecclesiasticall matters, which is their proper profession, and shoulde teache the same vnto all men: but this is no rebate-ment to that right of the princes supreme authority, by which the matter so aduised vpon, shoulde be enacted and authorized for a Lawe. And this we haue seene not onely in all the fore-sayde examples, howe for all the princes aduise with their Clergy, their authority still remayned entier: but also our Bishops owne example that heere they alleage, both confirm the matter cleane against our Bzethzen.

For although it is not to be counted a subiection, for a Prince in ciuill affayres, to followe the aduise of wise and faythfull counsellors, but for all their duetie of giuing him faythfull aduise, and his duety to follow their aduise yet when the matter shall come to the making of a Lawe, his voice hath the authoritie to strike vp all the matter, they determine thus it shoulde be, and then it is hee that determineth thus it shall bee. So that, their determination is in-deede properlie no determination of the matter, but deliberation and aduisement, as our Bzethzen doe here more aptlie terme it, or their determination is rather of the nature of the matter than of authorizing the same: For, the resolute determining with authoritie is more properlie in the Prince, if wee respect the making of the matter to bee a Lawe in force amongst vs But, if these Counsellors to the Prince, will goe beyonde aduise, and turne their aduise into authoritie, and such authoritie, that whatsoever they determine, that must the Prince maintaine and set forth to be obserued euery where in his Dominions, and commaunde those that impugne it to bee punished, and that his Counsellors will let the prince to haue no further authoritie than this: call ye this the aduise of wise and faythfull Counsellors? well may they be wise to themselves, but they be not so faithfull as they should be to the prince, neyther take they vpon them as Counsellors, according to their name, but rather as Princes. But no wise prince will so suffer them, nor any faythfull Counsellors will so take vpon them. And therefore, if our Bz. will but marke this their owne example better, they neede no better satisfaction, that although they woulde in the making of Eccl. Lawes be her Maiesties wise Counsellors, and giue her (as they say) faithfull aduise therein: yet if their aduise shall growe so peremptorie, that they will prescribe, and the Prince must subscribe: that they will determine, & the Prince must execute, that it shall not be good without their consent, & the prince must not dissent from them, and that it is they that make it a law, & when they haue so decreed it, then the princes must command it to be obserued euery where in their dominions, and command them to bee punished that impugne it: this is plus satis pro imperio, and were verie dangerous to her Maiestie and to the whole state to admit it.

Whereby we see that if Gods ordinance were not plain in the scriptures, yet reason it selfe would conclude, that if in temporall matters, a wise prince wil do nothing of weight, without the counsaile of wise men: how much more in Gods businesse, which are of greatest importaunce, should they not decree any thing without the aduise of them that bee learned in those matters.

Our Bz. haue as yet shewed no ordinaunce of God, either plaine or obscure obscure in the Scriptures, against the princes supreme authoritie that her Maiesty claymeth, or that wee acknowledge, or for any thing that they haue as yet aouched, since they entred into this matter, of the title or authority of the princes supremacy. And therefore hauing alleaged nothing at all out of the Scriptures, no not the examples, that are apparant in the scriptures, of Moses, Iosue, David &c. Which might much haue cleared the matter: but fled to the examples of the Emperors, of the Christian Kinges of Fraunce, and Spaine, yea and of this our Britannie: and hauing only thus bumbased vp the matter with their foresaid reasons: they are now fallen in such a liking with these reasons, that as if were baunting, they say of them:

Whereby we see, that if Gods ordinaunce were not playne in the scriptures, yet reason it selfe woulde conclude:

And what woulde reason it selfe conclude in this matter, against that supreme authoritie and gouernment that her Maiestie claimeth and enioyeth, or that we acknowledge and yeelde vnto her: as for the reason they last alleaged, wee see nothing yet, but it maketh much against them, and that verie daungerouslie against all such aduisers, as woulde from aduising fall to commaunding, and from Counselling of the Prince, woulde seaze vpon the Princes authoritie.

But if they will driue their reason to conclude onely of counsell and aduisement: I graunt them that then it is a good reason, but it helpeyth them nothing in this matter, yea rather it maketh cleane against them.

It is good reason that in all the Princes temporall matters, and businesse of managing the common-weale, but in Gods businesse (as I grant also, Eccl. Lawes may wel be so called, and that some of them are matters of greatest importaunce) that the Prince shoulde not decree any thing, without the aduise of them that bee learned in those matters. Howebeit, this giueth not the authoritie, and much lesse all and the onely authoritie, of determining those matters vnto the aduisers of them, no more than it doth in temporall matters (from whence they still brge their reason by this comparison) that a wise Prince will doe nothing of weight, without the counsell of wise men, I graunt, that not onely reason it self will conclude this, but that also the ordinaunce of God is plaine in the scriptures, for euery man, namelie a wise Prince, in all matters bee they Ecclesiasticall or temporall, to doe nothing rashly, but if the matters bee doubtfull, with good counsell and aduise of them that be learned in those matters.

Neither is there any reason or ordinance of God in the Scriptures, that any which are but aduisers to the prince, shoulde fall from aduising him, so to incroche vpon him. And if I were woorthy to aduise princes, I would aduise them to take good aduise-ment, howe they aduised themselves by such aduisers, and (as I am thus aduised) mee thinketh it reason.

And if all princes by heathen wise mens iudgements, are so rulers, that they are seruantes of the Lawes, and of the common wealth; why shoulde it bee accounted for any dishonour vnto princes, to bee obedient to the Lawes of God their Father, and to serue to the commoditie of the Church their Mother? All princes (I graunt) are such seruantes of the common wealth, (not onely by Heathen wise mens iudgements, but also by all Christian wise mens iudgements too, that neuerthelesse their supreme authority in gouerning of the common wealth, is not one whit diminished by that seruice. And as for their seruice to the Lawes, which Lawes either they haue made them selues, or were made Lawes before they were made rulers, serueth (I graunt also) to the maintenaunce of those Lawes, and to the punishment of the impugnors of them: howbeit this hindreth not, but that princes haue another ruling and not seruing seruice (or as we may well terme it) a seruing rule and gouernment, (besides the conseruing of the Lawes) euen to make Lawes, as our Brethren haue before confessed. And as Saint Augustine excellently well doth say, in his 48. epistle ad Vincentium, And in his 50. Epistle ad Bonifacium (as we haue seene at large before.) And in his fift Booke De ciuit. Dei. cap. 24. Hee reckoneth this seruice among the princes cheefest vertues, hee sayth: that they make their power which they haue to bee a seruant vnto the Ma-iestie of God, moste largely to spreade abroad his seruice.

For I woulde not be vnthankfull, especially to neglect my principall seruice, which is the thanks that I owe euen of ductie.

With therefore the princes seruice is so high and principall a seruice, stretching to the making of Eccl. Lawes, and to all these matters, which seruice (as Saint Augustine sayth Epistola 50. None can doe but prin-ces: This seruice is no debarre, but rather an aduancement and pzeo-gatiue

But rather our Brethren would abase this authoritie, with telling princes they must account no dishonour to obeye the lawes of GOD their Father, and serue to the commoditie of the Church their Mother: what lawes of God the Father haue they as yet alleaged, either for this matter, or for any of their tetrarches, that inferre anye of these new Lawes, which they all without and besides the authoritie of a prince, would presse both vpon the prince and vs: What one thing, that (being better considered) serueth to the commoditie of the Church their and our Mother, but rather to the greate disquieting of her, in the calme harbour (God bee thanked) heere in Englande, and to the discrediting of her name to all other Churches and peoples rounde about vs, and to the great hazarde of her estate amongst vs: And is this the way to serue her commoditie? If not rather to serue their owne turnes and humors, both to the great dishonour of God our father, and to the no little damage of the Church our mother, besides the dishonour and disobedience of our so gracious Prince, with the trouble and endaungering of all the whole Realme.

But let our Brethren take good hede, that they abuse not Princes thus vnder these high titles, of God their Father, and of the Church their mother: for, euen with these termes did the Papistes deceaue Princes and all the world. When they sought their owne honour or profite, then they alwayes pretended the honouring of God their father, and seruing the commoditie of the Church their mother, in whose names (as Gods and the Churches deputies) they tooke on them selues to be honored, and their owne commoditie serued, both of all Princes and of all people, as much, if not much more, than eyther their father or their mother.

who may not see, that euen in the resemblāces of these metaphors, a great stian princes: yea, eue as much in the new testament as was in the olde:

but*

But by our Bishops wist they shoulde haue lesse.

So what an interpretation they make of this prophete: as though the Prophets meaning were altogether to abase the authoritie of Christian princes, and not rather cleane contrarie, to exalt and extoll it: though withall in some respects it be inferiour. For except he had called Kinges and Queenes Fathers and Mothers, by what neerer title could the Prophet haue called them, than Kings to be the nourishing Fathers, and Queenes to be the nourishing Mothers of the Church? Ioseph was but a nourishing Father vnto Christ: and yet sayth the text as well of him, as of the Virgine Marie his naturall Mother, Luke 2. verse 51. that hee was Subiect vnto them. So honorable is the title of a nourishing Father, and comprehendeth in it such authoritie. Not, but that the Princes againe, (in respect that the Church is the spouse and wife of Christe) do humble them selues as Children vnto her. And so, as they acknowledge God to be their Heauenlie Father, they reacknowledge her to bee their mysticall Mother.

The wordes of Esay not spoken so much to fore-tell of Princes abasing them vnder the church as of governing it.

Which not onely they, but euery Ecclesiasticall person also must doe, as well and as farre forth as they, though in some other respects, the pastors are againe spirituall Fathers, euens as well to the Princes, as to any other of Gods people. And so are both the partes of this Prophecie ioyned together, that the Princes superioritie is declared in the former part of the sentence: Kinges shall bee thy nursing Fathers, and Queenes shall bee thy Nurseries: that neuerthelesse in the other respect, they againe bee the Churches Children: and therefore it is added, They shall worship thee with their Faces towardes the earth, and lick the dust of thy feete.

A third part of this testimonie left out, whereto the other parts be referred.

But both these partes of prophete, are againe referred to a thirde that followeth: And thou shalt knowe that I am the Lorde, for they shall not bee ashamed that waite for me. As though he sayde to the Church: Doe not thou ascribe this vnto thy self, but vnto mee, by whom and for whom it is done, neyther let the Princes bee ashamed, as though they did abase them selues in doing this to thee: for they doe it to thee, not for thee, but for me, for whome they waite, and haue respect vnto: & therefore this reciprocal obedience neither of thee to them, nor of them to thee for mee, shall be any shame or dishonor either vnto thee, or vnto them, nor any abasing of their Soueraigne authoritie ouer thee, for they shall not bee ashamed that wayte for mee. Which last wordes of the sentence, our Bishops cleane cut off and leane out.

And thus both Caluine him-selfe expounde the wordes:

For they shall not be ashamed, &c. I take this worde WON, for a particule causall, for it is a continuing speeche, which of some is ill cut off, and by this argument hee proueth it to bee equitie, that Princes should shoulde cheerefully addict them-selues to the Empire of God, nor be agreed to humble themselves before the Church, because God doth not suffer them to bee shamed that put their trust in him. But hee ioyneth his trueth with our health, as though hee should say, this shall be an amiable and pleasant subiection. &c.

Cal. exposition of the testimonie of Esay.

So that this is no diminishing nor abasing of the Princes authoritie, and therefore Caluine also called them before (vpon the first wordes, And Kinges shall bee thy nourishing Fathers) Patrons, and Tutors. Whereupon (sayth hee) it is to bee noted, that a certayne singular matter is heere required of Princes, besides the vulgar profession of the sayth, because authoritie and power is of God giuen vnto them, that they shoulde defend and procure the glorie of God. This in-deede pertayneth vnto all: but Kinges, howe much greater their power is, so much the more ought they to employ them-selues, and more studiously to haue care thereof. And this is the reason why David by name calleth on them & exhorteth them to be wise, and serue the Lorde and kisse the Sonne.

Psalm. 2. 10

Heereupon it appeareth howe madde their dotages are, which affirme that Kinges can-not bee Christian, except they renounce that office. For these thinges were fulfilled vnder Christe, when as by the preaching of the Gospell, Kinges beeing conuerted vnto GOD, they attayned vnto this moste noble degree of dignity, wherewith all kinde of Dominions and principalities are excelled, that they shoulde bee the nourishing Fathers and Tutors of the Church. The papistes doe vnderstande that Kinges are nourishing Fathers of the Church none otherwise, then that they haue left vnto their sacrificing preestes and Monkes moste large reuenues, wealthie possessions and wide demaynes, by which they are fedde fatre as Hogges in a sty. But this education tendeth to a farre other matter, then to glutte such vn-satiabie gulfes. For neyther treateth hee heere of enriching their houses, that vnder a false pretext vaunt them-selues to bee the Churches Ministers (which was nothing else but to corrupt the Church of God, and to destroy it with deadly poyson) but of taking away superstitions, of remoouing all wicked and naughty worship, of promoting the kingdom of Christe, of conseruing the purity of Doctrine, of remoouing offences and of purging the filthes which corrupt Godlinesse, and obscure the maiesty of God.

If nowe the authoritie of the Prince stretcheth it selfe to all these thinges, in the name of nourishing the Church, which is farre above all bodilie nourishment or mayntenance of liuing: then is not the Christian princes authority abased any whit thereby, in the making of Ecclesiasticall Lawes for these Eccl. matters, but much more confirmed and increased: so that, the prophetes meaning was not (as our Bz. heere say the the prophet meaneth) that kinges and Queenes shall bee so carefull for the preseruation of the Church that they shall think no service too base for them; so they may profite the Church of Christe withall: For it is no profite at all vnto the Church, for princes to abase them-selues as they haue done, vnto the Pope and his Ministers: who no lesse shamefully abused this prophely, than the Princes simplic in beleeuing of them, did thinke indeede no service too base for them, that they might (as they thought) profit the Church of Christe withall. But the prophetes meaning was rather of twwayne, besides the comforting of the Church, to foreshew not onely the Princes honorable reuerencing of the Church, but also that by their exaltation & greates authoritie aboue it, they shoulde becom of persecutors, (as it were) euen parents to it.

But now, if this testimonie will not serue, to make Princes stoupe vnto their bent: they haue another at hand. Vnto this honorable subiection (say they) the holy Ghost exhorteth princes in the 1. psalme: after that they haue tried that they preuayl nothing in struing against the kingdome of Christe: Be nowe therefore wise O yee kinges, bee learned that Iudge the earth, serue the Lord with feare, and reioyce to him with trembling, declaring that it is a ioyful service to be obedient to Christ, yea, to serue God is indeede to reigne.

Our Brethren where they shoulde yet note at length, according to their promise, when all their other tetrarches were serued, haue declared vnto vs, howe farre the Princes authoritie in the government of Eccles. matters stretcheth: they are nowe altogether fallen from describing vnto vs the Princes authoritie, of which (God wot) wee haue hearde full litle yet) to the description all of the Princes subiection. For although they commend it with the name of honourable, yet still it is but subiection that they speake of, not authoritie.

Albeit, I graunt, this is mooste true, that it is a ioyfull service to bee obedient to Christe, yea, to serue God, is indeede to reigne, & better than to reigne in any worldly kingdome, without Gods seruice: and therefore the holy ghoste both well therein exhort those Princes, which haue tried that they preuayl nothing in struing against the kingdome of Christ to be wise, and learned and to serue the Lorde.

But let our Brethren withall remember this, that they abuse not this exhortation of the holy ghost, spoken to those Princes that resisted Christs kingdome, by applying it here altogether to the Princes that we speak of, that only are true Christian Princes, & haue already subiected their kingdome to Christs kingdome. For nowe we enquire of godly Princes, what auth. they haue by Christ allowed the, in the gouerning of his kingdome. Other wise, if they apply this sentence thus, as though her Maiestie in not submitting her self and her auth. to these their decrees & orders, did as yet resist the kingdome of Christe: they offer her Maiestie no small iniurie, nor she may well abase her authoritie so farre: nor any other Christian Prince, that hath subiected his kingdome to the obedience of the kingdome of Christe, as her Maiestie (God bee praised) hath done.

Not, but that (I graunt) there is still an vse of this exhortation euen to all Princes neuer so godly, to continue in this Wisdome, learning, and seruice of the Lorde. But her Maiestie (God be praised) being wise and Learned in deede, hath Learned and found out a great difference, betwixt the seruing of the Lorde himselfe, and the seruing of the seruants of the Lorde. For although there bee a seruice that the Prince oweth to them also, in respect that they in their diuine seruice of Gods worde and Sacraments represent God: yet, the Princes being also the seruants of God, as they again represent him in their seruice: so their seruice is such a high and supreme gouernment, as (let the beate action of the spiritual seruants diuine seruice aside) they are all inferior to the Princes seruice, and in some respects, not onely Subiects, but seruants also to their Princes, and not the Princes seruants vnto them. Yea, euen in those diuine seruices, which the Ministers, Stewards, or seruants of God professe, the Christian Princes, being also the Ministers and seruants of God, haue an higher seruice, ministerie and Stewardship, in the general ouer-sight of those particular ouer-seers, to ouer-see and ouer-rule them to doe their dueties, and with their aduise and counsell, deuising and determining what is fittest, to make lawes and orders with them and aboue them, not onely to rule all his temporall subiects, but all his Ecclesiasticks too; and euen himselfe in all due subiection to those his Lawes & orders, that he hath made. And that this seruice of the Prince to God, stretcheth herunto, and to the Prince especially aboue all other: we haue heard how S. Augustine expoundeth this testimonie. And yet because our 13. leade vs heere vnto it, let vs again mark it a little better, whether it more infirme and abase, or confirm and augment the princes authoritie, in making decrees & lawes of Ecclesiasticall matters.

How the K. serueth God as a man, & howe as a
king.

serued, he also doing the same things. Euen as the King of the Niniuites serued, in compelling the whole Citie to appease God. Euen as Darius serued, in giuing it into Daniels power to breake the Idoll, and in casting the enemies to the Lyons. Euen as Nabuchodonor serued, (of whom we haue already spoken) in forbidding by a terrible Lawe, all that were placed in his kingdome, from blaspheming God. In this therefore kings doe serue the Lord, when they doe those thinges to serue him, that none but Kinges can doe.

The example of the Kings seruice.

The seruice that none can do but Princes.

The Christian Princes supremacy in Eccl. matters.

The wise christian Prince may aswell giue aduice to his Clergie as take aduice of them.

If this seruice then be the onely prerogative of the Princes authority, that none but the Prince can doe: and this prerogative be, to make such Ecclesiasticall lawes, as some of these Princes Lawes were: howe doeth not this seruice plainly include the Princes supreme government in Ecclesiasticall causes? And sith this seruice of the Princes vnto Christ, consisteth principally in making lawes for Christ: no maruell then, if the holy ghost exhort Princes to be wise and to be learned, and to vnderstand, as the most necessary thing for them, to vnderstand the state of the Ecclesiasticall government: So that, if their Clergie forslow to doe their duetie; yet the Prince by this wisdom, learning and vnderstanding, might as well be able to giue aduise againe (if neede be) euen to his Clergie, in the making of many Ecclesiasticall lawes and orders: as to take aduise of them. As wee see how diuers of the forenamed Princes did, (and that by their authoritie, with the aduice of wise and learned men,) both make lawes of Ecclesiasticall matters, and haue a supreme government in the maintenance and direction of them.

Musculus in 2. Psal.

Why Princes are most especially called vpon.

Musculus writing on these wordes. And now ye kings vnderstande, &c. The nations and people (saith he, and much more, say I, the Clergie) are not excluded: but Kings & Iudges are by name called to bethinke them selues, euen for this cause that they are the heads of the nations, and of the people (conteyning in the nation, Clergie and al) to whome it principally apperteineth to be subiect vnto the Lord, and to giue themselves to bee leaders of the people that are their subiects, vnto this true obedience. For in two respects it standeth them vpon to be obedient to the Lord, first bicause they are subiect to his power, as are all other mortall men: and then because they are made his peculier Ministers, to this purpose, that hauing receaued power ouer their subiects, they shoulde both their selues serue the will of God, and cause their subiects to be obedient to it. And Marlorate vpon these wordes, Serue the Lord in feare, noting out of Calvin saith: Princes therefore in this place are admonished that they shall then raigne happilie, when their power is nothing else but Gods seruice. That is to say, where in commaunding and bidding, they serue not their owne lust, but gods will: neither vsurpe that tyrannical speech, Sic volo, sic iubeo, sicut pro ratione voluntas: Thus wil I haue it, thus I bid it be: it stands for reason that it pleaseth me. But they say: Sic volo, sic iubeo, quia sic divina voluntas mandat, cui soli cuncta subesse decet, thus will I haue it, thus I bid it be, because this is the will of Gods decree: He bids it bee, to whome what ere he say; all creatures (will they nill they, ought obey. Let them also note this place which deny the power of the king & secular Magistrat (as they cal him) to haue ought to do in a cause of a religion. For, although the kingdom of Christ be in the hearts of the beleeuers, notwithstanding it apperteineth to the Magistrate to haue a care, that the doctrine of the word may be retined in the Church, that I-dolatry and false worship may bee taken awaye, that the Ministers of the church may be commodiously mainteined, & that the aduersaries may be repressed, & then to forbid the name of God to be blasphemed, & to bring to passe that such as leade a godly life may liue in safety, but the wicked persons & those that are vnquiet may be punished & restrained ned. This then is the Princes seruice vnto God. And is not this as much, as to make good Eccl. lawes & orders, with the aduice & counsell of the wise & godly learned clergy, as hath done, and doth her Maiestie?

But now our brethren after they haue tryed, whether they shoulde preuaile by these two aforesaid testimonies, least these should not preuaile in struing against the Princes authority in Eccl. matters; they adioyn a third vnto them out of the new testament, saying: And especially it is to be noted, where S. Paule commaundeth prayers and supplications to be made for the conuersion of kings vnto the knowledge of the truth, and their own saluation, that he alleageth this reason, that we may leade a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlines & honesty vnder their protection. A godly & honest life we may liue, vnder enemies of the church & persecutors: but a peaceable and quiet life in all godlines & honesty, onely vnder a christian Prince.

If they do it as paraphrasts, by way of some part of exposition, they adde these words well, vnder their protection. But in that they set them downe as the words of the text, me thinketh it somewhat ouer bold so to cite the holy scripture; or yet as paraphrasts, if they so limite the end of our prayers and supplications for Kings & Princes, which (in these three benefites that the Apostle citeth,) stretcheth a great deale farther than to protection onely. For (as Dauid and other godly Princes were) they may be both protectors and procurers of the same, yea, the chiefe gouernors and directors in the setting forth and maintenance of them.

Neither is S. Pauls exhortation to pray for Princes, to be restrained onely to the praers & supplications to be made, for the conuersion of kings vnto the knowledge of the truth: but it stretcheth further, yea generally, as well for those that are conuerted, as those that are to be conuerted: & as well to giue thanks for the one, as to pray for the other, & not onely for their owne saluation: but that by their meanes, all their subiects likewise may attaine to the

the way of saluation.

He reckoneth vp (saith Caluine) the fruits that spring vnto vs, out of a principality that is well ordered: the first is a quiet life. For, the magistrats are armed with the sword, to kepe vs in peace. Except they should beate downe the audaciousnes of wicked men, al things would be ful of robberies & slaughters, &c. The second fruit is the conseruation (or saluation) that is to wit, while the Magistrats indeuour to nourish religion, to plant the worship of God, to require the reuerence of holy things. The 3. is the care of publike honestie, &c. If these 3. things be taken away, what is the state of mans life? if any care therfore, either of publike tranquillity, or of Godlines, or of honesty touch vs, let vs remember to haue consideration of them, by the ministry of whom, so excellent things do come into vs.

Caluin in
1. Tim. 2.

The benefites that we haue
by the Princes ministerie.

Thus doth Caluin confesse) that the Ministry of the Prince stretcheth as far forth, in procuring vnto vs the benefit of religion, as of the other twain: & therfore he concludeth, that we must pray for Princes aswell & as much (if not much more) for this benefite, as for the other.

Yea, saith he: If any man shall aske, whether prayer ought also to bee made for the Kings, of whom we receaue no such thing? I aunswere, our prayers ought to tend heereunto, that they being gouerned by the spirite of God, may begin to be the Ministers vnto vs of those good things, of which before they did depriue vs. And therfore it behooueth vs, not onely to pray for those that alredy are worthy, but we must pray to god, that of ill, he would make the good. For we must alwaies hold this principle, that magistrats are appointed of God, aswell for the custody of religion, as of tranquillity & publike honesty, enen no otherwise, than the earth is ordeyned to bring forth nourishing fruits. As therefore when we pray for our daily bread, we beseech god, that with his blessing he would make the earth fruitful; so in those former benefites, we must looke to the ordinary meane, which by his prouidence he hath appointed, &c.

Why wee should pray for Princes of whome we haue not these benefites

Moreover here are Princes (on the other side) and whosoever are Magistrats, admonished of their office. For it is not enough, if that they repress all iniuries, by rendering to euery one his right, & nourish peace: except that they promoat religion, & study to copole mens maners with an honest discipline. For Dauid doth not in vaine exhort them, to kisse the sone: nor Esay in vaine denouceth, that they shalbe the nourishing fathers of the Church. Therefore they haue not to flatter theselues, if they shal neglect to giue theselues to be helpers to plant the worship of god.

The Princes
office.

Thus doth Caluin vpon this place, aduance and recommend vnto vs, the great & most necessary authority of Princes in Religion, & not allraige it to their restraint, (as doe our bretheren) cleane contrary to all the Godly interpreters of this place.

A godly and honest life (say they) wee may liue vnder enimies of the Church and persecutors.

How hardly we may leade a godly life vnder persecutors.

Our br. renew their old defacing of the Princes authority.

Very hardly (say I) and very fewe, except the mightier power and grace of God preserue them. Howbeit our brethren here, doe but as they did before, Pag. 9. where they saide: the Church of God was perfect in all her regiment, before there was any Christian Prince, yea, the Church of God may stande and doth stand at this day, in most blessed estate, where the ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers. And was it not enough and to much for them, in the beginning of their learned discourse, to haue put backe the treatise of the Princes authoritie, tyll all their Clergie haue all their authorities first allotted out to euery one of them, and to put back the Princes with such a rontumelie: but that now also, whē they should come to the place that they promised to reserue for them, instēde of commending their authority in Eccl. matters, thus still to abase it, & especially this greatest benefite among all other, & far aboue them all, that vnder God chiefly floweth vnto vs from godly & religious Princes?

The excellent benefite that we receaue by a godly prince.

I graunt it springeth not from them, as from the onely or principall founteynes: for God himselfe & his grace that floweth vnto vs from him, is the chiefe fountaine, that cannot be stopped, where he bouchsafeth to infuse it: and his worde is euen a fountaine of life, in the preaching, teaching, reading, meditating, beleuing, & obeying y^e same, sourging & flowing into all godlines and honestie in this life, & to life euerlasting. Which (though in the elect of God) cannot by any Princes power be dyed vp, or vtterly stopped, but that y^e water course thereof will breake forth with great force & violence, though not of bodily resistance, but of spirituall power & operation: yet notwithstanding, as it pleaseth God to vse the labor in the word of his Eccl. Ministers, for the planting & watering of his Church: so hath he ordeined godly Princes, (where he of his great mercy raiseth them vp) to be the chiefe Gouernors & directors, to ouersē the cundit pipes of these spirituall waters, to be conueyed into all y^e offices of the Lords house, & into all the partes of their dominions, & to run orderly in their currents, & to remoue all y^e stops, & to cleanse all the corruptions, & as need is, to repaire & amend all the pipes: or els the effects of godlines & honesty shalbe greatly hindered, be spilt, or run another waye, and dishonesty & vngodlines ouerflowe.

In the worde godlines S. Paule vnderstandeth the worship of God.

This therfore, (if wee shall respect the generall course of these effects in the Church, throughout the whole states of Realmes & Dominions, rather than some rare & particular persons,) is not so wel spokē as it should be of our Bre. that a godly & honest life we may liue, vnder enemies of the Church & persecutors. For the enemies & persecutors (except god miraculously do turne it otherwise, to his glory & his elects confirmation) are the greatest hinderers & overthrowers, both of honesty, & of all Godlines. In which word godlines (especially when the Apostle addeth, in al godlines) not onely godlines lines of life (as the Papists confesse) which is but all one in honestie: but (as we haue shewed out of Caluine) the godlines of religion or true worship of God is most especially comprehended, as Beza also very wel doth note thereon.

This (saith he) is a most noble place, not onely against the anabaptists & all other fanatical (or mad-spirited) persons, that think the Magistrate is to be taken away: but also against that most cruell charity (or brotherhood of loue) of the Academikes, which of late haue crept in, & yeeld not to Magistrates a right, against the disturbers of true Religion: when as mention is here expressly made τῆς ἐν τοῖς βασιλεῦσι, that is, of the iust & lawfull worship, of which onely before other things, it behoueth the godly Magistrates to be the mainteyners & setters forth. Yea, so far soorth, that so often as there should be any necessity, eyther to forgoe religion, or ciuill peace: what Princes soeuer would not prefer that before this, they should wittingly, & aduisedly bind theselues, with a most grieuous offence, &c.

The Princes duty before all things to set forth true religion.

Thus againe doth Beza on this sentence, commend the authority of the Christian Prince, a great deale further here than do our bre. and yet I denie not, this is somewhat, that they will yet graunt thus much; that we may liue a peaceable & quiet life, in all godlines and honesty onely vnder a christian Prince. For so can we not do, vnder enemies & persecutors: for they will suffer none to liue a quiet and godly life, that are the professors of true religion, but to the vttermost of their power, destroy them, or disturbe their peace and quietnes. And how then will our bre. iustifie their former saying, Pag. 9? the Church of God may stand, and doth stand at this day in most blessed estate, where the ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauorers? Is that a blessed, and most blessed estate: when they that professe godlines & honesty cannot liue a peaceable nor quiet life? both not the Church of God stand in a great deale far more blessed estate, where they may leade a peaceable and quiet life in all godlines and honesty? and therefore sith they confesse here, and that more truly, that this benefite is onely vnder a Christian Prince: it followeth, that their other saying was not true: no, nor yet this: false in part, this be the truer of the twaine; yet it aunswereth not home to the due commendation & setting forth of a christian Princes authority, how far it stretcheth in matters of Religion. For although quietnes & peaceableness in these things, is no small comodity (for a man would giue much, to buy his peace & to liue in quietnes) neuertheless, since that in these things is not the onely end, nor the chiefest end of Christian Princes, nor the greatest benefite that we receaue by them; but their helpe, furtherance, & supreme authority vnder Christ, in setting out godly and honest lawes, ordinances & decrees, with the aduice of their godly learned Clergie in those matters, for the establishment & maintenance of godly Religion & honest life in peace and quietnes, therefore our bre. do not here sufficiently set forth all, nor the best part of the benefites, that we receiue by the authority of a godly Christian stian Prince; nor so much as the aunient examples both in the old testamēt, & as the allowance of the new Testament, or as the foresaid practise of p Em-perors & Kings in Christendom both allow, nor as we our selues haue both of late felt, in the gouernments, of that most Heroicall Prince King Henry the 8. and the most vertuous King Edward the 6. or that now especially (if we be not to vnthankfull, in not recognizing the manifold & exceeding benefites, that daily we all receiue & enioy from the godly raigne of our most gra-tious soueraigne Queene Elizabeth, which now most happily raigneth ouer vs, God be highly blessed for her, and God vouchsafe still to blesse her, and giue vs better grace in all duty & thankfulness to acknowledge it. Much better doth Beza, euen on this sentence also, in his confession. cap. 3. article 44. acknowledge these benefites of the Christian Prince, saying: It remaineth that we treate vpon the Magistrate, to wit, one of the members of the Church, & that in his kind, placed before the other without any exception. As that whose force is architectonicall or building, the office therfore of this magistrate, is to conserue the publike peace & tranquillity.

But when as that cannot well be done, but that in the firste place, the true worship of God must flourish, from the which onely all true felicity springeth; it followeth that nothing ought of Christian Magistrates to be esteemed higher, than that they haue the church ordered, according to the prescript of Gods word, the authority wherof they ought to defend & mainteine, against al the froward contemners & disturbers ther-of, following the example of Dauid, &c.

This thing (say they) the Church most hūbly desireth of the Prince: for this end, the Church continually praieth to God for the Prince: in this respect, the church most obediently submitteth her selfe vnto the prince as a childe to his nurse, that both Prince and people may honor God in this life, and after this life raigne with Christ euerlastingly.

This conclusion is a great deale better than the premisses. For in them, we had all thinges still diuinen, to the Princes abasing of themselves vnto the Church. Which subiection notwithstanding, in the foresaid sense, as she is p spouse of Christ, & the Prince a particular person; as she is the mother, & the Prince her childe, so well as any of his subiects: we deny it not. But here now at length, our bre. tell vs another tale; how the church desireth of the Prince; how the Church not onely praieth continually for the Prince; but also most obediētly submitteth her selfe vnto the Prince, as a child to his nurse. In these words is inferred a great authority of the Prince ouer the Church. Now, if we shal see, what p matters are, wherein this authority of the Prince ouer p church consisteth: al this controuersy is forthwith concluded.

And here, to the specifying of this point, this thing (say our bre.) the church most humbly desireth of the Prince: what is this thing? For this end, the Church continually prayeth to God for the Prince: & what is this end?
In this respect the Church most obediently submitteth her selfe vnto the Prince, as a childe to his nurse, and what also is this respect? For, we may either refer, this thing, this end, & this respect, epyther to the words that went before, or to the words þ follow. If we shall refer them to the words þ follow; that both Prince & people may honour god in this life and after this life raign with christ euerlastingly: our by. frō giuing to little, may giue too much, except they make Princes to be but as meanes & instruments herevnto; as also be þ Eccl. ministers in their callings. Both of the the prince & they, are þ instruments & meanes that God hath ordeined to this end, in the gouernment of his church, by the making of good Eccl. lawes that both Prince and people may honor God in this life, & of the consequence that God hath bound-safed to set downe, (I will honor them that honor me) they may after this life, raigne with Christ euerlastingly.

Princes the meanes to sal-uation.

1. Sam. 2. 30.

But if we shall refer this thing, this end, & this respect, to the words, going before, that is, a peaceable and a quiet life, in all godlines & honesty:
then are we neuer the nearer for the point in question, to know how far forth, in procuring a peaceable & quiet life, in al godlines & honesty, our by. will graft the authority of the Prince to stretch: whether to make (with the ad-uice of their learned clergy) Eccl. lawes, cōducing aswel to godlines, þ is to say, to gods true religion & worship, as to honesty & to a peaceable & quiet life, yea or no. For this is the very pitch of the question in controuersy.

The pitch of the controuer-
sie betwene vs concerning this question.

They say, that the Prince with the aduice of the learned clergy maye make ciuill lawes for Eccl. matters.

And we say, that the Prince with the aduice of the learned clergy, may make, euen Eccl. lawes, or lawes not onely for, but of Eccl. matters. They say, that the Pastors onely (though for a shew now and then they soyne with the Pastors, those whom they tearm the gouernors) must make the decrees & lawes Eccl. appertaining to order cōlines & ædification of the church yea, who but teachers & preachers is able to know the? & then the prince must make ciuill lawes to bind the people to al eccl. orders, that they being instructed by the word of god, through the ministry of the preaching of the same, shall vnderstande, to bee profitable for ædifying the church of christ, & to the aduancement of the glory of god. And yet somewhat furder, If any shal offend against the lawes, whether he be preacher or hearer, besides the eccl. censure which he should not escape; he is also to be punished in body by the ciuill magistrate. we say, that the prince hath a part, & that a principal part, euen in the very making of all these eccl. lawes, orders or decrees, in that he maketh the by his royall consēt to be eccl. lawes, orders & decrees. For till the princes royall assent, rati-fie them, (if there be a christian Prince so to do) they be but determinatiōs what should or may bee done, and are indēde rather deliberations and aduise-ments, chan that they haue the vigoꝝ & force of decrees and lawes.

This difference
betwene vs.

So that, the Prince carryeth not (as they say) till the Clergy haue fully decreed it for a lawe, & afterward by the Ministry of their preaching, they

Prince is a nurse.

let him vnderstand what decrees and lawes they haue made: & then must he obserue them, and binde his people vnto them, & punish those that offend against them; but we say, that they deuise them, & he enacteth them. They say, they should be; & he saith, they shall be; and so he maketh the Eccl. lawes with their aduices. This is the very point, & if they could they should, or rather should not, but woulde infringe. For in this chiefly consisteth, the Princes supreme authority in Eccl. matters that we defend, and they thus begin to call in question.

Our Brethrens
similitude of a nurse against
them.

But euen their owne similitude doth here beate them: that they say, in this respect the church most obediently submitteth her selfe vnto the Prince as a child to his nurse. For if the Church doth so submit her selfe to the Prince: then, as the nurse doth not onely procure peace & quietnes to the child, in the things that are necessary for him, but doth giue him suck also, and nourisheth him with milke from her owne breasts, besides other things that she prouideth, and not onely dresseth & trimmeth by the child, but also appointeth orders & rules to others in the house, how the child should be kept & tended: so the Prince in all these things not onely for quietnes & safety of the church, nor for ciuill honesty onely & conuersation of life, but also in feeding the Church with the milke of Gods word (as euen the very interlineall glosse of the Papists theselues, cannot shun, but confesse that interpretation, it is so forcible against them) & how is this the feeding them in this milke from the Princes breasts: since they their selues do not Preach the word; but by that authority that is in the Prince to set forth Eccl. lawes, for the feeding of the people with gods word, by all such other meanes besides preaching, teaching, & ministry of the Sacraments, as is competent to their princely estate: that is to say, by making Eccl. lawes, orders, & decrees, for the nourishing and gouerning of the Church. Though still, in respecte the Princes are but particular persons, they againe are but as the children, the Pastors their nurses, God their father, & the Church their mother. And thus (we graunt) as mutuall meanes & instruments therunto, they haue on all parts, this authority giuen them of god, that (as our brethren say) both Prince and people may honor God in this life, and after this life, reigne with christ euerlastingly. And this is all that our Bre. say, of the supreme authority of Christian Princes in Ecclesiasticall matters.

The lear-

pag. 145.

Thus haue wee briefly set foorth a forme of reformation, touching matters Eccl. (as we are throughly perswaded, agreeable to the word of God, & as we are able to proue, consenting with the example of the primitiue church, building onely vpon the most sure foundation of the canonically scriptures: but intending more at large, if occasion shall serue, hereafter to set forth the practise & consent of the godly fathers in their actes, Counsels & writings, following the same rule and interpretation of the scripture that we haue done,

And

And thus also haue we fully & thoroughly heard, what our bre. briefly or logue of this largely haue set forth, in all this their learned discourse of Eccl. govern- learned disc.
ment, for the fourme of reformation touching Ecclesiasticall matters. Bridges.

Here therefore, hauing now finished their whole discourse, which in the front thereof they haue intituled, A briebe and playne declaration, conteyning the desires of all those faithfull Ministers, that haue and doe seeke for the reformation of the Church of England: They now enter into the Our Brethrens Epilogue or small per-oration, for the knitting vp of all the matters, that in Epilogue of this learned discourse haue bene layd downe. this learned discourse.

And first, whereas (the more to perswade the reader to beleue them) they say, this forme that they haue here set forth, is (as they are thoroughly per- Our Brethrens swaded) agreeable to the word of God: I answer, this is not materiall, perswasion what they are or are not thoroughly perswaded to bee agreeable to the that this their word of God. For though in Christ, we wish as wel to them, as they to vs: forme is agree- yet depende wee no more on their perswasions to themselves, than they on able to Gods ours to vs. word.

But if they could haue brought, or can bring, any sufficient and cleere profe of matter, out of the worde of GOD indeede, that might perswade vs thoroughly thereunto: If they could doe that, it were very materiall, and by the grace of God, wee should not gaynsay it, contrary to our consciences, but yeeld on all hands thereunto, and bee as thoroughly perswaded as there are.
But this must bee with better and firmer p'oues of Gods worde, than either our Bre. haue yet alleldged, or any other that euer I read, agreeable or inclinable to their opinion. For, setting aside all such perswasions of men; this perswasion must bee wrought with pure matter. For till then, they can neuer thoroughly perswade other, to be perswaded as they bee, if they thei-selues be indeed (as they say they are) thoroughly perswaded. And although I may be somewhat easily perswaded, that they are somewhat perswaded, that this their forme is agreeable to Gods word: yet as yet, I can neither be thoroughly perswaded, that they thei selues are thoroughly so perswa-ded of this forme: nor that this forme of this learned discourse (let the learning, in eche mans perswasion, goe as it shall) is either the discourse, declaration, or desires, of all those faithfull Ministers, that haue and doe seeke for the discipline and reformation of the Church of England.

If they shall utterly herein reiect all our Bishops and all vs, besides onely themselves, as no faithfull ministers: that were too arrogant a parte in them selues, and too iniurious and contumelious to all the Ministers in the Church of England, that are not thoroughly perswaded as (they say) they bee. Yea, sion.

uourers, that yet are not perswaded at all, in many things conteyned in this learned discourse, but utterly mislike them, and will perhaps bee lesse and lesse perswaded, and more mislike them, when they view and consider better of the matters, of the groundes, of the promues, and of the drifts thereof. But if they meane this through perswasion, to be of them onely that doe openly professe their discontentment, and are recusants and a recusants of the gouernment established in Ecclesiasticall matters, and that speake or write agaynst it, and haue set out other bookes, or that haue complotted themselves together in deuising and setting forth this fourme of reformation, which they call a learned discourse, and a declaration of all the faithfull Ministers, &c. which who they are, and what number they be of, God knowes, I know not: yet this I know, and it is apparant, that diuers of them are so farre from being thoroughly perswaded in the forme here set forth, that almost none of their writings & bookes in many poynts, and some of those very materiall, are agreeable either one with another, or with this forme, as by conference of them will easily appeare. And some of their diuers opinions, and cleane contrary positions, we haue here seene, as occasion hath serued to obserue the same. Yea, we haue seene, how their owne selues oppugne their owne selues, with diuers and contrary assertions in this learned discourse. And then by this title of their forme, that it is the desires of all the faithfull Ministers, that seeke for the discipline & reformatio of the Church of England, all those different fro these, seeke a wrong discipline & reformatio, & are vnfaithfull Ministers, & call their own faithfulness & seeking in question too.

But I verely thinke (God forgieue me if I thinke amisse) where this learned discourse is set forth in the name of all the faithfull Ministers that desire & seeke for the reformatio of the Church of England: if they would declare their names who they bee, and that they were asked their voyces by scrutinie, or might deliuer the same as freely as they their selues would wish; our scrutatoys whē they had nishen al their voyces, would retorne vs a saye Non placet. If they would not rather many of them, euen openly dislayme their cōsent for their parts, & professe that this forme is none of their forme, nor they desire nor seeke for many of these straunge and daungerous matters, that in this learned discourse are prescribed. Yea, whosoever were the writers hereof, in the names of all the faithfull Ministers, me thinketh they began euen here somewhat to stagger, and dare not in playne wordes for a round conclusion say, this forme is plat and playne set downe, and prescribed or commaunded in the word of God; and that they are thoroughly so perswaded. No, they haue yet more grace than so: & they pronounce their words more warylie, saying: it is agreeable to the word of God. Howbeit, they deale not well in this cunning cōueyance of their words, that under the quarter sayle of agreeable, will so compasse the winde, till they set vp full sayle, and thrust it vpon vs, not onely as agreeable, but as flatly commaunded and prescriprescribed. For if it prescribe not, but be onely agreeable, as here they say; then are not we of any such necessitie bound thereto, but that wee may keepe this forme of Ecclesiasticall government, that is already established, well enough; except our Bretheren can proue it to be disagreeable. Yea, so disagreeable, that it be repugnant to the word of God: which as yet they haue not, withall their heauing and shouing, bene able to doe. And yet, if they could proue it to be disagreeable: this importeth no necessitie of their forme; no, though we should also admit that it were agreeable to the word of God: which neither yet haue they bene able to doe, withall their seying and wyllynging of Gods word, to proue it.

But for all this, they say, they are able to proue, that their forme of reformation here set forth, is consenting with the example of the Primitive Church.

Indeepe they say, not so much before, for the agreeableness of this forme to the worde of God, that they were able to proue it; but onely that they were throughly perswaded it is agreeable. But for all their perswasion, we haue (thanks be to God) plainly seene it proued, that it is much disagreeable fro the word of God, euen in euery of the persons of their Tetrarchie, and in many other great and important poynts: and not onely disagreeable, but contrary. But now, when they come from the word of GOD, to the Primitive Church, where they begin to take vpon them somewhat more boldly, that they are able to proue: what now are they able to proue? any rule, commaundement, or prescription of this forme? No. But (say they) we are able to proue it to be consenting with the example of the Primitive Church. What? doe they passe cleane ouer all rule, commaundement, and prescription, as a matter that they dare not so much as touch, or looke after, but leape at the first choppe into example? Or doth euery example in the Primitive Church make a prescription? or is equiualent with a rule or commaundement? or if it doe not; how doth it binde vs? especially, vnderstanding the example of the Primitive Church, so as here they doe, in a separte sence from that, that is conteyned in the Scripture: for so I take it, that they ment the scripture only, whē they spake before of the word of God: and that now by y example of the Primitive Church they meane y tyme immediately succeeding y time, that is expessed in the word of God. And yet, though they did comprehend in y name of the Primitive Church, the tyme also expessed in the word of God, or any example in the word of God: they should hardly vrge a rule, or prescription of some one exāple, if they haue nothing else; but only some such exāple for it. Well might an exāple be brought for an instance of the practise, of some one poynt or matter set forth in this forme; but what would y serue, for any exāple of all the poynts & matters, y they haue set forth in this forme? Can they proue a general practise of all these, or of any one point vpon which they haue discoursed, that the exāple thereof rie speeches. was used vniuersally, and in continuall practise in the Primitiue Church? Understand the Primitiue Church how they please; they haue not yet shewed vs any such example. No, in very deepe not any one example, that is answerable to this their prescribed forme.

Yes (say they) wee are able to proue this forme, to be consenting to the example of the Primitiue Church.

Consenting? what meane they by that? Do they told vs before, of being agreeable to the word of God, and doe they now tell vs of consenting to the example of the Primitiue Church? Why doe they now begin so sparingly to mince their termes, and as it were by ounces thus warily to way their words, in the ending of this their learned discourse? What, is it now, in fundo parsimonia? or are they now waken more wise, than before in the discourse of all their learning? They had wont to followe the matter so freshly, to brge and presse on euery thing so peremptorily, that it was so, and it is so, and it shall be so: euery coniecture was a conclusion; euery example was a prescription; yea, euery word a sentence, euery sentence a rule, and euery rule without all exception; there is no remedie, thus and thus it must bee. And now, when it comes to the vpshot and last reckoning, I cannot tell how, all is dash. Or doe they misdoubt, they haue somewhat ouershot themselves before? And it is good to keepe some sober for an after reckoning, and therefore they now come in, with these more circumspect termes. Well, yet when all is done, it is either at least, agreeable to Gods word: or at least, wee are throughly so perswaded: or if it were not in the worde of God: yet at least, it was in the Primitiue Church: or at least, there was then the example of it: or at least, it was consenting with the example. May then Bretheren, and ye can driue it on thus: was it not at least, your own consent that we should imagine it for an example, or at least, was it not indeede mere nothing? Parturient montes nascetur ridiculus mus is all this platforme come now to this, that it is consenting to the exāple of the Primitiue Church?

Well then, if it bee but consenting, and that but with example, and that but of the Primitiue Church: then, the market is well fallen, and perhaps mard, for the utterance of these wares. And as we had before nothing but agreeable, so it may fall out, that it is neither agreeable, nor consenting: at least, this is manifest that agreeable and consenting is not the same. Yea indeede, this forme of reformation that our Bretheren brge, is neither the same, nor agreeable, nor consenting. And yet, admit it were consenting in matters that are not prescribed, not only other formes agreeable and consenting, but euen disagreeable and dissenting also in some poynts, are so little to be condemned, that they may be very well allowed: or (to come downe as they doe) they may at least, be so well borne withall, that the vnitie of doctrine, and peace of God, should not be broken, nor Scismes made for them in his Church. But since our Bretheren here, after Gods word, stand vpon the consenting with the example of the Primitiue Church: what tyme will they limite for the Primitiue Church? For if we shall vnderstand it (as commonly it is vnderstood) for all the tyme of the persecutions till Constantines reigne: how can they proue the forme of reformation that is here prescribed, to bee consenting with the example of the Primitiue Church: yea, take it for any age after the Apostles: yea, in the very Apostles tymes? Can they name but one Doctor in any place, that might not or did not applye his doctrine, and exhort, and preach? they haue not named him. Can they name any one Church, where all the Pastors were so equall, that they had not a Bishop, or some one hauing a standing superiour gouernment ouer the residue, if there were many Pastors in that Church; or if they had not at all tymes, might not haue had, as well other Churches had; as wee haue seene what a number of such superiour Bishops there were in the Primitiue Church? Or can they name the man, that was such a gouerning Elder as might not teach, or any Church that had them, speaking of such as were Ecclesiasticall or Church Presbyters Priestles or Elders? Or if there were any such in some Churches; that there was such, and a Consistorie of them, in all the Primitiue Churches? Or can they tel who, where, and when, there were such Deacons, as medled onely with the care of the poore, and contributions for them, or distributions to them, that did not also attend vpon the Pastors, and might not bee admitted (as occasion serued) either to preach, teach, nor administer the Sacraments, nor so dispose themselves thereto, that they might be prepared to be made Pastors? Can they shewe that excommunication was so pronounced by such as were not Ministers of the word, that all the people or a Segniorie of them in their names, were toynd with the Pastors, in the power of the keyes, or for the Spirituall binding and loosing? Can they shewe that all which were elected and ordeyned Pastors, were elected and ordeyned onely in Synodes; and the Pastorall Elders of the worde no longer accounted Pastorall Elders, than they were onely in the place where their Pastorall charge dwelt? And a number there are of such thinges, in this forme of reformation pretended, of which they can neuer shewe in the Primitiue Church any example; although perhaps of some thinges, they might shewe some example, and yet that not generall, nor any perpetuall rule thereof, to binde all Churches and all ages to that example.

But they doe well here to tell vs, that they are able to prooue all this. And why then (if they bee able) haue they not done it? Doe they want the act and esse, whereof they tolde vs, pag. 126? And haue they now in the end found out (to dare vs withall) a potentiall abilitie in the Clowdes? Doe they tell vs now (when they haue finished all their learned discourse thereon) that they are able to prooue it? He thinks it had bene a iolier hearing, to haue heard them say, we haue proued it. And I am througly perswaded in it.

Our Bre. proforth the aun-

of these things

in this, that if they had throughly perswaded themselves that they had proued it, they would not haue strayned courttesie to haue tolde vs, that they had proued it, and not haue sayd now, they are able to proue it.

But it is a signe of grace, that our Brethren haue this shamefastnesse, that yet they will not goe thus farre, as to say they haue proued that, which their owne consciences witnesseth, and all the world may see, they haue not proued, in all this their learned discourfing on the matter.

Well, what of that? though they haue not as yet proued it; yet, what say we to this? They are able to proue it.

Be they so indeede? Let them doe it then, say I, a Gods blessing, begin when they list, so they doe it more orderly than they haue hether to gon to woyke. But till then, I stand still on this; prooued it they haue not. And (for any thing that they haue already sayd) we neede not doubt, but that we shall (by Gods grace) bee as well able to improue it, as they to proue it, except they haue better prooues to come, than as yet wee haue seene any. And if they shall be able to bring such prooues as shall prooue it indeede: I for my parte (God willing) as I shall bee able, will bee also as readie, to yeeld most gladly so farre, as they shall be able to proue it.

Building (say they) onely vpon the most sure foundation of the cano-nicall Scriptures.

That (saye I) is a most sure foundation indeede, and yet withall they must build well and surely, and with good matter, not with stubble, sticks, and combustible stuffe vpon it.

But, that they haue neither built the forme set forth in this learned discourse, onely vpon this most sure foundation; no, where they haue taken any plot of ground out of scripture, as their foundation to build vpon any peece of this litigious frame, they haue done otherwise than to enforce that platforme on that ground with no right nor propriety thereunto; no yet haue builded thereon as good and skilfull builders should haue done; no with such firme stuffe and mettall as will abyde the tryall of the fire:
I referre it to the Surueyers of the wooke, and to all such as are expert in this kind of Architecture, to giue their iudgements both of the whole modill of this plotforme, and of euery parcell thereof, and of all their stuffe, workmanship, and maner of their building.

But our Bretheren put vs in better comfort, that if all this learned discourse will not serue, they are not mynded to leaue off so.

But intending (say they) more at large, if occasion shall serue, hereafter to set foorth, the practise and consent of the godly fathers in their acts, Councils and writings, following the same rule and interpretation of the Scripture, that we haue done.

Cerely, neither this learned discourse, nor any other of our Bretherens, as yet set forth, no, nor any thing in Calvin, Beza, or Danxus, (for I take it,

*What our Bretheren
haue performed.*

it, that our Bretheren haue most followed these three) or any other treatise that is extant, (at least, that I could euer see or reade) doth nor can proue the forme of reformation, that our Bretheren haue here in this learned discourse prescribed. So that, they do well to be intending of some other peece of worke: for I see no other remedie, (to perswade vs so thoroughly, as they say they are) but that we must intend also on their further intending, when and whatsoeuer they shall more at large hereafter set foorth as occasion shall serue. Which (what occasion they intend it shall be) I remit to God.

And if they shall truly set foorth this that here they solemnly promise, of the practise and consent of the godly fathers in their acts, Councils and writings: I dare (by preuention) say thus much befoze hand, let me proue it, as I shall be able, that they shall neuer be able to prooue, that those godlie fathers followed the same rule and interpretation of the scripture, that our Bretheren haue followed, in the fourme of this their learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment: or that herein, either Calvin, or Beza, or Danæus, and other our Bretheren haue so done.

What our Br. shall do if they shall truly per-forme this promise.

Not that I burthen them as fallacies: (whom I honor as godly fathers also, and deere bretheren, with all due reuerence) but as mistakers of those auncient godly fathers, as we haue partly seene already, and shal see further, by Gods grace, when the performance of this promise shall come forth, to examine thoroughly, how they interpreted or practised the office of Doctors not exhorting nor applying the Scriptures; to search more narrowly, how they interpreted the rules, and practised the office of Bishops and Pastors: and whether one among the Pastorall Elders, were not in dignitie and iurisdiction, a continuing superiour, to whom the residue yielded a propriety of the name of Bishoppe: yea, whether it were practised otherwise, among those godly fathers, in any Church in all Christendome from the Apostles tymes, untill Constantines: yea, whether other of our Bretheren themselves, both Calvin, Beza, Danæus, and diuers others, doe not confesse as much in playne words: And therefore, if they shall hereafter when occasion shall serue them, alleadge those godly fathers to the contrary, that is to wit, to proue all Pastorall Elders to haue bene all in dignitie and iurisdiction equall, and Bishops all alike, one as much as another, except onely for a prerogatiue to some one Pastor, in some Synodall assembly: let them also intend to this, whether they should not manifestly hale those godly fathers interpretations and practise, cleane contrary to their meaning and doing, yea cleane contrary to their owne consciences and open assertions, that should so alleadge them.

To peruse likewise the writings, acts, and counsels, of those godly fathers, how they vsed their Consistories of Elders, where they had any (as in great Cities they had) whether they were of such Presbyters, Priestes or Elders, as being Ecclesiasticall persons, they had not to meddle in public like teaching, but were gouernours onely; and not how many of those godly fathers, but whether any of them, interpret those words of Christ, Math. 18, Tell the Church; as Caluin and our Bretheren do interpret them. And further, to consider the interpretations, writings, acts, and Councils of those godly fathers, for the vse and practise of the Deacons: whether besides the collections and distributions for the poore, they might not also be imploied to the publike teaching of the word of God, as occasion serued, not to the ministring of the Sacraments, not to the attendance in the diuine seruice on the Bishops and Pastors, whose proper office consisted therein. If our Bretheren shall proue all these things to haue bene so vsed, to haue bene so interpreted, and so practised, in the practise and consent of the godly fathers, in their acts, Councils and writings, following the same rule and interpretation of the Scripture, that our Bretheren in the forme of reformation prescribed in this learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, haue done: when they shall haue performed all this, and shall, as they intend more at large, as occasion shall serue, hereafter set it forth, that we may also be thoroughly perswaded by it: then will I say also for these our Bretheren, that they shal haue better acquit themselves than as yet they haue done, yea, than any hether to haue done. If not rather in attempting this, they shall not doe, yet worse than they haue done, and worse than any other haue done; if they shalbe manifestly found to wrest the interpretations, writings, practise, consents, acts and Councils, of those godly Fathers.

The godly fathers agaynst
our Bretheren
in all these things.

What wee haue heard already in those godly Fathers, cited the more at large, and the greater number of them, euen to the tedious trying both my selfe and the reader; but chiefly to auoyd all suspicion of wresting or abusing them, and to shewe the greater consent of them, and the more continuall and vniuersall practise of them; and how in all these things those godly Fathers doe hether to appeare (at least wise in my simple iudgement) cleane contrarie to this forme of our Bretheren, set forth in this learned discourse, for all these matters of this their quadripartite gouernment in Ecclesiasticall causes, being the greatest points, or next the greatest here in controuersie: I referre all past on both parts to God and the reader, praying the reader, till this their promise bee performed, when they shal hereafter haue occasion; in the meane tyme to consider better of this their learned discourse, and of this (though not comparing in learning, but pleading for trueth) my well meaning answer thereunto.

Our Bretheren hauing now made this repetition, what they haue done, or rather would haue done; and giuen vs this promise, what they are intending hereafter to doe: hereupon they proceede to a solemne protestation, of the causes that moued them to set forth this learned discourse.
Therefore wee protest before the liuing God, and his holy Angelles, and the dead, and before the Queenes maiestie our most gracious soue-raigne, and the whole assemblie of all estates of this Realme: that as the whole world may playnlie see, wee seeke hereby not our owne profite, Our Br. prote- ease nor aduancement, but only the glorie of God, and the profite of station of the tise, and to seeke by all lawfull and ordinarie meanes, that it may take place, that if it may please G O D to giue it good successe, at this tyme to bee imbraced, wee maye fulfill the rest of our course with ioye.

The maner of our Bretherens protestation, I would haue liked a great deale better, to haue had our Lord Iesus Christ, (being also himselfe the liuing God, one and coequall with the father) set before his holie Angels, bethey neuer so holie.

Bridges.

The maner of our Br. protestation.

But now, as they protest before the liuing God, our heauenty father, and before the Lord Iesus Christ his sonne our sauour, that shall come to iudge the quicke and the dead, and before his holie Angels: and before the Queenes Maiestie our most gracious Soueraigne, and before the whole assemblie of all estates of this Realme, meaning the high Court of Parliament: so, howsoeuer they may deceiue mortall creatures, God is not mocked, as the Apostle sayth. And therefore our Bretheren haue to take great heede, what they haue here protested in the name of God, (whereof sayth Dauid Psal. 111. Holie and fearefull is his name) if they mynde not as seriously and religiously the matter, as they haue thus solemnelie protested the name.

I speake this (which I am hartilie sorie to speake) seeing this great ouerzealousnes of our Bretheren, that in their earnestnes (if they meane earnest, or els it is a great deale worse) auowte these high speeches in the name of God, of Angels and of men, that they can neuer iustifie before either God or Angelles, or before men. For, since they haue made this great and terrible protestation in the name of them all; and which all? All those faithfull ministers, that haue and doe seeke for the discipline and reformation of the Church of England: and that this is a brieve and playne declaration of the desires of all those that seeke for these things, which they haue here set downe in this learned discourse: whatsoeuer they seeke hereby, this protestation is very daungerous. All penned not this learned discourse, and perhaps all haue not seene it; yea peraduenture, it is so little the desires of all; that some may mislike many things, or some thing in it. Vea, I my selfe haue shewed it vnto some, that are euen of the most earnest of them, who at the first view haue liked this booke, and called it indeede a learned discourse,

discourse, and yet when I haue shewed them some of the principles therein, they haue vpon better conference and aduise-ment, so misliked them, that they haue vtterly protested, that whosoever were the compilers of it, or consenters to it, both they and many others thinke their names abused, accounting them-selues to bee no lesse of the number of those faithfull ministers, that haue and doe seeke for the discipline and reformation of the Church of England, than any of these learned discourfers reckon themselves to be: and yet they renounce the desire of these things.

The varietie & vncerteyntie of our br. desires.

But what neede wee alleadge hereto, the priuate speeches of any of our Bretheren? Vanescunt voces, littera scripta manet. See and conferre our Bretherens writings, or looke but on those, that by occasion haue here fallen out to be noted, in the answer to this learned discourse, in how many, and that no small things, diuers of our Bretheren oppose themselves, to the desires that here these learned discourfers doe seeke for. Yea, I beleue, that if all and euery of our Bretheren, which would claime interest in the title of this discourse, but not in the matter of this discourse, would freely lay downe all their seuerall desires, and the thing that euery one of them doth indeede seeke for: their desires and seekings would be so variable and repugnant in many important matters, that wee should neither knowe any certentie, what they would agree vpon to desire; nor bee able to determine what wee might graunt. And how then in this confusio and contrarieties of their desiring and seeking, can any one man, or a number of them, that agree vpon this forme here set foorth, (if indeede they had agreed, and were not also in many things, as wee haue seene, cleane contrary to their owne selues even in this learned discourse) make this solemne protestation, not onely for him, or for them-selues, but for a number of other, yea for all other among them, that seeke, or seeke not this or that?

A more warie
had bin better.

And therefore, in my poore iudgement, and as one that wiseth their good vnspeynedly, this solemne and dreadfull protestation, might better haue bene spared, or protested in some other moze warie maner. As right now, talking of agreeable and consenting, they were warie enough, how they tempered and set their wordes, and so much moze (when here they protested on this wise) stode it them vpon, to haue added at least, so farre as they knowe, or so farre as they are perswaded, beleue, or hope: and not so resolutely to affirme that, which neither they nor any, but God doth knowe, who is the only searcher of each mans heart, and onely knoweth (whatsoever they pretend) what indeede they seeke for and desire.

Why our br.
conclude with so solemne a protestation.

But yet our Bretheren thought perhaps, that this solemne protestation would doe well here, to moue the readers hearts at the closing vp of all the matter: and indeede it moued myne, and that not a little, to see them after such long dalliance, all the while of this their learned discoursing, thus solemnelly in the end, to appeale to God for witnesse. And yet for some parte of the

the matter, and for some parte of the men also, I for my parte will beleue them on their bare worde, without this deepe protesting: though all the whole world may not playnlie see it, nor will beleue it, for all this protestation, that they seeke hereby, not their owne profite, ease, nor aduancement, for if they should, they might full easelie be deceiued.

Br. seeke.

They protest that they seeke not their owne profite. &c.

Doe they not rather seeke their owne hurt, trouble, and ouerthrowe? Not wittingly, I thinke: and yet, they may seeke it, and finde it too, as some of them haue done, and haue now leisure enough to repent them of it. But if some of them seeke it not; there is a shrewde likelihoode that some other doe seeke hereby, their owne profite, ease and aduancement, a little, or rather a great deale too much, with the hinderance, disquiet, and spoyle of many others. And would GOD, if they also seeke not these things, that they were not the instruments vnto others that doe seeke them.

Our br. seeke rather their owne and others hurt.

Our br. are instruments to other.

But if they seeke not these things, what seeke they then.

For sothe, but onely the glorie of GOD and the profite of his Church.

Our Br. wrong seeking of Gods glorie & his Churches profite.

Still the glorie of God, and the profite of his Church, must carie the name. Where it to be so, and there an end.

How Gods glorie & truth is defaced hereby.

But what stand we seeking, what they seeke? If they seeke Gods glorie: why doe they thus open the mouthes of the aduersaries, to deface the glorie of God, and discredite his Gospell, by these vnnecessarie dissensions? If they seeke the profite of his Church: what greater hinderance to the Church can they offer, than thus to breake the vnitie and deuide the force thereof? Than thus to cast abroad to the wide world, to the deadly enemies, these bitter defacings and sharpe oppugnings of the same Church, whereof their selues professe to bee the parts and members? Than thus to wound the weake Bretheren, that stande betweene vs, and make many that were comming on, to start backe, and that were among vs, to fall from vs: yea, to discourage the hearts of the strongest of vs: yea, to reprobach all the Bishoppes and Prelats of the Church with all despites: yea, to disarme their most gracious Soueraigne, and bereaue her of the best parte of her supreme authoritie, and to expose her Maiestie to all daungers of her estate, besides those that the Papistes practise agaynst her person: yea, to innouate and turquish all the whole state of both the Realmes of England and Ireland, the very Parishes and all must bee newe transformed? While in the meane tyme, the professed enemy lyeth houerling for the aduantage of all occasions, doe euen drawe and whet their swordes, to sheath them in the bowelles of vs all; except the liuing God through his mightie power and superabundant mercie, did euen miraculously defend vs from them. So that, If the Lord had not bin on our side (may Israell now say) if the Lord had not bin on our side, when men rose up agaynst vs: they had then swallowed vs vp quicke, Psal. 124.

How the Church is hindered by this our br. seeking reformation. when their wrath was kindled agaynst vs. Nay, when our owne wrath is not yet slaked, against our owne selues. And is this to seeke the glorie of God, and the profite of his Church, that our Bretheren say, they seeke onely?

How our Br. should indeed seeke Gods
glorie and the Churches pro-fite.

But if they seeke indeede Gods glorie, and the profite of his Church: let them reclayme and leaue off all these euill practises: and if all things bee not as they would haue them, yet remembryng what in common together we haue, which is the principall, and which the common aduersarie seeketh most of all to take either it from vs, or vs from it, and the roring Lyon goeth a pace about, seeking how he may deuoure vs all: let vs both without disturbance of the present state, ioyne our selues together, and vnite all our forces agaynst the publike enemye of vs both, & especially of Gods truth; till þ (after we shall be out of all daunger of that man of sinne, that great aduersarie and his confederates) we may parlie of these matters more brotherlike. And then the whole world might plainly see and say, that there were more likelihood, our Bretheren did only seeke the glorie of God and profite of his Church, as they protest they doe. Yea, where we make our enemies now to laugh and leape for ioye, and our selues to weepe and fall for sorrowe: Then should our mouth bee filled with laughter, and our tongue with ioye: yea then would they say (with greefe or admiration) among the heathen, the Lord hath done great things for them, and our selues confesse with ioy and thankfulness, the Lord hath done great things for vs, whereof we reioyce. But if our Br. will not seeke Gods glorie & his Churches profite, in such order as they ought to seeke it, but thus vnoorderly: although they seeke it only, and nothing els: yet, seeke they neuer so much, they shal neuer finde it.

Psal 126.

The true way
of reformation

But as they protest that these are the things which they onely seeke: so by this present writing (say they) we discharge our conscience according to our dutie, which is to shew vnto al men the true way of reformation.

That this is the true way of reformation, is not yet proued, in all this learned discourse. They tolde vs they are able to prooue it, and they promised also that they will proue many things hereafter when occasion shall serue their turne. But if this forme of theirs were (as they imagin & vaunt) the true way of reformation: what? and is this the true way of reformation too; and the discharge of their conscience, and according to their dutie, to shewe it to all men, and that in this manner? I speake it not so much, for putting it in writing: for so, it might well be done with more aduiseiment, and be better conceiued, and all times the reader to be persued and pondered, of those that should haue to consider the same; and their selues with lesse ambiguities, alterings, and tergiversations, be more streighly bound, to iustifie their writing: not only for vaunting their selues of that they had written, to be such a profound peece of worke, such a learned discourse: for that might be, or seeme but an ouerliking of their owne babie, and proceede of too good an opinion of their owne learning.

Our Br. manner of putting their forme in writing is not the true way
of reformati³.

But

But when they pester their writing with such reproches to other their B^y. and that in authoritie: when they enter into matter of state, yea deale withal states, and with publike gouernment, and will shew such matters vnto all men, that concerne not all men, but is aboue many mens callings, to intermeddle in them, especially to alter the lawes establisshed, and the powers of so many persons, setting by (as they say) newe Lords newe lawes, newe Doctors, newe Bishops, newe Gouernors, newe Deacons, newe Segniories, newe Synods, newe authorities, newe Parishes, and remoue al the old, or new trans- pose them, yea, bying in a newe supremacie of the Prince also, with the olde authoritie halfe clipt away: and to put all these in print the more to shew this present writing to al men: as who say, Be it knowne to al men by this present writing, yea, by this present printing, and to doe al this without any authoritie, or licence or knowledge of the Magistrate, yea, agaynst the Magistrate too: if this bee the discharge of their conscience, and according to their duetic, being subiects, being priuate persons, being Protestants, being faithfull Ministers, being learned discoursers: would God they would better bethinke themselves.

The discharge of conscience or rather charge thereof.

It is beyond my learning, and a great scruple it is in many mens consciences, that think our B^y. haue set their conscience on the tenters, & much charged it, rather then any whit discharged it, & do not according to their dutie therein: no, that this their doing, is any true or good way of reformation: but if ought were amisse, to make it much worse, if not to marre it quite, and to giue licence vnto such a way, as would or might bring all things to an bitter deformation and confusion. And here it followeth prettely, at the hard heeles, that might set the matter well forward.

And to mooue them (say they) that haue authoritie, to put it in practise, and to seeke by all lawfull and ordinary meanes, that it may take place, that it may please God to giue it good successe.

Seeking meanes that this form may take place.

What meane they here by these perillous speeches? And is this also a part of conscience & dutie, and the true way of reformation, to mooue them that haue authoritie to put it in practise? Who are these that haue authoritie, whom our B^y. would by this their writing, moue to put in practise, this forme of reformation? Would they haue any that haue authoritie in the Realme committed vnto them by and vnder the Queenes most excellent maiestie, to attempt this, without her maiesties authoritie therevnto, whom they called before our most gracious soueraigne, when they made their last protestation?

The moouing them that be in authoritie
to put it in practise.

No, wee hope there is none, that in her maiesties dominions hath any authoritie committed vnto him, will be moued by this writing, or by any other writing or solliciting of our Bretheren, to put this forme in practise, without he haue her maiesties authoritie so to doe, she hauing now (God be prayes, & long continue it) the supreme authoritie of these matters. ther should they that haue but inferiour authoritie to her maiestie, yea all the Magistrates in the Realmes of her dominions, holding all the authoritie that they haue immediatly or mediately from her Maiestie, and her Maiestie immediatly from God; seeke any lawfull and ordinary meanes, but vnlawfull and beyond extraordinarie, if they should practise that this may take place, without her authoritie thereunto: especially it being with all the direct ouerthrowe of her chiefe authoritie. They doe well to say, that they would haue them do it by lawfull and ordinarie meanes: wherein our Bretheren differ from the Papists that seeke vij & modis by all meanes to put in practise their desperate resolutions. Which as God defeateth, and our Bretheren detest: so what lawfull and ordinary meanes can they imagine, to put this their forme in practise agaynst her Maiesties will, that may stand with her supreme authoritie? And therefore (in my opinion) this is verie ill done, and daungerously spoken of our B^y. to cast forth such suspicious wordes, as to moue them that haue authoritie, so to abuse it, or as though they would or should be moued to this practise. And for my parte I protest, that I like all this whole learned discourse the worse, that in the ende and conclusion of all, it should come to this drift, which verely is not pleasing vnto God, nor God will euer (I dare warrant it) giue it good successe, if the winde begin once to blow in at that doore, which God forbid that euer we should see that tyme.

Good successe.

But what is the tyme that here they speake off? At this tyme to be embraced. It should seeme to be at the time of the Parliament as may appeare by the last part of their protestation saying:

We protest before the liuing God, &c, and the whole assemblie of all estates of this Realme.

Our Brethrens
offring vp their Pamphlets e-uery Parliamēt do therein cō-trary to their own principles

I meruell much at this practise of our Bretheren, that they are so eager in their pursuite, to haue their platformes put in practise that they see not how they crosse in this doing, their owne writings. They are still at euery Parliament offering by their little bookes (for I forbear to call them Libels to auoyde offence) of the reformations that they call vpon, vnto the high and most honourable Court of Parliament. Wherein although if wee should lay together and conferre, all their bookes and formes of reformation, that they haue offered by vnto the Parliaments; wee should finde great varieties, and some contrarieties among them: yet let them agree or disagree in other things how they shall: what doe they meane herein by putting them vnto the Parliament? Would they haue these controuersies to bee disputed vpon, and determined by the Parliament? That is cleane contrary to the chiefe materiall poynts, of the very bookes themselues, that they offer by vnto the Parliament.

For except they will make all the Burgessees in the nether house and all the Lords in the higher house to bee Ecclesiasticall persons, and either Doctors,

tors and Pastors, whom also they make all Bishoppes, teachers and Preachers of the word and Sacraments; at least wise, such Presbyters, Priestes or Elders not teaching, whom they call Gouvernours; if they shall be present as any parts and members or necessarie regents of the assemblie, and not only as spectatores or auditores tantum; if they shall remayne still as lay ciuill or politicke persons: so that they can not (by their owne Canons) haue any voyces, at least, not determine any thing in Eccl. matters, especially, so great and important matters as they make them. And what would they haue the Parliament then to doe in these things? Nay, what will they suffer them to doe? Yea, what would the Parliament doe, when they should finde, that in the very booke offered vnto them of these matters, they are prohibited to deale in these matters? Yea, how can they deale in these matters, and allow these Pastors to come in, and take them vp for their labour, saying vnto them: yea my Lords, and Pastors, dare ye take vpon you, or are ye able to deale in these matters, or so much as to knowe them? For who should be able to know what order, comelinesse and ædification requireth according to Gods word, but they that bee teachers and preachers of the same vnto all others? For it is absurd that they should bee taught by such in these small things, as ought to learne the trueth of them in all matters. pag. 117. and much more absurd, that they should be taught by such in greater matters. Yea they ought to learne the truth of them in all matters.

Our Brethrens words pa. 117. agaynst the Parliament & all that are no Pastors.

If the Parliament once heare this thunder cracke: conticuere omnes in remig, ora tenebunt. If some one among them perhaps doe replie and say:

If they will not suffer vs to haue any thing to doe in debating and determining of these matters: why then (a Gods name) doe they put them vp to vs? or what would they haue vs to do in them? except they will giue vs some authoritie of them. But they are so farre from giuing vs any such authoritie: that they say, wee are not able so much as to knowe them. No, nor yet their owne Consistorie gouernors able to knowe them, but onely the teachers and preachers of the same to all others. And what will they then allowe to vs?

How the Parliament may reiect all their Pamphlets.

If the Parliament heare this man speake thus: may they not thinke, that man speaketh reason? and that there was little reason, in troubling them continually with those matters, in the Parliament house, whereof they may not (according to the libertie of that most honorable assemblie) speake their mynds in reuerent maner, pro & contra freely, and no man debarred of his speech or iudgement: or els the house would better aduise themselves, how they permitted such fellows to come among them, or to bring in such billes or booke among them, of which they must be restrained of their libertie, both of speech and iudgement.

Yea, what if now another waxing bolder in the Parliament house, would tell these faithfull ministers, that the matters conteyned in this learned discourse, being Ecclesiasticall matters, were to be consulted vpon and determined, by those that were the Bishops & Pastors of the Realme and Church of England, and that they had a Conuocation & Synodall assemblie among themselves, and that they must go to them, and be tryed by the, and bee as well content to submit themselves, to the determination of the Bishops and Pastors, lawfully and orderly there assembled, as they would to haue it tryed in the Parliament, if they were all such Eccl. persons, as were the other. And that if they would flee fro their owne coate & Eccl. company, to such as were but ciuill and politick persons, saue that they were Christians as other of the people were: they should giue an ill example & pretidice their matters, and make themselves and their bookes to be more mistrusted, as not daring to abide the censure, of the chifest professors of those matters. Tra-Actent fabrilis fabri. Ecclesiasticall matters to be tryed by Ecclesiasticall persons. And that this is according to their owne positions. For who should be able to knowe, (at least wise, who ought better to knowe) what order comelinessse and edification requireth according to Gods worde, than they that be teachers and preachers of the same vnto all others? For it is absurd, that they should be taught by such in these small things, (and much lesse in greater things) as ought to learne the trueth of them in all matters. And therfore go to the, and let the determine those controuersies.

If our Bretheren shall heare this tale, and their owne words thus duellie returned on themselves: may they not then thinke they haue well helped themselves, by putting vp these matters to the Parliament? And if the Parliament should aunswer them thus, should they not aunswer the aright?

But if now they had rather reuoke some of their positions, & giue the Parliament authority to deale herein, than to haue them be determined by the Bishops: what on the other side would they haue the Parliament do, without the authoritie of the Prince? Dea how chaunce they put not by their bookes & writings first to her Maiestie, & moue her first: for if they accounted her Maiestie indeed the supreme gouernor of all persons in al her dominions, & in all causes so wel Eccl. as temporall: would they haue the Parliament decree those things without her Maiestie? Or the Parliament wherof her Maiestie is the supreme gouernor to determine these things without any debating of them?

Or if they should be debated vpon: who should rather do it the Clergie? And haue not al that haue bin assembled together alreadie, both the Bishops, & the whole Conuocation, consulted, debated and determined alreadie on the matter? And if they would haue her Maiestie & the Parliament to deale further therein, haue they not done that also? Hath not her Maiestie ratified and authorized al these articles that the Conuocation agreed vpon? And hath not the whole Parliament also approued & allowed, & so, ratified and confirmed al the Communion booke, & (besides the acknowledgement of her Maiesties supremacie) all the articles agreed, and decreed vpon all, or the most or chiefe of the lawes and orders Eccl. now standing in force and established amongst vs: And would they haue them reuoke & cancell all that they haue done in these matters: or what else would they haue the Parliament herein to do?

If they offer to dispute of these matters, either before the whole Parliament, or before any by the Parliament deputed, to heare the disputation betwene vs of these controuersies; do they hope to dispute better and with more deliberat iudgement of that they shall saie extempore, than that they haue with aduise ment written, or can write thereon: or that we can dispute worse, or not so well, as they persuaue themselves they can? Or do they thinke (as Eschines saith, Quid si ipsam belluam audisseris) they shall better persuaue and moue the hearers of them, more by their liuelie speeches than by their learned writings, and so win it that waies: Therelie we refuse no waie, what it shall please our most gracious souereigne and hir most honorable counsell, or the high court of Parliament to appoint (if that would serue the turne) for any further triall, of renewing neuer so often these matters, by disputing and calling them in question, againe and againe, for (God be praised) in so good a cause we need not feare the euent: they that could so win the garland let them weare it.

But we maie easilie see (before the disputation shall begin) that all this would not serue their turne in these controuersies, which the word of God hath not expressely decided, but in generalitie referred to these three heads, comelinesse, order, & edification. Who shall iudge and determine of our disputation: they haue before hand debarr'd the prince, and all that are not teachers and preachers, and both the parties in controuersie are teachers and preachers, and they saie it were no reason, that we bring the parties in controuersie on the one side (though we be teachers and preachers) should be determiners & iudges, what is comelinesse, order, and edifieng in these things: and maie not we saie the same to them againe, that they being also parties in controuersie on the other side, though they be teachers and preachers, it is no reason that they should be determiners and iudges, what is comelinesse, order, and edifieng in these things, and when shall then these matters be iudged and determined? Except we would yeld to them, or they would yeld to vs, or both to some other, as to hir maiesty and the Parliament. But if they shall so do, they should conuince themselves before hand, that the forme is vntrue and false which they haue alreadie before hand not onlie auowed to be true, but so determined alreadie, and so before hand peremptorily prescribed, both to vs and to the Parliament, & to the Queens maiestie also; that we must all yeld of necessitie vnto them.

Or whether we will yeld or no, so that they can moue them that haue authoritie to put this forme in practise, and to seeke by lawfull and ordinarie means (saie they) that it maie take place: that it may please God

When indeed if it should take place, or that it pleased God to giue it that successe (which they call good) at this time, or at any time hereafter, by these means (which as we haue seene) are neither ordinarie nor orderlie, nor lawfull, nor reasonable, nor tending to Gods glorie, nor to the churches profit, nor the safetie and souereigntie of his Maiestie, nor the honour of them that haue authoritie, nor to the custome or freedome of the Parliament: then should our brethren also find & feele by experience the scholemistresse (as they saie) of fooles, though now in opinion they hope and are persuaded, and would persuade vs by the Theoristis of their learned discourse, otherwise, that they should so little fulfill the rest of their course with ioy, that they should rather consume their course with too late repentance, being continuallie coursed about these matters, with restless troubles and vexations.

But if our sinnes be the let, that this or the like, grounded vpon Gods word, maie not now be receaued: yet the present age maie see and iudge what is the vttermost of our desire, concerning reformation, which hitherto for lacke of such a publike testimoniall; hath bene subject to infinite scanders, deuised by the aduersaries of Gods truth, and hinderance of godlie proceedings vnto reformation. And that the posteritie maie knowe that the truth in this time, was not generalie vnknowne nor vntestified, concerning the right regiment of the church of GOD: nor this disordred forme of ecclesiasticall gouernment, which we haue receaued for the most part of poperie, deliuered to our children without contradiction that our example should not be preiudiciall vnto them: as the example of our godlie fathers (which in this point neglected their dutie) hath bene preiudiciall vnto vs.

Cleric well saith saint Iames, chapter 4, ver. 1, &c. From whence are wars and contentions among you? are they not hence euen of your lusts (or desires) that fight in your members? The lust (or desire) and haue not: ye enuie & haue indignation and can not obtaine: you fight and war and get nothing, because ye aske not: ye aske and receaue not, because ye aske amisse, that you might consume it on the things that you lust for (or doe desire.) And euen so for our brethrens lusts and desires, to haue this forme take place and be put in practice; their selues haue well confessed, saieing: but if our sinnes bee the let that this or the like, grounded vpon Gods word maie not now be receaued: for their sinnes indeede be the let, because the things desired, and their desires and attempts thereof are full of sinnes, and therefore God of his great mercie lets and stops the receauing of this forme, sith it is not (as they pretend to vs, or persuade to themselves) grounded vpon Gods word, and euen therefore it might not then, neither maie it now, nor (by the grace of God) euer shall of vs be receiued at all. most of their desires.

But what is this which here they said: if our sinnes be the let, that this, or the like grounded vpon Gods word, maie not now be receaued?

What haue we here? This indeed is a new point. Are we come now after all this adoe, in the small conclusion and lapping vp of all this forme & learned discourse of ecclesiasticall government, of all this declaration, of all the desires of all the faithfull ministers, what reformation of the church of England they seeke for; after all this vrging, prescribing, protesting, &c. are we now come to the receauing of this or the like?

Our brethrens conclusion of their desires, that either this or the like forme should be receaued.

I had thought all this while (and so they still did beare vs stoutlie in hand) that they had pleaded for this forme, & would haue proued that this forme of eccl. government (which they haue here set forth in this learned discourse) had bene the true waie that they meant, of reformation. And now forsooth, when all comes to all, it is not this; but it is either this or the like.

Aha, is it but so; that is another maner of matter, if it be, but either this or the like: well then, thanks be to God, we haue seene already what this is, and what truth and force this hath caried.

But what is that they saie, or the like? for it is an old and a true prouerbe, Nullum simile est idem, Nothing that is the like is the same, so that now, if we receaue the like, our brethren haue here giuen vs a flat discharge, & our quietus est for this: and as for this, we may againe giue it a free passe-port out of England, so that we receaue the like, for this bindeth vs not, but this or the like. No, nor yet the like bindeth vs, anie more than this. But as nothing in this did before bind vs; and yet, had it bound vs, the bands (as now in the end we see) were of no force; yea, their selues haue here vndone y^e bands and set vs at libertie, on this condition that we haue the like, so as yet we be free from this like also, for what this like is, that they tell not, and how shall we learne it?

If it suffice to receaue the like: then there is no necessitie of this forme.

What is meant by the like forme.

For if we looke on all the formes, that anie other of our brethren doe also prescribe; or on any other forme in anie other reformed church; they are neither like this forme, nor one like another: neither is there anie hurt at all therein, though they be not alike in their forms of eccl. government. For, so that they be not alike, but al one and the same, in all one and the same substance of doctrine, faith, and religion; the eccl. government, in diuers states and dominions, maie differ in diuers matters, and be neither the same, nor yet alike, without any danger to those churches themselves, or anie prejudice to the churches of other princes countries and dominions.

It is not hurtfull that all churches forms of government be not like. In substance of doctrine they must bee all one.

But like or like not, if it may not (saie they) be receaued: yet the present age may see and iudge, what is the uttermost of our desire.

That (say I) is verie hard for vs to see, when their own selues are not able to determine it. For although we may see these their desires y^e are set down

The seeing & iudging the uttermost of in our br. desires.

of Gods
truth.

in this learned discourse (if they maie be rightlie termed desires, and not rather prescriptions: yet neither doe we see the vttermost of them, nor what a number (euen as in the hoyle of Troie) lie hidden and included in them, that yet in these beginnings are not opened, and God knoweth whether the present age now liuing, shall see the one halfe or quarter of them, especiallie of the vttermost of them.

Yea, what an vncerteintie of their desires doe they here open to the present age; when they conclude thus, that they either desire this or the like forme to be receiued? Can this present age, or doe theirselues in this present discourse, see the vttermost of these indefinit desires of the like, till they shall further open it, or till experience the mistresse of fooles, shall reueale it?

They saie, that the reformation which they desire, hitherto for lacke of such a publike testimoniall (meaning as this learned discourse) hath bene subiect to infinit sclanders, deuised by the aduersaries of Gods truth, and hinderance of godlie proceedings vnto reformation:

Our brethrens
greuous slandering of their brethren to be the aduersaries of Gods truth.

If our brethren haue cause to take offense for sclanders (as they say) deuised against their reformation, doe they not see here what a foule and intolerable sclander they cast vpon all the professors of the Gospell, that are not of their opinion in this their deuised reformation, to terme vs the aduersaries of Gods truth, that fauor the truth of God, as much (by the grace of God) euen for their liues as they? Are we not their brethren in the profession of the Gospell? Haue they not confessed, that in substance of religion we agree, and it is resolu'd & publikelie mainteined for our true and holie faith? Were we thus professors of Gods truth, in the preface of this learned discourse and are we now in the peroration of the same, the aduersaries of gods truth?

Indeed, in the verie first title to the booke of this forme discoursed vpon, they began roughlie, and set it out, to serue for a iust apologie (as they said) against the false accusations & sclanders of their aduersaries: there also they mentioned sclanders and false accusations, and called vs aduersaries. All which were heauie words, and a rough beginning of such as are or should be brethren. It was but malum omen to stumble on such foule terms at the verie threshold, it did prognosticate we should haue some storms, and so we haue had indeed, in passing through this learned discourse, and yet this is but a mild booke in comparison of manie other of theirs, albeit our brethren haue not bene verie meale mouthed, but haue vsed verie brode language (God wot, and all the world maie see) too vnseemelie for ministers, faithfull ministers, & learned discourses, against their brethren in Christ, for no greater matters than these are.

But we haue borne them off with head and shoulders, as well, and with as much patience & forbearance as we mought, saue that we haue turned againe now and then for our necessarie defense, and laid (I trust in modestie) before before our brethren onelie, how ill they haue done therein, and how the most of Gods of the same sclanders were such stones cast as could rebound, truth.

But now, when we haue got out of the whole plotforme and building of this learned discourse, bearing off all the blowes & taunts in the severall lodgings of all these new Eccl. officers; and thought now on the backside of this building all had bene past and done: naie loft, we shall haue like farewell to our handsell; yea, where we were called before but their aduersaries: we shall now be driuen out with another maner of peale: as not onlie hindrances of their proceedings to reformation, but to all the present age, & that the posteritie maie know it too, as a perpetuall blot of infamie, we are now hissed out, & cried out vpon, not for their aduersaries onlie; but for the aduersaries of gods truth, they complaine of our false accusations and infinit sclanders, to let go all their other complaints on vs, this one is unum pro mille. To whom shall we complaine of this so apparant vnttrue, and withall so hainous an accusation made on vs?

It deserueth indeede (for the indignitie thereof) to haue shaken our garment, & with silence (as cleere therefrom) to haue gone our way. But because it toucheth God & his truth, in which case we maie yet at least returne & saie with Christ our sauour, ego demonium non habeo: we are not the aduersaries of Gods truth: It is vnttrue and vnbrotherlie spoken, neither toucheth it vs alone, but all the holie and ancient fathers in the primitive church, whom we haue plainlie shewed to be of y^e same opinion, in all or the greatest of these cōtrouersies y^e we defend: & in our own daies & present age, it spot- teth the fresh memorie of our late godlie fathers, Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, Hooper, Ferrar, Philpot, &c. all blessed martyrs, and all that consented vnto them: and diuers reuerend & godlie Confessors of later memorie, as Bishop, Iuell, Horne, Pilkinton, Grindall, Cox, Benthame, Parkhurst, and others, which were all notablie known both on this side and beyond the seas, to be great professors of gods truth, and no lesse earnest impugnors of the aduersaries of the truth of God.

And albeit they liked not these desires and deuises of our brethrens forms of reformation; yet for their great learning and sinceritie in the gospel, the most notable men of late in the reformed churches beyond the seas, doe highlie honoz them, and thinke and speake well of them, giuing full testimonie of their liking. Yea, both Bucer and Peter Martir, two chiefe lights and pillars of Gods church in these our last daies, forsooke their owne countries, and all other reformed churches, & liued vnder the forme of reformation of this our English church, with all due reuerence both to the state then being, & to the bishops then liuing, without any impugning or defacing of thē.

Yea Caluine himselfe (as we haue shewed) alloweth well both of the ancient bishops and Archbishops, before the tyrannie and errors of the pope began; and of the bishops of these daies, to continue still in their bishopriks, so they be professors of Gods truth, and not aduersaries to it.

How vnaduisedlie then is this spoken of our brethren, and how reprochfullie to call our Bishops and all vs that ioine with them, the aduersaries of Gods truth? Could they bestow any fouler terme vpon the rankest of al the Papists, or vpon the Pope himselte? For they indeed are the aduersaries of Gods truth. And so S. Paule saith 2. Thes. 2. of that man of sin, & son of perdition, which is an aduersarie, and exalteth himselte against all that is called God.

Our hinderance of our br. proceedings in this forme.

And this terme as a parting blow, for a token of remembrance, our brethren bought to giue our bishops & vs, to be \bar{p} aduersaries of Gods truth: this is too bitter zeale, Mors in olla, there is Coloquintida in this pot that boils ouer such froth. Gods truth is not in this accusation, no brotherhood of Christ, no linke of loue, no bond of peace, no bowels of mercie, no affection of compassion, but all of passion in this too blacke Rhetorike. But it suf-ficeth vs to cleare our selues, G O D forgive it our brethren, and wee doe.

And whereas withall they burthen our Bishops and vs, that we are an hinderance of godlie proceedings vnto reformation: this is another great vnto and slander. These proceedings indeed of our brethren, our Bishops and we, haue good cause both to hinder and repell. For they are neither Godlie proceedings, nor proceede as becommeth either learned preachers, or faithful ministers, or dutiful subiects; neither proceed they in anie charitable and orderlie maner; neither is this forme that here they prescribe a reformation, as they call it, or (howsoeuer they perswade themselues) any other than a reddie path to confusion most deformed, as we haue plainly scene, euen where, pag. 84. they pretend most to auoid horrible confusion, as they terme it. And that we do not belie this their forme, with infinit, or with any slanders, let the reader marke, or their selues reuise better their deuises, about the persons office and authoritie of those presbyters preefts, or elders, whome they terme gouernours; but they might much better in my opinion haue the terme of secular preefts, for difference of the other pastorall preefts, or eccl. preefts, that are the ministers of the word and sacraments. And if they shall aduise themselues of the authoritie that they giue them (except they will wilfullie sot theselues) they shall soone find great confusions, which vpon their admittance both in the office of the pastor, in the office of the prince, and of all officers and Magistrats, for lawes making and for lawes breaking, and for all vices wherein they would intermeddle and disturbe al the eccl. and ciuill state, and breed infinit contentions among the common people in euery parish & congregation, which all their deuises could not helpe, except with putting them down, & that were no lesse danger if they were once vp, and therefore to auoid all such deformations, I thinke it better before hand to hinder such proceedings to reformation, and to stop them that they come not in.

What deformed confusion among vs
this forme of reformation
would breeds.

I haue my selfe heard, and so haue diuers other, the means that now & the the pastors of the French & Belgike churches, haue made, of ^{reformation.} ^{The French} ^{and Belgike} ^{churches.} confusions and contentions that haue cheeflie risen by these seigniories, & yet may their state far better admit them, especiallie now (God comfort them) standing as they doe, than our state may, God be praised for it. Neither doth Gualter crie out so much vpon this deuile of these gouernours, without good cause where otherwise there are godlie ciuill magistrates.

Besides this, their equalitie in all places, of all Pastors, & making of them to be all Bishops in euerie parish or seuerall congregation; what a reformation that would make, if their selues cannot see it (that perhaps would haue no superiour) I referre to others better pōdering. And to ioine these new Bishops & these new Gouernors together, to make by a consistorie of them, both these secular preests of all conditions & estates, nobleme, gentlemē, merchants, yeomen, craftsmen, confused together with these eccl. preests, that are the pastors; and all these in all eccl. discipline, excomunication, & other church matters, to draw altogether in one ioint authoritie, whether it might be such a yoking (for some of them) as God forbids, of the one plowing with the asse; and how fitlie this would draw and proceed to godly reformation, we haue partly seene, let others thinke further of it, I feare the worst.

Deut. 22. 10.

Besides the infinit troubles, about ^{the} continuall, or very often thire Synods, for elections & ordeining pastors: besides euery churches varietie in matters of ceremonies: besides ^{the} cold lectures of the doctors, that might not exhort, nor rebuke, nor cōfort, nor applie their doctrine: but the hotter scāblings about ^{the} new deuissions of the Bishops, the Colleges & the cathedral churches lands, with all the sacrilege (as they call it) of Abbies, as impropriations, &c. al which their Deacons would looke to distribute, but they shalbe ser-ued al at leisure. Besides the diuisions & new boundings out of al particular parishes & congregatiōs, besides hir Maiestie to be put besides hir cheefest and most principall authoritie: and all these things to be done, & she cannot doe thereto: besides a number of their other proceedings, for the which I re-ferre me to this learned discourse, & to their other treatises, which, how wel they all agree together, and when all is done, either they would haue this or the like, or we cannot tell what, nor they tel vs what the like is, ^{the} they referre vs vnto: are not these godly proceedings to reformatiō? & are we now to be blamed as hinderāces to these godly proceedings vnto reformatiō? nay rather if they will indeed blame any, let them blame theselues, for they hinder theselues more than any other doe, except that they hinder most of all (which most of all they pretend to further) the glorie of GOD, the quiet and increase of the church by these proceedings, or rather receedings and backsi-dings.

But to cleare themselves hereof, they haue forsooth set forth this learned discourse cōcerning reformation, which hitherto (say they) for lack of

Our publike testimoniall.
Our brethens

selues from sclander.

of such a publike testimoniall, was subiect to infinit sclanders. This is a faire pretense, for the setting forth this their learned discourse. But if their intendment had bene indeed no further, but to haue cleared themselves from infinit sclanders, they should haue stood either altogether or most, on that defensatiue point: whereas their chiefe part of this learned discourse hath bene spent in courting and oppugning vs, and that with casting forth far more sclanders and accusations against vs, than anie matters that they were charged withall. But (I thinke) they haue spied accordingly, euen with the onellie returning home their owne words, without anie our sclandrings of them. It is an old saying, Selle do, selle haue; they could neuer haue found greater aduersaries to themselves, than their selues are, nor greater hinderance of their proceedings, than this their owne publike testimoniall, to be a testimoniall beyond all exception, against them selues.

Our brethens
publike testi-
moniall.

For whatsoeuer they haue bene burdened heretofore by others, their selues haue now confirmed all those reports to be most true, which before the comming forth of this publike testimoniall, might haue bene suspected to be sclanders: or that these things had bene but the singular conceits of this fantastical head, or of that particular person. But now that this learned discourse is set forth, and is such a publike testimoniall, as containeth A breefe and plaine declaration concerning the desires of all those faithfull ministers, that haue and do seeke for the discipline and reformation of the church of England: Let this publike testimoniall be thorowlie weighed, how it concordeth with the particular testimonials, of al other that before had written on the like argument. Yea, how it agreeth with it selfe; least our brethens testimonials in this point, should be found like the witnessse of those, of whom it is said, Marke 14, 57, Manie bare false witnessse against him, but their witnessse agreed not together.

The disagreement of our
br. testimonials

I do not compare our brethren to such a packe of false varlets; nor to go about anie such wicked purpose; but onellie for this point, that their testimonials do not agree, and so do breed their owne discredit. Besides manie apparant vntruths, contradictions, inconueniences, absurdities, ambiguities, and a number of vndutifull reproches of the pastors, of the Bishops, of the Magistrates, of the Prince, of the whole church, state, and realme, wherewith this their publike testimoniall is not onellie interlaced, but full fraught. Which the present age seeing and considering, might rather reiect it for an infamous libell, vnorderly crept out and scattered abroad in the name of all the faithfull ministers, and yet not one of all their names set vnto it; rather than accept it for anie lawfull, autentike, and publike testimoniall.

Our brethens
intendment for the posterie.

And as our brethren saie, they meant this for the age present; so say they: And that the posteritie maie know, that the truth in this time was not generallie vnkowne nor vntestified, concerning the right regiment of the church of God, nor this disordered forme of ecclesiasticall gouernment, ment, which we haue receaued for the most part of poperie, &c.

Nowe, howe our Wretchen still holde out to the harde ende, their boy- cation of strous reproches, of our disordred forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, the truth. and that wee haue receaued it for the most part of Poperie; and it was within little, that they sayde not, for all of poperie, as the most part, doth often times goe for all. But with them, these speeches goe not for sclaunders, but for friendly admonitions, and brotherly testimonials, of their good opinion of our state and vs.

Yea, these and all the rest are uttered, That the posteritie may knowe.

What should they knowe? Howe to ruffie in the like Rhetoricall figures: What should they knowe? Howe these that went before them, left behinde them, such a reprochfull testimoniall of the present age? Is not this a faire recozde, and full woorth to be commended to the posteritie for a perpetuall memorie?

But they say, they shall knowe hereby, that the truth in this time, was not generally vnknown nor vntestified, concerning the right regiment of the Church of God:

And howe shal they knowe this? By this Learned Discourse and pub-like testimoniall (as they call it) testified by a generall indivinduum vagum, Sir Nicholas Nemo, and all his companie, of faithfull Ministers? May this in lawe be admitted for a lawefull recozde, and publike testimoniall of the truth? Veritas non queris angulos. The poste-ritie can knowe no certain true forme by this Learned
Discourse.

Well, yet the posteritie may knowe that the truth in this time, was not vnknown nor vntestified, concerning the right regiment of the Church of God.

Truth indeede, the truthe (God be prayesd for it) is not generally vnknown, especially, in this time. Yea (thanks be to God) it is known and testified moze generally at this time, than for generalitie, it hath been known (as I suppose) at any time, not excepting (in that respect) the berry time of the Apostles: If our lines were generally also aunswerable, to our generall knowledge, and to our publike testification. Neither is in this time the right regiment of the Church of GOD generally vnknown or vntestified, but was generally known and testified well enough, before the publike testimoniall of this Learned Discourse came foorth. Neither doe we, or can we take any certaine knowledge concerning the right regiment of the Church hereby. Yea it should seeme, that their owne selues (except in some generalitie, and superficiall knowledge) do not as yet know it, nor can testifie what it is. For, if this be the right regiment of the Church, that in this publike testimoniall they prescribe vnto vs: it hath not onely bene generally and altogether vnknown and vntestified, in any time heretofore, vntill this time, that his Learned Discourse came forth, and before was neuer heard of: I meane, for this forme, taking it altogether, as it is here discoursed, except for some parcelles of it, testified of late by others: But, for anie certaine knowledge, it is not yet eyther generally made knowen and testified vnto the present age, or to the posteritie by this publike testimoniall, nor particularly vnto the testies themselves, for all that they boldly affirme this to be the right regiment of the Church: and yet when they haue neuer so truely testified, and discoursed neuer so learnedly, all that they can, with all their heades layde together, their verie desire in the ende and summe of all, is but eyther to haue this or the like to be receaued.

But if this be the right; then eyther this, or the wrong, there is no like will serue the turne. And is their desire to haue either right or wrong, they care not whether, so they may be ridde of this regiment that now we haue? If this regiment same too boate vnto them, will they leape with the flounder out of the frying pan into the fire? But (God be praised) they neede not frie, except they frie in their owne boate and fretting choller, at the regiment of the Church of Englande vnder G O D and her Maiestie, it is generally a good Regiment and right inough, according to the establishment of the lawes therof, if our Brethren would coole their ouer-boate passions, and be thankfull to God, and vnder him to her Maiestie for it.

As for this publike testimoniall of our Brethren, if our regiment of the Church, be not right; the posteritie shal neuer know by theirs, what is right or wrong, or that the right regiment of the Church, was made knowen or testified in this time, either generally, or particularly, or (that is most to be desired) certainly, by such a doubtfull testification of vncertaine desires, that either this, or the like, or else we can not tell what, might be receaued.

Our Brethr.
disordred speeches against our forme of Ecclesiasti-
cal gouern.

As for that they call our regiment of the Church, a disordred forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernement: it is but their owne disordred forme of not gouerning well their mindes and tongues. Our forme, both for the formal & material lawes & orders therof, is far more formal & material, than this forme of theirs is. Pea, if it should come to this, or the like: what mishapen forme we might happen to haue, wee can not yet fore-tell, nor they can tell vs. As for that which we haue already we knowe it, and we knowe the verie worst thereof. The best of theirs is yet vncertaine.

I graunt, our forme is not so well ordered, but that there may, and do fall out disorders: but those happen by the abuse thereof. And so it may be, in any forme of gouernment neuer so good, by mens infirmities or corruptions, wherewith the forme it selfe is not to be charged. And yet I goe not about to defende our forme, or to haunt thereof for anie such such absolute perfection, that it could not be altered or amended: what speeches.

Lawe is there not, that man can make, but it may bee, or rather is vn-perfect?

As for the forme that they haue here set foorth, (be it spoken with our Brethrens parol, if they please) besides their disordered setting it forth: the very forme it selfe is eyther much disordered, or else other formes Abuses dis- that other of our Brethren haue also set foorth, or that other reformed ordering Churches are governed by, not onely in Germanie, but in Heluetia are good forms disordered. and orders.

But be this and theirs neuer so well ordered: mought they not through abuses or corruptions be disordered? Or what warrant can they giue vs that this forme which they prescribe should neuer be disordered? And would they be content that any should call this their forme a disordered forme, onely because of the abuses and corruptions? So that, admitting this their owne forme had in it selfe no disorder: yet this may touch their owne forme, so well as ours.

But they thinke they haue answered that alreadie pag. 132. What although vpon this their forme there crept in as many or mo abuses than now there are: yet God, though he condemne abuses, would approoue their order. Because (say they) it is grounded vpon Gods worde. But Our Brethr.
we could there finde no such ground, but only that it is grounded in their forme not mere fancies, it is no more grounded on Gods worde, nor yet so much grounded grounded by many parts, as our forme is grounded. on Gods
worde.

And therefore, if they may say, God approoueth our order, though he condemne the abuses: then may her Maiestie for her supreme authori-tie: if any vnder her, abuse her Maiesties authoritie: then may our Bishops for their supreme dignitie & iurisdiction: then may our Doctors for their exhorting and applying: then may our Pastors for their ministerie & or-deyning: then may our Deacons for their attendance on the ministerie and preparing themselves to be made Pastors: then may our Eccl. Presbyters, Priests, or Elders, which are not altogether debarred from teaching, though most employed in gouerning, much better say; for our forme of the Churches gouernement, we shall be sure that God approoueth our order in these thinges though he condemne the abuses in any of these thinges, because the order is grounded vpon Gods worde. And so farre our forme of Eccl. gouernment is not disordered.

But they say of our forme of Eccl. gouernment: it is that, which we haue receaued, for the most part, of Poperie.

These speeches are againe verie sclanderous vnruthes, that wee haue receaued the most part, or any part of poperie, or that we haue re-ceaued this forme of poperie, for the most part thereof. We haue recei-ued indeede (we do confesse) at the handes of the Papistes, diuerse thinges which

ken out of

which our Brethren can not denie, to be good thinges. Neither is the receiving of a thing that is good, from a man that is ill, preiudiciall to the goodnesse of the thing. Yea, although the good thing were defiled or abused by the ill mans ill handling of it, if when we receiue it, we reiect the defilinges and abuses, and reduce the thing to his originall vse, or proper nature. We haue receaued manie excellent thinges from the Iewes, yea many notable thinges also from the verie Heathen: but farre better, if not the best of all from the Papistes. For, from whom could wee haue gotte them else? As for their Poperie, that is the Popes and Papistes abuses and corruptions. Such rie we haue not receaued from them, reseyning the Poperie. If we haue taken the good and left the badde, that ought not (as a fault) to be vphayded vnto vs, but rather deserueth commendation.

But what meane they here in these wordes, that we haue receiued for the most part of Poperie? Doe they acquitte vs yet of some part? And why then doe they thus condemne all the whole Ecclesiasticall Gouernment? Do they it because they say it is the most part? And yet when it commeth to the tryall, they shall finde it so much the lesse part, that indeed it is no part at all, which we haue receiued of the Papistes, wherein anie corruption was, that (considering the establishment of them by the lawes now in force) wee haue not altered and corrected. So that, if now there bee other abuses rising; yet properly, it is not to be called Poperie, except to Papistes, that vse it still in their popish manner, and so they will doe euen the Sacramentes also, and Gospell of Iesus Christe: and yet may not these thinges, but that kinde of abusing them bee called poperie.

Our Brethr.
receiuing
from the Pa pistes their popish argu ments for their Pastors gouernmēt.

But from whence haue our Brethren (to proue this forme of their eccl. Gouernment) gotten all these arguments:

That the Church of God was perfect in al her regiment, or euer there was any Christian Prince, pag. 9.

That the authoritie which their Pastors claime, was graunted to the Church by our Sauour Christ, practized by the Apostles; continued by their successors, three hundred yeres before there was any Christian Emperors, pag. 118.

That the Christian Princes authoritie reacheth no further, than to make ciuill lawes to binde the people to the confession of true fayth, and the right administring and receauing of the Sacramentes, and to all Ecclesiasticall orders, that they beeing instructed by the worde of God, (through the ministerie of the preaching of the same) shall vnderstande to bee profitable for edifying of the Church of Christ, and for the aduancement of the glorie of God. If anie shall offende against the lawes, whether he be preacher or hearer, besides the Ecclesiasticall censure, which he should not escape, he is also to be punished in bodie by

by the ciuill Magistrate, pag. 141.

And againe, why should it be counted for any dishonour to Princes Poperie. to bee obedient to the lawes of God their Father, and to serue to the commoditie of the Church their mother? It is a greater honour to bee the sonne of God, and the childe of the Church, than to be Monarke of all the earth. pag. 143. and hereto are alleaged for the Princes seruice, and subiection, Esa 49. to thinke no seruice too base for them, so that they may profite the Church. Ps. 2. and 1. Tim. 2.

What haue we here? Is this Sanders, or Stapleton, or Fecknā, or Hosius, or some other Papist, that speaketh in these voyces, and hath all these Popish argumentes? Is it not some Pope himselte, that bleseth them against the supreme authoritie of Christian Princes? If this bee Iacob: may we not say with Isaac, Come neere my sonne, that I may feele thee, whether thou be my sonne Esau or not? But what neede we feare that? We wish all blessing and good to Iacob, and that Esau should serue him. Yea, we acknowledge no sonne, nor brother, but Iacob. Yea, but for all that: the voice is Iacobs voice, but the handes are the handes of Esau?

What? And haue ye then indeede (Bzethzen) got Esaus voice also? Or but couered your handes with a beastes rough skinnie, to get the blessing? And doe not those rough handes, make the blessing worse?

Oa Bzethzen, Bzethzen, for shame burden not vs herein, if we haue receaued some thing, concerning but the forme of the Churches gouernment from the Papistes, hauing clenfed the same from the roughnesse of it and abuses, and your selues in so great a matter of the Churches supreme gouernment, haue gotten all the five fingers, yea the whole, yea the very rough hande it selfe herein of Esau. Of Esau say I: Nay of all these Papistes, and of the man of sinne himselte, that childe of perdition, that great aduersarie both of the King Christ, and of all Christian kinges.

And yet you thinke to vse these argumentes well against all Christian Princes that the Pope bled against them; but ye do verie ill, for herein ye take not these reasons and testimonies of the Papistes, but ye take of the Poperie of the Papistes. Yea, euen where ye condemne the Pope, there ye both iustifie his doinges, and would professe to followe them. Doth not your booke of obedience, pag. 52. and 53. bzeake forth in these wordes: Although the Pope for sundrie enormities haue depofed Princes by their vnlawefull authoritie: yet the reason that moued them so to doe, was honest and iust, and meete to bee receaued, and executed by the body or state of euerie common-wealth. See heere in what a dangerous matter, you say the Popes reason is to be receaued, yea and his doing to be executed, and that by the body of euery common-wealth. And thus as the Pope did excommunicate and pronounce Princes to be depofed, such excommunications, and depofitions would you pronounce in all of contradiction.

kingdoms. Is not this a new kind of popery, if not far more dangerous? Wee say, our forme of regiment is translated from Rome to Canterbury. But this new Poperie comes directly as we see, euē from Rome, & would enter into euerie parish, would come to our owne doores, would enter in to the Princes pallace, would trample downe her Maiesties most principall and supreme authoritie, and turne it out of doores, to place these new Parishionall Bishops, and their Consistories of vnteaching Priestes or Gouernors.

But this is no Poperie.

What was ill, I graunt, and too bad, but God graunt this be not a great deale worse. But such is our corrupted nature, when we haue wel amended that that was amisse, our fingers itch, still to be mending it (as wee thinke) better and better, till we haue made it as ill as it was befoze or quite marde it altogether.

But our Brethren are further offended with our forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, that it is (say they) deliuered to our children without contradiction.

And why should it be deliuered with contradiction, if the matter deliuered, be lawefull and good? Doe our Brethren loue contradiction so well, that they would haue it vsed in good and lawefull matters? And where no necessitie is? And to nousell vp our Children also in contradiction? S. Paule teacheth vs another rule, 1. Cor. 11. 16. If any man lust to be contentious, we haue no such custome, neither the Churches of God. Wee shall finde contradiction inough, against the aduersaries of Gods truth, against wicked liuers, and abusers or corrupters of the forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernment established. And yet among the very enemies, sayth the Apostle, Haue peace with all men, so much as in you lyeth. So that, wee neede not contend one with another so vnbrotherly about these matters, if we shal do well: sane in the necessarie defence & maintenance of the right vse and authoritie of them; and least of all ought we to teach and trayne vp our children to vse contradiction against their spirituall fathers, in the Ecclesiasticall gouernment, that they deliuer vnto them; for that were to make them disobedient and rebellious children to their fathers. But lesse maruaile it is if they haue herein contradiction with vs, that haue so many contradictions in these matters among themselues.

But our Brethren would haue our forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, not to be deliuered to our children without contradiction, that (say they) our example should not be preiudiciall vnto them.

As though it were a preiudice to our children not to be fleshed in contradiction against our forme established of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, euen as Hanniball was deuoted in his child-hode to be a perpetuall deadly enemy to the Romaines, so that these faithfull Ministers doe not thinke,

How our Brethren
would nousell vp their children in contradiction.

thinke, they can bee spirituall fathers to their naturall children, except they bring them vp in this spitefull contradiction. And if they should not shewe their children this example; they should bee preiudiciall to them, and their children might degenerate, and not loue contention as they doe. And so, they would haue contention growe by inheritance. For that will not out of the flesh, that is bredde in the bones, cat after kinde a good mouse hunt. Is not this a godly care of fathers, and a godly education of children?

As the example (say they) of our godly fathers (which in this point neglected their dutie) hath beene preiudiciall vnto vs.

They complayne of their fathers that they brought not them vp thus, nor gaue not them such example of contradiction, as they will bring vp their children, and giue them better example by their contradiction. They accuse their Fathers of negligence herein, and yet they call them godly. But doe they not herein accuse themselves of many great crimes, both in vnthankfull accusing of their fathers for negligence; and for neglecting that matter, which if they should not haue neglected, yea, if they should not diligently haue shunned and taken heede of, least they should haue giuen them any example, they should indeede not haue done the partes and duties of godly fathers to them, if they had noursed them vp in these contradictions. Which because they did not, they were the more godly fathers to them, and they the worse children that followe not therein their godlie fathers godly example. But are such as vngodly degenerate from them, and that is more vngodly, giue ill example to their children: wherein they neglect their dutie, both to the honour of their godly fathers, and to the charge of their tender children. And as this their ill example to their children may be dangerous both to themselves, and to their children: so this accusing of their fathers, and yet acknowledgement of them to be godly, both conuince and condemne their doinges to be vngodly, except they will altogether condemne their fathers. For, if the forme of the Ecclesiasticall regiment which they haue here discoursed vpon so learnedly, that they make their boast of it in the toppe of euerie leafe, to be a Learned Discourse, bee so high, so vrgent, and so necessarie: howe doe they call their and our fathers godly, having neglected their dutie in so high, vrgent and necessarie matters? If they may be godly, and neuerthelesse neglecte this their forme prescribed of Ecclesiasticall gouernement, for which they contend with vs their Brethren: then is not the same so important, as they would make it to be; nor the want or neglect thereof so preiudiciall, but that wee their sonnes may be godly also well inough without it, as our Fathers were godly fathers, notwithstanding they had it not, or did neglect the same.

Indeede it is not a little preiudiciall thereunto. But it sheweth with- all that they accounted it not to be of that impoꝛtance that our Brethren make it, noꝛ to be any part of their dutie, which if they had, being godlie fathers, they neither would noꝛ could haue so neglected. For who were these godly fathers? And how long haue they neglected this forme of our Brethren, if at least they euer knewe, oꝛ heard, oꝛ dreamed of this, oꝛ any such forme like to this? Verily euen all the godly fathers that haue bene in any age, from the time of Christes being here on the earth, euen downe till our time, are these our godly Fathers. And this is no smal preiudice to these sonnes, that woulde now thrust these thinges vpon vs, and accuse all our godly Fathers in neglecting their duetie rather than they woulde leane their contradiction against eyther vs their Brethren, oꝛ against their prince and Magistrates, oꝛ against their and our godly Fathers of any ages passed heeretofore: that they might leane behinde them as a perpetuall publike testimoniall to their and our children, and to all posterity, an example of their contradictions and contentions.

And thus with this good report of our godly Fathers and with this good publike testimoniall to the posterity of the age present, and with this carefull example for our children, to bee nourished vp in his contradiction, and to deliuer it as their inheritance to their children and childrens children while the worlde continueth after them: they breake off, and ende all this Learned Discourse, and with this charitable affection and quiet mind to vs, and to our forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernment established, they conclude yet a greate deale better, with a small wish, and (as it were) a prayer to God, wherein so farre as the same tendeth to the glorie of God, to the moze manifest reuealing of his truth heer- in, to the acknowledgement of our sinnes and imperfections, to the humble and heartie begging of his mercie, grace, consolation, and vnitie of his ho- ly spirit: (not to the confirming of the forme that they haue here prescri- bed, noꝛ to the defacing of the forme of Eccl. gouernment, alreadie in this his Church established:) we ioyntly say with them, and craue of them also to repete their owne wordes, and to say with vs and all of vs altoge- ther with heart and voice.

Our Brethr.
conclusion
with prayer.

The Lorde graunt for Christes sake, that wee beeing (all of vs) so farre from (anie) perfection (in this mortall life, but rather, as the holie Apostle sayth, 6. Hebr. being ledde forwardes towards: that according to the commaundement of our Master Iesus Christ, we may be perfect as our heauenly father is perfect) God may open all our eyes to see the same, (and not be blinded in our owne conceits) and bend our harts earnestly to labour to attaine thereunto, (by all such godly and lawefull meanes

meanes as is aunswerable to our vocations .) And in the meane time, so farre as wee haue attayned , (to be thankefull to God for the same, and vnder him to all them whome hee hath made the instrumentes, whereby wee haue attayned thereunto. And not to bee wearie thereof, and seeke inuouations, but with all constant alacritie of going forwarde, both in synceritie of true religion, and in sanctification of our liues, and in due obedience to our most gracious Soueraigne, and vnder her Maiestie to all our Ecclesiast. ouerseers, and ciuill Magistrates, and to all the godly lawes Eccl. or politicall , of this our Church and Realme of Englande) that we may proceede all by one rule, that we may be all like affectioned to seeke the glorie of God (and the peace of his Church) and to builde vp the ruines of his temple (and not to hinder the building, by controlling or defacing the builders thereof , by vnnecessarie contradictions, and by denising of newe platformes) but , that with one heart , and with one voice, we may prayse the father of our Lorde Iesus Christe, in his holie temple, which is the congregation of Saintes in the holy Ghoste, (and prayse the sonne also , which is the same our Lorde and Sauour Iesus Christ, and together with the Father and the sonne, praie the holy ghost, the comforter to leade vs into all truth , and to sanctifie both our soules and bodies, with all holinesse and righteousnesse, according to the rich and plentifull measure of his grace , in this life transitoie , and to glorifie vs in his life eternall. All which, and all those other thinges, whatsoeuer his blessed will and heauenly wisdom seeth most requisite for his glory, for our saluation , and for the ceasing of these contradictions, that wee may be all truly vnited vnto him, and in him be reuyned one to another, he of his infinite mercie vouchsafe to graunt: To whom (three persons and one Almighty God, the king euerlasting, immortall, inuisible, and God wise onely) be all honour and glorie, all dominion and power, all prayse and thankesgiuing, both nowe for euer and for evermore.

And so, vnto this our Brethrens prayer thus a little (and I hope without offence) augmented, I beseech them and all our other Brethren and Sisters in Iesus Christe , let vs all take withall vppon vs the good

Clerkes parte and ioyne in the closure , by vnfeynedly pronouncing the Amen. Amen (good Lorde) according to thy good will.

Amen. So be it.
